Brother Timendorfer proposed that in view of the approbation of the work carried on by the D. H.-Palestinian administration, as expressed by the Jewish Aid Fund, the General Committee should be instructed to contribute 1,000.00 Mk. to the D. H.-Palestinian administration but that the approval of the Jewish Aid Fund to such contribution be secured before the money be paid.

The Steinthal Lodge of Hamburg, upon the suggestion of its member, Bro. Auerbach, proposes that the Grand Lodge should endeavor, through its connection with New York, to supply the Jews in Russian-Poland with food for the coming Pessach holidays.

The Grand Lodge has inquired of the Relief Fund what it has done or intends doing on that score. The Relief Fund has replied that it is doing its utmost to do all within its power to meet the situation; the negotiations with America are still going on and Bro. Simon Wolf is giving the matter his earnest attention.

The Committee resolves to inform the Hamburg Lodge that there is no occasion for initiative action on our part in this matter, as the Relief Fund has taken up the matter and expects to arrive at satisfactory results through its own action in common work with the American Lodges.

At the same time the General Committee is to be informed of the request.

Brother Ginsberg submits a report relating to a request for relief made by Bro. Casparius of the German Empire Lodge on behalf of the suffering Jews of Bendzin, which request was endorsed by a written report of Judge Ernst Schaumburg. We have submitted that request to the Relief Fund and we were informed by it that the Bendzin congregation has been receiving a contribution of from 2,000.00 to 3,000.00 Mk. monthly during the year past. Furthermore, that the Relief Fund had upon several occasions placed additional sums for the relief of the suffering Jews in that city at the disposal of Judge Schaumburg, whose humane work and friendly treatment of the Jews were highly appreciated. The Relief Fund intends to continue doing all within its power for Bendzin to the extent of its financial ability.

In accord with Bro. Timendorfer the referee, Bro. Ginsberg proposes, that the Grand Lodge should not make any additional contribution in this case, but to refer the request to the General Committee.

The Committee was highly gratified by the receipt of a letter from Bro. Weiner-Kattowitz, wherein he states that at this time some 1,000 Jewish miners from Russian-Poland are employed in Germany and that the number of men thus employed would soon increase to from 2,000 to 3,000.

The Raphael Kosch-Lodge of Lissa has received a request for a contribution from the Committee for soup kitchens in Palestine. The Lodge requests information from the Grand Lodge, whether the latter recommends the support of that institution. The Grand Lodge has replied that it should be generally known that the Relief Fund maintains soup kitchens and similar institutions in Palestine.

Should, however, one of the other of the Lodges be inclined to make additional contributions for Palestinian purposes, then it would seem advisable to send such moneys to the Oriental Grand Lodge.

The Grand Lodge has forwarded to the Relief Fund a letter from Sister Nanny, wherein she gives a detailed recital of the misery prevailing among the Jews of Bialystock, and more particularly as to the sicknesses and diseases prevalent among them.

The Relief Fund, in acknowledging receipt of that letter, informs us that it has already undertaken relief work for Bialystock on a large scale and that for the present the sum of 20,000.00 Mk. monthly were devoted to that purpose.

A Lodge that had been granted the sum of 100.00 Mk. in 1913 for the purpose of lectures has now, upon its request, again been subsidized to the same extent.

According to the resolution passed during the last executive session, one part of the relief action within the government of Suwalki, that of the reorganization of the congregations and the Talmud Thora schools, had been turned over to the Agudas Jisroel. That society, through several of its members, has now inquired of us how we expect them to proceed, as it is the intention of the society to bring up the matter for discussion at a meeting to be held on Sunday, February 6th. We have replied that by a transfer of the religious affairs to the Agudas Jisroel and the material affairs to the Relief Fund, we considered the matter a closed incident as far as we are concerned. Brothers Heinemann-Frankfort, A. M. and Siegfried Weiner-Kattowitz, members of the Agudas Jisroel, have addressed similar inquiries to us as they are to participate in that meetin gof the Agudas Jisroel. We have furnished them the same replies.

A request from the Toynbee Hall of the Berlin Lodges for the year 1916 was referred, after a prolonged debate, to the General Committee with the endorsement of the meeting.

In his report on this subject, Bro. Ginsberg adds the wish that a financial report of the Toynbee Hall affairs be submitted to the General Committee.

Brother Maretzki submitted his report on the subject suggested by Mr. Berger-Charlottenburg, relating to the sending of Jewish nursing sisters into Russian-Poland. This matter has also been taken up with the Relief Fund by the Grand Lodge. The Relief Fund has immediately made inquiries in Kowno and Grodno and will keep us posted after receipt of the replies from those points.

Brother Maretzki is of the opinion that before taking any decisive action, the legal standing of the sisters, both towards the civil and the military authorities should be settled. Until such time as the sisters could be assured of the hearty support of some administrative authority nothing should be done in this matter. We cannot expose the sisters to hardships or dangers and we must know beforehand where they are to look for protection and who is to assume the responsibility for securing them the proper treatment.

A suggestion has been made to submit a proposition to the General Committee to hereafter change the order of the Lodges by replacing the present system of numbering them according to the date of organization by an alphabetical system according to the names of the cities.

Another suggestion to arrange for informal meetings in summer and health resorts is to be taken up anew after the close of the war.

According to the report of Bro. Kuznitzky, the practices prevailing in regard to that subject up to the present time have proven successful, but it might seem desirable to have the Grand Lodge make arrangements for a better organization of such meetings hereafter.

Appendix

to the Minutes of the 411th Executive Meeting, held on February 10, 1916.

Upon the suggestion of Bro. Rabow-Danzig, Mr. Pintus, of Aix-la-Chapelle, donated to our hospital train M 3, 189 pairs of slippers.

Frankfort Lodge, Frankfort a. M. The Iron Cross decoration was awarded to Bro. Leo Strauss, Bro. Attorney Dr. Erich Salfeld, to a son of Bro. Berbhard Bischheim, and a son of Bro. Alfred Rhefeld.

Brother Attorney Dr. Salfeld was promoted to a lieutenancy.

Staff Surgeon, Bro. Dr. Max Sichel, was awarded the Bavarian order of merit with swords.

The war relief fund of this Lodge, which was organized according to a resolution of the Board of Directors on December 6, 1915, has now reached a total amount of 45,000.00 Mk. The subscribers to that fund were 390 brothers, 26 widows of former brothers, and 3 outsiders.

The four Berlin Lodges report the appropriations from the 100,000.00 Mk. war relief fund of those Lodges up to January 1, 1916, as follows:

To 28 brothers	Mk. 32,230.00
To 21 widows, wives of soldiers and families	8,285.00
To outsiders and members of Lodges in other places.	580.00
	Mk. 41,095.00
Refunded from recipients of above gifts	Mk. 8,295.00
Leaving a net expense of	Mk. 32,000.00

Furthermore, we are in possession of guaranties, etc., for refunding loans and other advances to the amount of approximately Mk. 10,000.00.

Amicitia Lodge, Posen, reports that its women's society about four weeks ago organized a third collection of clothing and shoes for the benefit of our unfortunate co-religionists in Russian-Poland. This Lodge has also contributed Mk. 100.00 to the soldiers' home in Metz.

Unitas Lodge, Strassburg. The women's society is at present busily engaged in the manufacture of underwear and other clothing by its own members for the benefit of the Russian, Galician and Polish fugitives. The society also proposes to make a collection of clothing, etc., for the same purposes.

Germania Lodge, Halle. The son of Bro. Max Cerf, Vice-Sergeant Kurt Cerf, has been honored with the Iron Cross II.

Starkenburg Lodge, Darmstadt. Bro. Field-Rabbi Italiener received the Iron Cross II.

Julius Plotke Lodge, Kaiserslautern. All communications for this Lodge are to be addressed to the President, Bro. District Rabbi Dr. Weyl.

BRANDEIS PRIZES AWARDED.

The Federation of American Zionists announces that the first prize in the Louis D. Brandeis prize Essay Competition has been awarded to Leo I. Dana, of Roxbury, Mass., for an essay on "The Work and Problems of the Jewish National Fund." The second prize has been awarded to Lewis F. Levinthal, of Philadelphia, for an essay on "The Land Laws of Turkey and Their Administration."

The first prize is $100.00 and a bronze medal designed by Jules Butensky; the second prize is $50.00. The competition was open to students for original essays on some phases of Jewish life and culture in Palestine.

The judges were Judge Julian W. Mack, Prof. Richard Gottheil, and Prof. Felix Frankfurter.

Mr. Brandeis offers the same prizes again for an essay competition to be conducted this year among the students of colleges and universities in the United States and Canada. The conditions of the new competition will be made public during the month.

NINE HUNDRED HOUSES BURNT TO THE GROUND.

A letter received from the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden tells of the terrible distress to which the Jews living in the neighborhood of the line of the Russian retreat in Poland were subjected. In one village nine hundred houses were destroyed, the retreating Russian army having put them to the torch.

The LEADERSHIP of ISAAC M. WISE

By RABBI LEON HARRISON, Ph.D.

Delivered before the Wise Center and Plum Street Temple Sisterhood of Cincinnati, on the occasion of the Celebration of the Anniversary of Dr. Isaac M. Wise.

Men and women of Cincinnati: Athwart your community was flung for well nigh half a century, the shadow of a tremendous personality. A prince and a great man in Israel spent the noonday of his strength among you; and amid this beloved community the shadows slowly gathered at the end of his long day, to usher in the sunset glories of its close. It is difficult to realize that so many years have already passed away, since this venerable patriarch closed his eyes in sleep. Indeed, we are hardly yet conscious of his withdrawal from the scene, so permanent and powerful was the influence that he exercised, so vital and full-flooding was the extraordinary energy of that life, whose great dimensions it is possible, only in this perspective of the years, to envisage and estimate.

We gather to recall again the familiar features of a benignant and venerable countenance; to remember the lively wit, the genial personality, the indomitable energy, the ever-flaming enthusiasm that distinguished this remarkable and picturesque leader in Israel, and made his lifework structural in American Jewish annals. It is impossible to describe him with a formula. He was so many things. He was so picturesque and versatile a personality. He was a preacher and something more. He was a teacher, but one who communicated more than simply knowledge. Above all else, he was a prophetic spirit, who did God's work of order and creative beginnings in a chaotic world. He surely had a mandate from on high. In an ungoldly age, he was God's man. There seemed to be a pre-established harmony between this great career and the words of Malachi:

The lips of the priest shall keep knowledge;
And they shall seek the Torah from his mouth;
For he is a messenger of the Lord of Hosts. (Mal. 2:7.)

From the lips of this priest, men never sought knowledge in vain. They loved to gather the words of ripe experience that fell from his mouth. He was more than a conventional preacher. He was a power among his people. For they loved him and he loved them. He was indeed the father of his flock. When Isaac M. Wise began his Sabbath sermon in later days, it was a touching and beautiful sight to see the old men move forward in the synagog, to come nearer to the pulpit, that they might not miss a word. He imparted not only instruction, but living influence. He was a preacher, and something more.

And they sought the Torah from his mouth. The living stream of tradition was communicated by him to his students. He was not only their teacher; he was their friend. His students were his boys. They were as close to him as his own flesh and blood. He poured his wisdom, his energies, his inspiration into them. He gave them not only the treasures of his head, but of his heart, of his overflowing fatherly affection. The Torah they sought from his mouth was indeed "Mayim Chayim," living waters, fructifying and nourishing both mind and soul.

But he was not simply a preacher, however vital; he was not only an inspiring and beloved teacher. All this he was in neighborly contacts, in his local functions. But in his central strength, he transcended even these great tasks. His life had a national significance. He came, when American Israel stood at the cross roads, when they looked in vain for leadership; for a man who could not only counsel, but create, not only advise, but accomplish. In this crisis he was the [illegible] and providential man. He came as a [illegible] prophet to our people [illegible] persistent, wondrously [illegible] in the sense of a great mission and purpose that he must realize; "for he was a messenger of the Lord of Hosts."

And it is in this aspect that the life of our Jewish patriarch looms up in its full magnitude, transcending the mediocrities that come and go, and then are as if they were not. I like to think of our great and genial leader and friend, above all as God's man, doing God's work as "the messenger of the Lord of Hosts." And surely, if ever man was called to a great and divinely [illegible] task, it was he.

I.

He was called [illegible], and qualified [illegible]. In the possession of a great personality. Who can analyze into its constituent elements the [illegible] soul of such a man as Isaac M. [illegible]. It was not mind alone, or will [illegible]. It was not simply the juxtaposition of manifold attributes. His personality [illegible] could not be thus [illegible] and described. He was an influence, a primitive natural force. Therein was included geniality, loveableness, a quick sense of humor. And also greatness of heart, broad and tender sympathies, the quick impulse of pity that would make him take the coat from his own back to cover the ragged beggar. Much wisdom was there, and learning; yet that was not all. He was a scholar, but not a pedant. He was not merely a cistern of accumulation, but a fountain spontaneous and original. And all that he had, all that he was, was energized, was mobilized. His intellectual powers in him were not static, but dynamic. He communicated light; but also heat—moral heat. He was not an intellectual icicle, but a firebrand. He did not freeze his message into men, but burned it in. There was something in him not to be explained by mechanical analysis. That something was the raw stuff of life. It was the perpetual miracle of a big vital personality, radiating influence, exercising power, winning affection, tangling up in the hearts of his followers love, loyalty, enthusiasm and conviction. A picturesque and powerful figure certainly he was, summing up one Jewish generation and helping to determine another. And it is such men, self-forgetful, intense, magnetic; whose power is in the totality of a many-sided self; not pedantic, not dry-as-dust, not men without the bowels of compassion or the fire within that enkindles as well as warms, that are called upon to do God's work. For such are God's men, "the messengers of the Lord of Hosts."

II.

And God's messengers are sent where the need is urgent, where the very stones are crying out for a redeemer to come to Zion. And he came in a spiritual crisis, when American Israel had not yet found itself. He came to a Jewish generation affected deeply by world-wide influences. The new triumphs of science were affecting men's valuation of spiritual forces. The idea of inexorable law was making them think prayer antiquated. The veneration of the Bible was being weakened by its critical study. Growing prosperity brought materialism in its train—the overvaluation of the physical and the neglect of the spiritual life. And then the democratic idea of this country weakened reverence for authority, even that of immemorial ages, by inclining the people to believe that in all matters, religious as well as political, their individual will was supreme.

Into the American synagog, trembling with the impact of these new world-forces came Isaac M. Wise. But his task was made a colossal one, because the people to whom he ministered, and whose national leadership virtually became his at the culmination of his career, faced a special tragic problem of their own. For this vast movement of Jews to America meant the deracination of a race, the migration of a nation. Here were these Jewish millions uprooted from their environment, torn away from local affiliations, from the public opinion of their Jewish communities, and their orderly traditions, to become flotsam and jetsam in this new land, their old Jewish atmosphere dissipated and destroyed, their old Jewish neighborly contacts with their gentle restraints and uniformities, exchanged for a new and irreverent environment. Here too, they were cast into new economic conditions, into a fierce struggle for existence.

The Sabbath was in danger. The very existence of the synagog was threatened. And the new generation was increasingly estranged from the old orthodoxy that was no longer adapted to their imperative needs. Then came Wise, a born leader in Israel, a messenger of God with a great historic mission to achieve, and faced these seemingly hopeless conditions—organic European communities of Jews transplanted and disorganized; all the vital nerves of influence that once actuated them cut asunder; the old organization paralyzed, the new not yet created; a new type of religious teacher required, and no way of supplying this primary need. This was indeed a colossal task that might well stagger any man of less than heroic stature.

III.

But it did not stagger the prophetic soul of Isaac M. Wise, for his was the great personality to grapple with this task, his also the understanding of its urgency. And finally he realized the greatness of the decision needed. What to do, was the question. What great policy should be followed, to organize and save to the ancestral faith, the scattered Jewish communities of the land? It was indeed a problem for a statesman with no parochial mind, who could rise high above local limitations with far-flung power of vision. And the difficulty of decision was intensified by the hostile influences always nibbling away at Israel, always threatening to inundate us, unless driven back by strong dikes of our own making. As at the Red Sea under Moses, there was the foe behind them and the flood before their feet. Should they obey the cry: March on, advance, into the flood? Must progress mean assimilation, annihilation as a people, literal race-suicide? Or should they hearken to the cowardly clamor of those who cried. Let us go back to Egypt; back to the old spiritual darkness, back to the outgrown ways of the past? Or should they neither march forward nor beat a retreat, but simply make a noise, as the old rabbis quaintly said: Cry out in blame or praise, in the past tense, in the future tense, but with no vital counsel for the present? These were the trimmers, the men without a policy save that of drift, save that of marking time, and making a noise; and they are all with us today. They confront us just as they did Moses of old, just as they did Wise and his generation. We have those that plunge into the sea of assimilation with all their Jewishness washed out of them. Some sit in chairs in universities. They are presidents of railroads and great lawyers. They have chosen this way in Berlin and Vienna in throngs. And there are others, whose cry still is, as in Wise's day, back to Egypt, back to the old orthodoxy. Some there are, in the so-called counter-reformation in Israel, who find solace there and satisfaction. But the choice of Wise's indomitable Jewish spirit was the fourth and last alternative of the rabbis: Let us fight and stand our ground like men. For his was vision and prophetic insight; and his also the prophetic energy without which vision might as well be blindness. For the word of God that possessed him was not passive, was not inert and lifeless. But it was fire that burns in the bones, it was a hammer that shatters the rock to pieces.

Let us fight and stand our ground like men was the inspired battlecry of this messenger of the Lord of Hosts.

Isaac M. Wise was a strong and fearless fighter. He was a gladiator. He could take and give blows. He was not simply a dreamer, a closet scholar. He was a grand old warhorse with red blood in him, hearing the noise of battle afar off, and rejoicing at the sound of the trumpet. He was a fearless combatant. His hand clave to the hilt of his sword. The sword and the swordsman were one. He had the qualities of a militant leader. He had courage and the genius of leadership to harmonize his supporters and to fill them with his own great spirit. And he was a leader with vision. He fought not for a day, but for the generations of the future. And he fought constructively; not simply to clear away the ruins and lay bare the foundations, but to build again thereon. He fought not simply to destroy things antiquated and dead, but to regenerate or replace them.

But above all, this spiritual warrior fought like our great American emancipator, for union. In our motley communities, with Jews of all nationalities, of all degrees of religious conformity, he fought for the one paramount need of organization, of co-operation, of union; for one front, one dominant policy, for one liberal American Judaism.

We have almost forgotten the long, hard struggle of this gladiator of the American synagog, that demanded so much courage and zeal and sacrifice. How from one end of the land to the other he traveled—lecturing, agitating, organizing; tirelessly spreading his message, struggling on, fighting on. His was indeed pioneer work. He led those who break the path along which we travel obviously on smooth steel rails. For the first time in American Judaism our Hebrew congregations in their extreme individualism were welded together. He united them, with broad statesmanlike vision, for the collective support of a Hebrew Union College to educate American rabbis. And then he united the rabbis in a great national conference.

If you seek his monument look about you. Behold the college his powerful influence created. Behold the Union of American Hebrew Congregations through which American Israel speaks and acts as one. Behold the Conference of American Rabbis into whose hands is committed the care of our present needs and of our future destinies.

For these things he fought all his days. For these great ends he struggled and sacrificed, he spoke, he wrote, he persuaded, he organized. He stabbed opposition to death with the point of his pen; he thundered from pulpit to platform. He harmonized and conciliated discordant men and influences. And he led Israel thus like a God-appointed chieftain, between the two-fold dangers of foe and flood, without either surrender or suicide, unto the great achievements for which he was sent in the providence of God. "For he was the messenger of the Lord of Hosts."

IV.

But there is a fourth and final element in the mission of our prophet. He must not only be a great personality. He not only appears in a great crisis. He comes not only when a great and vital decision is needed. But more than that, he must continue to inspire the future; his great militant soul must fight also for the needs of coming generations. For the task is but begun. The workers are trained, but the work is unfinished.

To what then are we to set our hands today in the spirit of Isaac M. Wise? What would be his goal if he were living now? For as messenger of the Lord of Hosts he must contend for things as eternal as the God that sent him.

1. His aims would surely be in the spirit of the Torah that men seek from his lips, of the perpetual Torah that grows with the needs of new generations, whose wise adaptation men shall gather from the mouth of "the priest that shall be in those days."

As a priest he would fight for our Jewish needs, for our Jewish realizable ideals. Our revered leader's great contention ever was, and would be now for a Judaism for Jews. We expatiate with wearisome iteration on Israel's message and mission. We over-emphasize the future tense. We erect a vague dream into a dogma. The world has millions of truths of which it is conscious, but non-observant. Why should we overstress vague glittering generalities, when the emphasis of the synagog has never been on abstraction but on the living example.

Our need, today, in the spirit of our venerated patriarch, is to fight for Jewish ideals, for Jews. Our need today is to develop Jewishness, not a vague cosmopolitan humanity. We need by every means in our power to strengthen in this world of dissolvent influences, the Jewish consciousness; to develop it through the senses and the mind, and the deeper emotions. Is it too much to ask that the worship of the synagog should be thoroughly Jewish, that there should be heard for the most part Jewish traditional music, that in the pulpit should be considered mainly Jewish themes to instruct Jewish minds and inspire Jewish hearts? Is it not almost ludicrous that I should be obliged to say to this representative assemblage: Make the synagog Jewish. Make it a home for Jewish idealism. We American Jews are becoming not only individually, but collectively colorless, religiously indistinguishable. There is a lack thus manifested of manly self-assertion, of intelligent realization of what is finest and most characteristic in our heritage.

The synagog should be a home for every Jewish idealism. I am not in sympathy therefore with fanatical opposition to Zionism. Zionism is also Jewish idealism, its dominant factor, the race-consciousness being one of the two-fold strains shot through and through historical Judaism. We are at least as much a race as a religion. And our festivals are largely national. We are a blood brotherhood fully as much as we are a religious fellowship. Why then should we make a fetish of academic formulas, ignored by our own people, ridiculed by mankind? I am a Jew and nothing Jewish is alien to me. I plead for a sympathetic attitude in every synagog towards every living Jewish ideal.

Our worship should be thus characteristic and traditional; and above all our preachments. It is only the semi-illiteracy of our Jewish communities that absurdly demands lectures in the pulpit, on everything in the heavens above, on the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth. The pulpit is intended for the word of God, for a message that relates to the sanctities of life, to our ethical and spiritual good, and to develop loyalty to the cause for which alone we exist separately in the world. Why should any pulpit be given up to pompous, puerile, self-exploitation? Why should it not express the heart of Judaism, the genius and high passion of our people, all the pathos of our past, all the inspiring glories of our destiny? The pulpit of American Israel should be an appeal

THE APPEAL OF THE HAGGADAH

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

The Haggadah needs no qualifying term to make it understood that the Passover Haggadah is meant. At any rate in popular understanding this is the one Haggadah known and immediately recognized as such. Not so of course among the learned. They know that Haggadah is a more general term of which that of the Passover is as it were a chapter. The great Jewish literature that arose after the Bible is roughly divided into works of Halakah and works of Haggadah. I say roughly, because some are halakic and haggadic at once. The Halakah deals with laws and their ramifications, the Haggadah concerns itself with the store of legendary creations. Both have their point of departure in the Scriptures. In the Pentateuch the codes of laws are framed by narrative, and it may be difficult at first sight to determine whether the laws or the narrative constitute the incidental element. For if we conceive the historical books from Genesis through Kings as one great historical work, comprising the fortunes of the Jewish people from Abraham—the first eleven chapters of Genesis serve then as an account of his antecedents—to the restoration of Jehioachin and necessarily compiled in the Babylonian exile if not later, then the Torah or Law would certainly form an important interlude, but an interlude it would be, on a par with the description of the Solomonic temple and similar matter introduced where it chronologically fits in. In the subsequent severance of the five books of Moses from the rest the intent is manifest to emphasize the Law above narrative and to claim for the former that precedence which it ever after possessed. Certainly in ancient Israel story-telling was as popular as it has been elsewhere, At every shrine the priests would tell the people its history and the events linked to the place. Stories were told in the home. The Bible again and again enjoins the father to tell his son the reason for this or that ceremony, for this or that festival. The going out of Egypt was a theme of marked recurrence. All the important seasons were linked to it. "Because of this the Lord did unto me, when I went out from Egypt." And to this day that ancient custom is exemplified in the Jewish home.

The Passover narrative as we recite it today is naturally of a stereotyped character. While in ancient times the query and the answer were spontaneous and free, both are now fixed. The very chanting makes of them a service. But then the other portions of our service have had their history. Nevertheless there clings to the Seder service a measure of spontaneity. We are told that it is meritorious to embellish the narrative concerning the exodus. It is a children's service. And while the Haggadah is read off in its traditional form, it is expected that the father, set forth the salient features in the vernacular. And as we deal with children, we must come down to their comprehension. Far be it from me to récommend a special edition of a children's Passover Haggadah. For that again would make it stereotyped and rob it of its spontaneity. We ought all of us to be able to conduct the service in such a manner that while its character as a service should never be destroyed there should be introduced into it as much of the free exposition as possible. For the function of the ceremony is to tell, to inform. Our children see before them indeed things of unwonted appearance. Even in homes where the Sabbath and the holidays are ushered in by sanctification, the Passover evening stands out unique. The children and as many more of our adults do not realize that much of the table setting recalls the fashion in Roman times. And these Roman times are far enough away. Children love mysteriousness. The open door is such an element. Some rationalizing explanations have been attempted, and probably they are untrue. But it is far more poetic to continue to say that the great prophet who never died is expected. Elijah indeed represents the undying genius of Israel. Let the child be told that he will come some day, that he may just come into this very house at this very time. To be in an expectant mood marks something to live for. And the traditional Haggadah may be embellished by a narrative concerning this mysterious man, the troubler of Israel, the uncompromising foe of lukewarmness, the jealous prophet who will brook no half-allegiance, a halting between two opinions, a half-Judaism half-something else. The "Four Sons"—what a fine lesson for children and for their elders, what a fine delineation of the various attitudes towards Judaism. There is the wise son who wishes to be instructed; he is already partly informed, he asks intelligent questions, he would know more. There is the rebellious son who wants to know what it is all to "you," who assumes the attitude of the stranger, who shows that he is very much at odds with his parental religion. Alas, there are many such sons in Jewish homes: those that laugh at the simple piety of their parents and then go off perchance and marry out of the fold. These two types are so constantly with us that the child in the impressionable years must be taught to realize the significance of the attitude. The wicked son excommunicates himself. So it has been in the past; so it is still today. Tell your child that to be a Jew means to take part in the life of the Jewish community, to be interested in the welfare of our brethren, to share with them their sorrows, to strive for their enfranchisement. "Today slaves, next year freemen." We used to have scruples about this assertion. For live we not in the land of the free? Yes, we are free, we who are but a part of our people; but the people as a whole cannot be said to be free so long as one part of it is enslaved.

The appeal of the Haggadah is from the past to the present, and from both to the future. "In every generation a Jew must look upon himself as if he had gone out of servitude himself." "And this it is that stood us in good stead." Enlarge freely upon that meaningful "this." Yes, this our loyalty to our past, this our attachment to our traditions, this our rehearsing the fortunes of our people, this fidelity to Judaism and this unswerving faith that right is on our side stood us in good stead. "For in every generation men rise up to destroy us, but God delivers us out of their hands." Here is the place for the father to weave in the narrative of the manifold persecutions, the story of the dark ages, of the squalor of the ghetto, of the foe without lurking to fasten upon us the calumny of an unspeakable crime. And the appeal to the future redemption is not wanting. On this point Jews are divided. The orthodox and the Zionist will abide by the time-honored hope; the liberal Jew will spiritualize it. I care not how it is done, but done it must be. The Jewish child must learn that there is a future for the Jew, great and glorious, a future worth striving, and if needs be, suffering for. The child must learn that the career of the Jewish people is still largely before it. The Passover which is to come is the justification for all the passovers that are now celebrated in Jewish homes. We cannot live for the present only. No man with ideals does that. We cannot live by the reminiscences of past achivement. Of course, to have had a past and to refer back to it is the mark of aristocracy. I would foster in my child this aristocratic sentiment. It makes for nobility of character. The parvenu begins his line with himself. Men who are well born are proud of their family, justly proud. They would perpetuate that pride in their offspring. But it is an empty pride that wastes itself in recalling the achievements of progenitors and has nothing to show that is worthy of them. By the past alone we Jews cannot live. If we have outlived our usefulness, we belong into the museum as a curiosity of history. But we have not outlived our usefulness. In fact we have a task to perform. And here ample freedom is given to the Jewish father to interpret that task according to the platform of the particular party in Judaism in which he is enlisted. But all of us must dwell on the future outlook, for it alone constitutes that which justifies our separateness.

The appeal of the Haggadah is many-sided and serious. Yet it is the beauty of it all that its tone is joyous; for indeed a people celebrating its origins and at the same time anticipating its future triumph must rejoice. "This is the day which the Lord has made; let us rejoice thereon."

JEWISH MAYOR HONORED.

Dr. S. Weisselberger, the Jewish mayor of Czernowitz, who had been taken a prisoner by the Russians because he would not disclose the names of the prominent citizens of the town, whom the Russians wished to take as prisoners, and who was subsequently released, was lately raised to the nobility by the order of Emperor Frances Joseph.

JUSTICE FOR THE JEWS

Under this heading the "Swiss Relief Committee for the Victims of the Horrible Deeds of Russia" publishes a report of the fate of the Jews in Poland and Galicia. It is a shocking picture of bestial crimes perpetrated upon innocent and inoffensive people. Each single fact is a hard accusation against Russia, however, not against her only, but also against her highly civilized allies—England and France. Although the sympathies of the committee are with the allies, it still finds itself compelled to point to the contradiction which exists between the program of "protection for the little nations," which was proudly trumpeted out into the world by England and France and the treatment which the smallest people, the Jews, has experienced at the hands of Russia, their ally. "Such conduct on the part of an ally disgraces the rest of the allies and it would have been the duty of the same to remind Russia of the sacred right of the little nations."

The deprivation of right, under which the Jews in Russia have to suffer so grievously, the restriction of emigration, the suppression of their strong desire for education—all this must have led to tragic conflicts when the state demanded the blood and life of its Jewish soldiers in order to attain its war aims. More than 350,000 Jews—consequently more than the whole army of Belgium or Servia amounted to at the beginning of the war—were forced to take the field for the defense of the Russian race, the orthodox faith and the Russian state. The flower o fthe Jewish youth fell by the thousands on the battlefields; they fought like heroes—evidence of this are the numerous distinctions which were awarded to the Jewish soldiers. But in spite of this the Jewish soldiers were not secure against the so deeply humiliating exceptional laws. Even the Russian papers that are inimical to the Jews, published numerous cases where wounded Jews were mercilessly turned out by the police from the hospitals, which had admitted them, because the hospitals were not located within the pale of residence. The families of the soldiers who marched to the front fared no better; they, too, were mercilessly exposed to the arbitrariness of the police organs. During the session of the city council of Smolensk, on December 19, 1914, councillor Mikhailoff said: It is not a question of the families of the Jewish soldiers who are engaged in active service in the army and of those families who fled from Poland only, but also of the soldiers themselves who, after having bravely attended to their service, became unable to fight in consequence of having been wounded.

The sad condition of the Jews was made still worse by the perfidious conduct of the Poles who falsely accused the Jews of espionage before the German as well as the Russian chief army commanders, causing numerous trials. When the German troops withdrew from Russia and the Russian army took possession of the places evacuated by the Germans, a time of suffering commenced for the Jews without its equal. The Russian papers and those of the allied powers bring only rarely and in a general way reports of excesses of which Jews are victims; one must read American papers when one wishes to be informed halfways about these events. In opposition to the assertion of the Minister Sasanoff, who flatly denies the horrible deeds perpetrated against the Jews in Russia, the American paper, "Jewish Daily News," is in possession of hundreds of letters which came from the victims themselves. "How awkward, yes, downright ridiculous sound the diplomatic distortions of a Sasanoff, who proclaims that these letters are due to German intrigues—letters which were written with tears and with blood."

Extracts from the American papers, "Wahrheit," "Vorwaerts," and others, give a terrible picture of the cruelties of which the Jews became the victims. Murder, pillage, arson, robbery, violence—the whole gamut of Russian bestiality—form the stations of Jewish suffering, which repeated themselves with regularity in all places. The military pogroms assumed a still greater climax through the crime of wholesale deportation of entire Jewish communities, which were exposed by it to distress and misery.

When the Russians treated their own subjects of the Jewish faith so inhumanly then, nobody can wonder that the Jews in Galicia had much to suffer under the Russian invasion.

When at the beginning of the war Zangwill inquired of Sir Edward Grey: "What will be the fate of the Jews in Galicia who have hitherto enjoyed political liberty, whether the same will be degraded to slaves and pariahs like the Russian Jews?" the Secretary of State solemnly declared in answer: "England will never tolerate the abridgment of the rights of any people and be it ever so little."

Also the Russian Chief Commander, Nicolayewitch, accentuated in his proclamation "To the peoples of Austro-Hungary" that Russia intends nothing else than the development and the welfare of these peoples, under the preservation of the sacred heritage of their fathers, their language and their faith. "The victory of the Russian army brings you the true freedom and the fulfillment of your desires," so concludes the proclamation of September 3, 1914.

But the reality stood in gross contrast to these declarations, which consequently proved to be empty phrases, worthy of an English diplomacy and of a Russian despotism. The hard law of the conquerer becomes merciless—vae victis—(alas for the vanquished!) as practiced in the time of Attila, and one would not be specially astonished at such excesses of such an uncivilized people as the Russians if these excesses were not directed exclusively against the Jews. "Razswiet" confesses openly that in the places occupied by the Russians in Galicia only the Jewish quarters have suffered.

Again it is the American papers which report these events in a less discreet manner than the Russian press. There you read of massacres and pillagings of the Jews, of the violating of women and girls. All this is performed systematically nearly in every place which the Russian troops, especially the Cossacks, occupied. Everywhere at the side of the malevolent intent to injure the Jews in their property, appears the bestial eagerness to torture them by specially picked out pangs and to gloat over the anguish of their victims.

The torments of soul which the Jewish soldiers in the Russian army suffered at the sight of the cruel treatment of their brethren in Galicia are described by a soldier in a letter to his brother in Philadelphia: "Since we stepped over the border I could observe the misdeeds of the brutal soldiery. Sacred scrolls of the Torah were torn in pieces and trodden on the ground, together with broken mirrors and silk and velvet materials. My heart contracted convulsively at the sight of the devastation which the soldiery caused in the Jewish quarters. I could not look on quietly how the soldiers derided my brethren who were in torments. I myself was forced to be present when a woman was violated. I was on the point of insensibility. I turned away and wept. You cannot imagine what a Jewish soldier in the Russian army must endure. Our hearts are bleeding and we cannot help." ("Vorwaerts," No. 609.) In the face of such occurrences one must agree with the American paper, "The Day," which after examining carefully all reports, comes to the conclusion that "the most lamentable of all tragedies in the present war is the tragedy of the Jews—their condition is a thousand times worse than that of the Belgians." However, while the Belgians enjoy the sympathies of the Englishmen and the Frenchmen, these do not want to know anything about the Jews. The report which intends to awaken the conscience of these peoples closes with the appeal: no pity, but justice for the Jews!

We opine, however, both must be demanded for our unfortunate coreligionists: compassion and the active aid which springs from it, for the inexpressible sufferings which they have endured—justice for the future as a protection against continuance of the hitherto practiced treatment.

To this end it would be of importance to compile a true history of the sufferings which the war has brought to the Jews. The whole extent of this Geserah is still unknown, we still do not know the fate of the hostages that were dragged away from Galicia and of those thousands who, driven away from hearth and home by the last shameful act of the generalissimo Nicolayewitch, are sighing in the distant provinces of Russia. An abundance of suffering is still covering the east front which our brethren of the last remnant of the home land which is still occupied by the enemy must endure, but the beginning must be made to gather the historical material, in authentical documents, as they are already to be found in the Austrian and German reports and official protocols in the war press quarters. These documents of cruelty would make a bloody book, a Jewish "Red Book," the reflection of which must bring the blush of shame to the faces of England and France over the bestiality of their ally, of which they are morally equally guilty—which would also inform the Americans how much harm they have involuntarily done through the support of the allies.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE JEW.

The scope and accomplishments of our anti-defamation campaign are by this time well defined, and that branch of the Order's activities has come to stay. As a matter of fact, the student of Jewish history and literature knows that old as the calumnies against our people are the conscious attempts at counteracting them have been just as persistent. The Jew has always lived in the world, in constant touch with friend and foe. He carried himself high and lofty, for early in his career the truth dawned upon him that he had a distinct task to perform. Judaism at once clashed with paganism. When his next of kin suffered a fate similar to his own at the hands of world conquerors, when they readily flung away their convictions and cast their gods to the moles and the bats, the Jew vanquished clung to God and conscience. His religion was a thing the heathen world could not comprehend, and least of all would it pardon that measure of aloofness from the world which marked the Jewish attitude. To be different from other people invites misunderstanding and begets calumny. Yet our ancestors did not fold their hands in inactivity. Accusations as monstrous as they were unfounded were met resolutely. In a dignified way and by recourse to weighty testimony the lie was given to libels and the Jew and his cherished religion were set in the light of truth. Then the world spoke the Greek tongue, and a foremost weapon in the hands of the dispersed Jew was the translation of the Scriptures into that language. It was a [illegible] step that led the Jews of Alexandria to open up their records to the Greek world that all might know the truth about the Jew and Judaism. And when later on Judaism was put on the defensive against the daughter-religions, the Jew was indeed forced into disputations with his neighbors with whom he would live in peace. In the heat of controversy much was said on both sides that might cause offense, but withal the Jew asked an honest appraisal of his worth. He battled fearlessly against all kinds of perversion of the truth. He stood his ground like a rock.

The libels have not ceased. The accusations have remained much the same. We are a minority differing from the majority. We probably know our neighbor as little as he knows us. But we [illegible] We do not [illegible] It is true our neighbors as a rule are not malevolent [illegible] When their attention is called [illegible] our campaign has [illegible] they are eager to retract [illegible] must be had in mind: [illegible] it is not sufficient to [illegible] has been uttered. [illegible] to say that we must be watchful to resist it so soon as it manifests itself. But we must be equally vigilant to prepare ahead. And that preparation must consist in an effort to make our literature known to the world. Our literature portrays us at our best and worst, if indeed there be any worst about us. Let him who runs read. Nor must we forget that the old weapons with which our ancestors met calumny are useless for present-day conditions. Our arsenal must be replenished. Our weapons must be refurbished. Our Catholic friends who in countries of a Protestant majority, are pretty much situated as we are, have always had their Truth societies. Their Catholic Cyclopedia followed in the wake of our Jewish undertaking. We opened their eyes to the value of such a work. And we may learn from them in the publication of tracts and text-books which shall set forth the truth about us. Yea, the outside world must learn to acknowledge that truth is many-sided and that there is a Jewish point of view to things indifferent and weighty. If the Hartmanns and Chamberlains vilify us with their pseudo-philosophies, let the Jewish philosophers arise and restate the truths of Judaism in a modern manner. And they are doing it. But more should be done. And the second point is this: We must not invite misunderstanding. A stiff and ponderous attitude opens the door to prejudice. As individuals we must claim the right to be human and err. Yet for the sake of the fair name of the Jew, of the collective body, we cannot be too cautions. Not that we have aught to hide. We have always bared our back to the smiters. But we must not needlessly offend or by indiscretion provoke miscomprehension. We are all for peace with the world. But peace between two aggregates as between individuals implies give and take and a spirit of conciliatoriness. Ranting at random about what the Jew wants is the mark of irresponsible men, not of true leaders. What the Jew wants is simple enough—to be allowed to live in peace. He must be accorded the rights that his fellow-citizens have, no more and no less. Defamation is rooted in ignorance. Let us not ourselves becloud the vision by giving utterance to expressions which are far from representing the Jewish attitude, the Jewish truth, the truth about the Jew.

PASSOVER.

Festivals have their origin in the dim past. It is the business of the historian to trace them back to their source. He will find that ceremonies and institutions are rooted in a philosophy of life far removed from our way of looking at things. When the shaft of the excavator digs below the surface, things will come to light, long-forgotten, but nevertheless at one time real and much alive. The archeologist may chance upon the skeleton of a babe that was immured alive as a propitiatory sacrifice to an angry deity. He errs, however, who, once he has penetrated to the lowest stratum with its ugly and weird appearance, then rests his labors, believing that the source has been uncovered and that the beginnings of things reveal their meaning. Yes, a meaning is revealed, but it is the meaning for that time alone, and it in no wise sums up or even foreshadows the transformations which in course of time will make themselves felt. You may trace the genealogy of man back to low animal beginnings. But is the meaning of man, the man of today, of mankind at the top of evolution, to be summed up in the meaning of man at his low estate in ages by-gone? Meaning betokens function, and function is ever changing, ever evolving. The digger after beginnings must not forget to retrace his steps and ascend stratum by stratum and lay bare the steps by which primitive man and primitive institutions rose until they came to be something wholly different from their initial stage. This progress from the germ to the full flower radiant in its beauty must not be forgotten. The historian who neglects the return to conditions as he finds them today has bungled his task.

What Passover meant in its first beginnings is no concern to the Jew of today. It may have had its roots in nature worship. It may have meant the joy in the return of spring and the blessings with which it is big. But even then it meant freedom, freedom from the wintry blasts, from darkness, from the dreary season of oppressing weather. Winter meant death, yet a death that was only seeming, that had in it the potencies of new life. At the turn of the seasons man felt rejuvenated, new-born. For us passover has meant these thousands of years the birthday of our people. The vision was turned away from the play of nature forces. Spring signified the dayspring of a nation born, risen to independence after centuries of servitude. We still tell our children the wondrous deeds in that dim past of our people's truly miraculous career. A children's festival it is in very deed. They are spurred to ask, to question, and the elders answer. We narrate to them what Laban did to Jacob, what Pharaoh to Israel. We impress them with the truth that at all times we have had Labans and Pharaohs, that in every generation men arose to destroy us, to enslave us, but that the Holy One, blessed be He, made us free again. We sing that beautiful love song which we may be thankful to Akiba for having kept in our Scriptures. We have learned at his example to forget its early associations. To us it is most holy. It sings of the love of God for Israel and of Israel for God. "He is my Beloved, and I am His." We believe that in due course of time mankind will turn to Him with a clear lip and acknowledge that Israel did choose well. We are not exclusive so as to deny others access to our bounties. But until that time comes we mean to cling to Him. We shall show that we believe in His love for mankind for whose good we are in the world. That today, when it comes, shall mark the Passover of the future. But as a preparation for that stage we must stubbornly refuse to be swallowed up. We must be there that through us the great hour of deliverance may strike for mankind. We must not be enslaved. We must not be cajoled into swerving from our path. Persecution wll not make us abandon our historic position; we are inured to persecution. We must not for a moment give way to false opinions concerning our worth. If all the nations follow their traditions, we will follow ours. It is for us to maintain that the call to freedom in every age is but an echo of the Jewish enfranchisement in Egypt. It is for us to show that the proclamation of liberty in this land of the free was couched in language borrowed from our Scriptures. It is for us to impress upon mankind that the enfranchisement of the Jew wheresoever oppressed marks an advance in the world's civilization. If this year slaves in any part of the world, we the Jews are only half free, and the world likewise is but half free. Let then the Passover once more rekindle in us the conviction that liberty must succeed to enslavement even as light follows darkness. Our Passover is a reminder to the world of its duty. Our Passover marks a milestone in the evolution of mankind. May the Lord hasten our deliverance, for when freedom shall come to the Jew the world will itself be free. This is the meaning of the spring festival, for it stands for nothing else but for mankind's highest achivements in realizing the humanity of man through freedom, political, social, moral.

PHOTOGRAPH OF A BEN B'RITH.

A man who is clean inside and out; who neither looks up to the rich nor down on the poor; who is considerate of women, children and elderly people; who is too honorable to lie; too sensible and upright to steal; who can lose without squealing, and assist without bragging; who is willing to take his share of this world's goods, and give the other fellow his, is a true Ben B'rith.

IN MEMORY OF HENRY HANAW.

Born, Jackson, Mich., August 15, 1856.
Died, Mobile, Ala., February 9, 1916.

During the half a century of its existence, Beth Zur Lodge, No. 84, of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, has had in its ranks many faithful sons of Israel who worked loyally and devotedly for the principles of humanity to which the Order of B'nai B'rith is consecrated. For more than half of that long period of time, Henry Hanaw was ever to be found at its forefront, as a leader or "in the trenches," wherever duty placed him, battling for the cause of justice for the Jew and all mankind—for the immigrant—for the widow—the orphan—the suffering and unfortunate.

Our beloved brother was the splendid type of the Jew in this blessed land of America. While pursuing and faithfully responding to those duties which became incumbent on him as a citizen, he was at the same time as true to his ancient religion and his people of that faith as the needle is to the pole.

It was in the Order of B'nai B'rith that he found the most fertile field for his unselfish labors, and in this fraternity he ascended the heights of usefulness with all the enthusiasm of one who loved his fellow man. As a member, as president of this Lodge, as president of District No. 7, as a member of the Constitution Grand Lodge, and the holder of other positions of high honor in the Order, he was faithful to every trust imposed upon him by his brethren. His brilliant mind was a beacon light for the aspiring, his zealousness in the cause an abiding inspiration, and the memory of it a glorious heritage for his family.

Well may it be said, that the passing away of Henry Hanaw brought to an end—

"A life most useful to his people led,
Honored while living—revered now dead."

Resolved further, that a copy of this memorial be engrossed and sent to the family of our late brother, that it be placed in our archives and published in the B'nai B'rith News, and that the portrait of our deceased brother in the B'nai B'rith Hall be draped in mourning for thirty days.

MUNIFICENCE OF AUSTRIAN JEWS.

A Jewish landowner in Bosnia has suggested to the leaders of the Jewish community of Vienna that many of the Galician Jews who have been stranded in the capital and are a burden on the charitable institutions there could be comfortably settled in Bosnia as agriculturists. He offered to provide for fifty or sixty Jewish families on his own extensive farms, giving each a piece of land and all the necessary implements.

The Budapest firm of Julius Wofner & Co. has handed to the Hungarian Minister-President the sum of 500,000 Austrian crowns as a fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans of soldiers. The Premier accepted the gift, expressing the heartiest thanks of the government to the generous donors.

Herr Bernard Wetzler has set aside the sum of 500,000 crowns for the purpose of erecting an institute where the technical side of the food problem should be studied on the basis of the scientific investigations made in chemistry, biology, and physiology.

JEWISH SOCIAL SERVICE BUREAU OF LONDON B'NAI B'RITH.

The First Lodge of England, London Lodge No. 663, has completed arrangements for the establishment of a Jewish Social Service Bureau, which will confine its work to men only, the work among women being largely carried on by the Union of Jewish Women, with which organization the B'nai B'rith Bureau will endeavor to co-operate. Institutions requiring workers will be requested to communicate with the Bureau, and it is hoped that members of the lodge, as well as public spirited Jews who are willing to give up part of their leisure time to communal work, will place themselves in communication with the Bureau, which proposes to issue as occasion may demand, leaflets and pamphlets dealing with the various phases of communal work.

EXPULSION OF RUMANIAN JEWS.

A report comes from Bucharest that large numbers of Jews residing in towns close to the frontier have been expelled from those districts. This deplorable measure strongly conflicts with assurances repeatedly given by the Minister of Foreign Affairs and has caused the complete ruin of many Jewish communities.

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE I. O. B. B.

During the past month, the Social Service Department has made considerable headway and Doctor Coffee, the National Director, visited several cities in various districts of the country.

An important visit was the trip to Evansville, Ind., on Tuesday, March 14, when Doctor Coffee was the guest of Thisbe Lodge No. 24. In the afternoon Doctor Coffee addressed the Temple Sisterhood, being introduced by Brother Rabbi Max Merritt and explained to the women there gathered, what the spirit of Social Service really means. In the evening, the installation of officers for the ensuing term took place. Afterwards the lodge doors were thrown open and women as well as men were privileged to hear the remarks of Doctor Coffee, who chose as his theme, "I. O. B. B. and Social Service." Despite the very inclement weather, there was an unusually large attendance that night. The Social Service Committee, as well as the members of the Order, pledged themselves to carry on the spirit of Social Service in that community. There are State institutions in the neighborhood and these will be covered by volunteer visitors.

On Friday evening, March 24, Doctor Coffee was the guest of the Altoona, Pa., community and delivered the sermon during the course of the evening's service. Rabbi Moses J. S. Abels, who has done fine and constructive work in his community, introduced Doctor Coffee in an appropriate manner and the sermon was, "What Does the I. O. B. B. Offer?" Years ago Altoona had an active lodge, but of late, the enthusiasm has been lacking. This visit of Doctor Coffee was intended to rekindle the original ardor and increase the membership of the lodge. Doctor Coffee pointed out to the local workers that Altoona is a strong strategic center for B'nai B'rith work. The Huntington Reform School, State College and the new Western State Penitentiary offer fertile soil for constructive Social Service work. The committee from Altoona Lodge should bring its good influences to bear on these institutions and advance Jewish work. Leading citizens of the city promised Doctor Coffee that steps would be taken immediately to reorganize the lodge and a meeting was arranged for the following week. On Saturday night, March 25, Doctor Coffee was in Pittsburgh and spent the evening with the members of the local Social Service Committee. The following officers were chosen to carry on the work:

President—L. S. Levin.
Vice-President—Aaron Horvitz.
Secretary—Charles I. Cooper.
Treasurer—Eugene Strasberger.

Much enthusiasm was shown by the members and immediate steps were taken to place the new committee in touch with all existing philanthropic agencies. The Big Brother Movement will be started at once. This is expected to cut down materially the number of Jewish boys sent to correctional and reform institutions.

The following afternoon a splendid rally and mass meeting was held in the large English Room of the Fort Pitt Hotel. Judge Josiah Cohen, for many years a loyal and devoted member of the Order, was the presiding officer. Brief speeches were made by Bro. L. S. Levin and Honorable George A. Levy, President of Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114. Doctor Coffee conclued the afternoon's meeting by a strong exposition of the work which the Order is now undertaking. He pleaded with his friends, with whom he had worked as Rabbi for the past nine years, to further the ideals of the Social Service Department. He complimented the four Lodges of Pittsburgh on the encouraging results of the recent campaign for new members and showed how these men could render valuable service along Jewish lines.

In the evening, Doctor Coffee was the guest of McKeesport Lodge No. 573.

A large gathering was assembled in Roth Hall and the speaker was introduced by Brother A. H. Friedman. The subject of the address was "The Newer Ideals of B'nai B'rith Work." An earnest plea was made for an increased membership in the local Lodge. While the Synagogues differ among themselves, all Jews can join the Lodge on a common basis and work together in harmony for the advancement of Jewish ideals. The address was cordially received and the Social Service Committee promised to undertake local work immediately.

Thursday, March 30th, Doctor Coffee spent in Peoria, Ill. Progress Lodge No. 113 had invited him as one of the speakers at the annual banquet that night. Thanks to the hospitality of Mr. W. B. Woolner, one of the active members of the Order in Illinois, a luncheon had been arranged for seventy-five persons, consisting of ministers, social workers, juvenile court officers and other persons prominent in philanthropic labors. Doctor Coffee addressed this gathering of Jews and non-Jews, taking as his theme "Religion Tomorrow." He offered a working platform on which Jewish people could co-operate with their Christian neighbors toward making this world happier and better. During the afternoon, Doctor Coffee was taken by members of the Order to the Bartonville State Hospital which contains twenyt-two hundred insane and epileptic inmates, few of whom will recover and return to Society. About sixty of these inmates are Jewish and arrangements were made, whereby a committee of local members shall visit these Jewish inmates at stated intervals.

The banquet in the evening reflects great credit on the local committee. In his remarks, Doctor Coffee pleaded with the members of the Order to start the Big Brother work at once in Peoria. The brethren were urged to organize an employment agency which would care for worthy Jewish people out of work in Peoria as well as find places for Jews who now reside in the crowded western section of Chicago.

During the past month, the fifteen members who constitute the Chicago Social Service Committee, held an election at which the following Committee were chosen:

President, Israel Cowen.
Vice-President, Milton R. Hart.
Secretary, Otto G. Finkelstein.
Treasurer, Benjamin Samuels.

THE DIPLOMACY OF GOOD WILL.

For obvious reasons the United States ambassador to Turkey, Henry Morgenthau, when he speaks to his countrymen during his brief furlough home, is not at liberty to deal with many phases of his service about which his auditors would like to hear. But he has found it possible, with all modesty, to indicate how he managed to carry the burden of looking after the interests of the nationals of twelve nations at war with Turkey, as well as the rights of Americans resident within the Ottoman empire, and how, as well as he could, he also guarded exiled and harried Armenians and impoverished Jews of Palestine.

Placing little emphasis upon the part played by the personal equation in his record, this New York lawyer and business man, of Jewish race and German birth, practically says that "preparedness" for his task was gained in the public schools of the most cosmopolitan city of the New World, and in the social settlements of the East Side. In the one he learned the essential unity of humanity, the possibility of fraternity among representatives of all races, and and the virtue that is to be found in sincere adherents of all faiths. In the settlements he learned the ideal of service of all by all.

Consequently, when his official duties in Constantinople, at a time of extraordinary confusion and perplexity, made it necessary for him to mediate among a great variety of nationals, and to settle offhand what could be done and should be done for them, he came to the work with no racial or sectarian prejudices or antipathies. Elementary humanity and elementary justice alone were his concern. And then, as he describes the process, having aided the Turkish banker today, he saw to it that the Turkish banker did a good turn to some non-Turk tomorrow. Himself wholly disinterested, and glad to be able to serve, he insisted that persons whom he aided should show any appreciation that they might have by themselves doing what they could for persons more needy than they.

So much for the policy he pursued toward the clashing nationals of Europe and of Asia and the subject races of the Ottoman rulers. When it came to negotiations with the Turkish government officials, it also was a moral and not a physical power on which he relied. He asked for no ships to be sent from Washington, and he protested against any being forced upon him. He stood on the moral rights guaranteed by treaty, he informed the Turkish officials that he expected them to protect him and his fellow nationals' property because they ought to do so; and through moral suasion he won his case. Persons privileged to hear Ambassador Morgenthau talk as he did a few days ago to a great audience in the City Club of Boston, know that his exposition of his theory and of his practice as a diplomatist will have a fine educational influence on any composite assembly sure to be attracted by his announced presence. He symbolizes, by his words and by his deeds, an ideal of Americanism to which a mixed company of all races responds with instant and strong conviction and loyalty. He expels all thoughts save those of human welfare and genuine service and the tactics of good will, all of which are needed today, in the United States as well as in Turkey.—Christian Science Monitor.

Look at that Funny Foreign Fellow! He is a Hero. He Has Fought Nations for His Faith.

By JACK LAIT. (By Courtesy Chicago Herald)

They pointed him out to me on the street. He was tall and of fine figure. But I knew he didn't belong. He wore an astrakhan cap upon his head, shaped like a Turkish fez without the dangling tassel. His coat collar was of the same gray fur, as crinkled as a colored baby's wig, and the coat was held together by "frogs," those outlandish loops. His shoes were pointed, queer and laughable.

He might have been a Cossack. But he was Jew. And there are no Jewish Cossacks.

I got the story. He was too conspicuous, too different, not to have a story. The hat alone was a story. But I found that his heart was a better one, and I hadn't seen that at all.

David Medoff is a Russian, a Jew and an opera tenor. That is a hard combination and a complicated confusion. He couldn't be all three.

"Give up your religion—become converted and you may stay in Petrograd and become famous, great and rich," he was told. The offer meant protection, favors, peace, even subsidy. The choice that faced him was whether he was to be a success or a Jew. To remain both in Russia cannot be.

For centuries the same choice has been given to those of David's creed. They have been driven, they have been scourged, they have been rifled and riven. And they have remained Jews, they have bred Jews and they have fled, hugging their fathers' faith to their beaten bosoms, for sanctuary.

Centuries ago there was another David. He was a shepherd, and in his breast mingled the peace of his calling and the music of his heritage. He strummed upon his harp the piteous, unwritten airs of his people. He tended his flock and offended no man. But a giant set upon him. He could not flee. He could not turn the other cheek. So he fought. A Jew is a pacifist. But when at bay he is a fighting demon.

This David—Medoff—was singing in the Russian opera, "Life of the Czar." They told him he must forswear his religion. The Goliath government ordered him to. He could not flee. He fought.

They shoved him into a regiment as a common soldier. They spat upon him and called him "Jew" and gave him the filthiest routine of a regiment's needs. They sent him into the trenches. He was with the first troop that took the field. For weary weeks he fought, living on abuse of his comrades and rotten rations afield.

When life seemed unbearable Medoff sang to the soldiers. He sang them the melodies that the other David had sung, the wailing melodies of the children of Israel that they chanted as they scanned the far horizon for a sight of the promised land. He sang the "Kol Nidre" and the heart-breaking cantations of the synagogue. He sang them Christian classics and he sang them Hebrew love songs. And they forgot for the hour that he was a Jew.

In Galicia he was wounded, shot through the leg. After six weeks he was discharged, cured. They turned his face again toward the trenches. He saw a loophole and he escaped. Through the lines he made his way across Siberia into Manchuria, to Shanghai. There he was stepping abroad a ship for the United States when he was arrested by the English police as a deserter.

They sentenced him to Siberia—to the mines beneath the frozen steppes. With three other prisoners he attacked his guard two days later, again a fighter, and escaped. For days he crawled and ran and walked and rode on camels, and by a roundabout route again attained Manchuria. Thence he went to Korea and sailed to Yokohama, where he took passage without molestation for America, arriving in San Francisco on the Tenyo Maru.

Aboard the ship he met the English actress, Cecilia Wright. He sang for her. She gave him letters to American managers. They financed him to Chicago.

That was where I saw him, not the queer foreigner, but the wonderful sufferer, the artist, the hero, the son of his race, true to it through incredible vicissitudes, victor in his fight against nations for the right to be what he was—a Jew.

That Medoff may get funds to reach New York, where he will find many sympathizers and supporters and where there is a fruitful field for his talents, Joseph Kessler, manager of Sarah Adler's Empire Theater, on West Madison street, has canceled the regular performances next Sunday afternoon and night and Monday night and Medoff will appear in Jewish opera with Mme. Gurevitch, soprano.

Those who have heard him in rehearsal have found a plaintive, pathetic strain in his singing. His notes have been steeped in tears. He is no longer a fighter. He is the other David—the soft-breasted singer of melancholy melodies.

But David is happy. He has found the promised land, where he can be both a shepherd and a cantor; where he can be both a singer and Jew.

INTERESTING EPISODE IN SALONIKA SYNAGOGUE.

The Oesterreichsche Wochenschrift is the authority for the following narrâtive regarding a most interesting incident that took place in Salonika recently. The head of the Paris house of Rothschild arrived in Salonika where he installed his yacht as a hospital for wounded. He also made a donation of 30,000 francs for the Jewish poor of the city. Baron Rothschild also visited several of the prominent Jews of the city, with the purpose of enlisting their sympathies in the cause of the entente powers. Finally he called a meeting of the Jewish population in the large synagogue, and a large gathering assembled to hear the baron speak. It should be said in passing that the house of Rothschild has on many occasions come to the assistance of the Salonika Jews and the Jews of the city feel a special debt of gratitude to the family. The Baron spoke in a quiet tone, dwelling upon the kindly attitude of the French government to the Jews and the hope that Jews may entertain in allying themselves on the side of the entente powers. After he finished his address, Rabbi Jacob Meir, the chief rabbi of Salonika, ascended the pulpit and briefly replied to Baron Rothschild. He said that while the Salonika Jews fully appreciate the many favors they received at the house of Rothschild, they are unable to accede to the Baron's wishes in this instance. They could not sympathize with powers that have allied themselves with Russia, the arch-enemy of the Jews. It is impossible for any Jew to entertain sympathy with a cause in which Russia is so closely identified.

This may explain the report recently published that when the entente powers placed under arrest the consuls of the allied Teutonic powers, they also arrested a number of prominent Jews of Salonika. These, however, have subsequently been set free.

THE PASSOVER APPEAL.

In connection with its Passover appeal the Central Committee for the relief of Jews suffering through the war, has issued a little booklet containing a modern adaptation of the Hagadah, the service read on the first two nights of Passover in every Jewish home throughout the world. It tells the story of the exodus of the Children of Israel from Egypt, over four thousand years ago, and the significance of Passover, the Festival of Freedom, and applies the story to the terrible sufferings of the Jews in the war zones.

Passover has always been the season of helpfulness among Jews. The poor were always provided with Matzohs and everything else for the celebration of the festival. And on the Seder nights, as the first two evenings of Passover are called, the stranger was always welcomed at the table, in compliance with the injunction, "let all that are hungry eat, and all that are needy come and celebrate the Passover."

The Committee expect a liberal response to its Passover appeal, and contributions may be sent to Mr. Harry Fishel, Treasurer, 63 Park Row.

MOVE TO RE-ESTABLISH PALE.

Anti-Jewish Resolutions.

According to the Petrograd Birschevyia Viedomosti, the Congress of "Real Russians," which has taken place in Nijni Novgorod, adopted a number of anti-Jewish resolutions, to the effect that the Jews after the war should be driven back to the former Pale of Settlement, that their estates in the provinces of Cherson and Ekaterinsoslav should be confiscated in order that Russians damaged by the war should be settled on them, and that all Jews should be excluded from the higher seats of learning, to which hitherto a small percentage of them was admitted.

THE KEHILLAH, XXII

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

The ancient historians of Rome gave us a series of kings, in which a warrior is always followed by a man of peace. Modern criticism does not accept this as a historical fact, but it surely is true in a philosophical sense. Real history shows us that a system followed by one ruler, will so clearly manifest its faults, that the successor will usually be actuated by a desire to reverse the policy of his predecessor. This was certainly the case when the well-meaning brilliant, though somewhat too impetuous Joseph II succeeded his mother, Maria Theresia, in 1780. His principles of breaking the baneful influence of the church, of developing the country by education and by general leaning towards liberalism was bound to have its influence on the Jews.

Considering the short time of his reign, which comprised only ten years, he did a great amount of work, and would undoubtedly have done more, had he been spared to live longer.

Sentiment usually exaggerates historic conditions. So Joseph II is universally praised as the liberator of the Jews. This, however, is only true in a certain respect. He did abolish the disgrace of the yellow badge, the principle of special Jew-taxes, "Toleranzsteuer," he encouraged agriculture and mechanical trades, and above all, education, but the ghetto, the restrictions on acquiring property, and on marriages remained. It must, however, be gratefully acknowledged that he paved the way for improvement. It is usually said—and Graetz says so expressly in his History (XI, 75)—that the gates of the universities, formerly closed to them, were now opened. This is not so. The law of Jan. 2, 1871, clearly states that "all schools shall be open to the Jews, though this was at no time prohibited." To the disciple of Rousseau, as Joseph II was, education was the panacea, and therefore he ordered that every Jewish child should receive a secular education. According to the principle of benevolent autocracy, the measure was connected with unnecessary hardship. Thus it was prohibited that Jews should keep their books in Hebrew or Yiddish and should draft their wills and other legal documents in this language. It was also unfortunate that self-seekers availed themselves of the opportunity of profiting by unjust charges against their fellow Jews, and were in this attempt assisted by grafting officials. A type of this kind was Herz Homberg (1759-1841). Born at Liben, a suburb of Prague, he received his education in the Yeshibah, first at Prague and afterwards at Glogau. We can find it only natural that an ambitious young man, suffering from the fanaticism which reigned in the institutions, and punished students for trying to obtain some secular education, would be filled with bitterness against this false principle. When about twenty years old, Homberg went to Berlin, where he was tutor to Mendelssohn's family, and received from this truly noble man encouragement in every way. When Joseph II had promulgated his edict making secular education compulsory, only two congregations, so far as known, offered their voluntary cooperation. They were Prague and Trieste. Homberg went to Trieste, but for reasons that are not known, left the city soon, and was appointed supervisor of education in Galicia. The Polish Jews looked upon the Emperor's order as a device to convert them to Christianity. The Austrian Government, never very efficient, was then new in the country, and did not have the necessary staff of officials to carry its intentions into effect. Folklore is the best way to judge the currents of thought. A Hasidic book, published not so long ago records the legend that one of the famous Wunderrabbis of that time, Loeb Sarahs, had himself miraculously transported every Friday afternoon to Vienna and gave the Emperor a sound licking, defying all attempts of the guards to apprehend the malefactor. In reality the Hasidim applied less miraculous and more tangible methods. They bribed the officials including the Jewish superintendent of education so that the law remained a dead letter. In Western Austria, however, the intellectual conditions began, though slowly, to improve. The Emperor showed some consideration for Jewish prejudices, allowing the Jewish children to keep their heads covered in the school room. Similarly he issued an order that Jews should not be unnecessarily compelled to work on Sabbath while they were doing their military service.

In this respect Joseph II was a pioneer of Jewish emancipation. He abolished the special Jewish courts, and introduced compulsory military service in 1788. The majority of the Jews considered both laws an interference with their religious liberty. A committee of Moravian Jews presented their scruples in an audience, but the Emperor remained firm. A similar law, which showed the determination of the Emperor to modernize the Jews, was issued in 1787, when he demanded that every Jew had to assume a definite family name. Even in this case legends have colored the historic facts. Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, the Galician ghetto novelist, tells us some amusing stories, how a Jew offered to pay for a "beautiful name" and was presented with a scale of prices ranging from hundred florins for Diamant, to twenty-five for Silberstein, and when he was unable to pay, the official, out of vindictiveness, called him Knoblauch. Historical sources do not uphold this tradition. In no single case do we hear of a Jew complaining that a malodorous name was inflicted on him, but here and there the authorities are directed not to allow too many Jews to assume the same name, and especially not to let them assume the same Biblical names, like Abraham, Jacob, Moses, which would render their identification difficult. The probable truth of the matter is that the Galician Jews were entirely indifferent to this order, which they considered one of the many attempts of the government to meddle with their affairs, and Loeb Sarahs, knowing he would remain Loeb Sarahs anyhow, told the registrar who asked him which name he would choose, "Write whatever you please," and the official, enjoying the fun of the situation, would register such names as Moses Erdkugel, Aaron Gurkensalat, Samuel Pulverbestandteil, Judah Kanalgeruch, etc. The pedantry of officials showed itself, however, in a demand for a correct spelling of the first name, which ruled out names like Herschel, and demanded that even Nebuchadnezar must be spelled in accordance with the Latin Bible, Nebuchadonozor. It does not seem likely that any Jew ever had the ambition to name his son for the king who destroyed the Temple of Jerusalem. The order created a great deal of confusion, for the registrar wrote down any name he pleased, which the people, who never used it, did not know, and in this way, it became difficult to identify the person who—I am speaking of an actual case—was called Perl, but was entered in the birth register as Polyxena.

The order which subjected the Jews to the civil code of the country, may have been chiefly opposed by the rabbis who in this way lost a great deal of their official power, and by the determined orthodox, but the masses of the population were in all likelihood satisfied with it, else we would not hear so often in former times of excommunication of people who had appealed to the secular courts, and we would not find so many privileges in which the authorities grant to one particular Jew exemption from rabbinic jurisdiction. It was different with the military conscription. The term of service was very long, and even I still recall men who had served for fourteen years in succession. In this way the young man was entirely estranged from his environment and his family, and often unfit for a regular occupation in civilian life, when he returned. For the Jew the mingling with the low classes of the population, from which the army was recruited, was another reason, and finally—surely not the last reason—was his estrangement from religious life. The Jews, therefore, tried to obtain an exemption on the ground of their religious scruples, but the Emperor said, "A Jew as a human being and as a citizen shall be held to perform the same duties which are incumbent upon his fellow citizens. This is not contrary to his religion, for he shall be at liberty to refrain from prohibited food, and shall not be compelled to do any work on Sabbath that a Christian would not have to do on Sunday." The rabbis were sufficiently informed on the political siutation not to attempt direct opposition. The first Jewish soldiers were assigned to the train, and Ezekiel Landau, chief rabbi of Prague, addressed the first Jewish recruits, on the importance of their patriotic duty, though he distributed amongst them Tefillin, admonished them to perform their religious devotions every day, and to make arrangements with their Christian comrades, "to grease the wagons for them on Sunday so that the Christians again should grease theirs on Sabbath." In individual cases the Jews adapted themselves quickly enough to their new duties. As early as 1809 a Jew named Hoenig was promoted to the rank of lieutenant for bravery on the battlefield of Aspern. He may have belonged to a family prominently connected with the Austrian tobacco monopoly, and ennobled by Joseph II in 1788. A member of this family was a field marshal von Henikstein, who did not distinguish himself as commander of an army corps in 1866. The whole family, however, is entirely lost to Judaism. In 1815 Peter Beer, teacher at the Jewish school of Prague, and a sympathizer of Herz Homberg, uses the opportunity of advertising his patriotism by declaring that he was trying his best to inculcate patriotism into his scholars, but the latter often ask him the question, whether they would be rewarded for their self-sacrifice on the battlefield. The answer given is that there was no objection to a Jew rising to commissioned rank, and that actually there have been Jews promoted to such positions. There are indeed some instances on record, among which is prominent Simon Brisker, who was born in 1796, and retired in 1854, with the rank of major. In 1852 the Austrian army had already a Jewish colonel, Joseph von Harzmanowsky, like Brisker, a Bohemian. It is a sad thing to reflect that Brisker's two sons, both of whom entered the army, and rose to the rank of captains, converted to Christianity. The pioneer record of their father did not inspire them with courage of remaining Jews, and yet they did not attain the rank of their father, who was courageous enough to have the oldest son, born to him at Venice, where he was then commander of the fortess, circumcised, and to have his fellow officers invited to the banquet given on this occasion. Similar, but still more depressing, is the case of Herz Homberg.

Homberg was an office seeker who always tried to make capital out of his supposed civilizing activity which was so much to the advantage of the state. He did not stop at trying to obtain his end by denouncing his co-religionists. Thus, he says, that the rabbis are blocking the benevolent intentions of the Emperor by fostering the Talmudic education, which makes the degree of "Morenu," the goal of the ambition of a young man, who then considers himself entitled to live of the sweat of his fellowmen, because rabbinic literature teaches him to despise Christians. With Emperor Francis II this policy did not work. Himself a bigoted Catholic, the Emperor would not listen to anything which smacked of free thought. Homberg petitioned for the right of residence in Vienna even as late as 1833, and among the reasons which he gave for a consideration of his petition, is that of his five sons four are baptized, while of the fifth he does not know it for certain. I have a suspicion that he knew quite well that his fifth son, Friedrich, born in 1806, and a lieutenant in the army since 1831, was not baptized. He probably waited for an opportunity to turn his rank into cash by marriage, and did not convert until 1836. He rose to the rank as captain, receiving the title of major when he retired in 1864. He died at Paris in 1881, and I am trying to learn something about the lineage of Octave Homberg, a member of the Franco-British commission which negotiated the loan for the Allies in this country. He may be a son of Major Friedrich, and a grandson of Herz Homberg, the author of a catechism, which was officially prescribed as textbook for the examination of Jews who wished to obtain a marriage license, and a teacher of Talmud in the house of Moses Mendelssohn.

Meantime the descendants of Joseph Mendelssohn, who received Homberg's instruction in Talmud, and according to his father's testimony, did not relish it very much, are ennobled, and have for three generations been Christians, and Herz Homberg's descendants one would hardly find any more in the Jewish community.

THE LONDON RESOLUTIONS ON JEWISH RIGHTS.

The following resolutions were recently adopted by the National Union for Jewish Rights, of which Mr. Lucien Wolf is president:

I. To defend Jewish interests wherever they are endangered or assailed.

II. To demand political emancipation and religious liberty for the Jews wherever they are denied, and to obtain "natural rights" in the sense of communal and more especially educational autonomy, wherever such rights may prove to be necessary.

III. To secure for the Jews adequate facilities for immigration into Palestine and for the establishment of Jewish colonies in that country, together with full political rights and such municipal privileges as may be necessary.

COUNTRY-WIDE RELIEF PROPAGANDA.

Rev. H. Masliansky and Mr. Albert Lucas On Behalf of the Central Committee Engage in Successful Campaign.

The Central Committee for the Relief of Jews suffering through the war, is engaged now in a country-wide propaganda campaign. Immediately after the work in connection with the National Relief Day on Jan. 27, have been completed, and the reports from the various communities had been received, it was felt that a great deal more could be accomplished. It was, therefore, decided that Mr. Albert Lucas, Executive Secretary of the Committee, should visit a number of cities outside of New York. He went first to Buffalo, Poughkeepsie and Gloversville in the State of New York, where he met with a great deal of success, and then proceeded to Chicago, which city responded splendidly.

Meanwhile requests for speakers have come from other localities, and it was then that Rev. H. Masliansky, the great Jewish orator, volunteered his services to the Committee He agreed to speak every evening during the week with the exception of Friday evenings, when he had to be in New York for the purpose of delivering his weekly lectures at the Educational Alliance.

Meetings were arranged in St. Louis, Mo.; Kansas City, Mo.; Cincinnati, O.. Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn.. Dayton, O., and Columbus, O. It was then found that Dr. Masliansky would have to be away from New York on three Fridays. and the Educational Alliance, through Mr. Samuel Strauss, Chairman of the Committee on Religious Work, gladly gave Dr. Masliansky the necessary leave of absence. In a letter to Mr. Fishel, Mr. Strauss writes:

"Although we have no more important institution at the Educational Alliance than Dr. Masliansky—even temporarily to replace him is quite out of the question—we are more than glad to relinquish him for so needful and noble a service as that for which the Central Committee desires him."

The reports received so far indicate that the campaign has been eminently successful. The utmost enthusiasm prevailed at all gatherings and the response to the appeals of Dr. Masliansky and Mr. Lucas have been very generous. Not only has money been contributed and thousands of certificates sold, but watches, rings, in fact jewelry of every kind, has been given and auctioned off so that the total sums have been considerably swelled.

In St. Louis $2,000 was raised at the meeting. Rabbis Leon Harrison and A. Abramowitz, Dr. M. Golland and Mr. Louis P. Aloe, splendidly seconding the efforts of Dr. Masliansky and Mr. Lucas.

The further result of the compaign is the development of the Woman's Proclamation Day Committee as a National organization. In connection with the activities for National Jewish Relief Day, Jan. 27, the Central Committee organized a Woman's Proclamation Committee under the leadership of Mrs. Samuel Elkeles, Chairman, and Mesdames David Kass, Emanuel Elzas and Zwisohn, and Miss Sara X. Schottenfels, as secretaries. Thus far this committee has raised $5,000.

Mr. Lucas has formed branches in Gloversville, Buffalo, St. Louis and Milwaukee. In the last mentioned city 850 women have pledged themselves to contribute $1.00 a month each as long as the war lasts. Mrs. Samuel Ruscha Carmen is Chairman of the Milwaukee Committee, and she is assisted by sixteen captains and four workers, each worker having her own advisory committee. Branches in other cities are being organized, and it is expected that within a very short time tens of thousands of Jewish women will form a chain of charity throughout the country, contributing tens of thousands of dollars every month to the relief fund. This work of the Central Committee alone is a gigantic task. Requests that Rev. Masliansky and Mr. Lucas visit other cities are being made, and the Committee is planning an extension of the compaign.

In connection with its Passover appeal the Central Committee has issued a modern adaptation of the Hagadah, handsomely gotten up.

Communities desiring to arrange meetings at which Dr. Masliansky or Mr. Lucas, or both of them, shall speak, are requested to communicate immediately with the central office, 63 Park Row, New York City. And Mrs. Samuel Elkeles, Chairman of the Woman's Proclamation Committee, who may be reached at the above address, will be glad to give all information to ladies desirous of organizing branches of the Woman's Committee in their respective cities.

Thus far the Central Committee has collected close upon one million dollars.

to the deepest Jewish self, out of our deepest Jewish self. It was this that our great leader not simply inculcated, but illustrated in his every utterance. And it is such thoughts that flash out of the very core of our race that appeal to its innermost, that thrill them with ardent loyalty and devotion. We can not freeze religion into men. We must burn it in with the fire handed down by one Jewish generation to another.

2. And we need poetry in religion, the unconscious and artless poetry of ancient customs and rites. We have ruthlessly disregarded folk psychology, the deeper necessities of the human spirit. Why the clean sweep of what is loveliest and most inspiring in our ancient Jewish ceremonials? The Jewish religion is not made up of sermons about cosmopolitan humanitarianism, glittering generalities that make no appeal to the people's heart. No religion is made up of little things. The great emotions of religion are spelled out in a very simple alphabet of the things that are tangible and concrete, that are to be observed from childhood on, that are associated with our dearest and holiest memories. These lovely Jewish customs are the language of the heart. They are the treasure of generations. What have we gained by allowing the lovely Sabbath eve to fall into desuetude? Can anyone reared up in the dear old way forget the blessing of the Sabbath lights by the mother; or the consecration of the wine, and the father's blessing as he lays his hand upon the children's head, and invokes upon their young lives God's love and benediction? The spirit of our great old Jewish patriarch whom we remember now, is surely with us in contending for what is most sacred and God-like in our father's faith; for he, the priest of Israel, the teacher of the Torah, was the messenger of the Lord of Hosts.

3. He strove all his days for union among his people. But union is but a means, a means to an end. All this long campaign was for what? Not simply to organize a body of Jews, but to sustain the soul of Judaism. It was but a preliminary step toward the highest development of our religious life. Now the highest expression of the human spirit is spirituality. Spirituality means intensity of religious feeling, a sense of awe, the religious consciousness raised to its highest power.

Now we urgently need a higher spirituality in the synagog. Our worship is too mechanical. Our spiritual temperature is too low. Not frost is dynamic, but fire.

Should this not be the supreme attribute of religious-minded men in the synagog, glowing conviction, deep reverence, strong love of sacred things? Should this quality not be the condition of membership in the synagog? Ought it to depend simply on the accident of birth, or upon money with which to buy the right of affiliation? Should not the desire to lead a Jewish life enter into the consideration, the desire to lead a religious life? Spirituality could be fostered by establishing within the synagog itself a religious fellowship, an inner circle, as it were, of Jews who are in dead earnest about their religion. These would be in a spiritual sense authentic members of the synagog, the guardians and lovers of the faith. A brotherhood of these congregational fellowships could be established and made nationwide, and become a band of veritable Maccabees; of Jews militant, with prophetic souls.

4. This is only another way of stating the paramount and urgent need of true democracy in the synagog, membership in which shall be based on something other than the payment of a fixed tax. The synagog narrows its own basis. It locks its doors with a barrier of gold. It becomes a club for public worship. Every true religion is strong only in the plain people, who must not be patronized or tolerated, but be made welcome as equals. Open wide your doors, or one need not be a prophet to say, you will soon close them forever. Why should the privilege of sustaining the cause be restricted to the few? "Would to God that all the people were prophets and that the Lord would put His spirit upon them."

We need Jewish democracy in the synagog today, as in the past. Of old, our Houses of Prayer were sustained largely by voluntary gifts donated by each man according to his resources. The old idea of "schnodering," the offering of men who were called up to the reading of the law, was democratic in its spontaneity. Isaac M. Wise fought for the old Hebrew idea of union that is also the American fundamental idea of union. He would today fight for the old Jewish democratic spirit that must live in the synagog, if the synagog is to live. This spirit alone can broaden the basis of the synagog and make it include all classes, the poor and the rich, the great and the humble. This community-wide extension of membership in the synagog can alone make it the communal social center; the cradle of philanthropy; as of old the school as well as the sanctuary where men seek the way of life.

The synagog should be the rallying point for all ideal endeavors for the Jewish people; the synagog with the open door, the synagog of absolute democracy, without financial conditions of affiliation, but supported only by free will offerings. Then thousands will throng there instead of hundreds. Then will we have a truly democratic commingling of all the elements in Israel. Then may we wage a battle royal with all our forces, to combat the evils against which we eternally protest, and for the great ends for which we endure throughout the ages.

5. For then the synagog will have the power as well as the right to fight our battles for us. If it were but a veritable union of all Israelites, if but there every phase of Jewry were represented, every variety of thought, every class, every group. In a word, the union created by Isaac M. Wise must go on until it shall include all associations of men that call themselves Jewish, whether they be clubs or lodges or labor unions, bodies of Jewish men and women organized for whatever purpose, so long as they bear the name of Jew.

And such a union is no Utopian dream. The burning need of it is being forced upon our attention by world-wide conflict, and the tragic effect thereof on the destinies of millions of our brothers. They are perishing of hunger there, our blood-brothers in the Russian war zone; and we millions of prosperous American Jews are obliged to create the machinery with which to gather relief for their necessities. Each Jewish organization goes its own way, pursues the same end confusedly, with its activities overlapping others. There is no one universally representative organization, based upon the democratic idea, that speaks the mind of the millions of Jews of this country, and is ready to execute their will. You have a union of congregations. But how about the hundreds of thousands, perhaps even the great majority, that are not included in your congregations, the innumerable brotherhoods of Jews for whatever purpose all over the land. Unite them. Weld them together into one great central body, into a universal union of American Jews; and you will wield a power for the good of Israel, for the defense of its rights and the establishment of its dignity, that has never existed since the Jewish commonwealth perished.

Such a union alone will have the power and authority to speak with a voice that cannot be ignored, for the human and elementary rights of our brothers in Russia, in Poland, in Roumania, at the close of this awful war; that finally their long anguish may be ended and their brutal governments be compelled by the power of this tremendous organized opinion, to grant them full human equality, and thus solve the great Jewish problem of the ages.

May this be achieved by the world-wide union of catholic Israel, of which our inclusive American union will be a type and example. And when the clouds of war shall no longer darken the world, such a union of Jews shall be the mighty and necessary instrument, to save us from suicide in the floods and from returning to bondage; shall help us to carry on the age-long fight for the religious oneness of our entire people; that our whole race shall worship God in the manner of our fathers, with the lovely symbolic poetry of the past, and with that fervor of the spirit whose living flame will consecrate our whole being to God. Ah, then shall the doors of God's house open wide for all his children. And then shall we realize the vision of our sainted and mighty leader and of all our seers and sages, for thus shall we be priests whose lips shall keep knowledge, and from whose mouths men shall seek the law; for in the consecration of the people to these holy ends will it be manifest that they are the "messengers of the Lord of Hosts."

KOHANIM MUST ALSO SERVE.

A number of Kohanim, descendants of the tribe of Aaron, refused the summons of the English Government to come to the proscription, on the ground that their religious scruples do not allow them to serve in the army, because this may bring them in contact with dead bodies, which the Jewish law forbids them. The matter was referred to Chief Rabbi Hertz, who decided that the Kohanim should not ask for such a privilege, since even when the Jews had their own kingdom, Kohanim served in the army together with all other members of the population.

WHY JEWS ARE NOT PROHIBITIONISTS.

By C. D. Spivak.

It is well known that the Jews are found in the ranks of all reform movements. In all lands they have participated in every effort made for freedom and have shed their blood for liberty. A moral idea always attracted the Jews, especially their youth. Socialism, anarchism, ethical culture, syndicalism, social service, communism, co-operative movements, vegetarianism, positivism, etc., etc., in the ranks of all these movements, Utopias and vagaries, as one is at liberty to call each or all of the above streams of human thought and sentiments, the number of Jews is proportionally greater than of any other nationality. In fact most of these movements have been conceived in the brains of Jews. The prohibition movement alone is an exception to the above rule. There are none in its ranks. Prohibition among our Christian friends has assumed the importance of an ethical movement, in fact, most of the churches consider it a deeply religious movement. And yet notwithstanding the fact that the Jew is renowned for his sentimentality and is swayed by emotion—and surely there is not another movement in which sentiment is available in such abundance as in the prohibition plea—why has the Jew remained aloof? Besides, the prohibition movement being based on an appeal to a universal sentiment and not being specifically Christian, should have attracted the Jews in great numbers. Why such an anomaly?

No Drunkards and No Prohibitionists.

The answer must be given in the proverbial Jewish way, by propounding another question, Why is inebriety so rare among Jews? There are no drunkards among Jews because there are no prohibitionists and there are no prohibitionists among them because the Jew embodies most of the Bible. The Jew did not only believe in the Bible, he lived the Bible.

The Jew has learned to love the vine because with it is connected the highest form of Jewish poetry. "My mother's children were angry with me, they appointed me the keeper of the vineyard; but my vineyard which is my own, have I not kept." (Song of Solomon 1, 6.) "Let us get up early to the vineyard, let us see if the vine have blossomed, whether the young grape have opened to the view, whether the pomegranates have budded; there will I give my caresses unto thee" (Ibid VII, 13). "Oh that he might kiss me with the kisses of his mouth! For thy caresses are more pleasant than wine." (Ibid 1, 3.) "I have eaten my sugar-cane with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk; eat ye, companions; drink, yea, drink abundantly, ye, friends." (Ibid V, 1.)

Jehovah likens the Jews to a vineyard: "I will sing now for my beloved, the song of my dear one touching his vineyard. A vineyard had my beloved on a rich hilltop. And he fenced it in, and cleared it of stones, and planted it with choicest vines, and built a tower in its midst, and also a winepress he hewed out therein." (Isa. V, 1, 2.) "On that day sing ye a song of the vineyard of excellent wine. I the Lord do keep it; every moment will I water it." (Isa. XXVII, 2, 3.) "A vine didst thou remove out of Egypt." (Ps. LXXX, 9.) "Yet I had planted thee as a branch of a noble vine, wholly of the proper seed." (Jer. II, 21.) "Like grape in the wilderness have I found Israel." (Hosea IX, 10.)

Nutritive Value of Wine.

I could multiply the citation where vine, vineyard, grapes and wines are used in portraying the spiritual life of Israel. In chapter CIV which the Psalmist devotes to the glorification of the Deity he mentions the words which have become winged: "And wine that rejoiceth the heart of man," (verse 15). The personification of peace is to "sit under one's vine and fig tree," (Zechar III, 10). "And their heart shall rejoice as though from wine." (Zechar, IX, 17.)

Wine was brought as an offering to Jehovah on the altar every day.

The Jew has long ago settled the question about the nutritive value of wine. The Bible mentions it along with meat, bread, flour, fruits, oil and salt. "And they (Jacob's sons) drank and were merry with him (Gen. XLIII, 34.) "And it happened on a certain day when his (Jacob's) sons and his daughters were eating and dining (Job I, 13) and behold there are gladness and joy—eating flesh and drinking wine," (Isa. XXII, 13.) "And the Lord of hosts will make unto all the nations on this mountain a feast of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined," (Isa. XXV, 6.) In furnishing provisions for workingmen's rations wine was included: "And behold, for the hewers that cut the timber will I give unto thy servant 20,000 cores of threshed wheat, and 20,000 baths of wine and 20 baths of oil," (2 Chron., II, 9.) And a number of menus are given in which wine was included as an article of diet.

Used in All Ceremonies.

That the prophets and teachers in Israel warned against excesses goes without saying. There are in the Bible hundreds of sayings, admonitions and precepts bearing on the subject. But it was not excesses in drinking alone that were decried, but also excesses in eating, in sexual instinct, in luxuries of all kinds, etc. Did not the great law giver, Moses, treat alike the glutton and the drunkard? "And they (the father and mother) shall say unto the elders of his city, 'This, our son, is stubborn and rebellious, he will not hearken to our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard,' and all the men of the city shall stone him with stones, that he die; and thou shalt put away the evil from the midst of thee; and all Israel shall hear and be afraid." (Deut. XXI, 20-21.)

And how could a Jew get drunk when before he carries the cup to his lips he pronounces a benediction, "Blessed be he who created the fruit of the grape." when the drinking of wine brings with it a flood of lofty thoughts, of the Deity and of creation and enchanting scenes of peaceful habitation under the vine and fig tree.

Instead of the expression, "Come and let us have a drink," the Jew says: "Come and let us 'make brocho,'" pronounce a benediction. His day of rest, the Queen Sabbath, he meets with a cup of wine, the Kiddush. His parting word to bride Sabbath he speaks over a sup of wine, Habdallah. His son he initiates into the Abrahamic rite with a cup of wine and he ties the knot bv drinking wine from the same cup, he and his bride. On the day in which the Jew commemorates his delivery from Egyptian bondage—Passover—he is ordained to drink four cups of wine, arba kosos. And it is considered perfectly comme il faut to get just a little bit gay and to be on the verge of tipsydom on Purim, when Esther saved the situation by giving a banquet to Haman, the arch-anti-semite.

No, Jews will not give up "rejoicing their hearts with wine." Jews cannot and will not be prohibitionists.

JEWS ASK WILSON'S AID.

Urged to Stand for their Rights in Russia After the War.

Under the auspices of the National Jewish Workmen Committee, 500 delegates from a number of the eastern cities, conferred on March 26, 1916, in New York as the first move toward equal rights for Jews in belligerent countries after the war.

A resolution to send a petition to President Wilson urging him to use his good offices, was adopted unanimously.

Dr. M. Goldfarb, Secretary of the Committee, explained the object of the conference, which he said was to be preliminary to a large Jewish Congress at the close of the European hostilities.

The Conference also adopted resolutions on the immigration question declaring that the resolution on immigration is detrimental to the interest of the working people.

CONFERENCE OF RABBIS.

A Conference of Galician and Bukovinian Rabbis and communal workers has been held at Vienna. A committee was formed with the view to working for the solution of the Eastern Jewish problem.

COMMUNICATED

Chicago, April 1, 1916.

Editor of the B'nai B'rith News:

Dear Sir: Will you be kind enough and inform the lodges in District No. 6 that with the issuing of my seventh syllabus, my work as Director of Intellectual Advancement is complete for the year, and that under the laws of the D. G. L. it will be necessary for the Director of Intellectual Advancement to file his annual report with the Secretary of the District Grand Lodge thirty days prior to the convention of the District Grand Lodge, and that the latter will hold its annual session on the first Monday of July of this year. In order that the Grand Lodge may be fully informed on all intellectual advancement activities in all the lodges in our district, the Director desires that the Secretaries of lodges and Directors of Intellectual Advancement submit to him a complete report of the lodge's activities for the year as per the notice sent to them on March 22, 1916, and that reports of lodges be in the hands of your Director for the District not later than May 1, 1916.

Fraternally yours in B. B. L. and H.,

Edward Menkin.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

B'NAI B'RITH OF CHICAGO.

The Chicago Lodges are now actively engaged in a plan to form a social and athletic club under the auspices of the Order in the downtown district of the city. It is planned to provide a lounging room, library, reading room, assembly room, billiard room, bowling alley, gymnasium, shower baths, etc. The privileges of the club will be restricted exclusively to members of the Order.

A well attended meeting of the prospective members of the club who have filed written application for membership was held on March 23, 1916, at which a board of 36 directors was elected, and fully authorized to take the necessary steps toward the completion of the plan for the establishment of the club. So far nearly five hundred members have filed their applications for membership in the proposed club, which will be known as the Covenant Club of Chicago.

The regular monthly meeting of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago was held at the Masonic Temple on Thursday evening, March 23, 1916, following the meeting of the members of the Covenant Club. The Council meeting was largely attended and interesting reports were presented from the executive board, to which were referred various subject matters, such as the establishment of a summer camp for Jewish boys and the proposition to create a membership fee in the Chicago Lodges. The former subject was favorably acted upon by the appointment of a committee to fully consider the question and submit detailed report at the next meeting of the Council, together with estimated budget for the operation of a camp for the coming year.

Regarding the establishment of a membership fee in the Chicago Lodges, it was resolved to defer the matter until the question of the establishment of a B'nai B'rith club has been fully disposed of.

At the close of the meeting brother A. B. Seelenfreund, who for a great number of years has served the Council as its president, was honored with the presentation of a loving cup in appreciation of his services to the Council. Brother Mark D. Goodman, on behalf of the Council, made the presentation address, which was briefly responded to by Brother Seelenfreund.

Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 held a well attended meeting on March 28, 1916, at the New Morrison Hotel. A class of sixteen candidates was initiated by the new degree team of the Lodge, which acquitted itself creditably. The special feature of the meeting was an address by Dr. Haim I. Davis, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, on the subject, "Mental Unsoundness Among Jews." Dr. Davis gave an exhaustive lecture, which proved of much interest and contained a great deal of instructive value. The address was followed by a discussion of the syllabus, "What Can We Do to Controvert the Popular Errors About the Jewsi" participated in by Brothers Hugo M. Friend, Julius H. Meyer and Dr. Jos. Stolz.

David Fish Lodge No. 130 held its first meeting in the new quarters of the New Morrison Hotel on Monday, March 20, 1916. The meeting was unusually well attended and a class of eight candidates was initiated. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service department of the Order, addressed the Lodge on the work of the department pointing out the necessities for furthering the work of the Big Brother movement as well as the certain of a chain of employment agencies throughout the District. At the conclusion of the regular order of business an entertainment was held consisting of vaudeville numbers and was followed by the serving of refreshments.

An unusually well attended meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33 was held at the Morrison Hotel on March 14, 1916. A class of 28 candidates was initiated by the Degree Team of the Lodge, and more than thirty new applications for membership were presented.

A special feature of the meeting was an address by Brother Judge Hugo Pam on the subject of "Zionism, Its Aims and Accomplishments." Judge Pam delivered a masterful address, detailing the causes that brought about the formation of Zionism and dwelt upon the many accomplishments to the credit of this movement.

The Lodge also took affirmative action in the matter of changing the meeting place of the Lodge and it was unanimously decided that in future the meetings of the Lodge will be held at Hotel La Salle. At the close of the meeting refreshments and cigars were served.

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF MACCABEE LODGE, NEW YORK.

Maccabee Lodge No. 71, one of the worthiest lodges in the "Mother District," celebrated its Golden Jubilee Saturday evening, April 8, with a banquet at Hotel Bon Ray, Madison avenue and 92nd street. Needless to say the banquet was "kosher," according to the time-honored dietary laws in the strictest sense of the term. Maccabee Lodge is "the pious lodge" of the District, par excellence. While most tollerant towards all others who may be less observant as far as the ritualistic phase of Judaism is concerned, the members of Maccabee Lodge are as a class very orthodox, being most devoted to the time-honored customs in Israel. A great many members of the Lodge are young men and college graduates. The Lodge is sometimes spoken of as "Bro. Simon M. Roeder's Lodge," for Bro. Roeder has been the guiding spirit of the Lodge for a number of years, and by his piety and happy nature has profoundly influenced many of the brothers in his Lodge. The Lodge is truly Maccabeean in its Jewish loyalty, and truly B'nai B'rithian, if the writer of this paragraph may be permitted to coin a new adjective, in its tolerance and liberality towards others, believing with the founders of the Order that religious differences along Ritualistic lines should never cause any division between one Jew and another, and that the cardinal principals of Judaism, such as benevolence, brotherly love, harmany, patriotism, morality, based on the belief of one great God, as the eternal rock of righteousness and humanity, be ever the means of "uniting Israelites in the work of promoting their highest interest and those of humanity."

The banquet was typical. Each male guest received a skull cap as a souvenir of the occasion, to be worn, of course, at the festive board. A number of inmates, or as they are now called "members," of the Home for the Aged, were among the guests of the evening. They were called for by the officers of the Lodge in an automobile and escorted back to the Home. The program of toasts after the sumptuous dinner, was as follows: Introductory remarks by President of the Lodge, Bro. Isidor Enselman, who called upon Bro. Samuel M. Roeder to act as Toastmaster. The toasts responded to were as follows:

Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee from District No. 1, "The Ladies." This toast was intended as a special compliment to the ladies, who as the wives and sisters of members of Maccabee Lodge, under the name of the Daughters of the Covenant, have helped the Lodge greatly in its work of benevolence among our poor co-religionists.

Bro. Herman Asher, Past President of the District, responded to the toast, "Our Guests."

Bro. Simon M. Roeder, "Our Founder, the Past."

Bro. Hon. Abraham K. Cohen, President of the District, "Our Mission."

Bro. Isidor Enselman, President of Maccabee Lodge, the outlook, "Our Future."

Bro. Henry M. Goldfogle, Past President of the District, "The Absent."

Bro. Harry Fischel, "Our Motto."

Bro. Rabbi H. S. Goldstein, Benediction.

Bro. Goldstein was presented with a loving cup in appreciation of his faithful services as President during 1915. Bro. Ludwig Roeder said Grace. Others who took part in the program were the Secretary of the District, Bro. Bernard M. Kaplan, Bro. Jacob Lamkay, one of the oldest members of the Lodge, and Bro. M. L. Manheim, who has been Treasurer for thirty-two consecutive years. The souvenir program which was distributed among the guests, was very elaborate and tastefully gotten up.

ARGO LODGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The twenty fifth anniversary of Argo Lodge No. 413, of Washington, D. C., was fittingly observed with a banquet held at the Metropolitan Hotel on Wednesday, March 29, 1916. A number of prominent citizens of the city and from out of town were in attendance and delivered addresses, among them the five Jewish members of Congress, namely: A. J. Sabath, I. Siegel, M. London, J. Kahn and I. Bachrach. Other speakers were Brothers Dr. Abram Simon and R. Szold. Geo. Milton Strassberger acted as toastmaster.

CLASS INITIATION BY ZERUBBABEL LODGE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.

Zerubbabel Lodge No. 53, of Rochester, one of the oldest lodges in District No. 1, initiated a class of over thirty candidates Sunday, April 9. Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan paid an official visit to the Lodge, representing the General Committee on the occasion. Bro. Kaplan spoke of the great service Zerubbabel, the ancient Jewish Governor of Judea, rendered to Israel, which services are still gratefully remembered after two thousand years, and he expressed the hope that the Lodge which bears the honored name of Zerubbabel may be a tower of strength to District No. 1, and the Order generally. He showed that Zerubbabel, who was appointed Governor by Cyrus the Great of Persia, and reappointed by King Darius, rendered useful service both to his Government and to the people of Israel, thus showing that patriotism and loyalty to Judaism go hand in hand. He quoted Bishop Greer of the Protestant Episcopal Church of New York, who at the Morgenthau Reception remarked that it was Ambassador Morgenthau's religion which inspired Ambassador Morgenthau in his service. Secretary Kaplan appealed to the brothers to be most loyal to the principles and ideals of the Order, for loyalty to the Order means loyalty to our country and social service in the interest of humanity. The active members in Zerubbabel Lodge, who are responsible for the increased activities of the Lodge, are Brothers Rabbi H. J. Wolf, Leo. A. Beir, A. N. Freiburg, M. L. Stern, Jacob Thalheimer, Isaac Beir, Philip Present, David Strauss, H. I. Robinson, Fritz Barth, Alfred Benjamin, Isaac Hanauer, and Max Goldsmith.

CHANANIAH LODGE, NEW YORK.

Chananiah Lodge No. 165, through Bro. Emanuel Stern, in a most eloquent address, presented to Victor Freitag a beautiful gift on the occasion of the brother's departure from this city to take up his abode in Atlantic City. Bro. Freitag has been a member of Chananiah Lodge for forty years, and will continue his membership in Chananiah Lodge, though he will now reside in Atlantic City. The Committee on Presentation were S. Gallinger, President, Albert Weiss, Vice President, Ex-President Eml. Stern, Ex-President Moses Oppenheimer, Secretary Joseph Kraus and Ex-President H. Weiss. Chananiah Lodge has just issued in printed form the message of President Henry Weiss, of Chananiah Lodge. The message is indeed a beautiful document and the little pamphlet is beautifully gotten up. One of the paragraphs in his message which is particularly worthy of mention is the following:

"Prayers devout and sincere also go up to the Great Father of us all, that the time may soon arrive, when peace and harmony may again prevail among our warring brothers on the other side of the globe, and that their wounds may soon and forever heal, and all of them, may then strive for an everlasting peace, and in that peace, again enjoy the fruits of their labor.

MAON LODGE, NORFOLK, VA.

In order to create greater interest in the work of the Lodge, and to foster better acquaintanceship among its members, Maon Lodge No. 172 resolved to hold several combined cultural and social meetings during the year.

The first of these meetings was held on Sunday, April 2, 1916, at the Monticello Hotel. A large number of members and guests were present. Rabbi L. D. Mendoza delivered an interesting lecture on "The Social Evil," embracing its history, cause and effects. Many of those present participated in the discussion that followed.

PORTLAND B'NAI B'RITH.

Portland Lodge No. 416 held an enthusiastic meeting on Tuesday evening, March 21, 1916, at which a class of six candidates were initiated.

A splendid business meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 was held on Tuesday evening, March 14, 1916, at the B'nai B'rith Building, at which reports were received from the delegates to the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge. After the meeting a comedy was put on by the Ladies' Auxiliary for the amusement of the Lodge and the Auxiliary, and this was followed by a Dutch lunch and dancing.

KANSAS CITY LODGE, KANSAS CITY, MO.

A cultural meeting was held by Kansas City Lodge No. 184, on Monday night, March 13, in the vestry rooms of the Temple. The meeting was well attended and opened with the initiation of candidates. Following the initiation, Dr. H. D. Jerowitz delivered an address, his subject being "The Young Jew." He deplored the fact that a number of Jewish young men had banded themselves together in a political club, using the word "Jewish" as a part of the title. It is his belief that this is against Jewish principles; that no right thinking Jew would permit himself to be coerced by any political alliance of this nature; that within each individual lies the choice of his political belief, and that it is a discredit to the Jews of Kansas City to permit a political organization under such a title to flourish.

Following his address, a talk was made by Rabbi Chas. Latz, of Fort Smith, Ark. Rabbi Latz referred to the Independent Order B'nai B'rith as the lay organization of Judaism which is an apt reference.

Following Dr. Latz' address, the lodge adjourned to a luncheon served in the vestry rooms.

HOPE LODGE, STOCKTON, CAL.

The members of Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Cal., tendered a banquet at Hotel Clark on March 9 to Bro. Emil Gumpert in honor of his admission to the bar. The Lodge has manifested unusual interest in the career of the guest of honor because he has been one of the most active and useful men of the Lodge.

The affair came in the nature of a surprise to Brother Gumpert. In the course of the evening Toastmaster A. J. Shragge, in calling upon Bro. Gumpert to respond with a speech, presented him with a testimonial on behalf of the members of the Lodge.

Other speakers at the banquet were Bro. S. S. Safferhill, P. H. Viner, M. Conway and M. P. Stein. A. H. Ashley, the only speaker present not a member of the Order, spoke on "The Jew and His Relation to the Law." In his remarks he referred to the ancient precepts handed down by the early Jewish patriarchs, declaring that these precepts are today at the foundation of our national and home life.

Mr. Gumpert responded, feelingly expressing appreciation of the action of his friends in so signally remembering him.

REHOBOTH LODGE, NEW YORK.

Rehoboth Lodge initiated a large class of candidates Monday, April 10, at Hunt's Point Casino, 163rd street and Southern boulevard. The class will be known as "Bro. Gibbs' Class' owing to the fact that most of the candidates in this class were proposed by the President of the Lodge, Bro. Judge L. D. Gibbs. The able Degree Team of Jordan Lodge, consisting of Bros. William Asher, Captain, Harry A. Silberstein, Harry Cohen, B. Franklin Wyskoff, David Kraus and Isaac Deutsch, examplified the work of the Ritual. Rehoboth Lodge expects great things from the Judge and the general impression is that Judge Gibbs, though a very busy man, will make a splendid record for himself this year as President of Rehoboth Lodge.

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF JOSEPH LODGE NO. 73, ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Joseph Lodge No. 73 of St. Joseph, Mo., extends an invitation to all the B'nai B'rith to join in celebrating its golden anniversary on April 16, 1916, the Lodge having been instituted on April 15, 1866.

There will be speaking by a prominent B'nai B'rith, a supper, entertainment and a dance. A good time is promised to all who will aid in celebrating this eventful day. Those desiring to attend will kindly notify the secretary of the Lodge, L. S. Schembeck, 2015 Agency Road, St. Joseph, so that proper arrangements may be made for their comfort and entertainment.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

The Committee of Fifty, representing the San Francisco B'nai B'rith Lodges, will observe the Passover with an elaborate Seder service to be given in the B'nai B'rith Hall, on the evening of April 18. Rabbi Herman Rosenwasser will officiate and Jewish members of the army and navy stationed at San Francisco will be guests of the local lodges.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 is making extensive preparations for the entertainment of District Grand Lodge No. 2, which will hold its annual convention in that city beginning May 21, 1916.

The Trustees and Directors of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland have postponed their quarterly meeting from April 1 so that the Directors and Trustees may hold their meeting the same time the convention of the District Grand Lodge will be held.

Bro. Max D. Meisel, Past President of the District, is chairman of the local convention committee and in charge of the arrangements.

All of the activities will be confined to the B'nai B'rith Building except an entertainment to be furnished by the children of the Orphan Asylum. The Ladies' Auxiliary has been appointed to take charge of the women who will attend with their husbands.

Under the auspices of the Lodge a B'nai B'rith Purim Masquerade Ball was held on Sunday, March 19, 1916, which was a great social success, the attendance being over 500. Prizes were awarded for the best costume as well as for the most comical one.

Before the Junior Circle I. O. B. B. on Sunday, March 19, 1916, E. V. Street of the Federated Charities gave an illustrated talk on "Cleveland Welfare."

Mr. Kaufman Hays, Trustee of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, and one of the prominent members of Cleveland Lodge, celebrated his 81st birthday with a family dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. Marks. In honor of the occasion Mr. Hays gave a treat to the children of the Jewish Orphan Asylum.

Cleveland Lodge is planning to hold a Seder service, and from present indications over 500 persons are expected to participate in the same. The service will be given at the B'nai B'rith Club Building, and will be presided over by a rabbi. The purpose of this service is to provide opportunities for those unable to attend similar services elsewhere and for strangers in the city. A committee will visit the various hotels and invite the Jewish guests staying in Cleveland during the holidays. This proposal as well as the suggestion that Cleveland Lodge aid in the distribution of free matzos to the poor, and Jewish inmates of city institutions, was favorably acted upon at a meeting of the Lodge at the suggestion of the president, Brother W. R. Weidenthal.

Brother Simon Peiser, superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, addressed Cleveland Lodge, urging its members to become big brothers to those graduating from the Orphan Asylum and assist them in making their way.

An informal B'nai B'rith dance was held at the B'nai B'rith club under the auspices of the Lodge on Sunday, March 12.

The big benefit performance in June for the gymnasium is gradually being put in shape and it is expected that it will meet with great success.

The Junior Circle of the Cleveland I. O. B. B. has resolved to launch a campaign for 200 members on April 1. As soon as the limit of 200 members is reached candidates will be put on the waiting list.

AKRON LODGE, AKRON, OHIO.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

I hope you will not be startled out of your editorial boots when you receive this letter from A'Crown (Akron), Ohio. Yes! Akron, the first city in District No. 2, in America. Knowing you are not used to receive anything from us, the boys asked me to drop you a line, and tell you that there are SOME Jews in Akron.

Some time ago, yes, a very long time ago, they got together and said: "Let's make a lodge in the B. B," and they got some material together and laid a foundation, but when it came to rear a superstructure, so much confusion reigned, that like the Tower of Babel, it was considered a bad job, and was on the point of being abandoned.

Last spring, the elders in the crowd, hearing that quite a number of the men of the covenant would gather in a neighboring village, by the name of Columbus, O., located in District No. 2, B' Medinas America Tzufon (North) and that an expert builder of the visible lodge from Cincinnati, O., would be there, they decided to send one of their number to learn, if possible, "how they did it."

The lesson that worthy learned, I know, will stick in his crop as long as he lives, the whole bunch of master builders with their axes sharpened, been waiting for him, and a fellow from the North Woods of Denver, who evidently knows how to wield the ax, and whose father named him Beginner Anfaenger in German, began right smartly; so much so, that the delegate was well trimmed up before they got half done, but to the point!

Akron now boasts of a lodge of over one hundred members, early this year (Jan. 9, 1916), we had the pleasure of having with us some of the big guns who reside in our suburb on the Lake, a village by the name of Cleveland. Yes, that is in Ohio, too, perhaps you heard of it before. All the big ones in District No. 2 come from there. Jacob Furth, Martin A. Marks, Leonthal, our Max E. Meisel, and, of course, the present incumbent, the honorable Samuel J. Kornhouser, and a whole raft of others now scattered through the country. Well, the last two named, together with a fellow by the name of Bornstein, who is aspiring for S. J.'s job, and lives in Indian-Oplis, which is in the Hoosier country, to the Southwest of us; they came and initiated eighty-five new members. They said a great deal, and would have said a great deal more, only the eats gave out quick, and our youugsters started in, and our visitors had to hurry, because it gets dark in Cleveland an hour sooner, and they were afraid to get home in the dark.

But, our newly elected President, the Honorable Rabbi Louis D. Gross, and his able assistant, who knows the law and always carries it with him, and can argue a technical point for half an hour; the Honorable Vice-President, Brother Samiwell Friedman, they both swore, right there and then, that they would not rest until the membership was up to at least one hundred and fifty before convention time, which will be held in our midst. I mean in our suburb, of course (Cleveland), next May.

And would you believe it, Mr. Editor, those youngsters are actually proceeding to do it; every meeting, sometimes five, six, and as high as a dozen have been initiated, and I tell you, some fine talkfest we have after. New quarters have been procured by one of the scouts, where the boys can bring the girls and hop around the May-pole under the roof in case it rains.

I must tell you a word or two of this good scout by the name of George Deer (Hirsh), after an absence of (23) twenty-three years, in the far West, he came back here, well feathered, but hungry for Jewish activities. Of course we got him in (don't tell anyone, he is no spring chicken), but one of the boys right there with the goods.

I will write you more next time. It is getting late. I would not have bothered you, only as I said before, the boys told me to write. Maybe someone would ask about them, so that you should know they are live ones.

Maurice Krohngold.

MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE, MD.

Menorah Lodge No. 771 held a well attended meeting on March 16, when the question of the establishment of a B'nai B'rith Home was taken up. The Executive Committee made the report on the results of the campaign for membership, which was encouraging. Other business transacted was a report on Jewish Court of Arbitration.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK.

Under the able chairmanship of William Solomon, the Intellectual Advancement Committee has been furnishing the members an extraordinarily interesting series of lectures. Police Commissioner Arthur H. Woods addressed the Lodge on March 2, his subject being, "Some of the Police Problems in New York City." His words were listened to with close attention, and he commended the members particularly upon the work they are doing in conjunction with the Big Brother Association.

Mrs. Henry W. Pollock, the new President of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Jordan Lodge, has outlined a program of active social service work for the members of this recently organized association. The ladies will interest themselves first of all in the needy families of Jewish prisoners. Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, the President of Jordan Lodge, is guiding this new organization and will continue to assist in directing its affairs until its work is fully launched.

SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

During the past two months Springfield Lodge has been quite active. The degree team, composed of twenty men, has officiated at large class initiations of other Lodges. A class of sixteen candidates was initiated at the Holyoke Lodge in Hotel Nonatuck. On Dec. 12th, the team journeyed to Albany and initiated a class of thirty candidates. Before the meeting, a dinner was served to the visiting guests by the members of Gideon Lodge at the Adalphi Club. After the initiation, addresses were delivered by Charles M. Stern, Past Pres. of District No. 1, and Henry Lasker, of Springfield, member of the General Committee. A class of thirty-seven candidates of the Haggai Lodge were initiated at Providence on January 30th by the full Springfield Degree Team. This was followed by a banquet at the Crown Hotel. The team was accompanied by Henry Lasker, Past Pres. Herman Adaskin, President P. L. Davison, and Treas. Jacob Magaziner, of the Springfield Lodge.

On February 6th the entire team exemplified before the Grand Lodge Convention at Hotel Sommerset in Boston, at which place a class of forty candidates was initiated. The team was accompanied to Boston by the officers of the Lodge and by Mayor Stacy of Springfield. The members of the team were very much elated over the announcement at the Grand Lodge initiation that the prize for the best degree work in the District was awarded to the Springfield Lodge.

At the meeting of the Lodge held on Jan. 26th, the day preceding the Relief Day set aside by President Wilson, $500 in cash was collected from the members present for the relief of the war sufferers.

On February 17th the annual ball of the Lodge was held at Hotel Kimball and was the social event of the year among the Jewish people of Springfield. On Sunday, March 19th, B'nai B'rith Day was observed by a public Purim celebration held in conjunction with the Beth El congregation at Odd Fellows Hall.

On March 20th a Purim masquerade ball was given under the auspices of the B. B. Degree Club, the proceeds to be used to provide paraphernalia for the team and to create a fund to defray the expense of the degree team.

The first intellectual meeting arranged under the new administration, was held in the large ball room at the Hotel Cooley, on February 13th, and in spite of the inclement weather there was an attendance of about four hundred people. The program consisted of a four-act farce by the Dramatic Club of the People's Institute, entitled "The Register." Addresses were delivered at this meeting by Stewart Anderson, Rabbi Samuel Price, Rabbi Israel Lebendiger, of Holyoke, Mass. Rabbi Herbert Goldstein, of New York, and Henry Lasker.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN OF JOSHUA LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

Joshua Lodge No. 23 of Philadelphia, Pa., began its campaign for fifteen hundred new members on Monday, March 28. One hundred and fifty of the best workers of the Lodge have been organized into fifteen teams of ten each, and these propose to canvass every worthy Jewish citizen of Philadelphia to secure him as an addition to the Lodge.

Within the last few weeks meetings were held by the captains of the various teams to make final arrangements for the campaign A systematic canvass of every office building in the city is being planned in the hope of enrolling every Jewish professional man in the city. The co-operation of the Rabbis who have been appointed on various committees has been secured and they will make an appeal to their congregations to support the Order and its work.

LOS ANGELES LODGE.

A meeting of the Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, March 14, in the B'nai B'rith Hall. The literary committee provided the following program:

A paper entitled "The Indigent Tubercular," by Dr. Herman Sugarman, followed by discussion of the paper by Dr. Leon Shulman and B. Cohn, after which a general discussion was open to all of the members.

A large class of candidates was initiated at the meeting by the Degree Team of the Lodge. This meeting was the first of a series to be held each month and it will be characterized by an educational paper with organized discussion.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

Plans are being made by Unity Lodge No. 273 for the celebration of its thirty-ninth anniversary on April 15. The affair will be in the nature of an informal dance, which is being awaited with much interest.

Columbia Auxiliary No. 1, Daughters of the Covenant, held a literary evening at its club rooms, 149 Eddy St., San Francisco, California, on Monday, March 13, 1916. The speaker of the evening was the Honorable Aaron Altmann, who is prominently known in art circles and otherwise in San Francisco. The theme of his address was Art.

Columbia Auxiliary No. 1, D. of C., is doing splendid work along charitable, literary and social lines.

Joseph Bien, well known member of San Francisco Jewish community and past President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, died at the age of 88.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Committee of Fifty, representing the ten San Francisco Lodges, was held on Wednesday evening, March 15, 1916, at which officers for the ensuing term were elected and plans for the year's activities discussed.

Golden Gate Lodge No. 129 entertained its members and friends on Sunday evening, March 12, 1916, with a sketch entitled "Some Bargains," produced by the Fred Dittman Co. This was followed by several other interesting numbers, and the entertainment was concluded with a dance. Mr. Henry Newburg, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, honored the occasion with his presence and favored the members with a few remarks.

A coast wide social service movement to be carried on by District Grand Lodge No. 4 was launched in San Francisco when Brother Harry K. Wolff, former President of the District Grand Lodge, was appointed to take full charge of social service activities in the District. Among the various assistants in this work, Brothers B. Selling, of Portland, and Dr. A. E. Cerf, have been assigned.

SEATTLE B'NAI B'RITH.

Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 and its Ladies' Auxiliary entertained the members and their families with a Purim social on Thursday, March 16, 1916, after the adjournment of the business meeting.

The regular meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627 was held on March 9, 1916. An important decision was the appointment of a committee to act jointly with a similar committee from Hildesheimer Lodge to endeavor to keep the Jewish name out of politics. At the close of the meeting Prof. Roth, memory expert, gave an exhibition on "Training the Memory."

Hildesheimer Lodge held its semi-monthly meeting on March 2, 1916, which was unusually well attended. Mr. H. Kessler briefly described the work of the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge held in San Francisco. The entertainment committee had a fine program and the evening was brought to a close with the serving of refreshments.

TOLEDO LODGE, TOLEDO, OHIO.

The new policy of Toledo Lodge No. 183, of having a speaker on some outside subject at every meeting, is proving a great success, if we can judge by the attendance.

It has been found necessary since adopting this plan to hold the Lodge meetings in the main auditorium of the Jewish Educational League Building, because the smaller Lodge room previously used has proved too small.

Another evidence of increased interest in the Lodge is the fact that twenty-five applications for membership have been received by the Propaganda Committee since the first of the year, and this with no special effort toward a membership campaign.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR D. G. L. NO. 7 CONVENTION.

About 140 delegates representing eight states are expected to attend the annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7 in Little Rock, Ark., beginning April 30. A program is being arranged by the entertainment committee. The sessions will be held at the Hotel Marion. A special train on Tuesday, May 2, will carry the party to Hot Springs, Ark., where they will inspect the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital. The ladies of Little Rock are arranging for an entertainment at the club house at Bear Skin Lake.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

JOSEPH LODGE, SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. M. H. Bernstein was the principal speaker at a public meeting held under the auspices of Joseph Lodge No. 76 of Savannah, Ga., at the Jewish Educational Alliance on the evening of March 26, 1916, delivering a paper on Benjamin Disraeli. The program of the meeting also included a number of excellent musical numbers.

Mr. Bernstein in his paper reviewed in an interesting manner the life and character of the famous Jewish writer and political leader, who arose from uncertain ancestry to a conspicuous position of success in London.

"Disraeli's career was a remarkable one," said Mr. Bernstein. "That a Jewish novelist should become the acknowledged champion of the British aristocracy seems past all belief. Perhaps the most important factor in his wonderful success was his unceasing perseverance, due partly to his imaginative character. He had, to a surprising extent, the faculty of foreseeing his destiny, and, because he foresaw it, he persevered."

Mr. Bernstein traced the life of Disraeli from a period shortly after its beginning in 1804 to its end in 1881, pointing out his many failures in life which invariably were followed by successes. The first literary effort of Disraeli, it was shown, was at the age of 17 and was a failure, but the idea was put into a successful book many years later.

At the age of 20 he turned to finance, and in the course of a year and a half lost a considerable sum in the Stock Exchange. He next entered journalism and this project failed: but in 1826, before reaching the age of 22, he produced the novel, "Vivian Grey," which assured his success in literary efforts.

The political life of Disraeli, which began with failure and reached its height of success when he became Earl of Beaconsfield shortly before his death, also was traced by Mr. Bernstein in his paper.

"Of all the biographies in history," he concluded, "there is perhaps none more interesting, more remarkable, more certain to inspire ambition or more likely to give the reader a true insight into human nature than the life of Benjamin Disraeli."

INSTITUTION OF HENRY COHEN LODGE AT CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.

As a result of the splendid efforts of Brother Sol Schoenman of Houston, Texas, Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, Henry Cohen Lodge No. 790 was instituted on March 5, 1916, in Corpus Christi, Tex., with a charter membership of 39. This is the first and only Jewish organization of any kind ever established in that community. Initiation and installation ceremonies were conducted by Brother Schoenman, representing the District Grand Lodge, and the name given to the Lodge was in appreciation of the services rendered by Rabbi Henry Cohen of Galveston in the interest of the Jewish cause.

The officers of the new Lodge are: S. A. Gunst, president; M. Guggenheim, vice-president; L. Myers, treasurer; I. Wiedenfeld, secretary; H. Kahn, warden; Norman Henry, guardian; Simon Weil, H. W. Schaffer, Frank Grossman, trustees.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PITTSBURGH, PA.

On Saturday evening, March 25, twenty of the members who had been appointed by Chairman Leonard S. Levin, responded to the call for a dinner at the Fort Pitt Hotel in honor of Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, to promulgate plans for an active Social Service Committee under the auspices of the Lodges of Pittsburgh. After a preliminary discussion by Brother Levin and the presentation of a comprehensive plan by Dr. Coffee, the following were selected to head the Social Service Department in Pittsburgh:

L. S. Levin, Chairman.
[illegible] Vice-Chairman.
C. I. Cooper, Secretary.
S. Davis, Treasurer
E. Strassburger.
[illegible] Fink.
F. Hemple.

On Sunday afternoon, March 26, in the English Room of the Fort Pitt Hotel, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee delivered an address to a representative gathering of Pittsburgh Jews. He dwelt upon the work of the Anti-Defamation League and the Immigration Commission, and outlined the [illegible] [illegible] undertaken by the Social Service Department under his direction.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Worcester Lodge No. 600, as an organization, made its debut in the communal affairs of Worcester by holding on March 21 a cabaret and dance for the benefit of the Worcester Hebrew Free School. This school is open to all Jewish children of the City of Worcester for the purpose of teaching Jewish history, Hebrew and Jewish culture. For some time it has been in financial difficulties and so Worcester Lodge took a hand, organized a communal committee and arranged the affair with the result that about a thousand dollars has been realized. This was the first undertaking by the Lodge as an organization for the benefit of local institutions, and so great was the success that the members hope to render similar service in the future. The affair took place in Mechanics' Hall, the largest hall in Worcester, and was attended by about fifteen hundred people. Among those present were Mayor Wright and other prominent citizens of Worcester, so that it was a benefit not only to the Worcester Hebrew Free School, but also to the Worcester Lodge as an organization.

RENO LODGE, RENO, NEV.

On Sunday, March 19, Purim day, a very successful party was given for the Jewish children of the community of Reno under the auspices of Reno Lodge No. 760. About fifty children were the recipients of the attention and courtesy of the members of the Lodge and their ladies. Brother H. M. Couzin delivered a short talk on the historical features of the festival. Games were provided for the children, during which prizes were distributed and refreshments were served.

On Thursday, March 23, a Purim entertainment and dance was given by Reno Lodge with the assistance of Nevada Auxiliary No. 1. More than 250 guests were present. Governor Boyle, the state executive, honored the occasion with his presence and was accompanied by a number of officials of the state. The affair was held at the Century Club Hall, which was unusually gay with embellishments of flowers and other decorative features. Music and vocal numbers formed an important part of the program, at the conclusion of which dancing prolonged the evening's diversion.

VIRGINIA, MINN.

Mesaba Lodge No. 673 celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on March 12, 1916. The celebration consisted of a meeting of the Lodge held in the afternoon, at which candidates were initiated, and a banquet in the evening at Moose Hall. Dr. Myron Sherper of St. Paul was the guest of honor. In his address at the banquet table he related the Order's history, its accomplishments during 73 years of its existence, dwelt upon the new activities embraced in the Anti-Defamation League work and Social Service Department of the Order, and at the close of his remarks he appealed to the audience to remain steadfast in their faith and true to the history and traditions of their people. The address was well received and Dr. Sherper was applauded frequently. Short talks were also made by various members of the Lodge, and N. T. Keller acted as toastmaster. The members of the Ladies' Society had charge of the banquet and were complimented for the success achieved. Following the addresses, dancing was enjoyed until early hours in the morning.

ESHCOL LODGE, DAYTON, OHIO.

A social evening was arranged under the auspices of Eshcol Lodge No. 55 of Dayton, Ohio, on March 6, 1916, which was attended by more than 300 of the members and their ladies. The program consisted of vocal and musical numbers, recitations, and a humorous talk by Hon. R. W. Baggart, Judge of the Probate and Juvenile Courts of Montgomery County, Ohio. The literary committee of the Lodge arranged for the following program for the season, part of which has already been carried out:

February 21. Discussion of the Burnett Immigration Bill by Bro. F. I. Ach.

March 6. Life Insurance, by Bro. J. Jamison.

March 20. Federation of Charity Work by Bro. D. G. Goldzwig.

April 3. The Latest Thought of the War, by Bro. Sid Kusworm.

April 17. Jewish Demands before the Peace Conference, by Bro. Max K. Margolis.

May 15. Zionism, by Bro. N. Feinberg.

June 5. Impressions of the Convention by the Delegates of the Lodge.

June 19. Dental Hygiene, by Bro. Dr. W. Razow.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Under the auspices of Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, a banquet was held in the Riley Room of the Claypool Hotel on Sunday, March 26, 1916. The affair was largely attended by the members of the Lodge and their families.

In the afternoon preceding the banquet an unusually well attended meeting of the lodge was held in the parlors of the hotel, at which a class of candidates was initiated. Mr. Karl M. Vetsburg, of St. Louis, First Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, was the guest of honor and the principal speaker at the banquet. In his address he pointed to the work that had been done by the B'nai B'rith in the way of spreading the propaganda of benevolence and brotherly love among the Jewish people, and he declared that the good work of the order had become not only a benediction to the members of its own race, but that the benefits had been felt by the representative citizenship of the entire country.

Trouble to Follow War.

The speaker asserted that the close of the European war will bring the American nation many grave problems in connection with immigration and he urged that the members of the B'nai B'rith stand ready to assist in solving the perplexing situations that may arise and to struggle for justice for all concerned. Mr. Vetsburg was followed by Louis J. Borinstein of Indianapolis, Second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge. Other speakers were Isidore Feibleman, Rabbi M. M. Feuerlicht of the Indianapolis Hebrew Congregation; H. A. Jacobs and Joseph G. Engleman.

Mr. Engleman represented the class of eleven candidates who were initiated into the Order in the afternoon. Mr. Jacobs spoke of the annual show of the Indianapolis Lodge, which is to be held at the Masonic Temple on April 10. A. H. Goldstein presided as toastmaster at the banquet.

ATLANTIC LODGE, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Atlantic Lodge No. 494, of Atlantic City, N. J., entertained with a Purim celebration at Guaranty Trust Building, Annex, on Sunday afternoon, March 19, 1916.

The welcoming address was delivered by Justice Schneider, President of the Lodge. Musical and vocal numbers interspersed the program. The principal address was delivered by Mr. A. Weil, of Philadelphia, President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, on the subject, "The Meeting of B'nai B'rith." Hon. Isidor Sobel, of Erie, Past President of the District, addressed the gathering on "The Erie Orphanage and Home." Brother Henry M. Fischer spoke on "The Significance of Purim," and this was followed by an entertainment by the Y. M. H. A. Frolickers, and the closing address of J. B. Perkson, Past President of the Lodge.

BERKELEY, CAL.

Under the auspices of Berkeley Lodge No. 765 a well attended meeting was held on Wednesday evening, March 8, 1916. The Lodge was honored by a visit of Grand President Henry Newburg, who made a stirring appeal for the revival and expansion of the Lodge. He said in part:

"The Berkeley Lodge has a unique opportunity to attract a large membership of university students. It is peculiarly fortunate by its location in a university town where an intense Jewish life prevails. To lose its opportunities is to injure the entire order. The B'nai B'rith looks to its Berkeley representation to be in the forefront of the cultural activities. There must be no let-up in its interest." Mr. Newburg's words made a deep impression.

ARARAT LODGE, HARTFORD, CONN.

The work of the Order during its almost 75 years of existence was eulogized by Mr. Jos. Levenson of New York, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 1 at a meeting in Temple Beth Israel on Friday evening, March 24, 1916, under the auspices of Ararat Lodge No. 13 of Hartford, Conn. Rev. Harry W. Ettelson, rabbi of the congregation and president of Ararat Lodge, presided at the meeting. The speaker recounted at considerable length the work of the B'nai B'rith during its three quarters of a century, and spoke of the many results it has achieved in charitable and educational work.

COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

The second open house monthly entertainment given by Covenant Lodge, No. 569, of Duluth, in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel, was held on March 14, 1916. The entertainment began at 8:00 o'clock and was open not only to the members of the Lodge, but to their guests. Mr. E. A. Silverstein and Mrs. Sol Goldberg discussed Judaism as it was in olden times, Mrs. Goldberg from a woman's standpoint and Mr. Silverstein from that of the man, both urging a return to more of the customs and usages of years past.

The program also included readings, songs, recitations, and musical numbers.

A bridge contest, and a supper served by the Temple Aid Society, followed the conclusion of the program.

MONTEFIORE LODGE, BUFFALO, N. Y.

"Translating Words Into Deeds," the members of Montefiore Lodge, No. 70, of Buffalo, N. Y., celebrated its golden anniversary at Temple Beth Zion on March 5, 1916, by collecting $1500 for the Jewish War Relief Fund. The collection was the result of an appeal by Mr. Albert Lucas, of New York. Old members and young joined in the celebration. Henry Weill, one of the pioneer citizens who has been a member of the lodge forty-seven years, in his remarks, briefly reviewed the history of the Lodge.

"International law should spell among other things, justice to the Jew," declared M. P. Davidson, of New York City, Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, and one of the guests of honor. Judge A. K. Cohn, of Boston, President of the District Grand Lodge, said, "While the B'nai B'rith is an International Order its doctrines teach the Jew to be loyal to the country in which he lives." Rabbi Max Diob characterized the B'nai B'rith as an ideal fraternity, one which is always on the lookout for the interests of others and has charity for its watchword.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The joint committee representing the six Lodges of the Order in New Orleans met on Saturday evening, March 4, 1916. The purpose of the session was to consider the Burnett Immigration Bill now pending before Congress, against some features of which there have been protests in other Districts and sections of the Order. The New Orleans Committee strongly seconded these protests and resolved to send a copy of the resolutions to all the members of the Louisiana delegation.

PROGRESS LODGE, PEORIA, ILL.

The annual Purim banquet and ball under the auspices of Progress Lodge No. 113, was held on Thursday evening, March 30, 1916, at the Jefferson Hotel. There was an attendance of over 200 members and their friends from the surrounding cities of Bloomington, Lincoln, Champaign, Galesburg, and Canton, Ill. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of Social Service Department of the Order, delivered an address on "Judaism and Social Service." Rabbi Louis Wolsey of Cleveland also addressed the gathering. Among the local speakers were Messrs. E. Lehmann and H. M. Schradzki. Rabbi S. G. Bottigheimer acted as toastmaster.

The meeting also served as a conference of the central Illinois Lodges of the Order. The affair was brought to a close with a dance which lasted until the early hours of the morning.

OAKLAND, CAL.

Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., is making remarkable progress. A spirit of enthusiastic co-operation prevails, with the result that a membership campaign has been started which netted 50 new members, and increased attendance at the bi-monthly meetings of the Lodge.

At the last meeting held on Tuesday evening, March 14, 1916, a class of eight men was initiated and twenty-seven applications were favorably considered.

Dr. Landon, formerly connected with the U. S. Naval Service, delivered an interesting address on "The Submarine."

President Henry Newburg of San Francisco paid the Lodge an unofficial visit, and in his remarks commended the Lodge highly for its activity. Other speakers were Bro. H. Blumkin of Butte, M. Mosessohn of Portland. Refreshments were served after the meeting.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

DISTRICT NO. 1.

The Annual Ball of Daughters of the Covenant of New York City was held on Saturday evening, March 11, 1916, at the Majestic Hotel.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Home for Aged and Infirm at Yonkers arranged a Purim entertainment for the Home's inmates at the institution in Yonkers on Sunday evening, March 19, which proved successful and was much appreciated by those present.

Rabbi Gustave N. Hausman preached at Temple Anshe Chesed, Manhattan, a sermon to Zion Lodge No. 2 of New York City which attracted much attention. His subject was "The Sons of the Covenant."

Jordan Lodge No. 15 gave a brilliant ball at Delmonico's, one of the fashionable hotels of the city, Saturday night, April 1st. It was a brilliant social affair and was attended by a large number of prominent and active members in the Metropolitan district. The following Entertainment Committee was in charge of the Ball: Brothers Fred W. Pollock, Chairman, Leo J. Horn, Morton Moses, Charles J. Weinstein, David Kraus, Isaac Deutsch, Harry Sammet, B. Franklin Wyskoff, Herman I. Sperling, Isaac Kleinberger, Simon W. Sondheim, Harry A. Silberstein, John J. Jalien and Adolph Schwarzbaum, Secretary. Jordan Lodge is Ambassador Morgenthau's Lodge. It is also the lodge of Past President Herman Asher and First Vice-President Joseph Rosenzweig. It numbers among its members some of the most active men in B'nai B'rith circles in New York.

Asariah Lodge No. 164 held its quarterly meeting Monday, April 3rd, which was the largest meeting attended since its amalgamation with Mishael Lodge. The feature of the evening was a class initiation. The Secretary of the District, Bro. Bernard M. Kaplan, conducted the ceremony of initiation. The meeting was followed by a collation at Harlem Palace which was very much enjoyed by the large number of members and guests.

Tuesday evening, April 4th, Maccabee Lodge No. 71 was addressed by Bro. Rev. Dr. Max Raisin of Hillel Lodge No. 28 on "Moses Mendelssohn and the New Era in Jewish Life." Maccabee Lodge has been issuing very delightful monthly circulars containing some interesting "reflections."

Horeb Lodge No. 25, to use the familiar Hebrew classics term, "is going from strength to strength." It has gained lately an additional fifty members, twenty-five of whom were initiated Sunday, April 10. Bro. Joseph H. Ullman, Past President of District No. 1, who is the moving spirit of the lodge, and Bro. A. M. Friedman, the genial and indefatigable Secretary, will not feel contented until Horeb Lodge reaches the "thousand mark." Horeb Lodge numbers now nearly 650.

Bro. Charles M. Stern, Past President of the District, at the request of the Committee on Gary School System, headed by Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, worked most earnestly in Albany against the passage of the Greiner Bill. All who are interested in maintaining and preserving the secular character of our public schools are delighted over the fact that the Bill has not passed.

Bro. Isidor Blum, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of Manhattan Lodge, who has rendered splendid service to this, the biggest lodge in the Metropolitan District, has removed to his home city, Baltimore, Md., where he will take up his practice as attorney. Bro. Blum, though a very young man, has had the confidence and respect of the entire membership of the Lodge. Bro. Blum is a man of sound judgment and possesses the right Jewish spirit. Manhattan Lodge is sorry to lose him. It finds, however, consolation in the hope that Bro. Blum will continue his services in B'nai B'rith circles in District No. 5, for whether one works in District No. 1, District No. 5, or any other District, as long as one renders service as a Ben Brith, the Order at large is benefitted and it is the benefit of the Order generally which every loyal Ben Brith must have at heart.

Bro. Joseph Levenson, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, visited Ararat Lodge and delivered an address before a large gathering at the Temple.

Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, First Vice-President of the District, paid a welcome visit to Horeb Lodge, addressing a large gathering of the brothers present.

B'nai B'rith Day was duly observed at Temple Emanu-El, New York City, on Sunday, March 19th, the day of Purim. Brother Rev. D. Jos. Silverman, chairman of the Committee on Religious Activities, was the orator on this occasion and delivered a splendid address on "The Soul of Israel." President Judge A. K. Cohen, of Boston, designated that day as B'nai B'rith Day to be observed all through the District.

The amendment to the charter of District No. 1, I. O. B. B., which was framed by Bro. Samuel Fleischman, the counsel to the District, and adopted by the Grand Lodge at its session in Boston, has been passed, as presented, by the New York State Legislature, through the efforts of Bro. Charles M. Stern, Past President of the District.

The meeting of the General Committee of District No. 1 in the month of April, will take place Saturday evening, April 15th, instead of the last Saturday in the month.

Hebron Lodge No. 5, one of the oldest lodges in the District, will celebrate its first meeting at the headquarters by initiating a good sized class of candidates.

The Past Presidents of the District have been invited to attend the future meetings of the General Committee. The surviving Past Presidents of the District, exclusive of those who are members of the General Committee, are: Morris Adler, Joseph Fox, Henry M. Goldfogle, Adolph Hirsch, Joshua Kantrowitz, Jacob B. Klein, J. E. Newburger, Simon M. Roeder and Adam Wiener.

Zerubbabel Lodge No. 53, of Rochester, N. Y., initiated a class of forty candidates on Sunday, April 2d. Brothers Sol Sulzberger and M. P. Davidson, of New York, members of the General Committee, were present on the occasion. The degree work was exemplified by the team of Maccabee Lodge of New York City.

Manhattan Lodge No. 156 of New York City is preparing to celebrate its 45th anniversary, which will take place towards the end of the month.

Brother Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Chairman of the Committee on Religious Activities, and Bro. Joseph Levenson, Chairman of the Committee on Intellectual Advancement, are planning to arrange a course of lectures on subjects of Jewish interest, to be given at the new Headquarters of the District in New York City.

Brother Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein, of New York, visited Springfield Lodge No. 684, of Springfield, Mass., and delivered an excellent address which was very much appreciated by the large attendance present. He also received a special invitation from Holyoke Lodge to visit and address the brothers of that lodge.

Brother Rabbi Horace Wolf, of Zerubbabel Lodge, has been elected president of the newly organized Rochester branch of the New York State Prison Council, which will endeavor to assist families of men sent to State penal institutions.

Brother Charles M. Stern, Past President of the District, was the speaker at the joint Friday evening services which the Y. M. H. A. and the Y. W. H. A. of Albany, N. Y., have started, on Friday evening, March 17th, and delivered a most delightful address on the "Book of Esther." Brother Stern said that many of the American women enjoyed a position of luxury and comfort such as were enjoyed by Queen Esther, with this difference, however, that while Queen Esther in all her comfort never forgot her unfortunate brothers and sisters, many of our American Jewish women forgot the condition of the stricken brethren abroad. He called upon the ladies present to emulate the truly noble example of the Biblical Queen and do their duty towards their less fortunate brethren. Brother Stern's eloquent and timely address made a most beautiful impression upon his appreciative audience.

Washington Lodge No. 19 held a most interesting meeting at Terrace Garden, Thursday, March 23rd. The speaker of the evening was Bro. D. J. Coenca, of Constantinople, who spoke on the "Work of the B'nai B'rith in the Orient."

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Thisbe Lodge No. 24 of Evansville, Ind., held an important meeting on Tuesday, March 14, 1916. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, was the guest of the Lodge. Installation of officers was one of the special orders of business and ot its conclusion the doors of the lodge room were thrown open to the public and a large number availed themselves of the privilege to listen to Dr. Coffee on his theme, "I. O. B. B. and Social Service." As a result of Dr. Coffee's visit various State Institutions in the neighborhood of Evansville will be covered by volunteer visitors.

Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., selected for its annual show this year "Princess Chrysanthemum," an operetta in three acts by C. King Proctor. It will be given at the Masonic Temple Auditorium on April 10, for the benefit of the war sufferers. The entire play including the male parts will be taken by women and the principals will be assisted by a large and well drilled chorus, all under the direction of Harry Porter.

A joint memorial service of Missouri Lodge No. 22 and Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47 of St. Louis, Mo., was held on Tuesday evening, March 28, 1916, at Temple Shaare Emeth. In the absence of Dr. Emil G. Hirsch of Chicago, who was prevented on account of sickness from attending and delivering the memorial address, Mr. Horwitz of the Menorah Societies delivered the address.

Dr. Simon Peiser, Superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, Ohio, will deliver an address on "The Orphan Asylum" on Sunday evening, April 9, at Temple Israel, St. Louis, under the auspices of Missouri Lodge No. 22. This will be a public meeting and the members of the Lodges and their friends will be welcome to attend.

Under the auspices of Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis, Mo., a B'nai B'rith orchestra has been organized, which holds regular meetings every Sunday.

At the meeting of Zion Lodge No. 62 of Columbus, Ohio, held on March 6, a class of candidates was initiated. At a special meeting of the Lodge held on March 13 the proposition to open the charter for 42 days for the purpose of securing a large class of candidates was discussed and favorably acted upon.

Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., is arranging for its annual show, which is to be held at the Masonic Temple on April 10.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

On March 13, 1916, Brother Richard S. Rauh and Edward Hemple, both of Pittsburgh, addressed New Kensington Lodge on the work of the Order. The officers of the Lodge were installed by Brother A. Horvitz, President of Saar Sholem Lodge of Pittsburgh, at a meeting held on March 20. Brother Horvitz also addressed the lodge.

On April 16 Brother Richard S. Rauh of Pittsburgh, intends to speak in Altoona, and it is hoped that his presence and address will serve to rejuvenate the lodge there. Brother Rauh will also visit Wheeling, W. Va., on April 23, and arrangements are being made for a meeting to be held in his honor. Brother Hemple will accompany Brother Rauh.

Beaver Valley Lodge No. 777, of Beaver Falls, Pa., gave its first dance on Wednesday evening, March 15, 1916, at the Junction Pavilion.

On Friday evening, March 24, 1916, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of Social Service Department of the Order, was the guest of Altoona, Pa., community, and delivered the sermon during the course of the evening's services. His subject was "What Does the I. O. B. B. Suggest?" Dr. Coffee pointed out to the local workers that Altoona is a strong strategic center for B'nai B'rith work.

A Pittsburgh branch of the Social Service Bureau of the Order was formed on March 26, 1916, at a meeting over which Judge Josiah Cohen presided at the Fort Pitt Hotel.

The regular dance of Parkersburg Lodge No. 767, of Parkersburg, W. Va., at its club rooms on Thursday evening, March 2, 1916, proved to be a great success from every standpoint. A delightful program of dance music was disbursed and the event proved one of rare enjoyment to all participating.

Mr. Richard S. Rauh, of Pittsburgh, paid an official visit to New Kensington Lodge No. 762, of New Kensington, Pa., on March 14, and delivered an address to a representative gathering there.

The officers of New Kensington Lodge No. 762, of New Kensington, were installed by Brothers Edward Hemple and Aaron Horvitz, representing the District Grand Lodge, on March 21. As a result of their visit, the different Jewish activities of the community were consolidated under the auspices of the Lodge.

McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., was honored by a visit of Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of Social Service Department of the Order, on the evening of March 26. Dr. Coffee delivered a splendid address, which was listened to with much attention and interest by the members of the Lodge and their friends.

Rabbi Silver, of Wheeling, W. Va., addressed Abraham Lipmann Lodge No. 672, of Pittsburgh, on Wednesday, March 22.

A mass meeting under the auspices of representatives and leading members of the Order was held on Sunday evening, March 5, 1916, at Huntington, W. Va. Among the out of town speakers were Richard S. Rauh, of Pittsburgh, who has distinguished himself not only in B'nai B'rith circles but in the business world as well. Mr. Rauh is Vice-President of Jericho Lodge No. 44, of Pittsburgh. Another speaker of prominence was Edward Hemple, also of Pittsburgh, an officer of the Grand Lodge and one very active in the services of the Order.

In connection with its campaign for 1,500 new members, Joshua Lodge No. 23 of Philadelphia, Pa., held an important meeting on Thursday, March 23, 1916, at the Mercantile Club. Brother Jacob Singer, member of the Executive Committee of the Order for the District, addressed the Lodge.

The Annual Purim Dance under the auspices of Wheeling Lodge No. 615 of Wheeling, W. Va., was held at Elks' Hall on Wednesday evening, March 22, 1916. The affair was largely attended.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Rabbi Montague N. A. Cohen addressed Lasker Lodge No. 370 of San Diego, Cal., at a regular meeting of the Lodge held on Tuesday evening, March 7, 1916, on "George Washington."

Mr. Henry Newberg of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, paid a visit to Berkeley Lodge No. 765, of Berkeley, Cal., on March 15, 1916, and enthused the members to work for the upbuilding of the Lodge.

Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Cal., gave a whist party and dance on March 15, 1916. The Committee on Entertainments has made arrangements to have a series of such affairs during the coming months.

For the benefit of the Jewish war sufferers, Everett Lodge No. 761 of Everett, Washington, gave a basket social in honor of Purim, which included an enjoyable program. The net proceeds were turned over to the War Relief Committee.

Hope Lodge gave a card party and dance in its lodge rooms on March 15, which was a great success. Steps have also been taken for the organization of a Ladies' Auxiliary to the Lodge, and a charter has already been applied for. The Lodge is also arranging for the annual picnic and for a lecture by Brother Dr. Zeimer, on the subject, "My Ideal Ben B'rith."

An open meeting was held under the auspices of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, at the B'nai B'rith Building, on March 29, 1916. The speakers were Rabbi W. Rice, Rabbi S. Baskin and M. Rosenblatt. The subject, "Zionism," was discussed by these speakers from three standpoints. that of the Reformed Jew, Orthodox Jew and the layman Jew.

Under the auspices of Hope Lodge No. 126, of Stockton, Cal., a monthly bulletin entitled "Swaps" is being published, with the purpose in view of bringing into closer relationship the members of the Lodge, so that through their concerted efforts the greatest amount of good may be accomplished.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

The 29th anniversary celebration of Argo Lodge No. 413, of Washington, D. C., and the Get-Together Dinner of the Argonian Cohorts was held at the Metropole Hotel on the evening of March 29. Bro. Julius I. Peyser acted as toastmaster. The program included novelty and musical features.

A special silver anniversary sermon was preached for the members of Argo Lodge No. 413, of Washington, D. C., by Rev. Dr. Abram Simon at the Eighth Street Temple on Friday evening, March 31. The subject was "Newer Ideals of the B'nai B'rith Order."

Under the auspices of Rimmon Lodge No. 68, of Richmond, Va., the First Annual Purim Ball and Entertainment was held on Thursday evening, March 23, 1916, at the Jefferson Club. A play staged by the Dramatic Club of the Y. M. H. A. preceded the dance.

The Orphans' Home of Atlanta, Ga., celebrated during the month of March, the 27th anniversary of its dedication. During the many years that have elapsed since that eventful day, March 28, 1889, the institution has stood as a foster parent to hundreds of children who have grown into splendid manhood and womanhood. The B'nai B'rith of District No. 5, the founders of the institution, and Atlanta Jewry are to be congratulated upon the excellent record of the Hebrew Orphans' Home.

Joseph Lodge No. 76, of Savannah, Ga., is arranging for a public meeting during April, at which the subject, "Heinrich Heine," will be discussed.

Palmetto Lodge No. 789, of Camden, S. C., was instituted on Sunday, March 26, 1916. Rabbi Dr. Geo. Solomon, of Savannah, Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 5, was the installing officer, acting on behalf of the District Grand Lodge.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Jewish Orphans' Home, of Atlanta, it was decided to have a representative of each Lodge of the District on the Orphan Home Board.

The Board is meeting with great success in the raising of funds for the Simon Wolf endowment fund of the Home, which has now reached the sum of $65,000 and it is hoped that the requisite amount, namely—$100,000, will soon be secured.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

The B'nai B'rith lodges of Omaha are hard at work on propaganda lines and will endeavor to secure a large class of candidates to be initiated some time in April. William McKinley Lodge, of Omaha, already has a class of forty and no doubt will secure a great many more. Nebraska Lodge has a class of fifteen and it is confidently hoped that, by the time the class initiation is held, one hundred candidates will be initiated by the joint degree team of the two lodges.

Arrangements are being made for the attendance of Brother Sig. Livingston, Chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order, to address the lodges at their meeting as well as at the banquet to be held on the evening of the same day.

Nebraska Lodge No. 354, of Omaha, Neb., gave a ball at the Metropole Hotel on March 2, 1916. This was one of the large social affairs given by the Lodge during the season and among the guests were members of McKinley Lodge of Omaha, its Ladies' Auxiliary, and representatives of lodges of the Order at Lincoln, Neb., and Council Bluffs, Ia.

Hornell Hart, of the City Club of Milwaukee, spoke on Thursday evening, March 2, 1916, before Isaac Lodge No. 87, of Milwaukee, at a well attended meeting of the Lodge. The subject of his address was, "Is Democracy a Failure?" He pointed out the fact that one of the functions of democracy is self-preservation and under this heading he discussed "Preparedness." "The adjusting of labor disputes has not been developed as a function of our Government," Mr. Hart said. "Democracy fails because of individualism. Every man takes as many special privileges as he can possibly get," was another statement of the speaker.

Menorah Lodge No. 769, of Stevens Point, Wis., held a special meeting on March 19, for the purpose of initiating a class of candidates. After the initiation ceremonies a number of short addresses were made by members of the Lodge.

The University of Minnesota has announced details of the Prize Essay Contest arranged by the Twin Cities' B'nai B'rith Council, representing Minneapolis Lodge, of Minneapolis, and Minnesota Lodge, of St. Paul. Competition is open to all students of the institution. Essays are to be on the subject of "The Jewish Problem and its Solution," and the time limit for submitting entries is May 13. Three of the judges will be designated by the University and two by the Twin Cities' B'nai B'rith Council.

At a meeting of Isaac Lodge No. 87, of Milwaukee, Wis., held on Thursday evening, March 16, 1916, Leon L. Lewis, of Chicago, Secretary of the Anti-Defamation League, addressed the Lodge on "Defamation and Education."

Under the auspices of Des Moines Lodge No. 330, of Des Moines, Ia., a membership campaign was launched at a meeting of a special committee of the Lodge held on March 16, 1916. Four teams have been selected which will have charge of the campaign. The plan calls for the termination of the campaign on Sunday, April 9, and on that day a big initiation meeting will take place, to be followed on Monday, April 10, with a banquet and dance for the members and their ladies, with the members of the new class as guests of the Lodge. Bro. H. D. Frankel, of St. Paul, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District, has been invited to visit the Lodge and be the speaker of the evening, and to assist in the initiation of candidates.

Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694, of Lansing, Mich., gave its fifth annual Purim ball on March 20, 1916. The affair was largely attended, many out of town members honoring the occasion with their presence.

Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521, of Omaha, Neb., is making arrangements for the observance of the 16th anniversary of its institution, to be held on April 9, next. Brother Sig. Livingston, of Bloomington, Ill., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 6, has been delegated to visit the Lodge on the occasion and deliver an address.

Covenant Lodge No. 569, of Duluth, Minn., is actively engaged in a membership campaign, which so far has resulted in securing about 25 applicants. It is expected that a special meeting of the Lodge will be held in the near future for the purpose of initiating these candidates, and for this occasion the presence of the President of the District, Brother Benj. J. Samuels, of Chicago, has been assured.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., is making arrangements to cooperate with the American Jewish Relief Committee in the matter of raising additional funds for the relief of war sufferers. The Lodge has already contributed a large sum and will redouble its efforts to contribute its share to the five million dollar fund which it is contemplated to be raised.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Brother Solomon Marx, of New Orleans, one of the pioneers of the Order, celebrated his 82nd birthday on April 1. He received good wishes and congratulations from a large number of organizations in which he is interested.

Houston Lodge No. 434, of Houston, Texas, through its committee on Social Affairs, is arranging for a smoker and public installation of officers to be held on April 18. The members, and friends of the other two lodges of the city, namely, Lone Star and Herzl, have been invited to participate in the hospitality of the Lodge. A splendid program is being arranged and refreshments will be served.

Barnett Lodge No. 754, of Forrest City, Ark., held a very interesting meeting on Sunday, March 12, 1916. The special order of business was the election of delegates and alternates to represent the Lodge at the Convention of the District Grand Lodge to be held on April 30, at Little Rock, Ark.

Asaph Lodge No. 286, of Meridian, Miss., held a very well attended meeting on Sunday evening, March 12, 1916. The special order of business was the installation of officers for the ensuing term. A number of out of town visitors were on hand and the meeting was an unusually interesting one.

Eureka Lodge No. 198, of Waco, Tex., unanimously adopted a resolution opposing the provisions of the Burnett Immigration Bill now pending before Congress, and caused copies of such resolution to be sent to the President of the United States as well as to every Congressman and Senator of the State of Texas, and to the members of the Immigration Committees in both Houses.

Memphis Lodge No. 35, of Memphis, Tenn., at its meeting held on March 26, 1916, resolved to organize a social service department under its auspices, including a Big Brother's Committee. The Lodge is the banner Lodge of District No. 7, with a membership exceeding 300 and will no doubt make itself felt in the community along the lines of social endeavor.

The New Orleans Board members of the Endowment Fund of District Grand Lodge No. 7, met in annual session on March 7, in preparation for the Grand Lodge Convention, which will soon be held in the city of Little Rock, Ark.

Bro. U. M. Simon, of Fort Worth, Tex., has been chosen as orator for the Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7, soon to be held at Little Rock, Ark.

As a result of the visit of Bro. Sol. Schoenman, of Houston, Tex., to San Antonio, Tex., a class of forty members was added to the roster of the lodges of San Antonio.

The Propaganda Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7 has been successful in its efforts and has instituted a lodge of the Order in the city of Knoxville, Tenn.

The joint committee representing the New Orleans lodges of the Order forwarded messages of protest against the Burnett Bill to all the members of the Louisiana delegation in Congress.

Gulf Lodge No. 221, of New Orleans, held a cultural meeting on March 16, at which a discussion took place on the subject, "B'nai B'rithism in New Orleans—Its Needs and Opportunities." The discussion was led by Brother Leon Volner, Superintendent of the Jewish Orphans' Home.

Memphis Lodge No. 35, of Memphis, Tenn., held a well attended regular meeting on Feb. 27. In addition to the regular routine of the Lodge the election of delegates to represent Memphis Lodge at the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge was held. Following the election of delegates a resolution was presented condemning the Burnett Immigration Bill and it was resolved to forward copies of same to members of Congress representing Memphis and the State.

The committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7 appointed for the purpose of raising $100,000 for the colonization fund began its work at a meeting held in Waco, Tex., on Wednesday, March 8, 1916. Messrs. Meigel, Sanger, Lipschitz and Nathan each subscribed $1,000 for this purpose. It is proposed to raise $25,000 before the convention of the District Grand Lodge takes place in Little Rock.

Birmingham Lodge No. 368 of Birmingham, Ala., held an interesting meeting on Sunday afternoon, March 26, 1916, in the vestry room of Temple Emanuel. The meeting was open to the public. A special feature of the same was an interesting program in connection with the appointment of Mr. Brandeis to the U. S. Supreme Court. Various standpoints were discussed, one from the lawyers' standpoint by Leo Oberdorfer, from the bankers' standpoint by M. Sterne, and merchants' standpoint by Philip Oster.

DEDICATION OF B'NAI B'RITH BUILDING.

Sunday evening, April 16, will witness the dedication of the B'nai B'rith Headquarters at 2307 Broadway, between 83rd and 84th streets, in the City of New York. A very interesting program has been prepared for the occasion. Members of the Order are cordially invited to be present.

President A. K. Cohen will come from Boston to preside over the exercises of the evening.

The dedicatory exercises will be in the nature of the time-honored custom of "Chinuch Habayith."

Bro. Herman Asher, Chairman of the Committee on Headquarters, is the Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements.

WASHINGTON LODGE, NEW YORK

Washington Lodge No. 19, Jordan Lodge No. 15, Edward Everett Lodge No. 97, Manhattan Lodge No. 156, assisted by the Ladies' Auxiliary of Edward Everett Lodge, will give a joint public Seder Tuesday evening, April 18, at Savigny Hall, 229 Lenox avenue. Rev. S. Schlager, Cantor of Temple Emanu-El will officiate. Bro. Manuel Behar of Washington Lodge is in charge of arrangements. There will be a special address on the occasion by one of the prominent Rabbis. The Seder promises to be a great event.

Washington Lodge No. 19 has offered $1,000.00, in addition to its first generous contribution, as a nucleus for a second war relief fund to be collected under the auspices of the Order.

REGULATION OF SALE OF WINE AND KOSHER MEAT.

A committee of rabbis and communal leaders was recently formed in Petrograd for the purpose of regulating the supply of kosher meat to the Jews of the capital. The police authorities have given permission to Jews to sell wine for the Passover holidays in the synagogues. The sale will stand under the direct control of the civil or military officers in every community and nothing else but wine needed for the holidays will be allowed to be sold.

RUMANIAN JEWS APPEAL FOR RIGHTS.

Once more have the Rumanian Jews, this time at a National Conference, demanded of the government the granting of full rights as citizens. The demand is justly based on the ground that the Jews discharge the same obligations towards the fatherland as do their other fellow-countrymen. The latest memorial is likely to share the fate that has befallen previous representations to the same end.

LETTERS TO RUSSIA MUST BE IN RUSSIAN.

According to new rules adopted by the authorities in Russia, persons in America desiring to have their letters reach their relatives in those sections of Russia not under German control, should write them in the Russian language, since, on account of the strict censorship, letters written in Yiddish have very little chance of reaching the parties to whom they are addressed.

The Russian Situation

in Galicia things might be worse if the Poles were not afraid that the Jews might join the cause of the Central Austrian government, which, after all, is leaning towards Germany. Be that as it may, it is certain that the Polish Jews wish to be Jews and not Poles. You in America cannot quite understand the situation. You have a peculiar nationality, composed of all sorts of sects and of descendants of all nationalities, and even races. With us in Russia, and especially in Poland, it is entirely different. The Jew has an individuality, no matter what you think of it, and he does not wish to sacrifice this individuality. Even now conditions are directly tragical through the severance of the intimate relations between the Jews of Poland and Lithuania. You people in America, or for that matter, even those of Western Europe, cannot understand this sentiment. You hear occasionally the Poles and the Lithuanians nicknaming each other, but you forget that such things will happen in one small town, or between certain families, without ever loosening the ties of the strongest sympathy. We were intimately related by a spiritual movement. Our growing Hebrew and Yiddish literature, our Yiddish and Hebrew newspapers, created a strong union between the Jews of various sects and of the old Polish Empire. It was the gravest folly for the Russian administration to prohibit the Yiddish and Hebrew periodicals at the beginning of the war, and it was a move of great statesmanship on the part of the German governor general that, as soon as Poland was occupied by the Germans, he gave permission to the Hebrew and Yiddish periodicals to reappear. But even now the tragedy is just like the expulsion from Spain and Portugal, or like the shifting of the Jewish intellectual center from Mesopotamia to Europe. Jewish history will close a new volume with the summer of 1914. In addition to it, there will undoubtedly be a great emigration. I am not a pessimist; I know that a country cannot perish. I know that land remains land; but the Jew has no land, or at least not to any extent, and he is going to quit this inhospitable country. The main difference is that formerly you had the poorest people to come, and now the immigration will consist of people of means and of the highest intelligence. That will be America's gain.

RELIEF FOR POLISH JEWS.

The German "Relief-Fund 1915" decided to spend 100,000 marks every month on relief work in Poland, one-half to be spent in Warsaw and the other in the provincial towns. The condition was, however, made that this money will not be given until the American relief fund is exhausted. Besides this, the German Jewish Hilfsverein decided to spend 155,000 marks monthly on the Jewish war sufferers in Lithuania and Courland. This sum will be available at once and will be distributed as follows: Vilna, 50,000 marks; Lida and Bialystock, 30,000 marks each; Grodno, Kovno, Suvalki and Lomza, 10,000 marks each, and 5,000 marks for towns lying between Kovno and Libau.

THE JEWISH QUESTION IN THE DUMA.

The Left of the Duma has resolved to interpellate the government on the prohibition of the publication of Hebrew and Yiddish newspapers. The Left also demands the introduction of a bill during the session for the purpose of removing all restrictions against the various nationalities, including the Jews. The Right is, however, raising violent opposition to the plan. M. Purishkevitch, who is a member of the Duma deputation to England, has issued a circular instructing all Real Russian societies to maintain their anti-Semitic programme and oppose concessions to Jews.

A NEW CHIEF RABBI FOR VIENNA.

Owing to his advanced age and the consequent weakening of his physical strength, Dr. Gudemann has resigned the post of Chief Rabbi of Vienna, which he has held since the year 1890. There is much speculation with reference to his successor. Rabbi Dr. Nobel, of Frankfort, is spoken of as being the most likely ecclesiastic who will be called to the office, which is one of the most important on the Continent.

JEWISH CHIEF MAGISTRATE AT ZURICH.

Dr. Arthur Mamelok has been appointed Chief Magistrate at Zurich. He is a member of the Executive of the Jewish community in that city.

THE MOTHER AND THE LAW

The Anti-Defamation League in its work during the past three years has adopted the policy of non-publicity as the best means of accomplishing results. The League has taken the stand that dispassionate argument will bring results in most cases and that a large part of the defamation of the Jew is due to thoughtlessness, ignorance or mental inertia.

In a recent instance action on the part of the League to forestall serious complications, has been so misrepresented in certain publications and so misunderstood by some of our Jewish papers, that it is deemed wise to state the exact facts with reference thereto. We refer to the forthcoming feature film entitled "The Mother and the Law" produced by Mr. David W. Griffith, who created the film, "The Birth of a Nation".

On December 27, 1915, the League was advised by one of its Los Angeles representatives, Mr. M. B. Silberberg, that Mr. Griffith was producing a feature film on a very pretentious scale, to be called "The Mother and the Law," and that one of the scenes of this film depicted the Crucifixion of Jesus. We were advised that Mr. Griffith had employed a large number of Jews to take part in a scene wherein they were beating and stoning Jesus on his entry into the city of Jerusalem and on his way to Calvary. On investigation we found that Mr. Griffith was investing about $150,000 in this production; that the film was designed to trace a relation of "Woman" to the law throughout the ages and that in one part the Crucifixion story was to be allegorically presented.

The following telegram was immediately sent to Mr. Lucius L. Solomons, one of the San Francisco representatives of the League:

"Griffith is producing film at Los Angeles, 'Mother and the Law,' depicting Crucifixion and mob of Jews stoning Jesus. Produced at great expense. Most likely will increase prejudice. Kindly call meeting of your local members of League together with Otto Irving Wise and Rabbi Meyer and see what can be done to obviate objectionable features. Probably will not be able to stop production but it should be historically correct, namely that the Romans were the moving parties and not the Jews. Correct version would benefit, wrong version must do injury. Committee of best men should be appointed to go to Los Angeles to see producer so that situation may be handled delicately and with keen discretion. Kindly give this prompt attention. Our Los Angeles representative M. B. Silberberg acquainted with details. Invite local committee there to co-operate.

MANAGING BOARD,
Anti-Defamation League."

Being advised that it was not practical for the San Francisco Committee to go to Los Angeles, the representatives of the League in Los Angeles were informed accordingly. At the same time, the Managing Board of the League proceeded to get in telegraphic communication with Mr. Griffith. On January 5, the following telegram was sent to him:

"D. W. Griffith,
Care of Mutual Reliance Film Co.,
Hollywood, Cal.

Executive Committee of the Anti-Defamation League of America is informed that you are producing the film entitled 'Mother and the Law' in course of which there is scene showing Jews stoning and beating Jesus and playing leading part in scene of Crucifixion. Undoubtedly many believe this to be correct. Modern historical research proves it is historically untrue. Likely to inflame passion and arouse unjust prejudice against Jewish people of this country. Best interest of Nation that all peoples be secured in respect and esteem of fellowmen. If our information concerning production correct will you permit our Los Angeles representatives to view the scene and if presented as above stated, to give our reasons why we believe it is incorrect and likely to arouse prejudice. We believe that if the film is correctly presented it will not only be a great success but will meet with no opposition. Our object not to hamper you but to prevent harm to our people. Kindly wire our expense."

Mr. J. J. McCarthy, the personal representative of Mr. Griffith, replied as follows:

"Mr. Griffith has referred the contents of your telegram to him to me. No man living excepting Mr. Griffith can possibly know what the subject matter of his new production will contain. I am Mr. Griffith's personal representative and in our talks concerning 'Mother and the Law,' he has never indicated or intimated that the production would contain anything whatever that would reflect upon any race or people. The suggestion that Mr. Griffith would produce anything that would reflect upon the Jewish race, the best patrons of the theater in this country, is absolutely ridiculous, since we are making pictures for profit. However the production in all probability will not be completed until September, at which time I will gladly have a representative of your organization view it. I will be in Chicago within the next two weeks and will call on you."

Mr. McCarthy arrived in Chicago about January 15, and called at the offices of the League, together with Mr. Bowles, the manager of the "Birth of a Nation" film. They informed the Secretary that Mr. Griffith had been very careful in preparing his historical data for the new film; that he had interviewed a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago Divinity School, but had not been able to complete his inquiries because of the sudden death of his mother. The Secretary of the League then offered Mr. McCarthy the fullest opportunities for securing an accurate historical account of the Crucifixion as disclosed by modern historical research. Mr. McCarthy was quite pleased with this method of handling the matter ,and agreed to our suggestion that the Rev. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch be asked to prepare synoptic material to be used in the film. Dr. Hirsch, who is recognized as a leading authority on the subject, kindly consented to prepare the material for the League. In the meantime, however, Mr. Griffith decided to omit from the picture entirely the Crucifixion scene and the incidents leading up to it.

Before we learned of Mr. Griffith's decision to cut out the entire scene we sent the following letter to the National Board of Censorship in view of the possibility that our negotiations might not be successful:

"Mr. W. D. McGuire, Executive Secretary, National Board of Censorship,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

We are in receipt of your letter of recent date in regard to the policy of the National Board.

We note your statement that the Board will not undertake to censor pictures from the standpoint of any particular race, creed, people or religious belief. I am anxious, however, to know to what extent this policy would be carried out. Would the Board, for example, pass without examination of any kind a film in which there appeared a scene showing Jesus stoned and beaten by Jews, and being crucified through the machinations of Jews? Waiving the question of historical accuracy or inaccuracy, would the Board approve of a film which showed Jews actively participating in the Crucifixion, or do you think it likely that they would bear in mind the evil that has been caused by the allegation of Jewish responsibility for the death of Jesus, and therefore refuse to issue permit for a film to be placed on the market which gave occular demonstration of that allegation? Do you believe that the Board would keep in mind the tremendous influence for harm that such a film would have upon a large percentage of those who would see the picture, and the great danger of stirring up prejudice and antipathy?

We are not asking these questions for mere academic reasons, but because we have been informed that a film is now in the process of manufacture which covers the scene of the Crucifixion in just that manner.

We would appreciate an early response to the above questions."

Mr. McGuire's reply was as follows:

"Referring to your question regarding the Crucifixion of Jesus I would say that the National Board would not pass a picture showing Jesus being stoned and beaten by Jews and being crucified through the machinations of Jews. Particularly would we refuse to pass such a picture if there were any subtitles in the picture which referred to the Jews as Jews being responsible for this tragic happening. Indeed, any reflection upon a people as Jews because they are Jews, would meet with the displeasure of our committee. This means anything wantonly libelous against the Jewish race as a race."

Negotiations in this case demonstrated the possibility of securing adequate results by acting calmly and without militancy. The League appreciates the manly attitude of Mr. Griffith, who voluntarily deleted the objectionable portion when its harmful influence was called to his attention. No threats of any kind were made or implied. There is no truth whatsoever in the following statement made in the April 7 issue of "Variety" and reprinted in several of our Jewish periodicals:

"A 48-hour ultimatum was delivered to destroy that portion of the masterpiece negative on penalty of a concerted national campaign of blacklisting and other pressure which powerful financial and industrial interests might bring to bear, which included the assertion that censors, governors of states and even the President would do all in their power to prevent the showing of the picture with the objectionable scene."

The sad part of the whole incident is that enough Jews of Los Angeles were found to hire out and pose for such service. The only thing that may be said in extenuation is that perhaps they did not know when they were hired, what scenes they would enact, and that when the picture was actually produced, they may not have realized the effect of their conduct.

POPE REPROVES VIOLATIONS OF RIGHTS OF JEWS

A copy of the pamphlet entitled "The Jews in the Eastern War Zone" prepared by the American Jewish Committee, depicting the cruelties and indignities to which the Jews have been subjected, especially in Poland, was submitted to His Holiness Pope Benedict XV with a petition praying him to exert his powerful influence to ameliorate conditions. This has called forth a reply from the Holy See, followed by directions to the Catholic clergy at Poland, admonishing them to endeavor to put an end to the persecution which has prevailed. The correspondence is as follows:

"Your Holiness:

The petitioners, who are citizens of the United States of America and adherents of the Jewish faith, have learned with increasing horror of the unspeakable cruelties and hardships visited upon their co-religionists in various belligerent lands since the outbreak of the present world-conflict. Far beyond the sufferings which this calamity has inflicted upon those of other faiths, and in addition to the ravages and destruction occasioned by the clash of the contending armies to all who come within the sphere of their hostilities, the Jews have been marked for especial persecution and have been subjected to oppressive measures not borne by their compatriots of other creeds. Passion and prejudice have been fomented against our unhappy brethren, frequently by those who bear the same political allegiance, until their lot has ceased to be endurable. In some of the lands where they have long resided their very neighbors are bent upon their annihilation, practising against them the most refined cruelty, and in many instances by means of an economic boycott condemning them to literal starvation. We submit herewith ascertained facts which tell but in small part the hideous truth.

Fully persuaded that had Your Holiness been acquainted with these facts the Holy See would at once have exercised the profound moral, ethical and religious influence with which the Roman Catholic Church is endowed, upon those who regard Your Holiness as their Shepherd, but who have unfortunately participated in this persecution, with all due veneration we now approach the Supreme Pontiff for succor in this the bitter hour of our need, knowing the exemplary humanity for which Your Holiness is justly distinguished. It is our sincere prayer that the occasion may be deemed a fitting one for resort to the authority vested in the Sovereign of the great Roman Catholic Hierarchy, to urge His Cardinals, Archbishops, Bishops and Priests to admonish their flocks to hold in abhorrence these acts of persecution, of prejudice and of cruelty, which have overwhelmed our unfortunate brethren.

We recall with admiration and gratitude that on many occasions in the past some of the revered predecessors of Your Holiness have under like conditions extended protection to those of the Jewish faith, in the interest of right and justice. Appreciating the transcendent importance which the entire civilized world attaches to any utterance from so exalted as source of morality and wisdom as that which Your Holiness represents, we confidently express the hope that timely action be taken by the Vatican to the end that the sufferings under which millions of our brethren in faith are now weighed down may be terminated by an act of that Humanity to which Your Holiness is so passionately devoted, and that the cruel intolerance and the unjust prejudice which have been aroused against them may forever vanish before this glorious exercise of Your Supreme Moral and Spiritual Power.

We beg Your Holiness to believe us to be,

NEW REVIEWS OF OLD BOOKS

STUDIES OF JUDAISM

By JOSEPH FRIEDLANDER

I

The death of Dr. Solomon Schechter, the renowned Hebrew scholar, is of too recent occurrence to need extended comment at this time. He was undoubtedly a bright particular star in the horizon of modern Israel, a man who by reason of his personal character and attainments exerted a wide and far-reaching influence in Jewry beyond that which has been exercised by any other prominent Jew of our time. It is quite doubtful whether any adequate estimate of his influence and character is just now possible. It will probably need the perspective of a reasonable lapse of time to enable us properly to appraise the great gifts of mind and spirit with which he was endowed. More timely and appropriate, however, is the opportunity to review his literary works which rank as distinct landmarks in the history of our race.

Among these the Studies in Judaism, which are the fruit of his ripe thoughts and critical judgment, are the principal. There is not a line in these pages which is not truly inspiring. The author has thrown over them the glamour of his own rich fancy which united to a deeply religious spirit and a profound consciousness of the destiny of Israel completely dominated and informed his picturesque personality. Nor can anyone reading these essays fail to discern at a single glance that they are not merely the product of an accómplished scholar but also of an acute philosophical mind which was able to penetrate beneath the surface of things and thus gain an insight into their essences. The value of these contributions to the science of Judaism can hardly be estimated, for if the truth may be told there have been few among our Jewish scholars who possessed the ability to present the philosophical aspect of Judaism in a form which could fully satisfy the intellectual and aesthetic sense of that ever-increasing body who strike out for themselves an independent path in their search after ultimate truth and who no longer rely on ancient Shibboleths for their inner spiritual faith. The latter part of the eighteenth century and the nineteenth century gave birth to a number of Jewish scholars who rendered brilliant service to the cause of Jewish learning, but most of them were pioneers and they labored more to uncover the rich resources of Jewish scholarship which had accumulated in past centuries and to prepare the materials for the task of adjusting and reconstructing the faith of Israel in accordance with the demands made upon it by their new environment than to give them philosophical interpretation.

Of those who profited by these Vorstudien, the late Dr. Schechter, stood out pre-eminently. He possessed in an uncommon degree that nice adjustment of spiritual and intellectual gifts which peculiarly fitted him for his work. His soul was the inheritance of the finer graces of his race and he had the additional virtue of being a child of his age, imbibing its spirit and its ideas and blending them with the woof and warp of his ancestral thought.

The contents of these "Studies in Judaism," of which there are two volumes, are as rich and varied as their author's own mind and it would be impossible to convey in any review an adequate conception of their character and merit. Only a close and leisurely study of the book in its entirety can afford such enlightenment. The subjects range over a wide field of Jewish thought and life. They treat of such diverse matters as the rise and organization of the Chassidim, of Nachmanides Nathan Krochmal and the Gaon Elijah of Wilna, of the dogmas of Judaism, the child in Jewish literature, Women in Temple and Synagogue and others of like interest and importance. Each one of these articles would need a separate review to do it justice. All that can here be done is to indicate the treatment adopted by Dr. Schechter in elucidating and developing his subject and to state the standpoint from which he reasons out his conclusions. Whilst fully familiar with and not discarding the newer scientific knowledge which has sprung up in the last hundred years or so—and especially of that school of thought which goes by the name of the Higher Criticism—Dr. Schechter maintained an eminently sane poise of mind in his interpretation of these newer revelations as far as they might have affected the central facts of Jewish belief. They offered to him no difficulty whatsoever. He knew all about the fluctuating and ever-shifting waves of opinion that swept and sometimes engulfed the different schools of religious and philosophical thought in past ages and which will continue to do so until the end of time, but he knew also the immovable foundations on which Judaism rested. He deals with this question in the chapter on the Dogmas of Judaism which is undoubtedly a contribution of the highest value to Jewish theological literature. It will certainly help to sweep away many of the erroneous views which through one cause or another have crept into the arcana of Jewish belief. On the main question whether there are dogmas in Judaism, Dr. Schechter, following Mendelssohn leans to the opinion that there are no dogmas in Judaism if by dogmas are understood the articles of faith drawn up by ecclesiastical authorities, by Synods or churches or tacitly adopted and held through popular belief or sanction. He quotes with something like approval Abarbanel's opinion that it was wrong to formulate dogmas at all. As a matter of fact, every age formulates its own particular dogmas and their form and substance have coincidently varied. Hence no fixity of tenure was attached to them.

In this chapter Dr. Schechter reviews the opinions held and taught from earliest times, from Moses down to Mendelssohn and the influence of their teachings upon the prevailing thought of their respective ages. Briefly but in none the less masterly a manner does he survey the whole field of controversial discussion on this subject, laying special stress on the views of the Jewish philosophers of the middle ages, including Nachmanides, Simon Duran, Chasdai and Albo. Jewish thought in those times was divided into two schools, Maimanists and anti-Maimanists. A striking fact to be noted in this connection is the emancipation of the Jewish mind from the thrall of Aristotelianism into which the earlier Jewish authorities headed by Moses Mendelssohn fell. The return to Jewish pathology certainly brought about a saner view of those important theological problems more in accord with indigenous Jewish thought and feeling. With the different interpretations placed upon the question what constituted dogma, i. e., indispensable articles of faith, Schechter brings out many an interesting point and shows that in that respect there has been an evolution of belief in Jewish teachings which developed and changed with the changing circumstances of Israel's condition. Thus in Biblical times the leading dogma in Judaism was directed against idolatry. The prophets mostly considered all idolatry as the cause of all sin and therefore the inhibition of the worship of idols was from the beginning a fundamental teaching of Judaism. But when this evil inclinaion to idolatry passed away, the center of gravity in Jewish dogma shifted to other elements in the fundamental concepts of religion following in this respect the maxim of the old Roman law that when a cause no longer existed the law concerning that cause also ceased to exist. But there were also doctrines which many considered had a permanent place in Judaism without which it could not stand as sound and established a system of religion. The principal of these was the Canonicity of the Law—the Law which God gave to Moses, the injunctions of which were binding upon every Jew. Another was the doctrine of rewards and punishments. Of less importance, however, was the doctrine of the resurrection of the body and the coming of the Messiah. It is refreshing to know that amid the wealth of discussion on the doctrines of Judaism the metaphysical doctors of the middle ages regarded the duty of prayer as one of the most important. The strict observance of the Day of Atonement is specially indicated as a means of bringing us nearer to God, a statement which it is well to remember in these days when it is so cavalierly kept. In a different category to these, for the most part, theological dogmas stands the belief in the existence of God. Chasdai speaks of it as an axiom with which every religion must begin and therefore outside the pale of discussion. This alone constitutes the pivotal point on which Judaism rests. The Bible specializes only in one article of faith—the existence and Providence of God. All the rest is subsidiary to it for all other doctrines flow from it just as water would do from an unsealed fountain.

Dr. Schechter has rendered a very valuable service to the Jewish cause by his clear and lucid presentation of the Jewish mental attitude on these great questions and I cannot do better in concluding this notice than by giving his brilliant answer to the perplexing question, so often heard but never satisfactorily handled as to What is Judaism? Says Dr. Schechter: "Judaism is a great Infinite composed of as many units—the Jews. And these units—Jews—have been and are still scattered through all the world and have passed under an immensity of influences good and bad. If so, how can we give an exact definition of the Infinite called Judaism? But if there is anything, sure it is that the highest motives which worked through the history of Judaism are the strong belief in God and the unshaken confidence that at last this God—the God of Israel—will be the God of the whole world or in other words that Faith and Hope are the two characteristics of Judaism."

JEWISH EXILES.

According to the official report of the Austrian Ministry of the Interior for 1914-15, 1,000,000 persons were driven from place to place in Austria since the war began until October, 1915. Of these more than half needed support, and the government spent on them during that time the sum of 279,504,000 crowns. About 50,000.000 crowns were spent on transportation and more than 140,000,000 crowns were spent on the maintenance of the camps. It was necessary to move from place to place 5,158,609 persons, of whom 2,466,751 were Jews.

CLASS INITIATION BY JOSHUA LODGE No. 23 Philadelphia Pennsylvania.

A class exceeding six hundred candidates was secured by the propaganda committee of Joshua Lodge No. 23, of Philadelphia, Pa., during its recent membership campaign. Of this number more than half were initiated as members of the Lodge and the Order at a monster class initiation held on Sunday afternoon, April 30, 1916.

Among the number initiated were leading professional and business men who take active interest in the philanthropic and communal life of the city.

The exercises, which took place at the Majestic Hotel, were attended by members of the Order from all over the State. Judge Seligman J. Strauss of Wilkes-Barre, delivered the address to the members in the afternoon.

David Bortin, Esq., presided and was assisted by Rabbi Eli Mayer, Charles Asnis, J. Solis Cohen, Jr., and Herman Levinson.

In the evening a banquet was tendered by the Lodge to the new members and invited guests, and about eight hundred men and women were present. The Hon. Jacob Singer acted as toastmaster, and addresses were delivered by the Hon. Simon Wolf and the Hon. Isador Sobel. "The B'nai B'rith is not alone an organization of Jews," Mr. Singer said, "but an organization of Jews plus Judaism, and it is only because this organization has planted itself upon the rock of Judaism that it is deserving to survive the years of its life until today, when it has reached its seventy-third year, it has risen to the very highest point of its achievement."

In presenting Brother Hon. Simon Wolf as the speaker of the evening the toastmaster said:

"We stand face to face tonight with a man whom I unhesitatingly pronounce without fear of contradiction to be the foremost champion of Judaism that the United States of America has ever had."

Address of Mr. Wolf

One hundred and twenty-seven years ago today there was given to the world a document which, as Gladstone says, was the culmination of human wisdom and genius. Under its inspiring influence, the United States have lived and prospered, and to that prosperity and greatness, American citizens of Jewish faith have contributed their brawn, their brain and their righteousness, and yet while acclaiming this great charter of human and liberal thought, the world seems to have ignored that thousands of years ago, on Sinai's Mount, there was given the Ten Commandments, which embody practically all that there is of law, order and civilization; and we, the descendants while appreciating and glorifying the constitution of our great and common country, should at the same time never forget and constantly acclaim, that which the Ten Commandments have accomplished throughout the civilized world.

The Order of B'nai B'rith, founded seventy-three years ago, had as its fundamental principle, all that both of these documents embody—harmony, benevolence, brotherly love, the recognition of all men by virtue of their merit, not by virtue of their nationality of their sectarianism. Built on this broad, liberal and altruistic foundation, it is not to be wondered that it has survived the shocks of time, of doubt, of danger, and of indifference, and stands today greater than ever in the past, a symbol of light and progress, an example and inspiration for the young generation, having for its motto, love of country and fealty to its flag.

Among the members of our Order as American citizens, there is no hyphen. We are banded together for a common purpose—the preservation of the Republic, and the maintaining of those deathless principles of Judaism which have survived all the persecutions of the ages, and is today more than ever, a royal factor in the civilization of the whole world.

I am reminded in this connection that years ago when I sent a copy of my lecture on "The Influence of the Jews in the Progress of the World," to General Beale of Washington (who had been Ambassador under General Grant to Austria, and who is father-in-law of the present Ambassador of Russia to this country, and of John R. McLean of the Washington Post), in acknowledging the receipt of a copy of this lecture, he made use of the following words: "If I were a Jew I would not only be proud of the fact, but challenge the whole world to produce another people who had accomplished so much and under conditions of suffering and persecution untold in the world, and if I have any criticism to make of your splendid effort, it would be that you defend too much, when you ought to be, if possible, even more assertive in your right to stand at the forefront of all nations." General Beale naturally had not been subject to the lash of the anti-semite. With his intellectual poise and liberal characteristics, he did not altogether realize what it was to be one of the victims, and, therefore, we have constantly to prove our right to be an integral part of the whole.

Thank Heaven, the Order of B'nai B'rith has in all its history, proven to the world its right to exist. Humane and human, progressive, and yet steady in all its pursuits; cosmopolitan and yet local in securing the rights of all men and the Jew in particular, for in securing their rights, the whole world is bettered, for as Abraham Lincoln tersely and wisely said when he signed the emancipation law, "I am not freeing the slave as much as I am freeing the white man." So, when the Jew is emancipated in all lands of the world, it is not alone the Jew who derives the benefit but those who have heretofore prevented that emancipation who will equally be benefited.

You young men in Israel who have just joined your forces with this great organization, are to be congratulated. Do not look for any financial results in consequence, be ready to sacrifice all that is best in your nature and environments, to the uplift and betterment of the Order, of Jewry, and of all mankind.

For fifty years and more, as a member of the Order and as an American citizen, I have been on the closest relations with those of all organizations, whose names stand emblazoned on the roll-call of fame and duty, and while the clock of time will sooner or later chime the parting knell, the consciousness and happiness of having been one of the cogs in the great wheel of the Order of B'nai B'rith, will be the crowning glory of the parting hour.

Hon Isador Sobel of Erie, Pa., was the next speaker. He made a strong plea to the members to be proud and not to be ashamed of their Judaism.

"I have lived for many years in a small community," he said, "today about 80,000 inhabitants. We have about 800 Jewish men and women in that community, and yet it is my proud boast that we have never in all our experience felt that our Jewish activities have ever been to our discredit and to the men who join this Order today let me emphasize this important fact: Respect your Judaism and the non-Jew will respect you as an individual.

"You have joined this Order. It is Jewish in every particular. Take your stand in favor of the institution, nationally, internationally, state-wide and city. It has work to perform. You have a certain part of the work to do. If it is assigned to you, do it. If you do it consistently, if you do not stop and think because it is Jewish work it is hurting you, the time will come that you will be honored by every patriotic citizen of the State and country."

Presentation to M. S. Meyerhoff.

In the course of the evening a presentation was made to Mr. M. S. Meyerhoff, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the campaign, of a handsome gold watch, representing a personal gift from his friends in Joshua Lodge as a token of appreciation of his work during and since the membership campaign. The gift was accepted by Mr. Meyerhoff with a graceful address.

Letters of congratulation and regret at their inability to attend were read from the Hon. Henry Morgenthau, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Krauskopf and Rabbi Max D. Klein.

The Twentieth Anniversary of the Enactment of Complete Equality of the Jews and the Recognition of the Jewish Religious Communities in Hungary

On the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the enactment of the complete equality of the Jews and the recognition of the Jewish religious communities in Hungary, the "Egyenloeseg" under the capable management of Dr. Ludwig Szabolcsi has published a special and highly interesting festival number. Leading men in public life have contributed their views and experiences to that issue of the "Egyenloeseg." From the numerous contributions we have culled some few of a larger publicity as the most valuable and important to the present position of the Jews in Hungary.

1. "Esteemed Mr. Editor:

"You had the kindness to request me to contribute a few lines to your festival issue on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the enactment of the laws establishing equality for the Jewish religion in our country.

"I can assure you, my dear sir, that I always shall maintain impartial justice towards the Jews and Judaism, and that I forever aim to strictly adhere to the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church in regard to the true love for the neighbor. "Yours very truly,

"JOHANN CSERNOCH,
"Cardinal and Primate."

2. "My Esteemed Mr. Editor:

"It affords me great pleasure to comply with your request to contribute my views as to the value of the enactment bearing on the full recognition of the Jews and of Judaism on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of that enactment. I thank you for thus furnishing me the opportunity to publicly pay tribute to the wisdom of those eminent statesmen, whose foresight secured those laws, which both from the patriotic and the social viewpoints have contributed so much to the national unity and to the legal equality of all the citizens of the state.

"In the efforts to attain the national ideal of our people, we must hail with joy every measure which is meant to dispel factional discord and to place our people upon the firm footing of a uniform consolidation.

"A most important step of that character was taken when, twenty years ago, the Jewish equal rights bill was enacted.

"By that legislation such rights as the adherents of the Jewish religion had therefore practically enjoyed, within our fatherland, were not only openly and legally acknowledged, but the Jewish religion as such was recognized and the Jewish religious communities and associations were endowed with and insured of all the corporate rights that the other religious associations and churches enjoyed. Thus there was opened to the Jews and to the Jewish communal associations the opportunity to share upon an even footing with all other citizens in the endeavors to employ their knowledge and their accomplishments for the welfare and the benefit of the Hungarian national culture.

"With sincere regards, I beg to remain, yours very truly,

"BELA JANKOVICH,
"Ministry of Religious and Educational Affairs."

The President of the National Labor Party, Privy Councillor Count Karl Khuen-Hedervary, formerly Prime Minister, wrote as follows:

"From the viewpoint of the Hungarian Nation I consider the complete emancipation of the Jewish people and of their religion as an act of the greatest import for three principal reasons:

"By that enactment the nation gained an additional element endowed with intense assiduity and most sincere loyalty.

"It bound the Jewish population in chains of loyal love to the country by freeing it from the restraints of most disgraceful restraints.

"With the enactment of those laws the most necessary and important premises were established for the autonomous organization of Jewish religious communities.

"The Hungarian Jewry testifies in the present world war by the precious blood of its sons shed in the defense of the fatherland, that it was fully entitled to its complete emancipation.

(Signed) "COUNT KARL KHUEN-HEDERVARY."

4. Bishop Dr. Desider Balthazar, member of the Hungarian Senate, wrote:

"In the present day of religious friction the soul finds genuine peace in the recollection of the classic times of Hungarian liberalism. Upon the tracks of the struggles of the great men of that great period the emancipation of the Jewish religion and its complete equality were accomplished. Only an oversight, such as is likely to occur in any period of stormy labor, could account for the fact that the question of the Jewish emancipation was overlooked in 1848 as well as in the reconstruction of 1867.

"This historical neglect seems almost incomprehensible in Hungary, which state now leads all of Europe on all questions affecting religious liberty and the complete equality before the law of all religions.

"Many seem to consider the question of the emancipation of the Jewish religion as if it had been a demand for securing general equal rights. A demand of equal rights, that, in the legal extension of such rights, and the spread of purity of that idea, must leave out of all consideration the merits of the elements which form the subject of those laws. In the emancipation of the Hungarian Jewry that question was not permitted consideration. It was not only the sacredness of the underlying principle, but also the keen appreciation of the high moral sentiments of the Hungarian Jews, that furnished the great leaders of the period of the Church politics the impulse and the strength to inviolably maintain the fight for Jewish liberation. That strength gave them the power to overcome and vanquish all the obstacles that were thrown in their way both from above and from below.

"The Hungarian legislature must now provide for the unavoidable results produced through the emancipation laws and must legislate, not only in accordance with the principle of equal rights and justice, but also take cognizance of the services the Jews have rendered in the spheres of Hungarian national culture, science, art, political economy and philanthropy. The legislature must also apply to the Jews the principles of reciprocity and of equal rights contained in the Constitutional, Article XX, of 1848. The Jewry, on the other hand, should hasten to remove all obstacles, which might be in the way of carrying into general effect these principles, by a uniform organization. The very apponents of that principle will at all times be able to use such obstacles as their strongest weapons. (Signed)

5. "Were the hopes and expectations which animated the creators of our religious-political laws—among them the Jewish emancipation law—to struggle for the enactment of that progressive legislation twenty years ago, justified by the results achieved, or were the fears expressed by the opposition at that time well founded and did they warrant their supporters in their stubborn resistance to the enactment of those reforms?

"Did that law meet the requirements of life? Did the actual life fill the frame of that law, then considered a radical and perhaps hazardous departure from existing conditions, and if so, was that frame filled out by the expected desirable result?

"Or did this case, too, confirm the old experience, that at the time of the enactment of new legislation it is difficult or even impossible to gauge or estimate in advance the actual effects and results thereof? These are questions, the greater number of which it is still impossible to answer definitely, historically and conclusively at this time, although many years have been passed under the operation of those laws.

"Let us not be hasty in our replies, but rather let us all turn to those duties which we owe to the noble intentions enacted into law by the legislation of twenty years ago and let us face the new tasks, which devolve upon us through the stress of these great times, and which by our greater and more profound conception—gained under alternating hopes and doubts—we now must try to solve.

"In view of these new and greater tasks awaiting us, we must judge of the merit of the twenty-year-old emancipation law by the extent that it has proved by its harmonic execution a fitting means, not only by the state, but also by society, to advance our uniform and National aims through the inherent moral strength of the law. It was intended to crush the separatistic tendencies and to develop the organization the systematizing of the centripetal forces of the National strength and to make these subservient in the endeavors to attain greater and higher National perfection.

"The consciousness that all of us must, when the gigantic battles of this fateful decisive war shall have terminated, participate restlessly and without ceasing in the new work, a work of gigantic proportions and of immeasurable importance and of fateful import to the organization, the culture and the economic condition as well as to the social life of our Nation, that consciousness will soon become a factor in the lives of ever-growing numbers of our citizens and in time inspire the soul of the entire Nation.

"The eecution of that great task demands consideration, wisdom and moderation in the scope of our intentions, increased application and industry in the work and—temporarily at least—considerable self-denial as well as firm discipline and mutual esteem. That work cannot tolerate any petty selfishness and all exclusiveness will appear as obstructive. All separatistic tendencies, whether of class, of nationality or of religion must prove a pernicious enemy to that work, all hatred and contention a dangerous brake.

"Neither the heightened throbbing of the pulse beats of these times nor the limited powers at our command in proportion to the immensity of the task would permit, that any one should hold back from this service of the common national aim and ambition, nor that we should embitter or detract any one from that work.

"Within that great and honorable work we must mutually emancipate our souls. That emancipation must be directed by those great, strong and wise men, who really comprehend these great times.

"The Hungarian Jewry, however, while gratefully accepting and willingly acknowledging all honest objective criticism, should maintain the self-consciousness it has gained and strengthened through its constant fulfillment of duty and in emulation with the best and most noble, should on its part strive that such emancipation should become still more harmonious and more complete.

"Believe me, yours very truly,

"LEOPOLD VADASS,
"Secretary of State."

6. "The emancipation of the Jews and the Jewish religion with us was, not only an unavoidable demand of the liberty of conscience and of civic legal liberty, but from the Hungarian National viewpoint it meant the final crowning of that great thought, which Deak and Andrassy had proclaimed as the first victory of the Hungarian legislation in their earlier steps towards this goal. Besides securing for the Jews complete liberty of conscience and equal civic rights that enactment proclaims the principle, that the Hungarian Nation, the National strength and the citizens speaking the Hungarian language all are the gainers by securing the adherents of the Jewish religion as loyal citizens of the Nation.

"The idea has since then been realized, for the overwhelming proposition of the Jews, it might even be said all of them, have become, not only loyally attached to Hungarian National sentiments, but also ardent co-operators in the several domains of literature, the sciences, trade and industry, yea even in scientific agriculture and in all other lines of National development.

"Thus it was a National necessity to comply with that demand for justice which the emancipation enactment accomplished. Today we celebrate the twentieth anniversary of that happy event. (Signed)

"ALEXANDER WEKERLE,
"Privy Councillor and formerly Prime Minister."

Among others who wrote in similar strain are: Privy Councillor and President of the Administrative Court, Dr. Julius v. Wlassics, the author of "Studies of the Church Politics of 1895; the Evangelical Bishop, Geduly, author of "The Autonomy of the Hungarian Jews; Drs. Szekely and Lucacs; University Professor Marcali; Representative to the Austrian-Hungarian Parliament, Kozma; Judge Fodor. Among the Jewish leaders contributing their views, were: The President of the Jewish Communities, Moriz Mezei, Court Councillor Szekely, Royal Councillor Franz Mezi, Chief Rabbi Dr. Kohn of Pest, Ministerial Councillor Dr. Lederer, and many others of National renown.

L'HUMANITE ON THE POLISH JEWS.

The Parisian paper L'Humanite has published a strong article on the Polish intrigues against Jews. The paper rightly criticised their attempt to make the Allies believe that the Jews are pro-German, whereas to the Central Powers they complain of the pro-Russian influence of the Jews in Poland.

GERMAN AUTHORITIES PERMIT DIRECT COMMUNICATIONS BY MAIL BETWEEN PEOPLE IN RUSSIAN POLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

The Department of State has received from U. S. Consul-General Lay at Berlin a telegraphic dispatch to the effect that the German authorities have recently issued a notice to their post offices throughout Russian Poland that persons living in that part of Russian Poland now occupied by the German forces will be permitted to write directly to relatives and friends in the United States instead of through Berlin as formerly; and efforts are now being made to obtain a similar permission for relatives and friends to those persons in the United States to enable them to write direct to Russian Poland instead of through Berlin, as must be done at present. The German government has prescribed a certain form which these letters must take, to wit: They must all be brief, and written in the German or Polish language.

JEWS IN GERMAN-POLAND STARVING.

At the annual meeting of the German Hilsverein, which was held recently in Berlin, Dr. Paul Nathan declared that there are now 700,000 Jews in German-Poland who require assistance. He spoke feelingly about the generosity of the American Jews and pointed out that this was no surprise to him, as he still remembers the hearty response made by American Jews to the appeal in 1905 for the pogrom sufferers. Over eight million marks were thus far spent on relief work, most of which came from America. It cost about 125,000 marks per month to give adequate support to the many sufferers. Every post from America brings numbers of money orders and drafts. He pointed out that the post on the very day on which the meeting was held brought 80,000 marks for relief work. On the average, the society receives 400,000 marks per month. Nearly 100,000 letters passed through the office of the Hilsverein between the Polish Jews and their American relatives. The Hilsverein maintains cheap kitchens in almost every town in German-Poland.

United States of America, in order to communicate to him generally the treatment to which your co-religionists complain that they have been exposed in various regions, and at the same time you have requested him to interpose the weight of his supreme moral and spiritual power in order that these sufferings may be terminated by an act of that humanity to which the Holy Father is so passionately devoted.

The Supreme Pontiff is unable to express himself concerning the special facts referred to in the memorandum submitted with your letter, but in principle, as the head of the Catholic Church, which, faithful to its divine doctrine and to its most glorious traditions, considers all men as brethren and teaches them to love one another, he will not cease to inculcate the observance among individuals as among nations of the principles of natural right, and to reprove every violation of them. This right should be observed and respected in relation to the children of Israel as it should be as to all men, for it would not conform to justice and to religion itself to derogate therefrom solely because of a difference of religious faith.

Moreover, in his paternal heart, pained by the spectacle of the existing horrible war, the Supreme Pontiff feels in this moment more deeply than ever, the necessity that all men shall recollect that they are brothers and that their salvation lies in the return to the law of love, which is the law of the Gospels. He also desires to interest to this noble end all who, especially by reason of the sacred attributes of their pastoral ministrations, are able to bring efficient aid to this important result.

In the meantime His Holiness rejoices in the unity which in civil matters exist in the United States of America among the members of different faiths and which contributes so powerfully to the peaceful prosperity of your great country. He prays to God that peace may at length appear for the happiness of that humanity of which you truly say the Holy Father is the guardian.

Accept, gentlemen, the assurances of my most distinguished and devoted sentiments.

P. CARDINAL GASPARRI.

The Jewish Immigrant

By Abraham B. Cowen

In an article "The Modest Immigrant" in the September Atlantic Monthly, Agnes Repplier decries the good the immigrant does in the upbuilding of our country. In no uncertain tones she scathes the German, the Italian and the Jew. "No other nation on earth," says she, "cherishes the illusion, as does America, of a belief in the miracle of the melting-pot. An Englishman knows that a Russian Jew cannot in five years, or in twenty-five years, become English, that his standards and ideals are not convertible into English standards and ideals." Some of Miss Repplier's arguments can be answered by those of John Foster Fraser, who, in his book, "The Conquering Jew," presents with fairness his view, although at times, he, too, shoots poisoned darts. He thinks the Jew is what the world has made him, so from his standpoint the Jew can be molded, and if he can be molded, the miracle of the melting-pot is true.

Miss Repplier believes the Jew is unfair in his attitude toward his adopted country—that he criticises severely and is much wrought up, when in turn the American criticises him. She says, "If Cicero lowered his voice when he spoke of the Jews, fearing the enmity of this strong and clannish people, the American, who is far from enjoying Cicero's prestige, must be doubly cautious, lest he give offense. Yet surely, if there is an immigrant who owes us everything, it is the Jew. It is because the Jew has received from us so much and given so little, that his masterfulness affronts our sense of decency." Given so little! Adopted country! Since the very discovery of the Western Continent by a Jew, what other people and their descendants have a better claim to call America their own? Are only the descendants of those who came in the Mayflower Americans? The Jew Columbus antedated their coming by 128 years. Given so little! Does she forget the Bible, the law of Moses, the basis of all civilized jurisprudence, Jesus, the Jew, and to be more material, the financial prosperity, that even the most rabid Anti-Semite admits, the presence of the Jew has given to America?

Is it forgotten that a Jew financed the American Revolution? Was not Jewish blood willingly and gladly given to uphold the cause of Liberty in every war in which our country has engaged? It seems as if, in order to attain the good opinion of some of our critics, it is quite necessary for the Jew to be a superman. Brothers, after all, all of the criticism, all of the contumely that has been heaped upon us, during all the ages, is but a proof that the meanest Jew occupies a position in the world's eyes, just as great men and women, all during the history of the world, regardless of country, creed or color, have occupied, inasmuch as their very greatness, the very strength of their existing, focuses upon them the attention of their fellowman.

Miss Repplier further descants upon our touchiness. "The Jewish Anti-Defamation League boasts of the important step taken in excluding the Merchant of Venice from the curriculum of the grammar and high schools". She says the Christians are not puffed up with pride over the part they played in that drama, but being less thin-skinned they have grown attached to the play, and do not relish its banishment by the decree of aliens. Further, she says, that we may find ourselves reduced to the fairy scenes from the Tempest and Midsummer Night's Dream, if all our foreign citizens become in turn as sensitive as Hebrews. She calls attention, too, to another victory of the Anti-Defamation League—the Associated Press has been made to feel that the words Jew and Hebrew should be avoided, in connection with criminals. She claims that if the word "Jew" is out of place in the police courts, it is equally out of place in colleges, learned societies and encyclopaedias. She pays tribute to Mary Antin, whom she considers a most uncharitable critic, by quoting from Elizabeth Robins Pennell, "If Philadelphia blossomed like the rose with Mary Antins, the city would be ill-repaid for the degradation of her noble old streets into foul and filthy slums. Dirt is a valuable asset in the immigrant's hands. With its help he drives away decent neighbors and brings property down to his level and his price". Miss Repplier is an apt critic, but she forgets that the habits of the Jew are products of his environment. The Christian has made of him a Frankenstein, that, in his own time, will rise and destroy his creator the Christian, not physically, but spiritually. The Jew will triumph, must triumph, and the goal will be attained because Truth will prevail. The amusing feature is, that the Jew does not appreciate the jewel he has in his possession—his religion. None of us is exempt from blame. A most curious truth has forced itself upon me. I have met many immigrant Jews, who have had a knoweldge of our scriptures, that I have envied. But, surprising as it may seem, they appreciated less than I, its teachings. Many of them had delved deeply into philosophy, and denied the existence of God, still stoutly maintaining they were Jews. The fault must lie with the way religion was imparted to them in early youth. Surely it does not lie with our religion. It must have been presented in a most unpalatable manner, for if rightly presented, every fibre of the being would respond to the God-idea.

Let us not be too assured of our safety. Huddled in the unclean, insanitary Ghetto, the Jew prayed thrice daily to his God to lighten the burdens of his sufferings and to stay the hand of his oppressors. From such surroundings to the glorious freedom of our beloved America is a far cry—from darkness to light—and the vision of the Jew is blurred by the suddenness of the light. Relieved of his shackles, he asserts himself too boldly. He should undergo a process of leavening. Here is our duty—to teach him of the dangerousness of his and our position. Grim anti-Semitism stalks ever unsuspectingly near.

The critics of the Jews, when they search humanity, pick specimens that are worthless, and from the analysis deduct that all Israel is of like composition. They lack the motive of the true scientist, who selects good specimens to prove a conclusion. A human wreck forsakes his God, so, too, he forsakes his religion. Then why should his Jewish brethren be held any more responsible for him than his Christian neighbor? Why should the accident of birth be used to reflect his misdeeds on the religion to which his parents happen to belong? We want just criticism, but such an article as this is a firebrand, the sparks of which flying hither and yon, ignite to fury the soul of man against man. Revile, if you must, the poor ignorant down-trodden criminal Jew, forsaking his God, but censure, too, the educated Christian who forsakes the teachings of his God, by trying to awaken into life the dormant spark of hatred against his fellowman, who forgets that the keystone of his religion is Love. But we want criticism. This it is, and this only, that awakens us to the result of our follies, and foolish would we be not to profit thereby. Miss Repplier calls the Jew an alien. What does she mean? What is Americanism? It is a blending of ideals—what ideals? Those we have borrowed from every civilized country of the world. But they belong to us, not only by assumption, but by subsequent modern development. Many of these ideals have been brought to us by the modest immigrant and we were quick to adapt them to our needs.

The immigrant has been of incalculable good in the development of our country. He has brought ideas and ideals. And yet he himself has been and is a problem. To help him solve himself is part of the mission of the B. B. and this service redounds to our good. The greatest harm the immigrant does is to hyphenate his Americanism. After the oath of allegiance is taken, the hyphen is a destroyer of loyalty. It really signifies the "Man Without a Country."

Immigration can be curbed, but why should it be? The test limit should be good character, industry, law abiding nature, and ability to support oneself and family under ordinary conditions. We have millions of acres of land that will spring into productiveness by the touch of the plow and the harrow. All over our beloved land there is now the hue and cry of "Preparedness". In our mad rush to prepare, we forget that the mightiest preparation should be the preparation of the intellect. Education, rightly directed, is the crying need of the times. What Graham Taylor calls "Internal Integrity" is a prime essential. We do not realize what the different classes of our people owe each other. Would Miss Repplier, if she knew us well, not have been more charitable in her criticism? Think of what we offer the alien—the privilege of becoming an American, which carries with it the same right as the native-born, with but a single exception—he is not eligible to the presidency. Any other position, public or private, is capable of attainment. As Jews, we appreciate the wonderful opportunities, as many have shown by their rise from pauperized immigrants to princely Americans. When Miss Repplier criticized the Jewish immigrant, she probably forgot that the first immigrant to America, Columbus, was of Jewish origin. His mother was a Jewess, and his father probably of a Jewish family. His real name was Colon. The chief navigator and the surgeon, who Columbus took along, were Jews. The man who financed his expedition chiefly, and who took back his money, but refused any interest—was a Jew. And still she calls the Jew an alien!

For just criticism, we are open, but for an arraignment before the world of seeming faults and a belittling of the good we have done, there seems to hover the iniquity of a deep-seated prejudice. However, we can turn this into a blessing, by endeavoring to do, and doing, the right kind of service to mankind. How much better is it to know the attitude of some of our Christian critics than to have them adopt the "snake in the grass" method of some anti-Semites. This at least gives us the chance of bettering or attempting to better our condition. Of our virtues, we need not prate; our faults should demand our attention and our time devoted to overcoming them. Mr. Fraser says: "Today the Jew is really attending his own funeral. The more liberty he has, the more he commingles with other people the less of a Jew he becomes". Christians really honor the good Jew. Let us not wait until it is too late to return to our religion, to be of service to the greatest force for good the world has ever known. The only evidence most of us have of being Jews, is that our fathers and mothers were Jews. What is left of the home-life? Little or nothing. We need missionaries among our own people or many will be lost to us. We need re-awakening.

In the first chapter of the "Conquering Jew" Fraser tells that his book is the consequence of an accident. He had been visiting different parts of the world, studying the development of various countries, and wherever he had gone, he found the Jew a principal factor. He found that through persecution the Jew has developed and thinks that long ago he would have disappeared had he received kindly treatment from his neighbors, but persecution made him clannish, he refused to mingle with other people. Now that the bars are down, he believes that he will be gradually absorbed. He tells the startling fact that there are more men of genius among a million Jews than among a million Gentiles, but that there are also more idiots. We cannot agree with him, however, when he says that not until recent times has the Jewish race produced men of intellect, nor do we believe that the Jew has "No genuine love of nature." A curious fact is that in Odessa, the Jew represents 45 per cent of the population and has 95 per cent of the trade. He says the cultured Jew could do much for his brethren by getting him to cease the cause of the closed doors of the hotels, where Jews are not admitted, principally because the new rich Jew is a vulgarian. He speaks of the intense hatred of certain classes of Jews against their brethren, and how they raised him with one hand to knock him down with the other. He claims that the Jews would become the dominant power in Russia, by their superior intellect, were constitutional government established on liberal lines such as exists in Great Britain. But there would be a period of commercial unrest, while the inferior was giving place to the superior. Some day, says he, Russia will pay the price. But so will Judea. He thinks, when the change comes, the Jew will become more a Russian and less a Jew, until in time the distinct Jew disappears. All through the book, he lays great stress upon the Jew rapidly casting off his Judaism and slowly but surely becoming part and parcel of his surroundings, except in the countries in which persecution keeps them welded together. He calls the anti-Semites, those enlightened communities, which extended freedom to the Jew, for they aid quicker the ultimate disappearance. "His qualities will be dispersed, and the world will be indebted to him for much that it counts valuable in the progress of mankind".

His conclusions seem just and reasonable to the ordinary reader, but the Jew who feels his mission, knows that Judaism will continue to live, in spite of the attitude of its luke-warm followers. We are deriving instructions even from those who consider themselves our enemies. We are destined to be leaders in the movement of a world-wide brotherhood. Here and now, while the awful world-war is raging is our opportunity. A Moses, at this time, could Judaize the world, for Christianity has been weighed and found wanting.

British Government Refuses Permit for Red Cross Supplies from America to Reach Central Powers

Editor B'nai B'rith News.

I would ask your attention to an important matter, which has only casually come to light, but which deserves the widest publicity. It came to my knowledge through an official announcement of the American Red Cross which was received by persons who had sent hospital supplies to the Red Cross depot at Bush Terminal for shipment to Germany.

The announcement, of which a copy is enclosed states that the British Government refuses hereafter to permit Red Cross supplies from America to the Central Powers to pass the blockade, and it indicates that the American government has assented to this decision without having made it public.

Two matters of grave importance are involved: One is the far-reaching effect of the decision itself, which virtually forbids the international activities of the Red Cross, in flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention. The other is the peculiar inaction of our government in submitting to the nullification of the principles of humanity and neutrality in the relief of war suffering, when at the same time it proclaims our mission as "spokesmen for the rights of humanity," and threatens to break friendly relations with Germany because of alleged inhumane acts.

If the inconsistency and injustice of our government's position can be clearly brought before the people, it surely must influence public opinion against our entering the war as the ally of one party, when both have offended against our rights.

Participation in the war would mean a country divided against itself. It would mean the outraging of the deepest convictions and affections of millions of our people. It would rend asunder our national unity for a generation.

Will you not use your influence to avert such a disaster, and help in every way you can to give publicity to this affair? Very truly yours,

ROSS G. HARRISON,
Professor of Comparative Anatomy, Yale University.

Official Announcement.

The American Red Cross has received notification through the State Department of the decision of the British government that Red Cross supplies destined to enemy countries will not be passed through the blockade established by the entente allies. An exception is made of supplies intended for the use of hospital units maintained by the American Red Cross in these countries, but as these have been all withdrawn, the prohibition is, in fact, absolute.

In view of this fact, not only is the further contribution of supplies to the Teutonic allies not practicable, but it becomes necessary to make other distribution of those now on hand at the Receiving and Shipping Station of the American Red Cross, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y.

It is proposed to ship these supplies, or such of them as may be appropriate for the purpose, to Siberia, to be distributed to German, Austro-Hungarian and Turkish prisoners in the prison camps of that country. It is, therefore, requested that you authorize the Red Cross to make this disposition of them; or, if for any reason this becomes impossible, to use these supplies for military preparedness at home, or for relief work in disasters in neutral countries. If neither of these dispositions is acceptable, please authorize their shipment, at your expense, to such address in this country as you may indicate.

Please sign the authority given below, and return to the Receiving and Shipping Station, American Red Cross, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y., in the enclosed envelope. Very respectfully,

(Signed) J. R. KEAN,
Colonel, Medical Corps, U. S. Army, Director-General of Military Relief.

THE JEWISH POPULATION OF WARSAW.

The Statistical Bureau of the Jewish Community in Warsaw took a census of the Jews in that city on the 15th of February last with the view to the arrangements that would have to be made for the distribution of Matzos at Passover. The labors of the Statistical Bureau have recently been completed, and the figures dealt with by it show that on the day named the Jewish population numbered 350,413.

B'NAI B'RITH OF GERMANY

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE: FEBRUARY 29, 1916

The first subject for discussion was the petition of the Aid Society of the Smyrna Lodge, in Smyrna.

Brother Rafael Levy, President of the Aid Society of the Smyrna Lodge visited the Grand President also the offices of the Grand Lodge and described the present distress of the Jewish population in Smyrna. Of the 50,000 Jews who lived there, who formerly had means of their own and were able to give with full hands, at least 40,000 are now in need of help.

In order to stem this great distress the society mentioned above has undertaken to aid the poor with 10 pennies a person daily. Until now it took the sum of 600 mark weekly to do even this little relief work, for which 400 more mark are now needed.

Brother Finkel moved that as the Grand Lodge has also inquired of the "Relief Fund" about Smyrna, the answer of the Relief Fund should be awaited and the petition should be referred to the General Committee. This suggestion was adopted.

In order to strengthen the funds of the Grand Lodge, which are in such great demand on account of the war and in order to place the Grand Lodge in the position to do justice in some measure to the claims which come to it, the proposition will be submitted to the General Committee to levy a per capita tax of 10 mark upon the members of the lodges for the benefit of the Grand Lodge.

A request of the Society for Finding Employment, of Berlin, for an additional allowance of 300 mark for the yar 1916, was referred to the General Committee with the recommendation of the Executive Committee.

The report of Brother Apfel for the General Committee about the members of the General Committee going out of that body in rotation, was discussed. Brother Apfel moved that no brother shall belong to the General Committee for longer than four to six years, and only after two to six years shall he again be eligible for election. The first time at least one-third of the General Committee must go out and namely those members who have already been members for longer than six years. According to above principles all the members, with the exception of the officers, have to go out, also those of the Executive Committee.

Brother Kuznitzky recommended the going out every four years, but was opposed to the proposition that this mode of going out should also apply to the members of the Executive Committee. He took the position that there must be a constant body which remains steadily and possesses a certain familiarity with the work of the Grand Lodge so that the management should not suffer unnecessary delay.

Brother Alexander Katz was of the opinion that through the motion of Brother Apfel the Grand Lodge is being restricted in its right to free election from the nominations of the lodges. Through this motion of Brother Apfel just those brethren might be voted to stay out who have proved to be the most valuable and in whom the brethren have the greatest confidence.

Brother Stein held that a better system is necessary for the renewal and the composition of the General Committee and for the nominations on the part of the lodges and union of lodges. The lodges especially must have their turn from time to time for a representation in the General Committee.

Brother Kuznitzky summed up the result of the deliberation as follows:

A positive law is unnecessary, a resolution is rather sufficient. The nomination shall continue to be left to the lodges and unions of lodges, but it shall be recommended to them to propose no candidate for election for more than two successive Grand Lodge terms. The same applies also to lodges that do not belong to any union.

One brother was allowed the sum of 500 mark in cash and a credit of 1,000 mark. The respective lodge is to be asked whether it is willing to participate in this act of assistance.

Upon the suggestion of Brother Ex-Vice-President Wisloch, of Frankfort, o.-t.-M., several lodges have been sending contributions for many years to the Grand Lodge for the support of orphans in Palestine.

On the occasion of making this year's payment the fact was established that since the year 1900 the lodges have raised for this purpose the sum of 40,185.20 mark. These moneys are paid over to the Society for the Bringing Up of Jewish Orphans in Palestine, with an office in Frankfort, o.-t.-M., in which many brethren are members of the Board of Officers.

Brother Hollander reported in detail about the Hospital Train and imparted the information that by his own wish Brother Dr. Straub will retire in the beginning of March from the post of leading physician of the Train and that he will be replaced by Brother Ex-President Dr. Zimmermann, of Dresden.

The Red Cross has informed Brother Hollander that it finds itself in real straightened financial circumstances.

In view of the fact that for principle sake it is imperative to adhere to the agreement made with the Red Cross to contribute to the expenditures of the Hospital Train from the funds of the Grand Lodge, it was decided to give Brother Hollander an allowance of 500 mark per month, exclusive of the cost of repairs and new furnishings. All the detail arrangements were left to Brother Hollander.

For the rest nothing but good can be said of the Hospital Train.

DR. FINKEL.

Communications to the General Committee.

Amicitia Lodge, Posen, reports that for several weeks the Lodge has arranged Sunday afternoon entertainments for the Jewish soldiers of the garrison. A short scientific lecture is delivered, after which artistic and declamatory numbers are offered. The soldiers are also treated to tea, cakes and cigarettes. An advisory legal bureau was also established for the Jewish soldiers. The commandry has pointed out this arrangement through parole notices.

The Chief of Police Von Oppen in Lodz thanks the Grand Lodge for the 3,000 mark it sent for the benefit of the poor population of Brzeziny.

For the twenty-fifth departure of the B'nai B'rith Hospital Train Zion Lodge of Hannover, has given 115 mark; Julius Bien Lodge, of Eschwege, through a collection instigated among the brethren by Brother Ex-President Leopold Plaut, 520 mark; Saxonia Lodge, of Chemnitz, as a donation of two brethren, 200 mark; Niederrhein Lodge, of Crefeld, 50 mark; Mendelssohn Lodge, of Magdeburg, 272.25 mark; Friedrich Lodge, of Heidelberg, 25 mark; Toleranz Lodge, of Landsberg, o.-t.-W., 50 mark; Borussia Lodge, of Danzig, 100 mark; Saxonia Lodge, of Chemnitz, 100 mark; Lessing Lodge, of Breslau, 150 mark; Raphael Kosch Lodge, of Lissa, 50 mark.

Brother Ex-President Dr. Appel, of Coeln, reports about his visits to Duesseldorf Lodge, in Duesseldorf, and to Niederhein Lodge in Crefield. Both lodges were very glad to have a visit of a member of the General Committee. In both lodges the work is rendered more difficult by the war, but they honestly try to do their best. Duesseldorf Lodge has especially accomplished much by founding and maintaining a public kitchen.

Brother Ex-President Lewinsky, of Neidse, has submitted a complete report of the meeting of the Union of Lodges of Upper Silesia. The meeting was attended by about 30 brethren. The Eastern Jewish question occupied the most prominent part in the transactions. It was to be regretted that Brother Ex-President Dr. Kopfstein, of Benthen, who was to give the main report, was prevented by his occupation from attending, so that in his place Brother Ex-President Dr. Goldmann, of Oppeln, reported about the activity of the Russo-Polish Relief Committee. The speaker depicted how the Local Committee created there had tried to check the greatest distress by collecting money and clothing. The money was used for providing milk and bread for children and for managing soup kitchens, etc. Endeavors were also made to find work in Germany for the Jewish workmen of Poland. These endeavors were made difficult by unprincipled agents. But in spite of them the committee succeeeded in procuring bread for hundreds of employment-seeking persons.

In a general discussion of the lodge-life the wish was expressed on all sides that the war, notwithstanding the lodge work, may as much as possible be continued in the usual way, although no misconception is possible that smaller lodges may find it especially hard to hold meetings regularly on account of the calling out to the war of a great number of brethren.

The following is taken from a further report of Brother Ex-President Beer, of Muenchen, about visits to lodges: In a visit to Maimonides Lodges in Nuernberg, the minutes of the Lodge for the last two years were submitted to Brother Beer and he found that Maimonides Lodge was very active. Also the meeting at which Brother Beer was present was well attended. Among other things the Moritz Manheim Foundation was also discussed. It was suggested that not only scientific questions but practical questions and deeds in the field of toleration should be remembered with prizes by this foundation.

Cracow, February 4, 1916.

To the Worthy B'nai B'rith Lodges in Germany:

Worthy President and Dear Brethren:

The undersigned B'nai B'rith Lodge takes the liberty to address to you the following request:

In the district of Galicia which is assigned to our Safety Committee bitter distress is reigning. The Russian invasion has proceeded here in the same frightful manner as it did in all other places, and the destructions and devastations were as everywhere mostly directed against the Jewish population. We now learn by our inquiry that these unfortunate war victims need clothing, linen and warm covers. But these things we cannot get here even for money. We, therefore, must seek help outside.

With the permission of the most Worthy Grand President of our District we take the liberty to address to you the hearty petition to send us clothing, linen and blankets in as great quantities as you possibly can. With these things you will protect hundreds and thousands of unfortunates, especially children, against sickness and suffering.

THE "SOLIDARITAS."

Berlin, March 6, 1916.

To the Worthy Lodges of District No. 8, I. O. B. B.

Worthy President and Dear Brethren:

Referring to the minutes of the 412th session of the Executive Committee, we send you attached to this the appeal of Solidaritaet Lodge in Cracow, in behalf of a collection of clothing, linen, covers, etc., for West Galicia.

The Hilfsverein has kindly undertaken to forward also these collections for West Galicia. Therefore consignments are also to be addressed:

1. To the firm of A. Warmuth, Berlin Hinter der Garnison Kirche 1 a fuer den Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden.

2. For each single package and each single box a specified inventory of the contents with the number of the bill of lading and other marks should be sent to the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden Berlin W. Steglitzer str. 12.

And contributions of money for this purpose we beg to be sent to the office of the Grand Lodge, Berlin W. 62 Kleist str. 12.

The appeal of Worthy Solidaritaet Lodge which is addressed to us with the sanction of the highly esteemed Grand Lodge for Austria, we most warmly support, and remain,

With hearty fraternal greetings in B. B. L. and H.,

TIMENDORFER, President.
DR. FINKEL, Secretary.

Annual Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7

In the presence of 138 delegates representing 82 lodges scattered throughout the eight States comprising District No. 7, whose membership totals 5,798, the Forty-third Annual Convention of District Grand Lodge was opened at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, April 30, 1916, in the Convention Hall of Hotel Marion, Little Rock, Ark. The hall was beautifully decorated with American flags and flowers and also displayed a large electrically lighted Menorah.

The convention was called to order by the President, Nathan Cohn, of Nashville, Tenn., who requested Rabbi Louis Witt of Little Rock, to offer prayer, which he did. Brother M. L. Altheimer, Chairman of the Local Committee on Arrangements, was then presented and he introduced Governor Hays of Arkansas, who welcomed the delegates in the name of the State and in his remarks gave expression to the debt the world owes to the Jews for his history, traditions and conceptions of charity. He was followed by Mayor Charles E. Taylor, of Little Rock, who paid a high tribute to Jewish accomplishment in professional, commercial and political life. Brother Max Heiman, President of the local lodge, in a few simple and hearty words welcomed the delegates and visitors on behalf of the lodge and the Jewish community.

A fitting response to the welcoming addresses was made by Brother D. B. Samuels, of Shreveport, La.

After the roll call of delegates the Past Presidents' degree was conferred on 36 new members.

President Nathan Cohn then read his annual message, which was received with hearty applause and appreciation. He reviewed the work accomplished in the District during the past year. He paid a special tribute to the memory of the late Brothers Nat. Strauss, Secretary of the District, Rabbi M. Samfield of Memphis, Rabbi A. E. Suhler and Henry Hanaw of Mobile.

He emphasized the value and need of Intellectual Culture; referred to the creation of the Social Service Department of the Order, and pointed out the great value and importance of this activity; emphasized the strong instrumentality for good found in the Anti-Defamation League.

After the reading of the message, Brother I. Lewinthal of Nashville, Tenn,. presented to President Cohn a gold watch and fob on behalf of Maimonides Lodge of which Brother Cohn is a member.

Brother Myron M. Goldman, Secretary of the District, then read his report, which was brief, clear and direct, and which showed a satisfactory state of progress in the affairs of the District.

This concluded the first session, and at 2:30 P. M. the convention adjourned until 8 o'clock Sunday evening, when following the custom of many years' standing, a program devoted to intellectual culture was rendered, which was as follows:

Organ Prelude.
Invocation—Rabbi Emil W. Leipziger.
Song—Young People's Chorus.
Essay, "Noblesse Oblige"—Prof. Chester G. Bandman.
Violin Selection—Miss Rosetta Hirsch.
Oration—"The B'nai B'rith and Constructive Service," U. M. Simon.
Vocal Solo—Mrs. Theodore D. Abeles.
Benediction—Rabbi Julian H. Miller.

At the conclusion of the exercises which was held at the Palace Theater and attended by about 2,000 people, a reception was tendered the delegates and visitors at the Concordia Club by the Jewish community.

Monday's Sessions.

At 10 o'clock Monday morning, the convention was called to order. Rabbi Mendel Silber of New Orleans, offered prayer. The first order of business was the report of the Committee on Endowment, through its Chairman, Brother C. F. Moritz. The statistical figures attached to the report were as follows: Balance on hand last report, $287,994.57; number of participating members, 634; number of deaths during the year, 48; receipts during the year, $42,931.69; disbursements, $48,985.55.

The presentation of the report of the Endowment Committee was followed by the reading of telegrams from the President of the Order, Adolf Kraus, various sister Grand Lodges, and from a number of lodges of the District.

In addition to the foregoing a number of messages were received from Houston, Texas, urging the Convention to hold its annual session in that city in 1917. The telegrams received were from the Houston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade, the Mayor, the School Board, the Chamber of Commerce, the Protestant Ministers' Alliance and the Knights of Columbus.

During the reading of the telegrams, George F. Moore, of Washington, D. C., Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite Masons, who happened to be in Little Rock on a visit, entered the hall on the invitation of Presiding Officer E. R. Bernstein. The distinguished visitor addressed the convention briefly, saying in part:

"We are brethren not only because many of you are Scottish Rite Masons, but because we are brethren of light. One part of the first Masonic degree says, 'Yehi Or'—let there be light. We are brethren in altruistic work and deeds beneficial to mankind. Upon your body devolves the task of helping to preserve freedom of thought in this country without which we cannot be good American citizens."

The morning session concluded with a pledge on the part of the delegates to wipe out the existing debt on the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital amounting to about $2,000.00. This came in response to an appeal sent to the Convention by Brother Emil Nathan of St. Louis, the Chairman of the Building Fund of the Hospital.

At noon adjournment was taken for lunch, the rabbis—there were 26 of them present—together with Brother E. R. Bernstein and Mr. Moore, being the guests of the Little Rock Congregation.

The features of the afternoon session were addresses by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of Social Service Department of the Order, and Dr. C. H. Brough, the Democratic nominee for Governor of the State and President-

B'NAI B'RITH OF AUSTRIA

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE

Brother Grand President Professor Ehrmann reports that for the first time since its existence in Austria the membership of the Order has decreased during the year. While in the beginning of January, 1915, the membership amounted to 1,767, it has now dropped to 1,736. He urged upon the lodges to augment their propaganda efforts in order not only to fill up the breach but also to bring about an increase of membership.

All the lodges of the District, except three, which are located in the war zone, held their meetings regularly and have done great work in all the branches of the care for war sufferers.

On the first of November of last year Solidaritaet Lodge had resumed its activities and the Grand President induced the members to form a committee of Local Care for West Galicia and for the part of Russian-Poland bordering on Galicia.

The cordial association of political and military interests which unite Austria with Germany. Bulgaria and Turkey, manifested itself also through a friendly intercourse with the Grand Lodges No. 8 and No. 11, also through the pleasant relations with lodges of the neutral countries, Switzerland and Denmark. District Grand Lodge No. 10 owes many thanks to the lodges of Zurich and Copenhagen for their constant readiness to aid it in the endeavors to seek out those who were missing, to free those who were interned and to improve the lot of war prisoners. With their help District Grand Lodge No. 10 achieved many a successful result and ameliorated the suffering of many a family.

The Grand President further reports that shortly after the Austrian troops forced their way through at Gorlice, Messrs. Oppenheimer, Bodenheimer and Mittwoch, of Berlin, appeared before him with the recommendation of the Brother Grand President Privy Counsellor of Justice Timendorfer and referring to the Committee for Guarding the Rights of the Eastern Jews urged that such a Committee should also be founded in Vienna. "I held several conferences with these gentlemen," stated the Grand President, "having called in some prominent members of the congregation, among them the brethren Dr. Kohn and Dr. Hirsch. I introduced them in several official places and I learned later that the three gentlemen from Berlin had visited some important government officers and members of Parliament in Budapest, and had also called in other places. In consequence of this a Central Committee of our own was formed.

"The initiative for the formation of this Central Committee came from Baron Louis Rothschild. This Central Committee bears the name of 'Central Committee to Guard the Rights of Citizenship Interests of the Jewish Population in the Northern War Territory.' Professor Ehrmann, the Grand President, is a member of this committee and also a member of its Executive Committee. We have visited many ministers and expressed our wish that the Jews should be represented, according to percentage, in all citizens' committees in the war districts, which attend officially to public affairs and that a legal deliverer of judicial decisions concerning Jewish affairs be appointed for Russian-Poland. This Central Committee has also opened an office for which I have appropriated, with the consent of Brother Dr. Edw. Kohn, the second delegate and Brother Dr. Schnabel, a subvention of 300 crowns per month from the fund established for the Galician aid."

The Grand President then reports about the spending of the moneys which came to the Israelitish Alliance from all circles of the American co-religionists. A joint committee was formed by the three corporations (the Grand Lodge, the Galician Aid Society and the Alliance) consisting of two representatives of each of the corporations.

In the last session of the General Committee the joint committee was allowed a credit up to 60,000 crowns and the General Committee obligated itself to deliver the result of a collection which was to be undertaken in the name of the three corporations to the general treasury. The Grand President therefore proposes to turn over a total of 190,000 crowns of the collections and of the American money to this general treasury and to reserve 40,000 crowns for the special aid of brethren who have fallen in distress. This being according to the wishes of the American contributors, there will still be 150,000 crowns left for the creation of an institution for the care of orphans which the Grand Lodge intends to inaugurate in Galicia.

A general lengthy discussion of the Grand Presidents' proposition took place, in which the question was raised whether the care of the orphans in Galicia shall be undertaken by the B'nai B'rith exclusively or jointly with the other organizations. It was resolved that the B'nai B'rith shall establish a central organization for the care of the children of Galicia and the Bukowina, who have become orphans in consequence of the war, that a committee shall be formed for this purpose, which is to report to the General Committee, a meeting of which shall be called within eight weeks, and that 3,000 crowns shall be placed to the credit of this central organization committee.

It was also resolved that a total sum of 160,000 crowns shall be given to the joint committee for the present and that it shall further receive all following amounts which will be donated with the expressed wish that they shall be delivered to this joint committee.

A communication was read from the President of the Order, Brother Kraus, in which he makes known the up to date result of the collections instituted in America and in which he states particulars about the conditions prevailing among the Jews.

It was resolved to thank the Brother President and to communicate to him at the same time that Grand Lodge No. 10 wishes to be given the right to have a voice in the disbursement of the relief moneys sent to Austria from America.

A communication from the Grand Lodge of Constantinople was read, containing a request for help for needy Jews of District No. 11. It was resolved that to the sum collected for the Bulgarian Red Cross, money shall be added from the funds of the Grand Lodge, so that it reaches the amount of 5,000 crowns, 4,000 of which shall be sent to Bulgaria and the rest to the Grand Lodge in Constantinople.

OFFICIAL REPORTS OF THE LODGES IN AUSTRIA FOR THE YEAR 1915.

Union Lodge, Pilsen,

The lodge entered the year with 89 members. Two new members were initiated during the year, so that at the time this report is written the Lodge has 91 members.

Nine meetings were held during the year with an average attendance of 28 brethren. Considering the fact that many members are at the front and that half of the members of the Lodge have their residences outside of Pilsen, this attendance shows quite an interest on the part of the brethren in the endeavors of the Lodge.

The following lectures were delivered in the meetings: "Activities of the Grand Lodge in the Service of the War and the Care of Refugees", "War Hygiene", "From the Sessions of the General Committee", "Our State Socialism", "The Constitution Grand Lodge in San Francisco".

The lectures were frequently followed by interesting discussions in which many brethren participated.

Conditions created by the war brought it about that there was a considerable increase in the outside aid extended by the Lodge, it amounted to 10,209.45 crowns. 2,154 crowns were expended in inside relief. The Lodge has this year again contributed to the "Free Table" in Pilsen which charity was founded by the brethren. The Lodge also subventioned the Orphans' Homes for Boys in Prague and Luk, the Galician Aid Society, the Bezalel Society, the Jewish Asylum in Meran, the Jewish Teachers Pension Society for Bohemia, the Jewish Ladies' Society in Pilsen and has extended help in deserving private cases. The Lodge also aided the Galician refugees, contributed a considerable sum to the Pilsen Hospital for Wounded Soldiers, donated 100 crowns to the Red Cross and subscribed an additional sum of 6,000 crowns to the War Loan.

Brother Dr. Hartmann, a member of Union Lodge, was awarded the war decoration, second class, by the Red Cross Society.

Wien Lodge, Vienna.

At the end of the year of the report the membership of this Lodge was 268, seven new members were initiated. Four brethren were lost through death.

Many of the brethren have to suffer badly under the burden of the war, but in spite of the hard times, and perhaps just because of it, the activity of the Lodge was an exceedingly lively one and the large attendance of the brethren at the meetings showed that many of the brethren found recreation in the Lodge after the day's care and trouble.

Fifteen meetings were held during the year, one of which was a joint meeting with Eintracht Lodge. The average attendance vacilated between 84 and 120.

The following lectures and discussions were held in the Lodge:

"Report About the Care of Refugees in Austria", "The Moderation of the War Calamity Through the Medical Treatment with the Roentgen Ray" (illustrated), "Reflections About the War Diseases", "The War and the Financial Condition", "The Economic Causes and Effects of the World War", "Right in War and Peace", "About the Constitutional Grand Lodge and the Activity of the Order in the Last Period", "Reconstruction", "What Is Called Love of Neighbor?", "Report of My Journey in Galicia", "Organization Strivings and Organization Aims in the Austrian Jewry", "Eastern Jewry and We".

The committee appointed by the Lodge for the purpose of attending to the care for war sufferers, was able to do very useful work with the money placed at its disposal. The activities of the Jewish War Archive, which was founded by the Zionists, received a considerable donation from the Lodge.

Eintracht Lodge, Vienna.

Thirty of the members of this Lodge are in military service and many of them have received well-deserved marks of distinction as a recognition of their faithful fulfillment of self-sacrificing duties.

In the beginning of the year 1915 the Lodge had a membership of 172, four new brethren were initiated and one brother died. This left 175 members at the end of the year.

Fourteen regular meetings and one special meeting for election were held during the year. The attendance at the regular meetings wavered between 44 and 77 brethren.

The following lectures were delivered in the Lodge: "About the Relief Committee of Triest for the Aid of Jewish Emigrants," "The Subduing of Materialism and the Revival of the Religious Thought," "Curiosities of Cultures," "The Language of Suspicion," "The Duties of Jewish Communities," "Unessential Moments in the Light of Pedagogy," "The Works of the B'nai B'rith Order in America," "The Russian Philosopher Solovieff About Judaism," "Medical and Social Things in the War," "Voices from East and West About the Future Formation of Judaism," "Organization Strivings and Organization Aims in Austrian Judaism," "Sustentation of the People in the War." Besides these lectures elaborate discussions were held about the question of the organization of the Austrian Jewish communities.

The Lodge has contributed considerable sums to the following benevolent institutions: Austrian Red Cross, Bulgarian Red Cross and the Turkish Crescent.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF DISTRICT NO. 7.

elect of the Southern Sociological Congress. Dr. Coffee spoke along the lines of social service, while Dr. Brough dwelt on the service the Jew has rendered to humanity in religion, art, science and commerce, and closed his remarks by saying:

"This State has no room for prejudice; it needs all good people, and the Jews have always been among the best and foremost people of the State."

An announcement of a number of substantial contributions to the Jewish Widows' and Orphans' Home of New Orleans followed the addresses, and adjournment was taken until Tuesday morning.

On Monday evening a ball was tendered the delegates, visitors and the members of the local Lodge at the Jewish Club.

Tuesday's Sessions.

The sessions on Tuesday proved to be the most important, and the morning session was opened by prayer by Rabbi Emanuel Sternheim of Baton Rouge, La. The first order of business was the report of the committee appointed to recommend representatives to the various committees and foster institutions of the District.

The next report submitted for consideration was that of the Committee on Agriculture, and after an animated discussion lasting more than two hours, the minority report was adopted. The report, which was adopted as well as the majority report, which did not meet with favor, were in full sympathy with the project of endeavoring to establish an Agricultural Colony. While the majority report did not favor the authorization of collection of funds for this specific purpose in the name of the District, the minority report insisted that such authorization of the use of the name of the District in the solicitation of funds was indispensable. Upon vote finally taken on the question the result was that 80 were in favor of the minority and only 46 voted to adopt the majority report.

In the afternoon session a number of committee reports were considered and various resolutions were adopted. Among them were:

Resolution to commend the work of the Council of Jewish Women and to extend to that organization the co-operation of the District Grand Lodge and to request that one of the Council members be designated to attend future Grand Lodge conventions as the representative of the Council.

Resolution to concur in the protest against the Burnett Immigration Bill as voiced by District Grand Lodge No. 1; authorizing the appropriation to the Immigrant Publication Society; recommending the work done in the Jewish Orphan Home and the Touro Infirmary of New Orleans; changing the opening day of future conventions from Sunday to Monday in order to obviate the necessity on the part of many delegates to travel on the Sabbath; abolishing the office of third Vice-President of the District, and making the office of Sergeant-at-Arms appointable; authorizing the division of the surplus left from subscriptions collected for the Galveston sufferers among the following institutions: The Jewish Orphans' Home, Touro Infirmary, Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital and the Jewish War Sufferers Relief Fund; expressing thanks to the Jewish Ledger and other Jewish Journals in the District for their support and co-operation.

At a late hour, election of officers was held, with the following result:

President — Ernest R. Bernstein, Shreveport, La.

1st Vice-President—Ralph J. Schwarz, New Orleans, La.

2nd Vice-President—Sol Shoeneman, Houston, Texas.

Treasurer—Archibald A. Marx, New Orleans, La.

Secretary—Myron M. Goldman, New Orleans, La.

Sergeant-at-Arms—A. Leo Oberdorffer, Birmingham, Ala.

The meeting place for the next Convention was then decided upon. After a spirited contest between Houston and Chattanooga, the latter city came forth victorious.

The closing part of the program during the afternoon session on Tuesday and lasting until late in the evening, was a memorial service which was opened with a prayer by Rabbi Abram Brill of Meridian, Miss. Rabbi I. Lewinthal of Nashville presented the report of the Committee on Necrology, and the following departed members were separately eulogized: Rabbi A. Suhler, by Brother E. R. Bernstein; Lazar Hirsch, by Rabbi Sol Kory; Rabbi Max Samfield, by B. W. Hirsch; Nat Strauss, by Charles Rosen; and Henry Hanaw, by Leon Schwarz.

Rabbi E. Faber of Tyler, Texas, pronounced the benediction.

After the announcement that a vaudeville and entertainment awaited the delegates and visitors at the Shriners' Temple in the evening, also that a special train would take the delegates to Hot Springs, Arkansas, on Wednesday mornnig to attend the dedication of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital, the Convention adjourned.

CANADIAN STATESMEN REPUDIATE ATTACK ON JEWS.

In the course of a discussion in Canadian Parliament on the immigration question a member made a violent attack on Jewish immigrants, declaring them to be undesirable. In reply to a letter sent to Sir Robert Borden, the Premier, on the subject, he said among other things:

"My colleagues and I fully and sincerely appreciate the excellent qualities of the Hebrew population of Canada and the good service which they have rendered to this Dominion in assisting in its development and upbuilding.

Sir Wilfred Laurier, ex-Prime Minister and leader of the opposition, also sent a sympathetic answer.

Several cabinet ministers have written to the Canadian Jewish Chronicle disassociating themselves from the observations made by Mr. Boulay on Jewish immigrants.

JEWS AGAIN EXILED IN RUMANIA.

The expulsion of Jews from the smaller towns near the Russian and Austrian boundaries in Rumania has been resumed with added vigor. The Union of Rumanian Jews through Dr. Adolphe Stern, President of District Grand Lodge No. 9, I. O. B. B., sent a strong protest to the government against this measure of the police and the press also condemns the action of the government as unwarranted. The persecutions, however, continue in spite of all protest.

TRAVELING THROUGH INFINITY

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

The modern man, unlike his forbears of not so long ago, is given to much traveling. We travel for business, we travel for pleasure. The stay-at-homes naturally still predominate; on the other hand, though the wanderlust may take hold on the favored few, the wandernot is the lot of those on the lower rungs of the ladder, who, worsted in the struggle of life at home, are drawn by necessity to where richer opportunities may be found. The emigrant is indeed a traveler whose patronage, yielding large profits in the aggregate, is eagerly sought by the great steamship companies. Thanks to the vast strides in speed on land and on sea, we cover distances measuring hundreds and thousands of miles on a single trip or voyage. It takes now less time to cross a continent or an intercontinental lake than formerly was spent on a journey from our eastern shore to the wilds of Ohio. But short as the time may be relatively, the moment we are bound for a longer trip, the train or the steamer becomes for the time being our temporary home. Each one of us makes himself comfortable after his way. Even the holiday maker finds out soon enough that time would hang heavily unless the tedium were relieved by some form of improvised activity. Provisions for the road in the form of edibles the fewest of us will find it necessary to take along, though a flask of a drinkable may still be stored away in a nook for emergency. But we do provide ourselves with the things that will help while away the time. Some will take a deck of cards, if perchance some like-minded companions may be found who in club-like surroundings will indulge in a protracted game. Others make chance acquaintances and converse; they converse anonymously, or when the interest deepens, mutual introduction follows; and the younger folks amuse themselves by love-making. On board ship where there is more elbowroom than in the train, clandestine meetings are said to be arranged of the kind that the flippant members of the social set indulge in elsewhere. Others again read novels or trashy stories of the kind that the book-stalls in terminals are full of, meant to amuse or occupy the mind during the trip and then to be cast away. The fewest pass their time in the reading of a serious book or in following up a train of thought. Thinking would seem indeed to be the thing most travelers shun; to be left with one's own thoughts means boredom to the mass of mankind. And the fewest have any thoughts at all stored up against just such an occasion when fresh impressions often passes into monotonous sameness.

Traveling is a temporary pastime. But is it? Is not life a journey? We who comfortably sleep in a berth know that the train or the steamer is constantly moving onward to its destination or terminal. Is not the "firm ground" beneath our feet, is not the earth revolving, chained to a planetary system which is itself chained to other systems and in fine to the system of the universe, is she not speeding through and into infinity? Our feet may be held fast by gravitation, but the earth is nevertheless the train on which we travel. The terminal for us will come not in a day or a week, but after three score years and ten. Then our journey is finished. Then we shall have entered upon our rest, upon our haliday, upon our sabbath.

The Jewish sages liken this world to the eve of the sabbath. The world of reward is the sabbath, the world of striving and of failing, of success and disappointment, is the preparation for the sabbath. And we while away this span of life after diverse fashions. Some of us spend it in levity, in idle amusement; some in sin and crime; the fewest bethink themselves of the great privilege that is accorded to human kind and pursue serious business, think and make others think recalling them from the fleeting interests to those that abide. It is shere thoughtlessness to have had the privilege of life's journey and to have made so little of it. What awaits us on the other side of life we know not. We have the faith that our soul ascends to the nobler mansions in heaven, there to behold the beauty of truth and goodness. But whether we have this faith or not, every human being ought to consider it as a great boon to be born into this world, into this earth, into this planetary system, into this universe.

The animals beneath us have some sort of a soul life, and perhaps a cruder form is not to be denied to the plant and to stock and stone. Above us the angels or the pure spirits may know and feel, with a knowledge and feeling akin to ours, but different from it. Ours is the lot to think discursively and to make the muter aspects for our universe articulate in our mind. The span of time that we travel through infinity is the measure of the universe arriving at a consciousness of itself.

The mass of mankind who are given to frivolous pursuits get no more out of their journey than the fly that perishes before the day is over. The more serious-minded who succeed in taking in on their journey the larger vista, who from the height of a mountain-peak as it were, behold miles of panoramic views, who link their thoughts to those of the thinkers of past generations, who perchance add a bit of discovery, they it is who get most of that unique privilege of their travel through infinity. Yes, finite beings we are; our days are measured; we know that our joys and sorrows, our strivings and labors and successes and failures will soon be over; we are all too aware of the uncertainties of life. Yes, today we live, tomorrow we may be dead; shall we eat and drink and make merry? or shall we use the day while it is ours? Whether this is our only opportunity for being on earth, we know not, but if it be our only opportunity, then surely we ought to improve it. It is within us to choose; either to sink to the level of the thoughtless beast, or to transcend time and become ourselves a conscious part of the infinite.

If I, the individual, were not here, the earth and the universe would go on just the same. But would it? This universe and this earth need me quite as much as I need them. This universe and this earth were meant for life, are the scene laid for life to appear thereon. Life with which the earth is big means richness of all specimens, of species and of individuals. Every individual manifestation of life means an enriching of the universe. Every individual soul betokens a thought in the mind of the God of the universe, and every individual soul traveling through infinity has in it the capacity of that utmost perfection of which a human being is capable, and for the realization of which perhaps all this universe has been at work since the beginning. These choice souls are the heroes of mankind, the supermen, the Messiahs. Judaism rightly refuses them divine honors. But Judaism just as emphatically teaches the dignity of man created in the divine image, the dignity of the individual soul, rooted in finitude, but gazing upward to the Infinite in whom everything is.

RELIEF ACTIVITIES IN GALICIA.

An appeal has been issued by various Jewish organizations of Austria for the relief of the Galician fugitives in Vienna who are still in great distress.

According to official reports 50,000 fugitives have returned to their homes, but nearly twice as many are still left in Vienna. These fugitives have been assisted out of private subscriptions, and funds are needed for the upkeep of the many institutions that were created for the care and maintenance of the fugitives. They are in a very sad condition as they are obliged to remain in Vienna, and owing to reasons of a military and sanitary nature, they cannot receive the required permission to return to their homes.

Another circumstance which aggravates their case is the fact that they are excluded in Vienna from nearly all occupations so that the native population might not be hurt by their competition.

RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTES TO JEWISH RELIEF.

The Russian Council of Ministers granted an additional sum of two million rubles to the Petrograd Jewish Relief Committee. This is 800,000 rubles less than was asked for by the committee and the explanation was made that since other Russian organizations are extending aid to the Jewish Committee the government felt justified in curtailing its grant. At the same time, very high compliments were paid to the Jewish Committee for its efficient work, and especially for the systematic budget which it had presented to the government. The Ministerial Committee at the same time petitioned the government to give the fugitives from the Minsk district all assistance, so that they might leave the province under favorable conditions.

Will The Jews Be Benefited By the Present European War?

April 16, 1916, by Mr. Charles Hutzler.)

The Jews as a people are for peace, and, as a people, will make any sacrifice short of honor in order to live at peace.

In the arts, science, commerce, statecraft, philanthropy, all of which are constructive, they occupy place in the front rank; but as warriors, which is aimed at destruction, they are not often possessed of genius.

The present European war, or world war as it has been termed by some, is the most vicious and destructive that history records. Human rights, liberty, property and life itself have been sacrificed more wastefully than the mind is willing to take account of. The Jewish mind, when taken as a separate entity, is out of sympathy with activities of the kind; consequently, the Jew has no concern in connection therewith, except in so far as patriotism demands that man shall fight for the country which gives him shelter.

What Can the Jew Hope to Obtain?

Let us stop a moment to inquire what can the Jew hope to obtain as the result of this war; or rather, let us ask, what does he wish to obtain? And the answer must be:

1. The right to live on equality.
2. The privilege to acquire righteously.
3. To be judged fairly.
4. To help in bringing about the era of brotherhood and contentment.

"Had this war been conceived for any of these purposes, or were it conducted along a path leading thitherward, the Jew would readily find himself placed. Unfortunately, or otherwise, the present strife cannot be upheld by any of the formulas now regarded as progressive or justifiable: there is no struggle for the restoration of denied rights; no fight against tyranny, overtaxation, labor oppression, or slavery; no voice is raised in favor of religious freedom, right to hold office, or the acquisition of the ballot. But it is solely a war for supremacy among the great nations of the world, to the cost of which all eyes seem to be blinded.

In this mad spirit each nation is aiming at its own aggrandizement, and whereas they are now by alliance divided into two camps only, we are forced to the conviction that the alliances are altogether unnatural.

On the one side, we behold Mohammedan, Catholic and Protestant Christian united. On the other, we find Catholic and Protestant Christian, Greek Catholics, Buddhist, Parsees and Zoroastrians. In addition to the foregoing, there are numerous other religious sects, including the Jews, who, as usual, are giving up their lives indiscriminately for both sides. While it is quite unusual to mention religious factions in times of warfare, there are two reasons for referring to them in this instance.

The first is because Germany, the aggressor in this great strife, has declared officially that it is fighting in the name of God. The second reason is because the thought of the world has been directed to the probable attitude of the conquerors towards the Jews.

Before attempting to guess at what that attitude will be, let me say that it is a safe prediction to prophesy that the unnatural alliances which are holding the warring nations together today will dissolve as soon as peace is declared, and the sects will again find themselves separated by the same lines of difference that held them apart in the past.

What of the Jew After the War?

But what of the Jew? Though he fights with equal valor, makes as ready sacrifices, yields up his limbs or his life, and seeks the enemy of his country with equal diligence; yet he must ever keep in view the memory of a suffering past and the fear that the future will deny him equality with his neighbor.

While the struggle lasts and he marches side by side with the others, offering his person as a mark for the enemy's bullets, he is treated as an equal; but all history points to the lamentable fact that when peace follows the tumult of war, the old animosity of the Gentile for the Jew resumes its place as a factor to be reckoned with. If any one entertains a doubt on this question, I will remind him that because the North American Review published an article declaring that Jews were not to be found fighting for their country during the Civil War, which article was extensively copied, the Hon. Simon Wolf felt it to be his duty to publish the book known as 'The American Jew, as Patriot, Soldier and Citizen,' in which are recorded the names of more than 7,000 Jews who fought on one side or the other during that memorable struggle, as proof that the Jew always performs his duty to his country, even in the face of prejudice and misrepresentation.

I attribute much of the prejudice we experience to the fact that the Jew avoids strife whenever he can. Rather than have a controversy where blood will be shed, he often chooses an honorable retreat. Thus, we frequently hear it said: 'The Jew will not fight.' True; as a rule, he will avoid a fight if he can, but, in this community, many a man, possessed of more boldness than wisdom, has been made to bite the dust for making just such a mistake in his estimate of certain belligerent Jews, who have, by their courage, compelled respect for the Jew who will fight when he must.

Cannot See Where to Look for Benefit.

With so many conflicting possibilities to be reckoned with, no one can say with any degree of certainty whether the Jew will be benefited or injured as a result of the war. Any opinion expressed must of necessity rest either upon a mere guess or upon an argument which finds its premises in the mental attitude of the writer. For my own part, I cannot figure out the direction in which to look for the benefit I so earnestly hope for. Whatever of principle is involved in the struggle is abhorrent to the Jewish mind. Whichever way the victory comes, suffering must follow, and of this the Jew always gets more than his righteous share.

If Germany and Austria prevail, the success attending their arms will be regarded by them as justification for the brutal discrimination of the Magyar and the refined cruelty of that country which gave birth to and has fostered anti-Semitism.

If Russia happens to be on the winning side, and the curb is not placed upon her by her more liberal-minded allies of France and England, the Jew of the pale may look in vain for succor from the murdering and lustful hordes who cry out for the pogrom and then put it into destructive activity.

As for England and France, the Jew had there, before the war, as many privileges as he can hope to hold after the war is ended; but whether they win or lose, the number of our people there is so small that an increase or decrease of rights will not count for much in the ultimate summing up, for these two countries, while fairly well content to hold the Jews who are there now, are not offering a generous welcome to immigrants who must leave their more forlorn homes in order to escape the enemy in their midst.

The hope of the Jew is based upon the biblical promise of peace, and not upon the result of warfare. In times of peace, when the mind of man dwells upon the economies of nature and those activities which promote life and health, the Jew finds his best opportunity to reach that faculty of the masses which gives heed to the call of justice. It is then that the expansion of thought and the division of responsibility lead toward the adjustment of human rights which, in turn, awaken those ideals which bring man nearer to his God by admitting a recognition of the universal brotherhood of all men.

I have said that the Jew does not excel in the art of warfare. Is it at all desirable that he should include this among his varied accomplishments? I am of the opinion that it is not. The shedding of blood, the destruction of property, the development of passion cannot be included among the higher aspirations of the spirit. The Jew still has a mission. It is a call to teach a knowledge of God and the practice of those precepts which have reached us through His inspired messengers, and which are recognized as the foundation upon which all human happiness must rest.

Warfare is rarely waged for justice or for the betterment of social conditions. It is nearly always conducted for ambitious projects of nations and to gratify the lust of individuals for power or for glory.

In the few instances recorded in history where war has been waged in defense of human right, we find that even when success has crowned the worthy cause, the ultimate result which follows shows that the victory in one direction promotes degeneration in another; and it then takes years and years before an awakened public sense of righteousness can restore the era of justice.

ERRING THROUGH IGNORANCE.

Whether we can eradicate prejudice again the Jew or not, may be a mooted question. The psychology which treats prejudice as a mental aberration curable through enlightenment is probably neither all wrong nor all right, though the tendency of the modern science of the soul is in the direction of making deep-seated instincts and emotions responsible for those sentiments of aversion to the alien, to the one who does not resemble ourselves. Naturally instinct cannot be met by argumentation or schooling or tracts or encyclopedias replete with learning. Nevertheless it is rightly assumed, and experience corroborates it on every side, that on the top of the emotional idiosyncracies there are layers of preconceived opinions originating in misinformation, hastily picked up rumors, and flimsy evidence which the humblest jury would brush aside as irrelevant. Here indeed the obvious remedy is, turn on the full light, show forth the truth, call up the facts. There is no eloquence as convicing as the eloquence of facts.

Our Anti-Defamation League has battled against vilifications in the press and in literature and last but not least, on the stage. We, Jews, can appreciate a jest at our expense like any other section of this composite American nation. But a jest ceases to be one when it is calculated to hurt, to do damage. Calumny sticks. The majority of mankind are impressed by the printed page, and a theatrical performance rousing our risibilities will often penetrate beneath the surface and sink into our inner self. The talking drama is now fast giving way to the picture drama, the filmed representation. Like all things human, the "movie" is in the main an indifferent pastime; it may even have, indeed it often has, educational value; but it just as often constitutes a danger to the impressionable minds of a youthful audience or of the unsophisticated adult. The "movie" man is out for the profit, and there are the unscrupulous who care not for morals as long as they rake in the dollars. And that is why we have agencies for censoring the film. Ultimately it is public opinion which is the surest critic, for the public must not be antagonized, nor even a section of the public. It is the business of the Jew to be on the alert and to suppress betimes what may work incalculable damage.

Suppress the truth? Indeed not. But it is the direct falsehood and worse than that the half truth which must be suppressed. It may be left to our fellow-citizens to judge whether the filming of what to them is sacred history is consonant with propriety. But when in that [illegible] an element is introduced [illegible] reflection on the Jewish people [illegible] perverts the truth of history, it [illegible] step in. Recently we have [illegible] a victory and the merit belongs to our League, but in particular to our brother, Dr. Hirsch, who with his stupendous erudition trod down the ugly hydra of calumny which represented the Jews as stoning the Nazarene. How woefully ignorant our neighbors are about the simplest facts of Jewish history! Whatever we know of the crucifixion of Jesus comes to us from sources inimical to the Jewish people. We are not going to discuss here the veracity of the accounts, though Christian scholars admit that truth and fiction are intermixed, but one thing is sure that the execution was carried out by Roman centurions. Indeed, the Jews had been deprived of capital jurisdiction; moreover, crucifixion was a Roman and not a Jewish mode of executing an offender. All this is so plain to the student of history. But then the old calumny still lingers, and we take it that all right-minded men will agree with us that inflaming the passions of the populace against the Jew for a crime supposedly committed by our ancestors is a sore business which ought to be stopped. What Christians teach in Sunday Schools is one thing, what is put on the stage is quite anotner. The stage and the film man simply err through ignorance. It was our business to enlighten him—so we did. And to his credit be it said that he agreed to cut out of the picture "The Mother and the Law," soon to be exhibited, the scene of the stoning of the Nazarene by Jews.

We congratulate the representatives of our League in Los Angeles for their valuable co-operation in bringing this matter to a satisfactory close.

THE TRUE CHARITY

The convention of our charity organizers and communal workers in national conclave is an event meriting a few remarks in this place.

We are all of us justly proud of our great organizations in our communities, usually going by the name of the United Charities. There are some places which for one reason or another have not yet advanced to the united stage. Probably the work done is quite as good, quite as effective, though perhaps a trifle costlier. Even the United Charities have in certain communities not escaped the criticism that the amount of money spent in collections and administration is somewhat disproportionate. Probably here and there greater economy might be introduced, but that is the least. A far more important stricture concerns the manner in which the doling out of pecuniary assistance is done. Often we hear of the heartlessness of the hired executive, who somehow treats the poor as the rightless subjects of the realm of which he is the autocrat. They are driven from pillar to post, shouted at, scolded, in a word robbed of all self-respect. That where there is a feeling of mistrust on both sides, all cannot go smoothly, is often enough imposed upon is quite natural. Those that betake themselves to the charitable bureau are of course the poorest of the poor who have battled with necessity and worsted and defeated and discouraged with head bent and spirit drooping will stand any humiliation to keep body and soul together. But is the humiliation necessary? Must the brother and sister who are in distress be degraded? Scientific charity demands that each one is pigeon-holed, he is a mere "case," just as in the factory he is a mere "hand"—a cog in the industrial machine on the one hand and in the charitable machine on the other.

Probably it cannot be done otherwise in these days of statistical exactness. Be it said to the credit of the directors and presidents of our communal charity organizations that they are for the most part men of broad culture, selfless aims, who give of their time and energy freely and unstintedly, who keep posted on the latest tracts in the science of applied sociology. Centralization is a great aid to efficiency, and yet it may be questioned whether the evils of centralized administration may not be somewhat tempered by a process of decentralization? Somehow we feel that it is far better to unify independent societies by making them co-operative than to deprive them of all measure of independence. For let it be remembered, there is one supreme evil that attaches to all our organized charity and that consists in its being vicarious. Charity delivers out of death, but will the rich giver be saved by the mere signing of a check? If at least the distribution of the charitable gifts is carried on by a larger number of semi-independent, yet united, societies, then there will be more of people coming in direct contact with the poor brother who needs our sympathy, the touch of a warm hand, more than the hard cash which we allow a paid official to dole out. Personal service is what we are in need of. We are grateful for the checks large and small. We must have our trained officials, but what we need most of all is an army of volunteers. The trained worker will probably find them a hindrance. But then let it be said once more and this time most unequivocally—charity is not a business nor a profession. It cannot be delegated to others, just as little as our religion can be taken care of for us by a paid official, the rabbi for instance. We may shock the sociologists, but in Judaism charity is a department of religion. Charity to be truly effective, must be personal—not in the sense that the recipient must know the giver, but in the sense that merely giving dollars and cents is not enough, and that it is the religious duty of every Jew and Jewess to take a hand in the distribution of charity by personal service. The official who is surrounded by an army of volunteers will probably be humanized. Indeed, true charity consists now in humanizing the charitable machine altogether too scientifically constructed.

JACOB FURTH HONORED.

To mark the 50th anniversary of the induction of Jacob Furth, of St. Louis, Treasurer of the Order, into the Masonic fraternity, Cornerstone Lodge held a social evening on April 17. Mr. Furth observed the unusual event by giving a treat to the inmates of the Masonic home.

SAMUEL FOLZ HONORED.

Mr. Samuel Folz, of Kalamazoo, Mich., ex-Mayor of the city, has been appointed by the President postmaster of Kalamazoo, and the appointment was confirmed by the United States Senate on April 19.

Brother Folz is well deserving of the distinction conferred upon him, as he is a leading citizen not only of his city but of the State, ever active in communal work.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED TO JOSEPH H. ULLMAN.

A testimonial in the form of a piano floor lamp was presented to Brother Joseph H. Ullman of New Haven, Conn. This testimonial was presented to Brother Ullman in appreciation of his valuable services in behalf of Horeb Lodge. Brother Louis H. Levy, in an eloquent manner, made the presentation speech.

It is particularly fitting that at this, the sixtieth anniversary, that an expression of confidence and appreciation of the work done by Brother Ullman should be made. He has made a part of his life's work, the progress of Horeb Lodge, and the advancement of the cause of Judaism, and it was altogether fitting that at this occasion the meeting should be graced by the presence of Brother A. G. Cohen of Boston, President of District No. 1, I. O. B. B. Brother Cohen delivered an address in which he indicated the great work that is before the organization, and expressed the appreciation of the District for the work that has been done by Brother Ullman, the Honorary Brother of the Lodge. Brothers Charles Hartman of New York, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, and Harry Cutler of Providence, Chairman of the Immigration Commission of the Order, were also present, and delivered pleasing addresses to the members present.

SOLOMON MARX.

Brother Solomon Marx, of New Orleans, hail and hearty, celebrated his 82nd birthday on April 1st. Although Mr. Marx tried to spend the day quietly in his beautiful home, he was kept busy receiving good wishes and remembrances from his great host of friends.

The B'nai B'rith News extends to Brother Marx its heartiest congratulations and sincere wish: "Ad Meoh Shonim".

DEATH OF MR. KAUFMAN HAYS.

Mr. Kaufman Hays, one of Cleveland's prominent business men, died on April 12, 1916, after a short illness. Although 81 years of age, he attended regularly to his affairs, and his death came as a surprise to many of his friends.

At the time of his death he was Vice-President of the Cleveland Worsted Mills Company, Director of the First National Bank and Citizens Savings and Trust Bank, also Trustee and Director of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland

Mr. Hays served as member of the City Council for two years. He also acted as City Treasurer in 1888, and in addition thereto held other positions of trust. Throughout his life he was prominently identified with the philathropic movements among the Jewish people; was a loyal member of B'nai B'rith and a stanch supporter of the Congregation.

The funeral was held in Mayfield Cemetery on April 14. Dr. Samuel Wolfenstein, former superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, and a long time friend of Mr. Hays, officiated.

Dr. Wolfenstein spoke as follows:

"A sturdy oak has been felled by the strong hand of the grim reaper!

"It was but a month ago that our departed friend celebrated his 81st birthday, enjoying the good wishes of his dear ones and the felicitations of his many friends. With a vigorous mind, and with the elasticity of his physical strength, he expressed his appreciation and satisfaction and joy when his business coworkers had presented to him at that occasion a loving cup as a token of their friendship. I believe we all had then the thought: Kaufman Hays is still good for some years to come.

"Alas—a few days of sickness laid him low, and ere his family could realize it, he had passed away. Deeply was I shocked, when the request had reached me to officiate here at this bier. For many years in the work of our Orphan Asylum have I been closely connected with him, and his good wife, whom we have borne to her last resting place, just nine years ago. His was a busy and an useful life from the day he had come to this our city of Cleveland some sixty-five years ago. He was one of those pioneers—of whom there are left but a few—to whom our flourishing cities owe their growth and their development. He helped to build up our city from the size of a small town to be the metropolis of our State. He was a plain business man—no politician; nor was he ever an officeseeker. The offices sought him, and he responded to the call of his fellow citizens, who had sent him repeatedly to represent them in the City Council, the Vice-President of which body he had been for some time. At a most critical time in the history of our city, when a faithless official had looted the city treasury, Kaufman Hays was called upon to take his place. His financial genius enabled the city within a short time to satisfy its creditors.

"And as he attended to what he considered his duty in civic affairs, so he, as a matter of course, took active part in the upbuilding of his own people, the Jewish community of our city. He was likewise one of the pioneers of the Jewish Congregation, which he had joined in the very early days of his manhood. He not merely helped to build it up, but he was one of the strong pillars of the religious and benevolent work of the Jewish community.

"On every page of the history of the Jews of Cleveland are inscribed in indelible letters the names of Kaufman and Lizzie Hays. There was not a single phase in our Jewish life in which this worthy couple did not participate, in fact in many instances they were among the leaders of their people. In the annals of our Orphan Asylum their names are recorded among its strongest and stanchest supporters.

"The departure of our friend will leave a deep void in our community. Kaufman Hays will be sorely missed in our midst.

"And what shall I say to you, my dear friends, to you his children, and children's children. We mourn with you and deplore his loss. He was your pride. With the prophet of old you exclaim today: 'Fallen is the crown from our head.' He has left you the well-earned fruit of his labors—abundance of wealth. But he left you what is more precious than all the treasures on earth—he left you a good name, with which he is entering into life eternal.

"Dear departed brother, in the name of our community, in the name of our dear orphan children, to whom thou hast been a kind friend, I bid thee farewell. May the Father of the orphans receive thy soul in His kindness and grant thee among His sainted angels eternal bliss and peace. Amen."

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

During the past month Doctor Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, made visits to various cities in different parts of the country, with a view to hasten the creation of Social Service Committees in the several Districts.

Wheeling, West Virginia, was visited by Doctor Coffee on Friday evening and Sabbath morning, April 7 and 8. On both occasions he occupied the pulpit of Rabbi A. H. Silver, and early Sabbath morning he attended service at the Orthodox Synagogue. The Wheeling Social Service Committee consists of Brothers Leon Stein, Joseph H. Baer and Rabbi A. H. Silver. There is a splendid field for social endeavor in West Virginia because so little has been attempted. The Juvenile Court in Wheeling is but a year old, and other progressive social work is yet to be started. The local Social Service Committee will look after Jewish interests.

On Monday, April 10, Doctor Coffee was in Louisville, Ky., where he spent a day with active and interested members of the Order. He met a number of the leading workers, who discussed local problems with him. The situation in Louisville is simplified because Mr. Chas. Strull, the efficient head of the Associated Charities, is also a member of the Social Service Committee. The Big Brother movement is no untried experiment in Louisville, and the volunteers from the local Lodge should greatly strengthen this phase of philanthropic work. In the evening at the Y.M.H.A. he spoke on the Social Service Department, explaining the general principles underlying the work. He outlined the difference be tween "charity" as it is commonly practiced and "social service" which represents voluntary effort under proper direction to aid those who are not strong enough to assist themselves.

The following day he spent in Birmingham, Ala. As in most other southern cities, the Jewish population is not very large and does not grow in proportion to the natural increase of the city. An interesting conference attended by about thirty leading members of the Order was held. Judge Francis Murphy, of the Birmingham Juvenile Court, spoke after the remarks of Doctor Coffee. As a result of this conference, immediately steps were promised to inaugurate the Social Service Department at an early date. In the evening Doctor Coffee spoke on "Judaism and Social Service," under the auspices of the Y.M.H.A. During the afternoon the cornerstone of a new building had been set at Birmingham College, a sectarian institution, and the several speakers had emphasized that this is a "Christian" nation. In his address that evening Doctor Coffee urged the need of emphasizing the Jewish aspect of life. He said in part: "Our highest aim in America is not to become rich, but rather to enrich our country through patriotic and civic labors. The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith urges its members to be the most devoted American citizens and aid their less fortunate brethren to become self-supporting."

On Wednesday morning, April 12, Dr. Coffee reached New Orleans, where he remained for that day and the next. He was met by the local Rabbis, all of whom pledged their hearty support. So did many other prominent members of the Order. Here again the community is fortunate in having so earnest a worker as Julius Goldman as the head of the Jewish Charities. He is also a member of the Order. As in Louisville and Birmingham, so also in New Orleans Doctor Coffee spoke in the Y.M.H.A. Building on Wednesday evening, choosing as his theme, "What the B'nai B'rith Stands For." One great ideal which the Social Service Department has steadily in mind is to find employment for all worthy and deserving Israelites. While there is not as much industry in the South as other centers, nevertheless there are opportunities for Jewish people and the field should be most carefully covered. The question of race prejudice is a most vital problem, and the Jews can best minimize prejudice by living lives of honesty and probity. Above all else we must protect our good name. The poor should be assisted, not so much with small monthly pittances, as with friendly guidance and direction. In closing his address he referred to the work of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order, which fights every unjust attack upon our people.

The following noon a fairly large body of New Orleans Israelites gathered to hear Doctor Coffee speak on the practical problems connected with his department. All the men and women present pledged their hearty co-operation.

On Friday morning he reached Memphis, where he preached that night and Sabbath morning, as well in the pulpit of Rabbi W. H. Fineshriber. The Director met a number of prominent Memphis members of the Order, with whom he discussed their local problems at considerable length. Brother Geo. Ellman is the able superintendent of the Jewish Charities and also President of Memphis Lodge. Under his direction splendid results can surely be expected.

On Friday evening special stress in the sermon was laid upon the fact that there are hotels in Chicago which refuse admission to Jews throughout the winter, but gladly accept Jewish families from the South over the summer months, when the winter boarders are away from Chicago. Prominent Jews of Memphis are among those who visit such hotels. The sermon stressed the point, that self-respecting Jews who honor their people will avoid such hotels. While a hotel may admit or reject whom it wishes, Israelites proud of their heritage will only register at such places where no distinction is made as to creed and faith.

Three busy days were spent in Nashville, Tenn., commencing Thursday, April 27. In the afternoon Doctor Coffee was the guest at the Settlement House, and addressed the ladies on current topics of the day in the realm of Social Service. That night, Maimonides Lodge held a most enthusiastic rally. In his address explaining the work of the B'nai B'rith, the Social Service Director made clear that he expects Nashville to appoint an active committee of earnest workers who will make a thorough survey of Central Tennessee and do everything possible to advance Jewish interests.

Friday was devoted to visiting the local State institutions and meeting the institutional heads. That night, in the reform pulpit, Doctor Coffee analyzed the philosophy of the Social Service movement. Although it is supposed to be a modern idea, its roots trace back direct to the Old Testament. We Jews should be particularly proud that after four thousand years the ancient ideals of Israel are again being preached and practiced. The following morning he occupied the pulpit of the orthodox Synagogue, and explained the fine work which the immigrant Jews in this country are carrying on. He emphasized the fact that the B'nai B'rith stands on the broad platform of Judaism, welcoming members of all Congregations in Israel.

At the invitation of District No. 7, Doctor Coffee attended the Grand Lodge sessions on Sunday and Monday, April 30 and May 1, at Little Rock, Ark. This opportunity to meet delegates from all cities of the District was most helpful to the cause of Social Service. Conferences were held throughout both days with earnest and devoted members eager to introduce this Social Service work in their respective communities. Addressing the convention on Monday afternoon, he was privileged to address a most representative gathering of Southern Jewish people. Not only did he analyze the problem which the Social Service Department must meet, and which its members are well qualified to handle, but he further explained the various other activities which are being carried on by the Order. The attention of the audience was called to the attempted portrayal of the Crucifixion scene in the picture film entitled "The Mother and the Law." Owing to the efforts of the Anti-Defamation League the entire scene replete with objectionable features was ordered eliminated by the producer. He also discussed "The Merchant of Venice" and its potency to arouse prejudice and hatred against the Jew. Here again the Anti-Defamation League is successfully working to exclude this play from the high schools of America, as it is apparent that the average high school teacher, as well as the pupil, is not competent to grapple with its difficulties and the prejudice which results from it.

DEDICATION OF MEMORIAL TO HENRY GREENEBAUM.

District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., will dedicate a granite drinking fountain in the B'nai B'rith Cemetery of Chicago in honor and memory of the late Brother Henry Greenebaum, of Chicago, founder and first President of the District Grand Lodge, on Memorial Day, May 30. Rev. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch will deliver the memorial address. The committee having charge of the arrangements have provided for a special train of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, which will leave the Union Station, Canal and Adams streets, at 10 o'clock, returning at noon. All members of the Order and their families will be welcome to take part in the exercises.

THE CASE OF THE JEW AFTER THE WAR.

By Hon. Charles Nagel.

There is one thought as broad as its object is universal. That is the case of the Jew—unique, without parallel or compare in history. Confined to one country, he presents a cause for the consideration of every country. In this war—unless denied—he has taken his place under every flag, and he has fought with honor. He has accepted the political truth that when the life of a nation is in question, there is no time to quarrel about the right or wrong of the struggle. He has paid full measure for a right to full citizenship; but the measure of his reward is no more than the vague hope that somehow, somewhere his scattered people may be given the certificate and the guaranty of equal political dignity among men. Shall his just cause again be doomed to disappointment; or will the enlightened men and women of advanced nations insist that the end of this war—so calamitous in most respects—be glorified by the righting of a wrong, which is almost as universal as it is ancient?

Again, such a plan would be both altruistic and practically selfish. Without thought of political consequence, every free or liberal people must revolt at this race discrimination. The acceptance of this species of oppression is unendurable. But beyond that no nation or race can build successfully upon prejudice or arbitrary power. In the last analysis. the dominating people must pay tribute to relentless justice.

True, the Jew has found his permanent home in this country or that. With others he has shared the distinction and degradation; the joy and the sorrow. In some places, equality is his part; in others, humiliation. But with all his race has remained one. They suffered in common for so long a period, that now the fortunate ones in free countries cannot and will not abandon the less fortunate ones in oppressed countries. The Jews' cause alone is as universal as is the hope for freedom and progress. In the realization of that hope every civilized nation has a moral and a practical interest. Without appealing to loftier reason, every liberal country is concerned to remove unjust political and industrial pressure to induce migration. Every country desires to have its institutions accepted as something more and better than a mere refuge from intolerable conditions. It is the concern of every country, belligerent or neutral, to insist upon practical justice to a people who have been the historical victims of prejudice and caprice. Such an achievement would be accepted as one redeeming compensation for a conflict of unparalleled waste and grief. The problem is one of international justice and dignity. It is one that addresses itself to the serious and thoughtful consideration of enlightened men and women.

In order that a suggestion so full of possibility to the civilized world may not pass untried, is it not feasible that the question of the future treament of the Jew be presented to the Peace Conferences? If necessary, by a carefully selected body of men, who are themselves impressed with the gravity and the possibilities of the situation, and who will in turn know how to bring both condition and relief home to those who are charged with the duty of framing terms of permanent peace.

In the United States the importance of this question is no longer subject to argument. When we abrogated the Russian treaties, we made our answer. Our conduct may have been wise or unwise. The Jew may now see that, however marked his demonstration of power, his ultimate triumph was not, necessarily advanced. But that is beside the question. The problem is undeniably presented to all civilized peoples. It must be answered, and it must be answered right. We are profoundly and immediately interested. Our opinion has taken the form of conduct. We cannot retract. We must go forward. There is no better—perhaps no other way, than to take steps to have other nations join in the consideration and the decision of a question so fraught with consequence of political, industrial and social justice. There is no better time or occasion than when the nations meet to frame the terms of peace, whose essential binding force must always be toleration, dignity and right.—The American Leader.

JEWS IN FRENCH ARMY.

The following figures, culled from official statistics, indicate the conspicuous bravery of Jews serving in the French army: Killed and dead from wounds, 1,058; rewards for meritorious service on the battlefield as follows: Legion of Honor—Grand officer, 1; commander, 1; officers, 15; chevaliers, 126; military medal, 145; mentioned for bravery in orders of the day, 617; war cross, 254.

ORIENTAL JEWS PERSECUTED IN MEXICO.

During the month of March, Mr. V. Elnecave, a native of Constantinople, residing in Vera Cruz, Mexico, came to New York and lodged a complaint with the Federation of Oriental Jews of America to the effect that Jewish and other Ottoman subjects residing in Mexico were subjected to maltreatment and persecution at the hands of the ever-changing governments and officials in Mexico. He also stated that a few months ago two Oriental Jews were shot by Gen. Villa on some flimsy pretext. A few weeks ago an Ottoman Jew, Enriguo Haim, was unjustly charged with being a Zapatista and would have been executed if not for the intervention of a local influential man.

The Imperial Ottoman Government has no represenative in Mexico to look after the interests of its subjects and as a result of that they often find themselves in a predicament. The Federation appealed to the Department of State of the United States Government and received the following letter:

April 24, 1915.

Dr. Cyrus Adler,
356 Second Avenue,
New York City.

Sir:

The Department acknowledges the receipt of your letter of April 21, 1916, relative to the reported persecutions at Vera Cruz, Mexico, of Ottoman subjects of the Jewish faith.

In reply, you are informed that the American Consul at Vera Cruz has been instructed to exercise his unofficial good offices in behalf of Ottoman subjects in his district.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
For the Secretary of State,
(Signed) ALVEY A. ADEE,
Second Assistant Secretary.
From the Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

DISTRESS AMONGST JEWS IN THE ORIENT.

The President of the Order, Mr. Adolf Kraus, received the following letter from the Department of State, Washington:

"May 2, 1916.

Mr. Adolf Kraus,
Chicago, Ill.

Sir:

The Department is in receipt of a telegram from the American Charge d'Affaires at Constantinople, dated April 25, transmitting the following message for you:

'Relief urgently imperative for Jewish poor outside Palestine. Please have Jewish Committee and B'nai B'rith send all available funds. Miegs.'

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
For the Secretary of State:
ALVEY A. ADEE,

CAUTION.

Our friends in the interior towns are cautioned against an individual who represents himself as organizer for the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. He has thus far been traveling under the name of Louis Berger and has endeavored to operate in Central Washington. He also represents himself as manager of the "Montana Israelite" of Butte, Mont. Such a paper does not exist.

He is very heavy set, short neck, and wears about size forty-two suit, is round-shouldered, dark complexion, extra large head and sports a short black mustache. He wears spectacles and has pronounced Jewish features. He has an in-grown nail on his right thumb, which is quite noticeable. His age is about from fifty to fifty-five years.

I. J. ASCHEIM,
Secretary, D. G. L. No. 4, I. O. B. B.

HEINRICH HARBURGER.

Heinrich Harburger, who recently died at Munich, occupied the highest rank on the bench of all Jews in Germany. He was presiding judge of a division of the Bavarian supreme court. Born at Bayreuth in 1851, he entered service in 1879, and was appointed in 1912 to his last position. He was at the same time honorary professor of law and author of valuable legal works, which are considered authoritative on questions of international and constitutional law.

SOLOMON SCHWENGER.

We chronicle the death of Brother Schwenger on March 9, 1916. Mr. Schwenger was a prominent member of Gilead Lodge of Milwaukee since February 11, 1869, and held every office within the gift of the lodge and was for a period of 21 years, trustee of the Lodge which included the trusteeship of Spring Hill Cemetery. At various times he also represented Gilead Lodge at Grand Lodge conventions. In his death a deep loss is sustained not only by his family and friends, but the Jewish community at large.

THE KEHILLAH, XXIII

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

The reign of Joseph II, epoch-making, was not only for Austria, but for the Jews all over western Europe. His "Toleranzedikt" was issued January 2, 1782. A few weeks later, the third of February, Markgave Karl Friederich, of Baden, issued an order to his council, in which his officials were directed to submit a report how the position of the Jews could be improved by secular education, and by making them apply themselves to manual trade as was done in Austria. Similar orders were issued by the electors of Mayence and of the Palatinate. The intention of Joseph II was, however, not to treat the Jews as equals of their fellow citizens, but merely to improve their condition. Repeatedly he said that he did not desire to increase their number, not to put them on an equal footing with Christians. The main object was the principle of politics, to make useful subjects of them as it was called in the diplomatic language of that time. Nevertheless, his policy was a great progress, and repeatedly he speaks in the tone of the most earnest conviction that the Jews should be treated like human beings. The Austrian Emperor possesses an estate near the town of Goeding, in Moravia. There a brewery was established, which, like all brewing and distilling industries, was a privilege connected with the manor. A Jew was a bidder for a lease of this industry. The local administration of the imperial estate refused to give it to him, saying that Jews ought not to live in this place. The Emperior replied that he sees no reason why a Jew should not get this lease and if it is really true that in former years the Jews were expelled from Goeding, this was no reason why such law should be permanent, for after all the Jews are "Nebenmenschen," consumers, and if properly treated, useful to the state. It has been stated previously that the Emperor, when the Jews were conscripted declared, that their religious scruples should be respected as far as it was consistent with the demands of the service. Similar are the orders, repeatedly issued to the school authorities, to treat Jewish children with fairness, and to be polite to their parents, when they bring the children to school, because it is the will of the Emperor that school education, especially higher education, should be encouraged. The same view is expressed in a decision on the case of a Jewish student who applied for a scholarship. The local authorities refused to give it to him, declaring that a Jew had no claim on such distinction, but the Emperor decided to the contrary and expressly declared that he wished the Jews in every possible respect to be encouraged in their desire to obtain secular education.

While the Emperor's liberality went so far that he allowed Jewish children to cover their heads during school hours, which was done upon the petition presented by the Landrabbiner of Moravia, he also admonished Jewish parents not to dress their children so as to be distinguished from their classmates.

Of the law compelling Jews to adopt family names, mention has been made. The law, while of strictly administrative nature, undoubtedly was dictated by a desire to remove Jewish distinctness. Similar was the strict order, which prohibited all rabbinic jurisdiction. In this respect some explanation might be necessary. Some people make a great deal of the fact that in some mediaeval legislations the Jews are called citizens, in Latin "cives." This shows how superficial information will mistake historic fact This word, which indeed is found in some documents as early as the twelfth century, does not mean citizens in our sense of the word, but merely inhabitants and only in this respect we will find some early documents speaking of "cives," both Jews and Christians. Nor is it correct when some orators tell the wonderful tales of the position of the Jews in Spain and declare that we find Jewish prime ministers and the like, both in Arabic and Christian Spain. This is of course not true. We find Jews, just as we find them today, as bankers or as literary men occupying positions of considerable importance, but not in any sense in which public office of today is understood. The Jew was not considered part and parcel of the state. He was a nondescript alien. And he considered himself as such. It was, therefore, only consistent that in legal matters between Jew and Jew the rabbinical court was competent. I have in my possession the inventory of an estate of a [illegible] grandfather taken in 1758, and signed by the rabbi. This was the case all over Europe. Joseph II may have been the first to abolish this condition, because it was not in harmony with his idea of the power of the state. Repeatedly he warned the rabbis and the elders of the congregation not to meddle in such affairs unless they were called in the quality of arbitrators. The Jews of the olden type, and especially the rabbis, protested strongly against this measure, which they declared was contrary to their religion. In one respect they are right. The Schulchan Aruk actually declares that no Jew should carry his own legal matters before the secular court. Now this view has been given up bv the most orthodox of Eastern Europe. Up to 1908 Turkey still had such a legislation, and in Tunis under the French protectorate, the Jewish law is still valid as very likely is the case in Morocco. In Algeria and in Tripoli, in the latter country since its occupation by Italy, this principle has been given up, except in affairs arising from former conditions. The Emperor, while occasionally yielding to Jewish religious scruples, was in this respect noncommittal. A committee from Presburg called on him personally because the order was promulgated by the local authorities that all Jews must remove their beards. The Emperor declared to the committee: I intended it for your best, but as long as you consider it against your religion, I shall not insist on it, although I cannot understand why I find in Amsterdam such observant Jews, who do without a beard. To a committee from Moravia, headed by the Landrabbiner, who demanded that the order against the jurisdiction of the rabbis in secular matters be repealed, the emperor declared definitely, as he did also in cases of protest against the military conscription, that there was no possibility of his ever altering his views, and so it remained.

As a disciple of the Voltairean school, it was only natural that Joseph II should be opposed to forced baptism. Repeatedly he enjoined upon the authorities not to allow Jewish children to be baptized against the will of their parents, and in a humorous allusion he adds that it was far more important to have good Christians, than merely baptized Christians. In this respect, however, even the bigoted Maria Theresa demanded that the law be observed, although whenever a child was baptized, even against the will of the parents, the canon law remained valid. The autocratic principle that the monarch combines in himself the supreme wisdom, is found in all the orders issued by Joseph II. The liberal spirit in religious matters shows itself in places, where we would last of all expect it. In the district of Pardubitz, Bohemia, a number of peasants who were really Unitarians, declared that they would not go to the Catholic church any more, because they had become Jews. The Emperor replied that if this was the case they would have to accept Judaism, and to submit to circumcision, or else they would have to leave the country and go to Transylvania, where since the sixteenth century some tolerated congregations of Unitarians existed. At the same time he advises the authorities to apply to these people, "Vierundzwanzig auf den Hintern," because they talk of things that they do not understand. This is about the finest specimen of enlightened autocracy.

His real idea on the toleration of the Jews is seen in many orders regarding their number. In places where Jews have not been tolerated before, no Jews should be allowed to settle, and in places, where they had been settled from olden times, they should remain in the same number. Especially severe were the restrictions on the residence of Vienna, and the authorities are ordered to watch carefully over foreign Jews who come to the capital on business that they shall report to the police, and not stay longer than the time allotted to them. Contrary to Lessing's idea, who said that the rich Jew is not the better Jew, the Emperor, like all men of his type, including the rather antisemitically inclined Frederick the Great, declared that if a foreign Jew possessed ten thousand florins, and was investing them in an industrial or in an important commercial enterprise, he shall be allowed to settle. The same narrow spirit is found in regulations concerning the trade of the Jews. While agriculture is encouraged, they shall not be allowed to buy or lease land unless they work it with their own hands. At fair times they have a right to carry on an unrestricted trade, but in places like Styria from which they are excluded and where they are admitted only during fair time, they shall not be allowed to peddle at any other time. A very important part, as already has been said in previous articles, the Jews played in the exploitation of the tobacco monopoly. It seems that the trade, both wholesale and retail, was largely in the hands of the Jews, but it is ordered that, while Jewish tobacco dealers are permitted to live in cities from which otherwise they are excluded, they shall not be allowed to engage in any other business besides tobacco. In one respect Joseph II deserves special admiration. While raised in the traditions of autocracy and himself a believer in the divine commission of kings, he had considerable historic insight. At various times the Catholic clergy had created trouble for Jewish literature. This is an old story, and may be traced back to the thirteenth century, if not still farther. So under Joseph II an attempt was made to suppress the Talmud or to subject it to another still stricter censorship than the one decreed by the council of Trent in the sixteenth century. Joseph refused to act on this proposition. He repeatedly gave privileges to Jewish printers in Galicia, and in Prague, because in the interest of his protectionist policy he desired that Jewish books should be printed in Austria so that the money should not be sent to foreign countries. Real wisdom and broadmindedness, the Emperor showed in a case that was submitted to him by the Jesuits of Linz, who had found in their convent a book which contained polemics against Christianity and was written by Rabbi Samuel of Morocco. The Emperior refused to act on the suggestion that Jewish books inimical to Christianity should be suppressed, for, said he, Jews of our day can no more be held responsible for what a Jew has written centuries ago, than Chsistians would care to be bear the responsibility for what a Christian had written in times past.

A highly interesting case of a conflict between censors is reported from the year 1786. The matter throws such an interesting light on the cultural conditions of the Jews of that time, that it is well worth reporting the case in detail. A young man in Nikolsburg was possessed by a demon. This at least was the belief of the people. The young man claimed that the spirit of someone who had been killed by a Jew had passed into his body and was constantly complaining about the torments that he had to suffer until he would be delivered. The spirit talked in the most barbarous Hebrew, and as the young man was entirely unlearned, this was considered the best proof that it was not he but the demon in him who talked in this way. Finally the rabbis decided on an exorcism. The young man was brought into the synagogue, and there, after the recital of selected chapters from the Psalms, and after strong exhortations addressed to the demon by the aged rabbi, Gerson Chajoth (1780-1789), the demon left the young man, escaping through the open window, and those close to him saw an indenture in one of his fingers through which the demon evidently had left the body. Rabbi Abraham Trebitsch, the clerk of the Landrabbinate, described the event quite circumstantially in two pamphlets, published both in Hebrew and Yiddish. The pamphlets seem to have been printed in Bruenn, although they do not bear any place of publication on the title page. The permission of the censor, however, was obtained in Vienna, and the censor of Bruenn considered himself slighted. It is quite likely that he had refused permission when he was asked to give it, or that he was supposed not to give it. At all events the highest censor declared that such books which were apt to strengthen the superstition of the Jews should not be printed in the future. That similar cases did happen quite often in the Roman Catholic church and this church possesses a ritual especially adapted for the exorcisism of demons, did not seem to occur to the authorities of the Roman Catholic state. "The case is altered quoth Plowden." It is interesting to note that the great Jewish bibliographer, Moritz Steinschneider, declares that the story of such a pamphlet is in itself a ghost story. He had not seen the book, and believed that a book that he had never seen did not exist. A similar statement is made by him in reference to an interesting Passover Haggadah, published in Prague 1526, which is the first illustrated edition of this popular ritual. In this Haggadah somebody allowed himself the joke to put the remark under the ritual of the bitter herbs, saying that it is customary in Israel when one says "these bitter herbs," he shall point to his wife. Steinschneider also says that such a Haggadah does not exist, but it does exist, and a copy of this very beautiful piece of printer's art is found in the library of the Jewish Theological Seminary of New York. This remark is merely made incidentally to prove how even the greatest scholars cannot always be depended on in every detail. Another interesting fact is that a similar exorcism had taken place in the city of Nickolsburg nearly a century previously, in 1693. The man who performed that exorcism was a rabbi of Prague, curiously enough, bearing the same name as the great Jewish emancipator, Moses Ben Mendel. The latter book bears the recommendation of the then Landrabbiner, David Oppenheimer, and the exorcism of 1795 is attested to by the Rabbinate of Nickolsburg, of which the head was the above named Gerson Chajoth, and the youngest member of which was Marcus Benedict, one of the leaders of orthodoxy in the battle against reform in the beginning of the nineteenth century, who succeeded to the Landrabbinate November 4, 1789, a few months after the death of Gerson Chajoth. A few weeks later, February 20, 1790, Emperor Joseph died in the prime of manhood, a victim of his devotion to duty. Rabbi Marcus Benedict, therefore, still belongs to the age of "enlightenment," though personally he bitterly antagonized it. He held his office for nearly forty years, up to his death, August 13, 1829. He was the last representative of old-fashioned Judaism, though it was his lot to fight the growing spirit of rebellion against the old order, not merely in the city of Hamburg, which was so remote that no danger of contagion existed for his own flock, but even in the city of Vienna, which had so many relations to Nikolsburg, and where much to the chagrin of Rabbi Benedict, a choir, a German sermon, and a robe for the minister were introduced in 1826.

THE JEWS AND THE WAR.

The facts which transpired at a recent meeting in Edinburgh in aid of the Jews, regarding the share which Jews all over the world are taking in the present war, are full of interest. The meeting, which was presided over by Sir Colin G. MacRae, was in aid of the Jewish people. In his opening remarks Sir Colin dwelt upon the debt which the world owed to the Jews for the many great qualities they had contributed to civilization in the past. The report showed that 750,000 Jews in the field, and that of these 600,000 were engaged in the war as soldiers were in the forces of the Allies.

These figures might not, in themselves, be especially striking, or especially indicative of Jewish patriotism, if it were not for the facts with which they are supplemented. In all the belligerent countries, with the exception of the United Kingdom, the Jew, like the rest of his fellow citizens, would have no option in the matter of obeying the summons to the colors. The fact of his being in the army of any one country in large numbers would therefore indicate nothing beyond this, that there was a considerable Jewish population in that country. All reports available, however, go to show that not only has the Jew shown no desire to shirk his duty, but that, by his eagerness and bravery, he has shown a devotion to the interests of his adopted country beyond praise. This is all the more remarkable inasmuch as the Jew, in Russia, for instance, has been uniformly treated with a harshness many would be glad to forget; whilst in France anti-Semitism is, or at any rate was until the outbreak of the war, a definite political movement. In the United Kingdom, of course, the loyalty of the Jew has been one of the most remarkable of the many remarkable facts which the present war has revealed. Speaking at Liverpool in the early days of the struggle, a prominent Jewish pastor, in urging loyalty on the part of the Jews to the British Empire, dwelt upon what the Jews owed to the United Kingdom. Many of us, he said, or our fathers, hailed from lands where we were denied the elemental rights of a human being. Here we found a home, and freedom, and all avenues of life and livelihood open to us. It is for us to prove that we can also give, and make sacrifices where necessary.

It is just this that the Jew has proved in the present war, not only in the United Kingdom, where he has ranked on a level with any other of his fellow citizens, and where men of his race and religion have occupied the highest offices in the land, but in other lands also, where alike rights and office were denied him.—Christian Science Monitor.

JEWISH SETTLEMENTS IN SIBERIA.

A group of Jews who had settled in Siberia have petitioned the government to place at its disposal a tract of land to enable them to establish an agricultural colony. In their petition they dwelt on the fact that the Jewish population of Siberia has increased substantially since the issue of Prince Tcherbatoff's domicile circular.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, March 21, 1916.

The loss of Joseph Jacobs must still be keenly felt by American Jews; it may interest them, therefore, to hear that an appropriate memorial meeting, appropriately addressed, was held in London recently. Joseph Jacobs was one of the moving spirits in establishing the Jewish Historical Society of England, and it was only fitting, therefore, that the Society should meet specially to do honor to his memory. It was a goodly gathering, and the speaker of the evening was Israel Zangwill, friend and colleague of the dead writer. No more fitting personality could have been chosen for the occasion; no more fitting address could have been delivered. For Zangwill was at his best. The feeling for his friend was noticeably keen; but his natural aptitude for original phrasing and bon mots could not but manifest itself. We always expect good things from Zangwill; on that evening we were pleased more than ever. As somebody said, it was worth dying to have so beautiful a tribute to one's memory. Jacobs would assuredly have wished for none better; and those who are fortunate enough to read the address in full when it is published in the Transactions of the Jewish Historical Society will agree that the tribute was worthy of the original.

One of the results of the war already manifest is a tendency for religions to recognize that they have much in common in religion. In recent years, so many people must have felt religion was pushed into the background by the clash of religions. Men talked of Churches and "doxies"; they did not see the wood for the trees. The war, as in so many other things, has shaken them up a bit. So in England we get a movement towards Christian unity. True, for the present it is an effort to bridge over the gulf only between the Anglican Church and the English Free Churches. But it is something to hear of this effort. We Jews who stand for a belief in the Messianic Age "when the Lord shall be one and his name one," when all the children of men will be united in his service—we Jews cannot but welcome this small sprout of unity.

In Anglo-Jewry there are signs of unrest. In our judgment the war has nothing to do with it; the war has merely provided the occasion for its expression. It has been said that unrest is healthy; for unrest produces criticism, and criticism stirs up the smugly satisfied. Then changes may come, and changes are often healthy. Anyway, there is a freshness about them as of the east wind. One must interpret the movement in this way. In the first place it hails from the East of London. In the second, it is dissatisfied with the Communal leaders; and believing in its own capacity to do things and do them well, it is desirous of going ahead. Given a democratic community such phenomena must be borne. Who exactly the people were who first gave expression to this unrest is not at present clear. Nor does it matter. The exact date of its expression is similarly wrapped in mystery as yet. But one fine day we in London Jewry heard of a National Union for Jewish Rights. Certainly the title was impressive. Those who have studied the history of popular movements are aware that at the beginning of their careers, when their power is as yet undefined, their titles rather indicate wishes than actualities. Think of the English Trade Union Movement in its early days, with its Grand National Consolidated Workers' Associations, and such like descriptions. So, too, the National Union for Jewish Rights no doubt expressed in its name the hopes of its promotors. We thought nothing more about it. Many such societies spring up from time to time, some even light up the horizon like a rocket; most fall into obscurity. And there was the less reason to think this effort serious, as one brought to mind the standing joke, often heard in the East End of London, of a local speaker at a meeting proclaiming to the world: "Vee vont a Society! Vot is a Society? Not matter vot is a Society, vee vant a Society!"

This time, however, it was serious. Have not most big movements commenced in the same way? No bigger at first than a man's hand, they have grown until they become forces of first rate magnitude, leaving their impress on the world's history. We shall wish for nothing better than that a similar lot may be in store for the National Union for Jewish Rights. It, too, came stealthily and we thought it of no consequence. But lo! before long it had all the communal leaders at its feet—or rather its head. For we saw things too wonderful for us. This society of what appeared to be East End Jews, got as its president Mr. Lucien Wolf. Now it must be explained that, so far as one can gather, Mr. Wolf was somehow a mysterious link with a more hoary and worshipful body—the Conjoint Committee; and that his presidency of the Union was, in the manner of speaking, a link between the old and the new, or, if you will, between the west and the east.

Now the Conjoint Committee is a most worthy and estimable body, which has done good work in the past, no doubt, and may do more in the future. But it has an air of secrecy about it. No one quite knows who the members are; perhaps many people don't care. No one quite knows what its policy is. But it asks to be taken on trust, pointing to the benevolent gentlemen connected with it. Not a word can be said against these same gentlemen; on the contrary, a great deal of praise is their due. We respect them all; some we love, for they are essentially loveable. But all that is no reason for making a hole-and- corner affair of the Conjoint Committee. Why Conjoint Committee? it may be asked. Thereby hangs a tale.

In olden days when Anglo-Jewry was small, and its political rights smaller, a representative body for intercourse with the outside world was a boon and a blessing. And, practical people as the fathers of English Jewry were, they instituted the Board of Deputies. The Board did excellent work; it has won for itself many a golden passage in the pages of Anglo-Jewish history. But like Peter Pan it refused to grow up. An unkind critic might also say that, on the contrary, it became aged and feeble. Be that as it may, the fact is that for a long time the Board of Deputies looked after Jewish interests in what may conveniently be styled the sphere of foreign politics. In the process of time, however, another very estimable and useful institution grew up in England, namely, the Anglo-Jewish Association. For one piece of its work alone, perhaps the most important, it deserves the highest praise and the largest support. It planted Jewish schools in dark places; it brought the light of knowledge to many thousands of children in Turkey, in Egypt, in India, where, but for the Association's beneficent activities, no schools would have been possible. Now the nature of this work made it necessary for the Anglo-Jewish Association to enter into communication with the Foreign Office and with Ambassadors. Here then it poached on the preserves of the Board of Deputies. To cut a long story short, a compromise between the two bodies was arrived at, and a Conjoint Committee appointed, one half by the Board and the other by the Anglo-Jewish Association, and this committee took on itself to look after the interests of Jews in what we have already termed "the sphere of foreign politics."

Enter on the scene the National Union for Jewish Rights. If this was a large body, it could not be passed over. Besides, it might do the wrong thing; it might make mistakes. So the Conjoint Committee, on the lines of the old copybook motto that discretion is the better part of valor, showed the new union a most friendly countenance. Mr. Lucien Wolf thus became its president, and at its last meeting only a week ago, Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Claude Montefiore and other prominent English Jews, gave the Union its blessing.

What does the Union desire? That Jews should receive equal rights with their fellow citizens in all the lands of their sojourning, where at present they are without them. No specific country is mentioned; the request is a universal one and extends equally to all countries where the elementary rights of citizenship are withheld from men because of their race or creed. No one—we will not say no Jew, because this matter it one of human and humanitarian interest—no one cannot but give support to the demand. And when the great settlement comes, when small nations are given a chance of developing their national characteristics, it is to be hoped that the Jews, too, may receive what after all is the due of all citizens in all lands—equal political liberty for all. The National Union for Jewish Rights may be thus a landmark in Anglo-Jewish history, for in the first place if it achieves its goal it will have done exceedingly well; and in the second place, it has stirred up the conservative forces in Anglo-Jewry out of their lethargy. There is only one danger. The National Union for Jewish Rights may be "scotched" by the Joint Committee. At present, however, it is perhaps unkind to suggest this. Let us be optimists.

If this story is pleasant, we have another to tell which is exceedingly disappointing. In a few words it is this: Quite recently, as everyone knows, who reads English newspapers, an Act was passed in this country to recruit all unmarried men, and that—as would be expected in a democratic country like ours—provision was made for those who had conscientious objection to have their objections heard by local tribunals. Those who are acquainted with the political life and ideals of England will notice two things in this connection. First, that when such an act as this is passed, regard is had to people with a conscience. Secondly, that when you require a body to examine into the matter you have recourse to local people. All this is introductory, but is necessary for the unfolding of the story.

The Reader of the Princes Road Synagogue in Liverpool is the Rev. John Harris. That gentleman appears to have very strong views against war, and what man who is right-thinking has not? Mr. John Harris felt so keenly on the subject that he let it be known that he would do his utmost to assist all Jews who for conscience sake were appealing to the local tribunals. Be it noted, he was not breaking the law. On the contrary, he was availing himself—and not for himself, but for others—of a piece of machinery which the law had provided. He was not acting contrary to any ethical teaching. On the contrary, in helping others he was showing an excellent example. It requires no great insight to realize that it needs some moral courage to stand out and meet the tribunals. Sum it all up, and you come to the conclusion —there is no other—that Mr. Harris was not doing wrong. You may think him wrong-headed; you may regard him as a crank. But he was guilty of no crime. It anything, he was to be admired for standing up for what he thought to be the truth, though disagreeing from him. An English gentleman would admire him though disagreeing from him. He would not condemn him; he certainly would not punish him. Why should he? He had done nothing worthy of punishment.

When, however, the Wardens of the Synagogue heard of Mr. Harris' views, they summoned him to their presence—their Reader of twenty-one years' faithful service—and asked him to recant. Recant he would not. So they sent him a cheque and sacked him on the spot! Words fail one to describe such injustice adequately. If he had done anything un-English or unpatriotic, there would have been nothing to say. But he just stood up like a man for opinions he held to be just. One may differ from his views and the majority of English Jews do differ; but how can one do aught else but admire him? And what is one to say of a body of responsible Jews who take precipitate action such as this—after all, Mr. Harris had as yet done nothing —on the mere expression of an opinion? Have Jews not suffered abundantly for conscience sake that they should themselves persecute others who stand up for the truth within them? Only slave-souls could act so, and moreover take advantage of a man who is their paid servant. The incident has tested the position of the Jewish Minister in England; it has tested and characterized it. How are men to lead who know they are muzzled? Spiritual guides, forsooth! That is why we have so few men of spirit in the Jewish Ministry. The pay is poor, judged by any test; and if the minister does not follow the crowd, he is unsafe. It is good to think that despite these facts the Anglo-Jewish Ministry contains a man like John Harris.

As yet, the members of the congregation have not had an opportunity of expressing their views on the whole business. It will be interesting to know what they think. The Wardens of the congregation may have been hasty in their judgment; there will be no such excuse for the congregation.

The first Lodge of England has now appointed a successor to Brother Alfred Benjamin in the office of Honorary General Secretary, and Brother Paul Goodman has been chosen. He himself will be the first to admit that he has an excellent model to follow and we none of us doubt that he will be a worthy successor to the last General Secretary. The times in which we are living call for alertness and energy, and Brother Goodman has both. We congratulate him on his appointment and wish him God-speed in the work he has undertaken.

London, April 16, 1916.

In all the belligerent countries the war conditions have engendered much social activity. Many people of both sexes who had time hanging on their hands in the piping times of peace are now up and doing. The young men are soldiers; the women and the men beyond military age are active at home. Obviously an upheaval such as that brought about by war calls for many helping hands. In all countries one knows there are failures. There are those who come forward attracted by the excitement and the novelty, who, soon disappointed, drop away. But the majority remain on, and one often wonders in admiration at what men and women—but chiefly women—have achieved. We know of a lady who gives up three nights a week to minister to the needs of munition workers in the way of refreshment and amusement. All night through this lady with many others is on duty, and cases of this kind may be multiplied. Think of the nurses, think of the voluntary cooks, think of the women who are organized to come at a moment's notice for all manner of odd jobs that need attention. It is a splendid spirit; and it is found in all the countries at war.

The spirit finds its expansion also in doing everything possible for the soldiers during their spare time. In all parts of London hostels are to be found where soldiers and sailors may find rest, warmth, refreshment and recreation. The Y. M. C. A. gave the impetus to this movement, and the institution has done splendid work. Those who participate give their assistance voluntarily, and the highest ladies in the land may be found working together, vieing with each other to put forth their best in the service of others.

Up to the present there has not been a specifically Jewish hotel of this kind. But there is one now. The premises of the West Central Jewish Working Men's Club has been fitted up for the purpose, and an admirable hostel it will make. It is to be open day and night; day and night voluntary helpers will be in attendance to minister to the wants of the Jewish soldiers and sailors. Here men will be able to obtain food, to read the papers, to have a smoke or to engage in a game of billiards. Those who wish it will also be put up for the night. On Passover there was a Seder service and the old world melodies must have stirred many an old chord and brought to mind memories long dormant. The hotel was formally opened last week by the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief of the London District whose warm tribute to the Jews was obviously heartfelt. "What Jews had done in this great war would be inscribed in the future in golden letters in a great book." It is of interest to note that practically all the ladies who were asked to give their assistance in working the hostel accepted the invitation right away.

Special Passover leave was granted to all Jewish soldiers in the United Kingdom, and we doubt not but that those who were far from their own homes were accommodated somewhere for the Festival. Was there not, on the front page of The Times one day last week, an advertisement offering hospitality to a Jewish soldier in a Jewish family for the Passover? Moreover, those Jewish recruits for whom the date of presenting themselves fell within the Passover week have been given leave to postpone the date until after the Festival.

If helping those who cannot help themselves is a great Mitzvah, then great indeed is the merit of those whose special care is for the interned civilians in our midst. A committee was established for the purpose of providing Kosher Food for interned Jews, and the impetus for the work came from the First Lodge of England. Of the Jews interned at Douglas in the Isle of Man a goodly number require Kosher food, and the committee has made all arrangements to satisfy their needs. Now, at the Passover season, Matzot are, of course, provided, and Brother J. Greenbaum, who is a keen worker on this special committee, went himself to Douglas to confer with the men on the spot as to their requirements, and also with the authorities. For the latter he has nothing but praise. The Home Office welcomed his going to Douglas and gave him every possible facility. And as for the Camp Commandant, everybody who has come into contact with him speaks of him in the highest terms. He is specially interested in Jews, and his wards are more than grateful to him. He was kindness itself to Brother Greenbaum, and after all the arrangements had been made, wrote specially to Brother Greenbaum in London, urging him to be sure and send the Matzot and the wine and the rest in good time, as he was anxious that every-

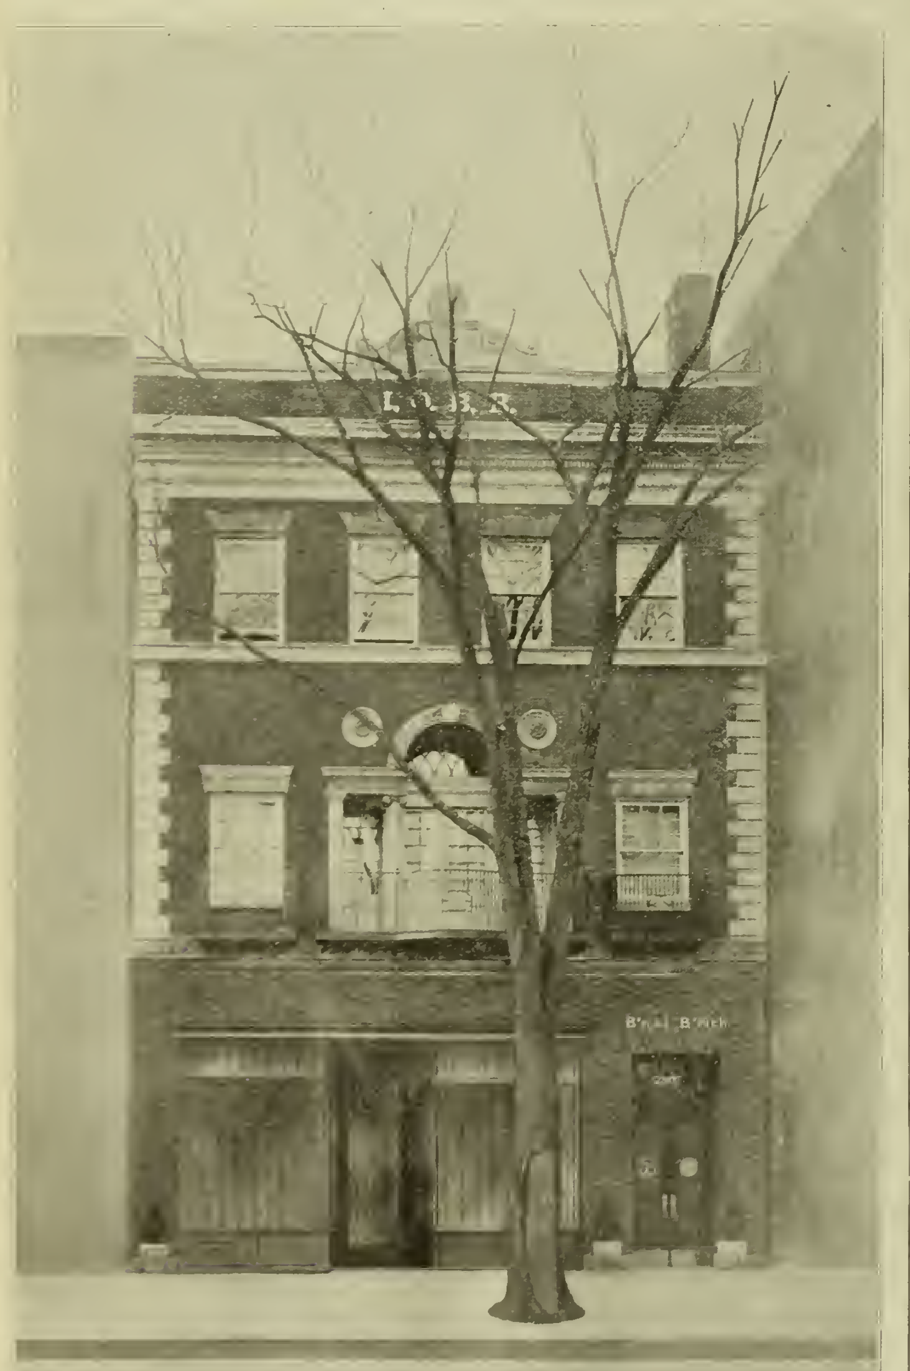
Dedication of District No. 1 B'nai B'rith Building, New York City



Sunday, April 6, witnessed the dedication of the new B'nai B'rith headquarters, which ushers in a new era for the Metropolitan lodges and District No. 1 generally. The following brethren participated in the impressive dedicatory exercises: President A. K. Cohen, Past-President Herman Asher, Marcus M. Marks, President Borough of Manhattan, representing the city; Otto Irving Wise, Past-President of District No. 4; Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee; Rabbi H. S. Goldstein; Vice-President Joseph Rosenzweig and Rabbi Joel Blau. The headquarters were beautifully decorated for the occasion.

President Abraham K. Cohen, who presided over the meeting, welcomed the brothers to the new headquarters and expressed the hope that the new B'nai B'rith Home would be the means of bringing about a still more cordial relationship between the various members in District No. 1. He also expressed the hope that visiting brothers from other Districts who come to New York would visit the headquarters where they would always be made welcome.

Brother Herman Asher, Past President of the District and Chairman of the Committee on B'nai B'rith Headquarters, in handing over a golden key of the Headquarters Building to President Cohen, said: "May these doors be opened to usher in a new growth and a new prosperity to the District and the Order. May these walls be ever filled with a spirit of zeal for the nation's good, for Israel's good and to the glory of Almighty God." President Cohen, in accepting the key, expressed his thanks to Brothers Asher, William H. Silk, Myer L. Victorine and the other brothers who for weeks were active in fitting up the lodge rooms and the club rooms. He [illegible] the members of the Committee on Headquarters on the good [illegible] showed in the decorations and [illegible] which made the lodge [illegible] of the most beautiful lodge [illegible] city of New York.

[illegible] Marcus M. Marks, of the Borough of Manhattan, who represented the municipality on the occasion, delivered a very interesting address on the service which the Order has rendered to the cause of benevolence and patriotism. He dwelt particularly upon the noble purpose of the Order. President Marks said that in his department which has over two thousand city employees he organized a benevolent organization after the plan suggested to him by the work of the Order when he was active in the District as a member of the Order. He also commended the patriotic spirit which always pervades the B'nai B'rith lodge meetings.

Bro. Otto Irving Wise, Past President of District No. 1, while visiting New York City, was invited to deliver an address on the occasion and spoke very eloquently of the work of the Order and called upon the young men to emulate the worthy example of their elders in giving the best that is in them to the great cause which the Independent Order B'nai Brith represents.

Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, spoke on the great charities of Greater New York, which he said were the inspiration and the pattern to all the great Jewish charities throughout the land. He also referred to the B'nai B'rith charities in the early history of the Order as having inspired many of the benevolent undertakings in the cause of humanity.

First Vice-President Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, pointed out the duty of every member of the Order as a Jew and as a member of our great fraternity to so live as to be worthy of recognition as a model citizen. "Important as our charities are, equally important is right living as Jews and as citizens," he said.

The program closed with a beautiful prayer by Bro. Rev. Dr. Joel Blau, of Zion Lodge.

The invocation which was a prayer for universal peace was delivered by Bro. Rev. Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein, a member of the General Committee.

BETH ZUR LODGE, MOBILE, ALA.

It is perhaps quite unusual for a B'nai B'rith lodge to adopt resolutions, paying tribute to the memory of a local character, not of the Jewish faith, and therefore, of course, not a member of the Order.

The tribute recorded below was unanimouly adopted by Beth Zur Lodge No. 84, of Mobile, Ala., on the death of Captain Peter Francis Alba, of that city, because during his lifetime, while at all times a consistent Catholic churchman, his good works and his charities were distributed without regard to race or creed. He was a special admirer of the B'nai B'rith Order, and when Beth Zur Lodge built its new hall, he asked the privilege of being allowed to donate valuable furniture in its furnishings.

"A Tribute to the Memory of
CAPTAIN PETER FRANCIS ALBA,
Adopted by Beth Zur Lodge No. 84, 1. O. B. B., of Mobile, Ala.

Beth Zur (House of Rock) Lodge No. 84, of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, desires to record in its archives, this memorial and tribute, to honor the memory of a man, not of Jewish faith, who, in his lifetime, stood for, advocated and demonstrated those principles which form the foundation upon which the Order of B'nai B'rith rests—and which are "Benevolence and Justice for all Mankind."

No eulogy can better speak our sentiments and feelings regarding our dear, departed friend, Captain Alba, than the poem from which we here quote:

"I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellowmen."

"The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great wakening light
And show'd the names whom love of God had bless'd,
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest."

Peter Francis Alba loved his fellowman—and we pray that the spiritual reward due such a humanitarian may be granted unto him by the Almighty One above, the Father of all men.

COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH.

Covenant Lodge No. 569, of Duluth, Minn., staged a mock trial as the principal feature of the third monthly "open house" entertainment arranged for its members and their friends in the Temple Emanuel vestry rooms on April 11, 1916.

Dr. Maurice Lefkovits of Temple Emanuel acted as judge of the court and the prosecution was in charge of Mr. A. B. Kapplin, president of the lodge, and Charles Rosenfeld. Various charges were prepared against prominent members of the lodge and the trial followed exactly the procedure of the criminal court.

Preceding the trial, Mrs. Moses Cook and A. B. Kapplin read papers on the subject, "What Can We Do to Controvert the Popular Errors About the Jews?"

A bridge contest followed the entertainment, during which the ladies of the lodge served luncheon.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., is planning a gala day on the occasion of a class initiation and banquet Wednesday evening, May 10.

Brother B. J. Samuels of Chicago, President of the District, will be the guest of honor on the occasion, and Brother H. D. Frankel of St. Paul, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District, will also grace the occasion with his presence.

A class of 20 candidates has been secured by the Propaganda Committee of the Lodge, and the degree team, with Brother Charles E. Oreckovsky at its head, will exemplify the ritualistic work.

The Committee having charge of the affair is planning to entertain the visiting Grand Lodge officers during the day with a trip over the boulevard system to the "Model City."

LONDON LODGE, LONDON, ENG.

The first lodge of England, London Lodge No. 663, will confine the work of its new Jewish social service bureau to men only, leaving work among women in the hands of the Union of Jewish Women. The B'nai B'rith bureau is out to train and supply honorary workers for communal institutions and appeals to Jews with leisure and good will to come forward and offer their services. There is a bigger shortage of willing workers of this kind than ever in the ranks of Anglo-Judaism. Of course, the appeal is to men of non-military age or men otherwise ineligible for military service.

ZION LODGE, NEW YORK.

Zion Lodge No. 2, which through the courtesy of Brother Sol Sulzberger, President of Temple Beth-El, has been meeting for a year in the vestry room of that temple, corner 76th street and Fifth avenue, held its first meeting in the new headquarters Thursday, April 20. The meeting was unusually well attended. A number of propositions were received. The candidates will be initiated at its next meeting. Vice-President of the Lodge, Brother Bernard M. Kaplan, presided in the absence of Brother Dr. Richard Stern. After the meeting of Zion Lodge the brothers attended in a body the meeting of Jordan Lodge No. 15, and witnessed a very interesting ceremony, the installation of officers of the Daughters of B'nai B'rith, an auxiliary of Jordan Lodge. Brother Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, President, assisted by the other officers of the Lodge, conducted the ceremony.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

On Monday evening, April 24, 1916, on account of the holiday, Minneapolis Lodge No. 271 of Minneapolis dispensed with the holding of their regular business meeting, but availed themselves of the use of their hall by holding a symposium on the "Jewish Conference and Congress." Mr. Gustavus Loevinger, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, presided, and explained the purpose and the steps leading up to the calling of the Conference held at Philadelphia last month, giving his impression gathered while attending as a delegate at Philadelphia from St. Paul. Mr. Abe M. Calmenson, the other delegate from St. Paul discussed the program adopted by the conference. Dr. I. L. Rypins discussed the Congress question from the anti-Zionistic standpoint. The delegates to the conference from Minneapolis were expected to give their impressions of the Conference, but unfrotunately were not able to appear. The meeting closed with an open discussion of the question by those present.

OAKLAND, CAL.

On Tuesday evening, April 11, the official Degree Team of the Committee of Fifty, representing the San Francisco Lodges, initiated a class of 150 candidates in Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal. It was the first time in the history of the lodge that the Degree Team of San Francisco officiated.

Following the ceremonies, interesting stereoptican slides were shown and to complete the enjoyable event a musicale was given. Mr. Lucius L. Solomons, First Vice-President of the Order, delivered an inspiring address, dwelling on the importance of B'nai B'rith work.

IBN GABIROL LODGE OF PITTSBURGH.

On May 1, Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114, held its first meeting in its new quarters. The event signalized the beginning of a series of lodge activities unparalleled in the history of the lodge.

The lodge utilized its first meeting in its new home for the purpose of a general reunion of its members and their friends, and an elaborate and interesting program of musical numbers and addresses was carried out.

ALLIES' ECONOMIC SCHEMES AND THE JEWS.

The question of the status of foreign Jewish companies of Allied countries in Russia came before the government in connection with the schemes of the Allies for economic co-operation against the common foe. The Premier came to the conclusion that, desirable though the old restrictions were, he preferred to consult the Ministry of Commerce on the matter in view of the necessity of developing the commerce of the Empire and making good the losses sustained during the war. As far as Russo-Jewish companies producing articles useful for the defense are concerned, it was resolved by the Cabinet to permit them to acquire small tracts of land in the provinces to the East of Moscow and in Siberia, with the exception of Amur.

JEWISH PUBLICATION SOCIETY OF AMERICA.

The annual meeting of the Jewish Publication Society will be held on Sunday evening, May 7, 1916, at Dropsie College, Philadelphia. Mr. Jacob H. Schiff of New York will deliver an address.

The Board of Trustees announce that in time for the Jewish New Year the Society will send to each one of its members a copy of the first edition of the new English Translation of the Bible.

The American Jewish Year Book will be sent to the members in September, when will follow a second volume of Dubnow's authoritative "History of the Jews of Russia and Poland."

B'nai B'rith of Cleveland

Father and Son Day.

On Sunday night, April 16, 1916, Cleveland Lodge No. 16 entertained the Governor of the State and the Mayor of the city.

Dinner preceded oratory and music, which in turn was followed by dancing. The Lodge room was filled during the after-dinner speeches, the occasion being father and son day, the speakers dwelling upon that subject at considerable length.

President William R. Weidenthal, of Cleveland Lodge, was the toastmaster, and he first introduced Governor Frank B. Willis, who had made a special trip from Columbus to Cleveland to accept the Lodge's hospitality. In the course of his talk the Governor, in a burst of eloquence, defined his attitude on the Mexican situation, and it was received with tremendous applause.

Much of his talk was given over to father and son, and the Governor gave some of his own experiences with his farmer father, from the incidents on the ball field to the usual father and son woodshed session.

He spoke beautifully of the B'nai B'rith Order and its objects, of the philanthropic institutions it supports throughout the world and of its unselfishness and altruism. The Governor dwelt at length on the I. O. B. B. motto, "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony," explained and defined its significance, and spoke of the social justice feature of the Order.

Governor Willis said, among other things:

"In some countries, boasting of a pretended civilization, men are yet persecuted because of their religion. Notwithstanding their patient, law-abiding virtues in time of peace and their heroic self-sacrifice in time of war, they are hounded and maltreated, robbed and pillaged, insulted and outraged, all because they desire the simple privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Such monstrous tyranny dares not to raise its horrid head in this country, where men inhale the spirit of freedom with the air they breathe.

"While other nations wage wars of conquest, let us maintain a strict neutrality. The United States must play no favorites, but treat all belligerent nations in the world war exactly alike. I do not mean to criticise or complain, and yet I but express regret that circumstances are such as to make our nation indirectly a part of this world riot of passion.

"Under the rules of established custom and international law a neutral nation has the undoubted legal right to manufacture and sell munitions of war to belligerents; whether we have a moral right so to do is another question.

"We supplied the unspeakable bandit Villa with arms and munitions; we had the legal right to do so. But those weapons of destruction are now turned against us and American soldiers must die on the deserts of Mexico, because we chose to stand on our legal rights rather than be governed by the dictates of conscience.

"We would that our nation's prosperity might not be dependent upon the woes of our sister nations human blood is too costly a lubricant for the wheels of industry."

Mayor Harry L. Davis also touched upon his own "father and son" experiences while a lad in Newburg, and devoted most of his address to the coming election for a bond issue for a public hall.

The last speaker was Mr. A. D. Weise, assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who told of the start of the "fathers and sons" movement in Cleveland.

Miss Mabel Fishel made a hit singing several German and English songs to the accompaniment of Miss Mabel Newman. The Odeon Quartette sang timely songs of a humorous character and the Bryan brothers entertained with the violin and the piano.

B'nai B'rith Seder.

The first B'nai B'rith Seder conducted by Cleveland Lodge at the B'nai B'rith Building was held on Tuesday evening, April 18, 1916, by Dr. Samuel Wolfenstein. Many young men from other cities who happened to be in Cleveland availed themselves of the privilege to participate in the Seder service.

The tables were set in good old Seder style. Services were read in both English and Hebrew. Dr. Wolfenstein explained various points of the service as he progressed, and incidentally related facts about the Seder in his childhood home in Austria. Services closed at a late hour. All the participants determined to repeat the Seder next year.

Under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge arrangements were made for the sending of matzos to the State Hospital, and this was much appreciated by the Jewish inmates there.

The Junior Circle of the I. O. B. B. Auxiliary to Cleveland Lodge held a well-attended meeting on April 23 at the B'nai B'rith Club. An entertaining program was arranged, a feature of which was a mock trial.

On Saturday evening, April 29, an entertainment was given by the Circle for its members and friends.

B'nai B'rith Forum, formed for the discussion of subjects of educational interest, held its first meeting on April 11 at the B'nai B'rith Club. Mr. A. Kolinsky delivered an address on "The Jewish Congress," and a general discussion followed.

Under the auspices of the Forum a class for the study of advanced Hebrew and grammar has been formed.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN IN DES MOINES

Great Enthusiasm at Banquet

Under the auspices of Des Moines Lodge No. 330 of Des Moines, Iowa, a membership campaign was inaugurated under a systematic arrangement of the officers of the Lodge. As a result of a one week's campaign a class of thirty-five candidates was initiated on Sunday, April 9, 1916, three former members were reinstated and one joined by affiliation.

The initiation ceremony was in charge of a special degree team, which in the future will do all the degree work.

Brother Hiram D. Frankel, of St. Paul, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, made an address to the members of the class and to the Lodge, which was very helpful in arousing the right spirit into the meeting and was well received.

There was a large attendance of members present and all in all it was the best meeting that the Lodge had for a long time.

Brother Frankel remained in Des Moines two days, aiding the committee in its work of securing additional members.

On the evening of April 10, the banquet and dance was held at Chamberlin Hotel, which proved to be a most successful affair, about 200 members of the Order and their ladies were present, including the members of the new class who were the guests of honor of the Lodge. It was a representative gathering from the Jewish community, the presence of the younger men being especially noticeable.

After an enjoyable dinner short talks were given by Rabbi Cohen and Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, which was followed by the address of the evening by Brother Hiram D. Frankel, who spoke at length on the work of the Order and enumerated many reasons why every Jew should deem it an honor and a duty to affiliate himself with the Order. The new department of the Order along the lines of Social Service received particular attention. His address was well received and was of real help in impressing the members and others present with a sense of the dignity of the Order and the need for active support.

Moses Marks, President of the Lodge, acted as Toastmaster and introduced the speakers.

The committee in charge of the membership campaign plans to continue working for members in the future and is hopeful of increasing the membership of the Lodge to the 200 mark. It is their aim to make every effort possible so that sooner or later every coreligionist in the community whose membership will be an element of strength to the Lodge and the Order shall be secured.

The committee in charge of the campaign is deserving of much appreciation and thanks, as it is due to their work that the spirit now prevailing in the Lodge is of the very best.

ARGO LODGE CELEBRATES 25TH ANNIVERSARY.

On the evening of Thursday, March 30, 1916, Argo Lodge of Washington, D. C., held its annual get-together banquet, which was also the occasion of the celebration of its twenty-fifith anniversary, or, as it was termed, "Argo's Silver Wedding Banquet," at the Metropolitan Hotel, which was attended by a large and enthusiastic membership.

After the dinner, Leon Pretzfelder, president of the lodge, called the assemblage to order with remarks appropriate to the spirit of the occasion, and introduced Joseph Strasburger, the toastmaster of the evening, who, in turn, introduced the speakers, being the entire Jewish delegation in the House of Representatives, and the Reverend Dr. Abram Simon and Robert I. Szold, special assistant to the Attorney General in the Department of Justice.

Representative A. J. Sabath, of Illinois, told of the efforts he had made to defeat the immigration bill, and incited the Jews of Washington to live up to the ideals of their Order and race, particularly, as the people of the nation look to the people of Washington, its capital, for inspiration.

Representative Seigel of New York, one of the youngest members of the House of Representatives, urged the Jews of Washington to encourage naturalization and to establish a Young Men's Hebrew Association there which would be a credit to the capital.

Representative Isaac Bacharach of New Jersey, told of some interesting episodes in his congressional campaign, and made himself generally liked by his cordiality and good fellowship.

Representative Meyer London of New York, in a fiery and impassioned address, said that the Jew has contributed his share of bad stuff as well as good stuff; that we face a serious and earnest moment in the history of our race, and when we have expanded, we will give not only manufacturers, business men and inventors, but philosophers, poets, artists, leaders of thought, and guides to noble ideals. He charged the young men to devote every moment of leisure to study and the acquirement of knowledge.

Dr. Abram Simon spoke on "The New Ideals of the B'nai B'rith," and Robert Szold spoke on "Zionism.'

Between the speeches, features were introduced to the great entertainment of those present. Mr. Al. Shefferman rendered a bass solo, with Dr. Benjamin Newhouse at the piano; Mr. Sol. Glueck gave a dramatic reading, entitled "A Few Minutes with Disraeli," and Mr. Otto Woerner, rigged up as a German comedian, gave a comical monologue on "The European War."

The enforced absence of Brothers Simon Wolf, Julius I. Peyser and Judge Milton Strasburger, who have been scheduled to speak, was regretfully noted.

On the committee of arrangements were: A. C. Meyer, chairman; Sol. Herzog, F. M. Pelzman, Joseph Strasburger, Julius I. Peyser, Leon Pretzfelder, H. O. Sandberg, David Weiner, Dr. I. A. Pelzman and Joseph Tepper.

The present officers of the lodge are: Leon Pretzfelder, president; David Weiner, vice-president; H. O. Sandberg, inside guardian; Joseph Sworzyn, warden; Frederick M. Pelzman, monitor; Morris Hahn, treasurer; Albert L. Adler, financial secretary, and A. Stern, corresponding secretary.

San Francisco B'nai B'rith

Unity Lodge No. 273 celebrated its thirty-ninth anniversary on Saturday evening, April 15, 1916, with a dance at the Century Club Hall. Elaborate preparations were made and a big social success was attained.

Columbia Lodge No. 127 celebrated its thirty-seventh anniversary on April 13, 1916, with an entertainment and dance in the B'nai B'rith Building.

Columbia Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, celebrated its seventh anniversary on Monday evening, April 10, 1916, with a dramatic and literary program.

Fifty cases needing relief have been handled by the B'nai B'rith social service committee in San Francisco during the few weeks of its existence, according to Harry K. Wolff, past grand president and district chairman of social service.

The appeals that have come to the local committee have been widely varied in nature, showing the broad scope of the work to be done.

In an effort to obtain financial aid from the San Francisco lodges to carry on the social service work, Wolff and Dr. A. E. Cerf, chairman of the local committee, presided over a meeting of the trustees of the ten San Francisco lodges last Wednesday. They told of the work being planned and asked cooperation of the Trustees for Social Service. The Trustees promised to recommend the appropriation to their respective lodges.

Rabbi Martin A. Meyer, Grand Orator of District Grand Lodge, will deliver a series of lectures before the San Francisco lodges on the "Modern Interpretation of the Bible." The first will be given on May 10, the second on May 24 and the third on June 8. Mr. Milton Meyer, Chairman of the Executive Committee of Local Intellectual Advancement Committee, will preside.

At a meeting of Cremieux Lodge No. 325 held April, 1916, the lodge adopted a resolution opposing the Burnett Immigration Bill because of its literacy test laws. Copy of the resolution was ordered sent to every California member of Congress.

At the March meeting of Cremieux Lodge No. 325 of San Francisco, Cal., the members discussed plans and aims for the good and welfare of the lodge. A contest for membership is in progress between Golden Gate and Cremieux lodges.

Golden Gate Lodge No. 129 gave a grand ball on April 30 which was largely attended. The purpose of the affair was to raise funds to further the philanthropic and intellectual activities of the lodge.

Highly creditable to the San Francisco B'nai B'rith was the well-attended Seder given at the B'nai B'rith Hall on Tuesday evening, April 18, 1916. The services principally in English under the direction of Rabbi Rosenwasser, were of an impressive character and the old Hebrew melodies were beautifully rendered with the aid of an excellent choir. The feature of the evening was the presence of 41 soldiers and sailors who were cordially welcomed.

Addresses were made by Rabbi Rosenwasser, Harry K. Wolff, I. J. Aschheim and others.

Entering upon its extensive work with zeal and enthusiasm the San Francisco Committee on Social Service of District Grand Lodge No. 4, took up several important cases at its meeting held April 19, 1916. This marked the actual beginning of the work which this committee has been planning for several weeks.

At a meeting of Unity Lodge No. 273, Mr. L. L. Michaels, assistant secretary of the Jewish Educational Society, delivered an address on the subject, "Reverence."

JOHN HAY LODGE, FARGO, N. D.

Resolutions Upon the Death of Brother Max Stern.

Whereas, the All-wise Creator has taken to himself our beloved brother, Max Stern, the first president of John Hay Lodge, I. O. B. B.

Brother Stern, more than any one else, was the principal factor in the organization of our lodge and until sickness overcame him, was one of the most regular attendants at the meetings. His wise counsel in the lodge, his services to the Order and Judaism, always rendered unselfishly, his nobility of mind and strength of character, his love of justice and charity, will ever be treasured in the memory of his fellow-workers.

Max Stern came to Fargo thirty-five years ago, in the early days of the city and was a prominent figure in the development of this community. He was deeply interested in public affairs and took a leading part in matters of charity. His ready assistance and able guidance enabled many a poor man, and especially poor Jewish immigrants, to earn a decent living and get a start on the road to success.

We mourn the loss of our dear brother and our sympathy goes out to his loved ones whom he has left behind.

Be It Resolved, That the Charter of the lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days and that Kaddish for our departed brother be recited at the close of this meeting.

To express the esteem in which we held our late brother who was laid to rest on the first Sunday in March,

Be It Resolved, That we designate this day as a Memorial Day and that we hold fitting service on the first meeting day in every March hereafter, in memory of those members who have passed to the Great Beyond.

Be It Further Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minute book and a copy of them be sent to the family of our late brother.

BANQUET AND CLASS INITIATION BY WILLIAM McKINLEY LODGE.

Under the auspices of Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521 of Omaha, Neb., a class initiation followed by a banquet was held on Sunday, April 9, 1916.

In the afternoon a meeting of the lodge was held which was attended by more than 150 members. For this occasion a class of sixty candidates was secured, of which number forty presented themselves for initiation, and the initiation ceremonies were conducted by the degree team of the lodge.

At the close of the ceremonies, Brother Sig Livingston, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 6 and President of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order, delivered an address on "The Work of the Order."

In the evening a banquet in honor of Brother Livingston was held and was attended by more than 300 members of the Order and their ladies. Brother Livingston addressed the gathering on "The Work of the Anti-Defamation League," and his address made a deep impression upon his audience.

By the enthusiasm created by the presence of Brother Livingston and his address, it is safe to predict that Wm. McKinley Lodge will continue to be an important factor in Jewish matters in Omaha, and will grow from strength to strength.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

B'NAI B'RITH OF CHICAGO.

At a well-attended meeting of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72, held on April 25, 1916, at the New Morrison Hotel, a class of 16 candidates was initiated by the new degree team of the Lodge. A special feature of the business was a discussion of the syllabus submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement, on the subject, "Should the B'nai B'rith Cease to Be a Secret Order?" The affirmative of the discussion was led by Brother Edward Menkin, and the negative by Brother Isaac O. Goldstine. Brother Menkin read an extensive paper in support of his attitude on the question, and we quote a few extracts thereof. Brother Menkin, among other things, said:

"Our Order in reality is secret scarcely more than in name." He called attention to the statement that Dr. Maretzki, of Berlin, who in writing the history of the German District, called it, not a secret order, but a "geschlossene Gesellschaft." He further quoted part of the ritual: "The I. O. B. B. is not dependent on rites intended to captivate the imagination." He further said: "If we are to be a blessing we must be a blessing to others. America offers us a wonderful opportuntiy to become the sons of God's covenant, positive and beneficent contributors to human society. Our aim must be not to restrict our services to the members of our fraternity only, but to all worthy Israel who are willing to unite with us in this work of the Order. We believe there are many who would be willing to affiliate with us if our Order should see fit to abolish the so-called secrecy connected therewith. The world cares but little under what auspices men meet for social recreation, to relieve distress, either among themselves or in a wider sphere, but an organization such as our Order, which lays claim to the highest ideals and strives for the betterment of Jews, its very secrecy might be construed by evil minds as proof of improper procedure. A rabbinical saying admonishes us not only to do what is right, but also to avoid the appearance of what could maliciously be construed as wrong."

After the formal addresses a general discussion followed, participated in by many members of the Lodge.

An unusually well attended meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33 was held in its new quarters, Red room, Hotel La Salle, on April 5, 1916. A class of 40 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge, and this was followed by the presentation of a large number of new petitions for membership.

A special feature of the meeting was the discussion of the syllabus, "What can we do to controvert the Popular Errors about the Jews?" led by Brothers Felix A. Levy and Julian J. Gusfield. A general discussion followed, participated in by some of the members of the Lodge.

David Fish Lodge No. 130 held its monthly meeting at the New Morrison Hotel on April 19, 1916. Seven candidates were initiated by the new degree team of the Lodge, and a number of new petitions for membership were presented.

For the good and welfare of the Lodge Brother Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, addressed the Lodge on the work of the department, emphasizing the need of the existence of a Big Brother organization in the city, and also pointing out various other avenues of activities for the members of the Lodge to engage in, in connection with social service work.

The Secretary of the Order, Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, also addressed the Lodge.

The monthly meeting of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago was held at Masonic Temple on April 27, 1916. The meeting was well attended and a number of important matters were discussed. The Council appropriated the sum of $300 for the use of the Committee on Social Service. Steps are also being taken in the matter of arranging for a permanent summer camp for boys, to be maintained and conducted under the auspices of the Council.

Under the auspices of the Central B'Nai B'rith Council, representing all the Chicago Lodges, a movement has been started for the organization of a club which will be known as the Covenant Club of Chicago, and which is to be located in the downtown district.

Committees have been appointed on [illegible] Means, also on securing a [illegible]ation. It is planned to pro-[illegible] premises with the following: [illegible] library, assembly room, [illegible] bowling alleys, gymna-[illegible] tank, grill, barber shop, shower baths, etc.

The following directors were elected to serve the Club for the first year:

Asher, Samuel J.
Blum, Henry S.
David, Joseph B.
Davis, Dr. Haim I.
Decker, Alfred
Fish, Sig
Frank, Herman
Freund, Gustave

EDWARD EVERETT LODGE, NEW YORK.

Edward Everett Lodge No. 97 celebrated its 49th anniversary Wednesday evening, May 3, at the B. B. Building, by a literary and musical program which was very much enjoyed by the large gathering. Brother Leopold Zimmerman acted as the Chairman of the evening, and in a few choice words welcomed the members and their families and introduced Brother Wm. B. Ast, who delivered a delightful talk on the fine work of the Lodge and Order. He was followed by Brother Benj. Blumenthal, who gave the history of Edward Everett Lodge and the District generally.

Brother Zimmerman then called upon the Grand Secretary of the District, Brother Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, who spoke on the work of the District and the Order which appeals to all classes of our people, as the scope of the work is so broad and big as to cover all phases and ideals of Judaism. He was followed by the celebrated poet, M. Rosenfeld, who read some original poems which were heartily enjoyed by all present. Poet Rosenfeld is a member of Edward Everett Lodge.

Brother Louis Kempner, past-President of the Home at Yonkers, delivered a pleasing address, speaking very hopefully of the future of the Order, which he said will be worthy of its great past, as there is so much to be done and the Order is ready to do its share for Israel and humanity. Other speakers were Brothers Henry Duschnes, Michael Shaap, A. Eichtesheimer and M. Katzenberg. Dr. N. Blechman closed the entertainment with prayer. A delightful musical program was rendered, participated in by Miss Carmen, Miss S. Hoechster, Mrs. S. Marko, the Misses Rosenthal and Mrs. S. Horn. The interesting program was followed by a dance and refreshments.

SEATTLE B'NAI B'RITH.

The Purim entertainment given by Rainier Lodge No. 627 was a big success. Dr. Koch spoke on "Olden Tales of Purim," and his address was interesting and quite a revelation to many of those present.

Emma Lazarus Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held its regular meeting on April 4, at which various committees were appointed and a draft of the new constitution was discussed.

Both Rainier and Hildesheimer Lodges have passed resolutions opposing the organization of an alleged Jewish Political Club in Seattle. They furnished a statement to the press in which they say:

"As a club of this nature is contrary to the highest principles and opposed to the best interests of the Jews and to their view of American citizenship and American institutions, the Seattle B'nai B'rith Lodges have deemed it advisable to inform the public that such an organization meets with this order's strongest condemnation.

"The Jew does not vote as a body nor can his vote be delivered by any individual or organization. He votes as an American citizen, according to his own mind, and he resents the impression which some would-be Jewish political leaders desire to give to the public—that he is not master of his own vote.

"Religion is one thing, government and politics another, and the Jew believes that the best interests of any government are best served when religion and politics are divorced."

Rainier Lodge contributed $576.00 and Hildesheimer Lodge $246.00 to the General Relief Fund for the Jewish War Sufferers, in response to a call issued by the local committee of the Seattle Relief Fund.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

A Cultural Meeting was held under the auspices of Kansas City Lodge No. 184, of Kansas City, Mo., on March 13. Rabbi Charles Latz of Fort Smith, Ark., addressed the Lodge.

He spoke of the word "Jew" and the symbolism that might be attached to each letter. "J" stood for Judaism—the mighty foundation upon which the Jew has rested throughout the centuries; that which has made him a distinct people, free from assimilation. "E" stood for Earnestness—the earnestness of the Jew in his business and domestic life, and in everything he undertook to do. "W" stood for Wisdom, for the Jewish religion fosters mental advancement. Rabbi Latz referred to the Independent Order B'nai B'rith as the lay organization of Judaism. It is an apt reference and we feel that we are truly entitled to the compliment.

The speaker of the evening was Dr. H. D. Jerowitz, and his subject was the "Young Jew". Dr. Jerowitz prefaced his remarks with the explanation that by "young" he did not mean so far as years were concerned, but vim and vigor in man's efforts. He outlined the natural progress of the man—in his early youth he writes songs, in middle age he writes poetry, and in old age he is inclined toward pessimism and therefore indulges in proverbs. American Jews are young Jews—we are still writing songs. We are in the virility of our youth. We look forward to a rosy future. We are now in a constructive period. We are building Young Men's Hebrew Associations and Young Women's Hebrew Associations. We are banding together in Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony, with self-betterment in view. We are constantly planning for the future. We are endeavoring to devise ways and means for the benefit of our people—for the benefit of ourselves. Such is the American Jew, full of hope, full of inspiration, fertile in results.

Dr. Jerowitz decried the fact that a number of Jewish young men had banded themselves together in a political club, using the word "Jewish" as part of the title. It was his belief that this was against Jewish principles; that no right thinking Jew would permit himself to be coerced by an political alliance of this nature; that within each individual lies the choice of his political belief, and that it was to the discredit of Kansas City Jewery to permit a political organization under such a title to flourish.

The Lodge adjourned to a luncheon.

HEBRON LODGE, NEW YORK.

Hebron Lodge initiated a number of candidates Tuesday evening, April 25. Several Lodges participated. Maccabee Degree Team, headed by Brother Samuel Raeder, exemplified the ritual in its usual impressive manner. A special address on the occasion was delivered by Brother Joel Blau, of Zion No. 2. This is the first initiation ceremony held at the new headquarters. Akiba Lodge, headed by Brother Wm. H. Silk, and Maccabee Lodge, headed by Brother I. Enselman, were well represented on the occasion. The Intellectual Advancement Committee attended in a body.

Dr. Blau's lecture was on the "Jewish Contribution to Human Liberty." He showed that Judaism always aimed at the establishment of proper relations between one man and the other in all walks of life. He pointed out that the enjoyment of liberty is best realized under the conditions where one recognizes his obligations toward his fellowmen. Dr. Blau's talk was very much appreciated by the large and enthusiastic gathering present.

MOBILE, ALA.

The golden anniversary of the founding of Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 will be observed and appropriately celebrated in Mobile, Ala., during the coming fall or winter. This was definitely decided upon at the regular April monthly session of the lodge.

The original old charter, now hanging in the hall, shows that Beth Zur Lodge was instituted in that city in October, 1866, the year after the close of the Civil War, and among the twenty-five or more who were its charter members, Mr. Sigmund Haas is the only survivor, now a resident of Mobile. The delegates to the Grand Lodge, which met last month at Little Rock, Ark., were instructed to officially notify that body of Beth Zur's fiftieth anniversary celebration, and to request official representation.

NEW HAVEN B'NAI B'RITH.

On Wednesday evening, March 15, the annual charity ball of Horeb Lodge was held at Harmonie Hall. The affair, limited to members only, was well attended, and from a social standpoint it was a distinct success. Excellent music was provided. The refreshment committee arranged a splendid menu and a special entertainment was furnished for the benefit of those who did not participate in the dancing.

The proceeds of the ball, in accordance with the well established custom of the Lodge, will be divided among the Jewish charity societies of the city. Horeb Lodge is the only Jewish organization in New Haven that performs this particular service.

At the meeting of Horeb Lodge held on Sunday evening, April 9, Brother Charles Cohen delivered an interesting address on the question of the Jewish Congress, presenting the case of its advocates in a forceful and sincere manner. At the following meeting of the Lodge, Brother Samuel Campner presented the case against the Congress.

On account of the holiday no meeting of the Lodge was held on Sunday, April 23. By order of the President the next meeting was ordered to be called for Sunday evening, May 14.

On Thursday evening, May 4, "ladies' night" was held at the Harmonie. The members of the Lodge and their ladies attended an open meeting at which Rabbi Herbert I. Goldstein of New York City addressed the meeting on the subject of "The B'nai B'rith." After the address dancing followed.

Horeb Lodge is still conducting a campaign for membership. Every effort is being made to obtain a record number of members this year. The Lodge has offered three prizes to those members who bring in the most applications by June 1 of this year.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK.

Jordan Lodge No. 15 held an interesting meeting at the B'nai B'rith Building, Thursday, May 4, which was attended by several of the Grand Officers. Brother Hess of the Jewish Publication Society gave a talk on Jewish literature which elicited some interesting discussion on the subject. Among those who spoke at the meeting, in addition to Brother Hess, were First Vice-President Joseph Rosenzweig, Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, Brother Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, and Brother William Asher.

Under the inspiration of its president, Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, the social service program undertaken by the members at the beginning of the year is being pushed with vigor. This work is manifesting itself primarily in two directions—the Big Brother Movement and the Employment Bureau. The Big Brother Committee consists of Louis J. Elias, Morris Zipser and Charles H. Levitt; and each member of this committee is devoting himself conscientiously to the pleasant task of casting a healthful influence about some unfortunate younger brother.

The Employment Bureau, under the chairmanship of Dr. Lehman and strengthened by such active members as Secretary Adolph Schwarzbaum and Treasurer John J. Jalien, has already made a creditable beginning in finding desirable positions, especially for Lodge brothers who are seeking to advance themselves.

The meeting on April 20 was especially significant for two reasons. First, it was the initial meeting in the new B'nai B'rith headquarters, and the Lodge took advantage of this circumstance to dedicate itself anew to the principles of the Order. Secondly, the meeting was a joint one between Jordan and the members of the newly organized Ladies' Auxiliary. The following officers of the Auxiliary were installed: Mrs. Henry Pollock, president; Mrs. Sanford Friedlander, vice-president; Mrs. Jessie Friedlander, treasurer, and Mrs. H. Cohen, secretary.

FLATBUSH LODGE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Flatbush Lodge No. 753, though only three years old, is one of the most active lodges in the district. The meetings are made especially interesting by social and literary programs which are presented regularly once a month. Wednesday evening, April 19, Lieutenant Manuel F. Behar delivered a most interesting talk on "Preparedness," which was greatly appreciated by the enthusiastic gathering present.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

THE CINCINNATI LODGE NO. 4.

At the last regular meeting, April 23, a class of seven candidates was initiated, making twenty-four initiations in the four months of the present term. Arrangements are under way for a joint B'nai Brith Day, Memorial Day and the initiation of a large class of candidates early in June. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, director of social service, will be the principal speaker and the work of the lodge along these lines, a most important and interesting feature, will be outlined by the chairman of the committee, Dr. Boris D. Bogen, superintendent of the United Jewish Charities of Cincinnati. The Cincinnati Lodge is about to undertake a novel and what will probably prove a very valuable line of work in the social service field and which, if followed up by the lodges of the Order, will provide statistics that will form the basis for much constructive work in the future.

The Cincinnati Lodge now has 1,056 members and will in all probability have 1,100 before the end of the present term in June. It has been the endeavor of President Isidor Wise to have the lodge get away from the old method of devoting the greater part of the meetings to the discussion of technical points and matters of little or no importance, and to devote itself to such large matters as concern the general order and the individual lodges. This work of co-ordination seems to be bearing fruit, especially since the director of social service seems about to formulate a plan by which the useless local and overlapping work of the lodges and districts can be avoided and the whole work of the Order be made effective and harmonious.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Emanuel Lodge No. 103, and Alabama Lodge No. 299, of Montgomery, Ala., entertained the members of the lodges and their ladies at May's Rose Garden on Tuesday evening, April 25, 1916, with an "Intellectual Culture" program. The following interesting program was carried out:

Prelude ....Orchestra
Address of Welcome.......Lucien Loeb
Statement of object of this meeting.. ....Max Rice
"Intellectual Culture, the highest conception of Education," paper....... ....L. Meyer
Discussion, fifteen minutes, opened by ....I. J. Friedman
Selection ....Orchestra
Talk on Mephisto......Mr. A. B. Meyer
Question: "Shall the Intellectual Culture meetings be opened to the Public? ....
15 minutes' discussion by the Members
Address ....Capt. Phil. Stern
Refreshments ......May's Rose Garden

TOLEDO, OHIO

At its regular meeting on Tuesday evening, April 11, Toledo Lodge No. 183, had the largest attendance in the history of the Lodge. There were about two hundred and fifty present.

This splendid showing must be largely credited to the Lodge's speaker for that evening, Brother Doctor Julius H. Jacobson, one of the city's most prominent surgeons. Dr. Jacobson chose as his subject, "Tsuros," and in a talk, blending wit and medical fact, held the crowd intensely interested. It was one of the best of the series of talks that have been a feature of the meetings of Toledo Lodge.

On the same evening a chess club was organized among the members, to play after the close of meetings.

On the first evening of Passover, a Seder was given under the auspices of Toledo Lodge, at the Miami Children's Home, for the benefit of the twelve Jewish children there.

JACKSON, MISS.

Manassah Lodge No. 202 of Jackson, Miss., one of the old lodges of the District, has awakened from its lethargy and initiated a class of twelve candidates at a well attended meeting of the lodge, held on April 10, 1916. Much credit for this good work is due to Bro. Isidor Dreyfus.

Dr. Abraham Brill, Rabbi of Meridian, Miss., paid the lodge an official visit on the occasion and conducted the initiatory ceremonies and addressed the lodge on the "Work of the Order." Several members of the lodge are endeavoring to have another class initiation ready at the May meeting of the lodge when it is hoped Rabbi Brill will again visit the lodge.

HENRY JONES LODGE, NEW YORK.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee of the District, of which Brother Joseph Levenson is the Chairman, held a very interesting meeting Monday evening, May 1, where a number of matters of Jewish interest were discussed. Brother Joseph Rosenzweig, first Vice-President of the District, Brother Dr. M. M. Stark and Brother Joseph Morje, who were present, made some practical suggestions as to future activities of the Committee. The Intellectual Advancement Committee adjourned early so as to attend in a body the meeting of Henry Jones Lodge that met in the Lodge room the same night. A class of candidates was initiated in a most impressive manner. Members of the Degree Team wore cap and gown on the occasion, the caps bearing the emblem of the Menorah. Brother I. B. Scheiber was in charge of the initiation and was ably assisted by the other members of the team. Brother Joseph Rosenzweig, first Vice-President of the District, and Brother Adolph Hirsh, past-President of the District, commented very highly the work of the Degree Team. There was a delightful lecture on "Jewish Ethics" by Brother Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein. He was followed by Brother Joseph Rosenzweig, who spoke on "Jewish Responsibilities." There were also able remarks by Brother Nat Bilder, past-President of Ezekiel Lodge of Newark, one of the guests of the evening; Brother Joseph Levenson, and one of the new brothers, David L. Herrman.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 initiated a class of six candidates at its meeting held on March 28, 1916.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 held an interesting meeting on Tuesday, April 11, 1916. Rabbi Jonah B. Wise delivered a talk on "Jewish Culture," in which he made an earnest plea for the recognition and development of intellect and genius among the Jews.

Portland Lodge No. 416 invited the members of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 and their families to an evening's entertainment in B'nai B'rith Building to be held on May 7, 1916, at which time W. D. Wheelwright will deliver an address on behalf of the League to Enforce Peace.

Portland Lodge No. 416 gave a very successful dance on the evening of April 27 at the B'nai B'rith Building. A large crowd was in attendance and a good time was enjoyed by all. The social functions of Portland Lodge are always looked forward to by the members and their guests, as a most enjoyable evening is always assured.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

This Lodge is now comfortably settled in its new quarters, Odd Fellows Building, 203 Warren street, Roxbury, and meets every second and fourth Monday evening.

Its last meeting was very largely attended and great interest was manifested in the activities of the Lodge and Order. The members were enthusiastic in view of the rapid increase in membership. Ten candidates were initiated and fifteen propositions received, and there are now about thirty candidates whose initiation will be conducted at the next meeting. Within one year the Lodge has increased by 100 members.

There are many new and interesting features now introduced by the new degree staff, which will soon rank among the best in the district.

Past President Mark Stone, one of the prominent members of the Lodge has been appointed a State Deputy by Judge A. K. Cohen, President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, which honor is greatly appreciated by the Lodge.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT LIMA, OHIO.

Another link was added to the chain of lodges when Lima Lodge No. 786 was instituted at Lima, Ohio, on Sunday, April 30, 1916, with a charter membership of 18. Brother Harry Levinson of Toledo was the installing officer, and the initiatory work was exemplified by the degree team of Eshcol Lodge. The Lodge elected the following officers for the ensuing year: N. L. Michael, President; Sam Weinfield, Vice-President, Dudley Bernstein, Secretary; Ben Rosenbaum, Treasurer; Samuel Kleinberger, Monitor; H. Grossman, Assistant Monitor; Samuel Harris, Warden; L. D. Rothstein, Guardian.

FORREST CITY, ARK.

A committee of Barnett Lodge No. 754 of Forrest City, Ark., composed of Brothers S. Burd, D. Lewis, I. Yaffe, L. Barnett and H. J. Warshovsky, proceeded to Wynne on Sunday, April 16, 1916, where it initiated a class of six candidates for Barnett Lodge. The committee was joined on the trip by other members of the Order. The visitors spoke in glowing terms of the hospitality of the good citizens of Wynne and feel that much has been accomplished towards creating a neighborly and friendly feeling which if fostered will bring the two cities in closer communication.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Louisville Lodge No. 14 of Louisville, Ky., held an open meeting on Monday evening, April 10, 1916, in the Auditorium of the new Y. M. H. A. Building. The following program of exercises was carried out:

Opening Remarks......Louis Grossman
President Louisville Lodge No. 14.
Vocal Solo.......................Selected
Miss Elsie Kahn.
Accompanist, Mrs. Joseph Opper.
B'nai B'rith.....Rabbi Abraham Nowak
Vocal Solo—From 'The Opera Louise"
..Depuis Le Jour-Gustave Charpentier
Miss Ethel Bernheim.
Accompanist, Mrs. Joseph Opper.
Address......Judaism and Social Service
Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Chicago,
Director of Social Service Department.

Dr. Coffee, the principal speaker was well received. He spoke enthusiastically concerning his work in the Social Service Department of the Order. His address centered around the subjects of the Big Brother Movement, the Employment Bureau, and supervision of and cooperation with penal and charitable institutions in which there are Jewish inmates. Louisville Lodge is preparing to hold during the month of May a Memorial Service.

SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Springfield Lodge No. 684 celebrated its fifth anniversary Sunday, April 30th. The meeting was very largely attended and the program was worthy of the occasion. Among the distinguished out-of-town guests were Brother A. K. Cohen, President of the District, Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, and Brother Joseph H. Ullman of New Haven, Conn., who, together with Brother Henry Lasker, of Springfield, were the organizers and founders of the Lodge.

Among the prominent speakers at the banquet were President A. K. Cohen, Hon. Calvin D. Coolidge, Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts; Hon. Frank E. Stacey, Mayor of Springfield; Charles Hartman, Brother Joseph H. Ullman, Brother Henry Lasker, Phinney L. Davison, President of Springfield Lodge; Hon. John J. White, Mayor of Holyoke; Brothers Maurice M. Israel, Archibald M. Hillman, Leo Zander, Mark Stone and Herman Adaskin.

MANHATTAN LODGE, NEW YORK.

Manhattan Lodge No. 156 celebrated its 45th anniversary by a concert and dance at the new headquarters on Saturday, April 29. Brother Samuel Leavitt, President of the Lodge, delivered the address of welcome. A message of greetings and good wishes was received from the President of the District, Brother A. K. Cohen, and was very much appreciated by all the brothers present. Brother Cohen in his message congratulated the Lodge and expressed the hope that Manhattan Lodge, which is the largest Lodge in the City of New York, would go from strength to strength and maintain its high standard on the occasion of its approaching golden anniversary. Those in charge of the arrangements were Brothers Henry Gutenstein, Rev. Schlarger, Abraham Lederer, Solomon Moss and Philip Cowen. The interesting musical program was arranged by Miss Ruth Cooperstein. The members and the guests spent a most enjoyable evening, which will long be remembered by them.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Under the auspices of the Joint Committee of New Orleans Lodges, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, delivered an address at a public meeting held at the Y.M.H.A. on April 12, 1916, on the work done by the department under his charge, dealing with the aims of the Order and the program of social service.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Massachusetts Lodge No. 27, of Boston, Mass., which is the President's lodge, is making a record for itself by its large increase in membership. Massachusetts Lodge is attracting some of the best young men in the city of Boston.

Brother Rabbi Max Raisin of Hillel Lodge No. 2, Brooklyn, 28, was recently the guest of Flatbush Lodge where he delivered a most interesting lecture.

Maccabee Lodge Degree Team has been lately very much in demand for the exemplification of the Ritual. Maccabee Lodge has an unusually efficient Degree Team.

Amos Lodge No. 121 is running "neck and neck" with Massachusetts Lodge in an effort to bring the worthy Jewish young men of Boston into the folds of the Order.

Akiba Lodge No. 173 has organized a Degree Team and has entered the contest for a prize in Degree Team work offered by the General Committee. Akiba Lodge celebrated its first meeting at the headquarters by a large class of candidates. The new Degree Team exemplified the Ritual in a very impressive manner. The team consists of Brothers Peter Stern, Adolph Bauer, Adolph Cohen and Louis Lorence.

Worcester Lodge mourns the loss of Brother Daniel Pimpstein, who though a young man, rendered most worthy service to that lodge. The funeral of the brother was very largely attended. The brothers of Worcester Lodge feel the loss keenly.

Jehuda Halevi Lodge No. 710 initiated a number of candidates Sunday, April 9. The New Haven Degree Team exemplified the Ritual. The ceremony was followed by a banquet. The general Committee was represented on the occasion by Brother Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport. A number of other active and prominent members of the District were present.

Flatbush Lodge No. 753 gave a lecture, concert and dance Wednesday evening, May 3, at Savoy Hall, Brooklyn. The special lecturer on the occasion was Rev. Dr. Jacob Goldstein.

Past President Herman Asher organized a special committee to be known as the House Committee, consisting of some of the most active young men in the District, who will have in hand the management of the B'nai B'rith headquarters. The members of the committee met Tuesday evening, May 2, and had an informal dinner where plans for the management of the headquarters were adopted.

Brother Adolph Hirsh, Past President of the District, in addition to liberal personal contribution towards the furnishing of the new headquarters, presented to the headquarters a fine collection of books as a nucleus for a B'nai B'rith Library.

Akiba Lodge No. 173 held a most interesting meeting Tuesday evening, May 9, at which several candidates were initiated by the new Degree Team of that lodge. The feature of the evening was a most scholarly lecture on "Shakespeare and Shylock" by Brother Rabbi Dr. Joel Blau of Zion No. 2. His lecture was very much appreciated by the audience present.

Henry Jones Lodge No. 79 of New York, gave a dance Saturday night, May 13, at the headquarters of the District which was attended by a large number of young people.

New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 of New York, through its President, Brother Myer L. Victorius and other active brothers in the lodge, has issued a delightful little book giving in brief the history of the Order and the District and calling attention to the various activities of the Order. The lodge will use that book as a means for propaganda.

Brother Benjamin Kashman who is the Chairman of the Patrons' Fund of the Home for the Aged at Yonkers, and an active member in Ararat Lodge No. 13, of Hartford, Conn., is making a great effort towards increasing the Patrons' Fund and is ably assisted in his good work by Brother Rabbi Ettelson of Hartford, Conn.

thing should be just so, in accordance with custom and the wishes of his Jewish interned. It may not be without interest to report that Brother Greenbaum, who was allowed freely about the camp, gave it as his impression that apart from the fact that the men were interned they were quite happy and contented. Their treatment, on their own evidence, was all that could be wished for.

The case of the Rev. John Harris to which attention was called in my previous letter, has ended tamely enough. The congregation has re-instated their minister and the incident appears to be ended. But a number of significant facts stand out as a matter of history. The leaders of the congregation, who, judging from the whole episode cannot be large minded men, appear to have been panic-stuck by the opinions of Mr. Harris. That a minister should dare to take a line for himself! It was unheard of. And in time of war, too! They feared all sorts of evil consequences. They expected thunderbolts on their heads. Blindly, foolishly they sacked John Harris—and all the world wondered. People expressed admiration for Mr. Harris' conduct; respected Christian ministers wrote in praise of his attitude. "A thrill of horror went through me," wrote one "at the spectacle of the descendants of Micah and Isaiah doing what in them lay to close the mouth and terminate the career of one who was endeavoring in some little way to get their principles, the ideals of these great and immortal teachers, fulfilled." That is how it struck a Christian. Within the general community, too, there was an outcry at the foolish conduct of the Liverpool wardens; and even in their own congregation there were people who raised their voices in protest. Now men who act as the wardens did are not likely to have much staying power. Today they had a fright. Tomorrow the calm of their surroundings may restore them. So the sub-committee met again and reinstated Mr. Harris, after first conferring with him. The manner of the invitation to the conference is also interesting. Mr. Harris was invited to confer with the sub-committee "on the subject of the terminating of your position of Reader to this congregation, and the invitation was accompanied by an intimation that it was sent "in deference to the desire of the Chief Rabbi and Mr. Albert H. Jessel, K. C., who, as you are aware, have closely interested themselves in the matter".

Words fail one adequately to characterize such conduct. You make a mistake and in a foolish moment send your minister who has served you for many years about his business. You see the astonishment of the world. You feel that you look foolish. Yet instead of declaring in a straightforward, manly fashion that a mistake has been made and that to err is human, you take refuge behind the Chief Rabbi and Mr. Jessel. A cynic might say that you cannot expect anything better from such as enter the warden's box in the provinces. But then such people have always existed. One cannot help recalling Aesop's fable of the old man and the ass.

The band of Jews in the English House of Commons has been increased by the election to the House of Mr. Percy Harris. When he was introduced, Mr. Harris took the oath in Jewish form, wearing his hat. The new member for Harborough is the son of Mr. Wolf Harris who was at one time an active member, and also Warden of the New East End Synagogue, Mr. Percy Harris is not new to public work by any means; he is a prominent member of the London County Council.

Of the activities of the London Lodge there is only this to say—that we are very much alive and working quietly. Everybody is thinking of the general settlement when peace comes and the position of Jews in countries where they are at present oppressed is to be considered. It is hoped that one body will voice the views of English Jews on the subject. But whether that hope is realized and one body of representatives is accredited, or whether, as seems more probable, more than one set of people will present the case, it is pretty evident that in either case the Lodge will be represented. To that problem much thought is being devoted, and several of the members of the Council are working very hard in connection with the matter. It is no easy problem, but in its outlines all Jews, nay, all men and women, cannot but be united. We demand for the Jew everywhere justice; and in the lands where he labors under disabilities, we demand their removal. It is a question of elementary right, not so much one of rights. When the time comes we shall no doubt be ready to stand by all our brethren in the cause of our people, which is also the cause of humanity.

The B'nai B'rith and Constructive Service

(Address delivered by U. M. Simon at the B'nai B'rith Convention, Little Rock, Arkansas, May 1, 1916.)

The Jew is the riddle of history. Though weaker than his oppressors at all times, he has survived to testify to the vitality of his mission, while his persecutors have been cut off from the current of life; and although he forms only a fraction of one per cent of the world's population, there is not a field of activity in which he does not occupy a commanding position. While there has been much spoken and written about the religious zeal, domestic virtues, thrift and industry of the Jew by his advocates, on the one hand, his detractors, on the other, have been quite as active. The Jew has been praised for the authorship of the Bible and the promulgation of the Ten Commandments, and heralded as the exemplar of all that is true, beautiful and noble in humanity, yet on the other hand, the authorship of these works recognized to be the foundation of all western civilization, has been grudgingly conceded to him, and everything dark and unattractive in his life and history has been emphasized.

It is not my purpose to pronounce an eulogium of the Jew, neither do I propose to apologize for him, nor enter into a denunciation of those who have been responsible for his economic degradation and the persecutions that have followed him since the dispersion from Palestine. This will not be an historical outline, although from the history of the Jew I shall endeavor to find support for the theories advanced, and while I shall draw from the ancient traditions and chronicles, I shall nevertheless concern myself principally with modern problems and conditions concerning the Jew in the present day.

I want to speak to you of one of the mighty forces that is shaping the destiny of the Jew, guarding and protecting his interests, fighting his battles, ameliorating his condition and uplifting him morally—the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith—founded in the United States of America and now a world-wide fraternity, representing the worthy elements in all classes and conditions of our people. To the fact that this organization was founded in democratic America is due, in a large measure, its strength and influence. The story of the Jew in the United States has often been told, and there is now a considerable literature concerning his activities since the discovery of America and his participation in that event. He has had some notable share in the history of the early days of this land, and in the Revolutionary War. He fought side by side with his compatriots, and he has had no inconsiderable part in shaping the events following these times.

However, I pass over these periods with only a casual observation so as to come to the time of the organization of the B'nai B'rith in New York in 1843, and the conditions then existing, which brought it into being. Jews were then forming an appreciable part of the population, and had entered into business and the professions, and because of their success, instances of discriminations were becoming more or less frequent. Whatever may have been the direct motive of Henry Jones and his ten associates, whether it was purely selfish and for the benefit of the organizers only, or whether they had in mind the beautiful principles for which the order now stands, I do not know. I feel certain, however, that although the organization may have had its inception in the idea of mutual protection, there was, nevertheless, a grander motive behind it, which was almost immediately brought to the foreground, and while the early history of the order is concerned mostly with chronicles of mutual benefits through the endowment feature, we are able to discern the altruistic purposes of the members in the frequent mention of unselfish deeds.

We pass from the endowment stage to the philanthropic quite rapidly, and we find the order concerning itself with the welfare of the widow and the orphan, and with the assistance of the sick, the aged, the poor and the needy. It is here that the organization spent its greatest efforts for a number of years, and it is for this work that it became most widely known, to the close of the Nineteenth Century. That the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith was intended, however, for even greater things, although these purposes are perhaps sufficiently worthy for the undertaking of any band of men, is amply demonstrated by the principles enunciated in the preamble to its Constitution. Here, we are told that the order has taken upon itself the mission of uniting the Israelites in the work of promoting their highest interests and those of humanity, of inculcating the purest principles of philanthropy, honor and patriotism, of coming to the rescue of victims of persecution, of elevating the mental and moral welfare of our people. The pronouncement of these principles indicates that the order was designed to become a force in the solution of world-wide problems, affecting the Jewish people. That it has become such a force can no longer be gainsaid; until now it is the standard-bearer in the uplift of the Jewish people, and the defense of human rights.

But the B'nai B'rith has not merely proclaimed altruistic principles, for its great success has been due to the energy and unswerving loyalty with which it has carried these principles into practice. "To work and to watch" has been the inspiration upon which its highest aims and ambitions have been built, and this service, I may say here, has been largely of a constructive nature. We find the organization not only the leader in every movement having for its purpose the uplift of the Jews and the defense of their right, but it has been the originator of some of the foremost attempts looking to the protection of their interests. Illustrations of these activities might be multiplied, but it is only necessary to mention such epoch making events as the petition to Russia after the Kishnieff pogroms, the participation in the movement that led to the abrogation of the Russian Treaty, the fight against legislation aimed at the restriction of immigration, the more recent movement for the elimination of the caricaturist of the Jew and various other methods of defamation, and finally the formation of the National Social Service Bureau.

Along these lines of constructive service, the B'nai B'rith now has presented to it an opportunity of taking part in a field of activity that will go a long way toward the elimination of the narrow dislikes and ignorant prejudice encountered so often, even in this great land of religious freedom, and at the same time bring our people back to what some of our sages have considered fulfillment of their ultimate destiny—I refer to the movement, back to the soil.

The most casual observer will readily admit that the industrial and commercial activities of the Jew are the result of restriction and persecution. The cultivation of the soil, as described in the Bible, is the duty of man from the very beginning. From the time of the settlement of the Israelites in Canaan, the transition from their former nomadic mode of life to agricultural conditions was rapidly made. Agriculture was the basis of the native Mosaic legislation was conditioned upon Israel's agricultural possession of Canaan as the land of promise. The Sabbath had its chief significance to a people that employed man and beast in agricultural pursuits. The three festivals of the year, in reality harvest festivals, were closely connected with agricultural life. The system of public provision for the poor was based upon agricultural activities. The gleanings of the harvest and of the vineyard and of the olive grove were left for the poor and the stranger. The impression which Palestine, with its brooks and its fountains, its valleys and

Jewish Farming

By Gabriel Davidson

Lecture delivered before Manhattan Lodge 156, I. O. B. B., New York

The subject of Jewish farming is a particularly opportune one for discussion at this time when it is considered by many a potent factor in the solution of the post-bellum immigration problem. While opinions differ as to the effect of the war on immigration in general, most authorities agree that a large wave of Jewish immigration will be set in motion at the close of the conflict, and leaders in Jewish affairs are not a little concerned as to the best means to receive and absorb the large influx expected. Our own order, at its last convention, appointed a commission, with Col. Harry Cutler as chairman, to study the question in all its ramifications. This commission plans to call a conference of national organizations interested in immigration to deal with all phases of the matter with special reference to the advisability of diverting the expected stream of immigration to farms and small towns. This, therefore, is not only an appropriate time, but a B'nai B'rith Lodge is also the appropriate place to discuss the subject of Jewish farming.

It has ever been the pride of our race that its members are found among the foremost in every walk of life, and especially so wherever they enjoy freedom of action. Here in America, for example, we find them leaders in law, medicine, finance, commerce, the stage, and what not. But is there in the United States really such a thing as Jewish farming? Do Jewish farmers make good? These questions have been put to me more times than I can remember and they are most often intended rhetorically, for the inquisitors can conceive of only one answer, "No." And the logic of their reasoning is as follows: For many centuries the Jews were deprived of the right of land ownership in those countries where they resided in the largest numbers and as a consequence were forced to abandon the plow for more itinerant occupations. They were driven from pillar to post and, like the dove which Noah sent forth from the Ark, could find no resting place for the soles of their feet. Farming, which requires a more or less permanent tenure of land, was in these circumstances impossible. And so, they argue, since agriculture was for centuries upon centuries a virtually proscribed occupation to the Jew, he cannot now return to that fundamental calling. Upon its face, this reasoning seems sound, but it fails to take into account Jewish adaptability. The Jew can fit himself into new conditions perhaps more readily than any other race, witness the facility with which hundreds of thousands of our immigrant brethren have become assimilated into our body politic. The necessity for rapid and ofttimes radical change developed in the Jewish people that power of application so essential to making good at a new task. And so, when the Jew immigrates to this country with the resolve to make farming his life work, the initial capital which he invests in his enterprise is enriched by one important asset—determination to succeed. Both questions propounded at the outset, I answer affirmatively.

To establish the fact that there is Jewish farming in this country, it is only necessary to point out that every State in the Union numbers Jewish farmers among its inhabitants. Estimates made by Leonard G. Robinson, the General Manager of the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society (and the highest authority on the subject), in his "Agricultural Activities of the Jews in America," published in 1912, show about five thousand Jewish farming families in the United States. If we count five to a family, the total Jewish farming population in this country comprises about 25,000 souls. Basing his estimates of farm acreage and values upon the statistics given in the last United States Census, Mr. Robinson concludes that there are about 4,600 farms aggregating about 600,000 acres operated by Jewish farmers, and that the real and personal property owned by them amounts to about $33,000,000. This, I believe, sufficiently fortifies my first contention.

Let us pass now to the consideration of the second question. Do Jewish farmers make good? We are prone to believe that the Jewish agricultural movement is fostered by philanthropic agencies and that the Jewish farmer is largely a product of philanthropic aid. Mr. Robinson in his monograph already referred to shows that while the aggregate value of real and personal property owned by Jewish farmers was $33,000,000, the assistance extended them through philanthropic channels amounted to but $730,000, or about 2.2 per cent. In quoting these figures I do not mean to say that Jewish farmers had an equity of 97.8 per cent in their holdings, but to show that they finance their operations in the usual business wav, just as people in industrial occupations, and that aid from philanthropic sources is comparatively small. Moreover, the help so rendered is by no means of an elemosynary nature. It is extended in the shape of loans along business lines, the philanthropic feature consisting solely of the acceptance of inferior (though not inadequate), security, the elimination of all bonus or commission, the provision for repayment in small instalments, and the charge of a silghtly lower rate of interest. It is assistance which any man can accept without loss of self respect.

That there are successful Jewish farmers is proved by them as individuals and as members of farming communities. And what higher authority can I cite than the United States Immigration Commission, from whose report I quote:

"On the other hand, the reaction of country life on the Hebrew appears to have been salutary. Country life and the ownership of landed property have been of great benefit to the Jew as an individual.

"Hebrew farm incomes are seldom large, but, all things considered, do not suffer by comparison with other recent immigrant farmers in the neighborhood.

"At all events, the Hebrew farm family lives better in respect both to food and clothing than the Pole or the Italian who has been on the land for the same length of time. Those who have been accustomed to a high standard of living abroad (and this is the case of a number of Hebrew recruits to agriculture), are living very well indeed—as well as the majority of their American neighbors. Among the earlier settlers, most of whom were virtually penniless, there are evidences of a rising standard of comfort."

Jewish farmers are among the first to adopt new methods and to install modern equipment. They are assiduous readers of the Jewish Farmer, an agricultural magazine published in Yiddish by the Jewish Agricultural Society, and those who can read English, of the agricultural magazines and State and Government Bulletins, the instructions in which they follow out scrupulously. And so, now that agricultural leaders are advocating greater diversification in farming, Jewish farmers no longer depend entirely upon their field crops, but are enlarging their dairies and poultry plants. Thus many Jewish farmers are classed among the most successful of their respective communities. We find Jewish potato farmers among the foremost in Northern New Jersey and a Jew operating the largest poultry farm in Massachusetts. We see the Jewish farmers pioneers in alfalfa raising in Onondaga County, N. Y., where they doubled their acreage in alfalfa in four years. Near Hartford, Conn., a group of about twenty-five Jewish farmers who some five years ago raised forty acres of tobacco, now raise four hundred acres yielding about $120,000 a year.

It may be meet to point out a few instances in which Jewish farmers achie[illegible]

THE JEWISH NATURE

Lecture Delivered in Bohemia Lodge, Prague. By Dr. Emil Spiegel

(Translated for the B'nai B'rith News from the Bi-Monthly Reports of Grand Lodge No. 10.)

I would like to speak to you today about the Jewish nature. First of all, I make no secret of it that the perception of the Jewish nature is intimately connected with the perception of Judaism itself. Therefore, instead of expressing my convictions regarding the latter in an indirect and hidden manner, I will premise all the rest with a full explanation of my conception of the nature of Judaism. In this I will follow the train of thought expressed by Hermann Cohen in his work, "The Significance of Judaism for the Religious Progress of Humanity".

According to this work the nature of Judaism is that historical optimism which rests upon the God-idea as guarantee for the moral aim of all development. The nature of Judaism finds the right manifestation of this aim in the form of the Messianic ideal. Perhaps nobody has discerned it more perspicaciously than Schopenhauer that Judaism and optimism belong together. In his pessimistic contemplation of the world he could not forgive Judaism for the words of the Bible, in which he justly perceived the expression of the program of that optimism, namely the words from "Bereshit": "Vayar elohim et kal asher asah vehine tob meod" ("And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good"). But at the same time Schopenhauer entirely misconceived the nature of this Jewish optimism. As this optimism is founded upon the idea of the divine reason and directed by the moral aim of all development, it is at the same time a reasonable and a moral optimism. It has therefore nothing in common with that optimism which is justly opposed by Schopenhauer, because the optimism which he opposed contradicts reason as well as morality. It is the optimism of the philosophers of utility and happiness, who, unconcerned about the sufferings of any creature, construct their affirmative world-contemplation upon an artificial account of pleasure and displeasure, out of which they construe an equally artificial balance in favor of pleasure. In contrast to this, Jewish optimism in general is directed not upon pleasure but upon mortality, not upon utility or the happiness of the individual, but upon the welfare of humanity, not upon any present moment, but upon the future. It does not draw its averments from the experiences of the world, its security moreover lies solely in the idea of God as the God of morality and therefore the guarantor of its realization in history. Far from all calculating standpoints of utility the Jewish optimism bases the goodness of the world only and solely upon the moral endeavors of all times and upon their realization in the future, which is guaranteed by the idea of God. This places the Jewish optimism in the position to affirm the world without denying its sufferings. For this optimism the moral faults are generally the most significant ones of all the defects of this world, but it believes that this morally defective world is capable of a continual process of perfection going into the infinite.

Schopenhauer says that he who contemplates man in his action will hardly be [illegible] to sing hallelujahs. But in the word "Hallelujah" there is already the indication that the Jewish optimism is not concerned in the world with its joys and its sorrows, but only in God, as the one who guarantees the sense of the world to be beyond those joys and sorrows. The watch-word of Judaism is not praise the world, but praise God, hallelujah. Jewish optimism is therefore also not to be shaken by any contradiction of the present, be it ever so gloomy. Its glance moreover, is never turned upon the present, but conformable to the Messianic idea it is always directed to the future, upon the aim of development.

We Jews move away from the true Jewish nature in which we permit the big and the little sufferings, to which the Jew as such is exposed, to have a determining influence upon our thinking and feeling. The Jewish perception of life, which is based upon the Jewish doctrine not only requires that we bear these sufferings stanchly (William Raabe has called us the bravest of the peoples), but it asks more, it demands of us to put forth the strongest soul-resistance against those sufferings, also for that purpose that the [illegible] against mankind and the doubt in its development shall not gain sway over our soul. That is, and with this I come to the last principal phase of the Jewish nature, the nature of the genuine his- [illegible] of which Hermann [illegible] in the preface to one of his [illegible] in Kant; this is the spirit [illegible] in the Talmud which the same man who is worthy of reverence has placed as a motto in the front of his work: "Love of neighbor in the Talmud:

"Those who are plagued and do not plague,
Hear their abuse and do not answer,
Act out of love and find joy in pain,
These are the ones who love Him."

This finally is also the sense of the words of our shemona-esre-prayer, "Welimkallely naphshi sidom" ("My soul keep silent before my culmniators"). We must not even let it come so far that our souls should give answer to our sufferings; yes, that it should take any notice of it at all. "Wenaphshi ke-aphar lakkol tihye." "Let"—as Wesseley translates—"my innermost life, as though it were dust, be ready for every fate."

It is surely not necessary for me to prove that the Jews lived at all times according to this doctrine. If they had been lacking in historical toleration—to use again a thought expressed by Cohen—they would altogether have ceased to exist long ago. On the other hand it is self-understood that this does not mean that perhaps the untold persecutions and oppressions to which the Jews had been exposed passed ineffectually over the Jews themselves. Just as hard physical sufferings leave their traces in the face of man, so do the sufferings of the soul leave their marks upon the aspects of a people. But also here the true Jewish optimism will not let us remain too long in a gloomy, embittering contemplation of those sufferings. This optimism, moreover, demands a recognition of its worth by the reconciliation with the world. May we be guided in this by the saying of Nahum ish Gamsu, the "gam su letoba" ("this also is for the good"), which forms the nicest result of the Jewish conception of the constant affirmation of life! And so we may state it plainly: As hard as those oppressions were and as sad as their consequences may have been, they have at all times forced the Jews to retain their spiritual height and their moral dignity with an intensity which could not remain without its reward.

The thoughtfulness of the German language has endowed the word "Vorwurf" ("Reproach") with a double meaning, once in the sense of an accusation, then also in the meaning of a subject. So we speak of a Vorwurf, a subject, which an artist has chosen. And here I might say that the tendency is common to all the noblest Jews of all ages, beginning with the great son of Amram, to transmute all reproaches which were raised against them into just as many subjects, that is to gain from them as many subjects for their continued development. Certainly the noblest use that can be made of human antagonism, a use which surely is unthinkable without the greatest profusion of moral force!

But it was just this moral force which caused the Jews to emerge always stronger from all trials. Not only that no power on earth supported, but almost all had repeatedly united themselves against them, who being driven from place to place in the utmost unrest, dwelt only upon the heritage of their purely spiritual possession. Their many adversaries united for the purpose of forcing them away also from this and so to bring them to complete ruination. Indeed, who ever thought of them when they were thrown about hither and thither upon the stream of history which carried upon its surface altogether different prospects? Who anticipated anything of the mighty courage of life which inspired them, while their apparent destiny as well as their outward appearance, which was a part of the former, corresponded so little with that courage? "O," we would call with Nietzsche, "you all do not know the feeling which one who has been put to the rack has when he is brought back to the cell and his secret is still with him! He still holds on to it with his teeth. What do you know of the jubilation of human pride!" Of course, what the Jews had to bring back into the cells of the Ghetto was no secret at all. Their crime, which consisted in adhering firmly to the faith of their fathers, was disclosed to the light of day, open for every man to see. They really never hesitated to openly confess this their only offense, even without any torture! If something is to be said about a secret the guarding of which could have filled them with pride, it only and solely must have consisted in the power which enabled them to hold out against all those torturings. But could and should this power bring pride? Perhaps we all feel it that pride is surely not the state of the soul which expresses the relation of the individual to his religion in a fitting manner. If we wish to find here the right expression, we only need to remember our fathers and grandfathers, whose features can serve us as models from which we can best draw the picture of the true Jewish nature. And what do we find there? Not pride—this the times did practically not permit to rise up—but indeed something else, in spite of the times, something that corresponds better with the Jewish optimism, namely: Joyful affirmation of Judaism, joy in Judaism!

The joy in Judaism, an additional characteristic of the Jewish nature, did not only lift up the Jew in the inspiration of the highest holidays to the loftiest pitch of enthusiasm, the joy in Judaism not only filled him during the entire duration of the weekly Sabbath as the hemdat yamin, the delight of days, the joy in Judaism remained true to him also in the sad hours of the work day and as "simha shel mizwah," as joy in obeying a commandment, it sent its rays down to the fulfillment of the last and least precept of his every-day life. And in his prayer? Not accidentally did the Hallelujah, of which I have spoken in the beginning, pass over as the expression of the purest and loftiest joy, from the language and religion of the Jews into the language and religion of our entire culture circle, not accidentally was this expression of the highest jubilation opposed by Schopenhauer as the loudest manifestation of the Jewish optimism. And so can we say in the somewhat altered words of Nietzsche: What do you know, when you release the tortured one, of the jubilation of the inner joy which no racking can snatch away from him!

But wherein was to be found the actual secret of that enormous power which placed the Jews in the position not only to bear all vexations with historical toleration, but to reach out far beyond that? What made it possible for them to remain unconcerned about all sorrows and to attain positive joy in their Judaism? It is the spirituality of their entire nature which generated that power, in comparison to which all physical experience was rated as something incidental to the last degree. But this spirituality of Judaism, perhaps the most striking characteristic of the Jewish nature, had its roots in its purely spiritual doctrine and out of the constant occupation with the same it always drew new powers again, as I will demonstrate later.

As you know, an adherent of the Christian-Socialistic party once said: "I have devoured these booklets, one Jew always copies them from the other." Even in this grimace of a historic-philosophic observer the outlines of a truth which shines forth through our whole history cannot remain entirely imperceptible. The people that has produced that book which conquered the entire cultural world for itself and changed this world through it, this people has never lost its veneration for this book. Indeed, not always has one Jew copied the book of another, but it is likely that one Jew has always received from the other the high esteem and the affection for the book. And when we sometimes laugh over it that perhaps too many books are laid upon the birthday table of our Bar mizwah boy, it is something peculiar and grand at the same time that the induction of the boy, who has become of age, into the religious community is being connected with the induction into the community of books, that is of the spirit in general. And this reverence for the book is by no means an acquisition of modern times, or perhaps a fruit of emancipation. The veneration of the book, which has not only endowed the Ghetto with toleration but also with the richest progression, has first made emancipation possible on their side.

For only the spiritual capital which was stored up in the Ghetto rendered the Jews capable to lift themselves up to the height of modern culture with a rush which scarcely has its equal in history. And only the touch which the Jews had with their Bible, which is just as singular, gave to Mendelssohn's translation the power to introduce them forthwith into the depth of the German language, which was the first presumption for the success of the emancipation.

The unbroken line of books was the cause that the well which flowed to the Jews from their very own book, has always remained living and force giving. The book of books gave something of its own spirit to all the successors, but these used it as something living and returned to the book of books something of their own spirit, which in the end was spirit from its spirit. The books which followed the Bible took care of it that the Book of Books of the Jews always was more than a mere book.

Thus they had to thank their nature for this spirituality, which never tolerated a standstill.

The fact that in spite of all the spirituality the heart of the Jew did not remain empty, but rather encompassed family and religious community with rare warmth, finds its reason in the truth that the spirituality of Judaism, that is, its idea, rested upon nothing more than upon the realization of morality in history, which means that it was directly connected with life and the demands of the heart.

The fundamental proof of this realization of morality in history is to be found in the Decalogue. And this begins its moral lesson with the words: "Kabbed et abiha we-et- immeha," "Honor thy father and thy mother!" The sabbath commandment stands between this and the first commandment of the part dedicated to God and in the center of all the commandments. The words of the fifth commandment can be designated as the primitive germ of all Jewish ethics. The extent to which Judaism understood it to win filial love and to retain it enduringly, proves that there was a great impulsive force in it. When the question of the Jewish nature is being discussed, a special chapter must be devoted to this filial love. The sanctity of the Jewish family life was always recognized without reserve by our worst antagonists. But, as so strikingly pointed out by Moritz Lazarus in his "Ethics of Judaism," this sanctity did not rest as much upon the love of the parents for the children as upon the reverence and the filial love of the children for the parents. The reverence for old age in general, the reverence for the teachers of the individual and of the community, the reverence for the religion of the parents at the same time, also the faithfulness to the God of the fathers and as the fruit of this the loyalty to all co-religionists, all these sentiments had their roots in the reverence for father and mother. The filial love emanating out of this reverence proved itself so strong and comprehensive that it transferred itself to all persons of equal age with father and mother, especially to the teachers and from there to the great men of the past, extending further to their God, to His doctrine and to all the followers of this doctrine. Yes, not only this. It finally verified itself also in regard to the smallest and most insignificant religious custom, when and because it was practiced by the parents. Even the clear discernment that this was often practiced by the parents for the same reason only increased the luster of the glorified light with which in consequence of this it was surrounded in the eyes of the children.

Knit together with simha shel mizwah the Jewish filial love gives us also the key to the understanding of our neo-Orthodoxy which, in contrast to the Polish and Russian old orthodoxy, has concluded peace with modern culture and yet holds tight with unerring tenacity to so much which contradicts this culture. Vice versa Reform in marking out its sphere has nowhere to be as coutious as just there where it is running the danger of violating true piety. But more can be said. Israel has to thank before everything that fidelity which was the fruit of his piety for having been able to bear in historical toleration, nay, in joyful exaltation, all that was allotted to him in his history of many thousands of years. But this piety had its culminating point in the "Kabbed et abiha we-et immeha" which determined all other points at issue.

And so is the every day Jewish charity only a shoot of the tree of Jewish piety, to be sure, a shoot that has again formed out of itself the most manifold life. One would perhaps not go too far were he to designate this every day Jewish charity, which is usually summed up under the name of Gemilut hasadim, as the most beautiful and therefore the most carefully guarded plant in the garden of Judaism. Plant, but not the soil! In our daily morning prayer there is a passage adopted from the Mishnah which belongs to those ornaments of our siddur that give to it its peculiar impression which no change of religious conceptions can obliterate. In this Mishnah passage Jewish charity is grouped together with other expressions of religio-ethical conduct of life, among them also Kibbud ab wo-em (reverence for father and mother). But following the enumeration of these rules of conduct a somewhat surprising sentence is added: "Wesalmud Torah Keneged Kullam," but the study of the Law is above everything. This preferring of the Law has often led to the misconception of the Jewish nature. This preference was misunderstood to mean that the Law was the main thing, but its practice was of secondary consideration, or perhaps that the practice existed only for the sake of the Law. But in reality it is here not a question of comparison of such values, but the difference between the permanent and the temporal value, between the condition and the conditionary. Let us retain the picture of plant and soil! When it is said that the soil is the foremost, the enduring thing and is therefore that which must be attended to before everything else, but the plant is a thing produced by it, it came after it, it is transitory, the opinion is not expressed that the earth is the main thing and the plant only an incidental thing, that the plant exists only for the sake of the soil. It is only intended to make clear the true connection which exists between the two. The plant Gemilut hasadim—and the same naturally applies also to piety—if it is to bring new blossoms and new fruits for all times, it needs for all times the nourishing soil of a living law.

But it must be well considered that that passage of the Mishnah does not speak of the Torah but of the study of the Torah. That which dispenses life, that which nourishes is not a torpid Law, but a living research in it! If we wish to retain the nourishing soil for the expressions of the religious life, from which alone they can spring forth, we must not neglect the living force, which lies in the study. Not only that Gemilut hasadim alone cannot sustain Judaism, a closed Law is also unable to do it all alone. The only thing that alone guarantees life and durability to Judaism and what has always formed the fundamental feature, perhaps the most distinguishing one of the Jewish nature, is that research which is never abated, never deferred, but ever continued, ever living reasearch which always tries anew. To be sure, with the fall of the Ghetto the methods of Jewish research and also the Jews themselves have become different. Today every Jew can no longer take part in the study of the Torah in the proper sense of the word. But the essential thing is: affectionate occupation with the Law, or, which is one and the same thing, the knowledge of the Jewish religion and a deep meditation in it, created by independent thinking. This is still possible and necessary for every Jew. Necessary, because Jewish religiousness has its safe anchoring-ground neither in the blind acceptance for truth of certain religious dogmas, or in the performing of certain usages without investigation, nor even in a mystical sensation of the feeling, be it ever so lofty, but only and solely in the living spiritual comprehension of the contents of the dogma of religion itself. Nothing has therefore helped so much the debilitation of Judaism in recent times as the ignorance in all Jewish matters. In order to induce us to return earnestly to Judaism it is necessary that within us should come to life anew that contempt which originated in the Jewish spirituality and which at all times fell upon the am-ha-arez, the ignoramous in matters of religion, a scorn which has no equal among other people.

A Jewry, as we often see it today, that is cutting gemilut hasadim loose from the nourishing soil of the Law, yes, a Jewry that surrenders itself to indifference towards the Jewish doctrine and its further development, the more unconstrainedly it concentrates its entire power upon gemilut hasadim, such a Jewry is walking upon a wrong and dangerous path. The more dangerous as it is practicing a cultivation of robbery with the heritage of the fathers, it displays before our eyes a flourishing Judaism, but is deceiving us about how short lived all these blossoms are, how swiftly their end must come, as the soil from which alone they could gain durability is no longer taken care of, that soil which is nothing else than the living Jewish Law, or, which is one and the same thing, the living Jewish religion!

It is this Jewish Law which is constantly kept in fresh flow by the continually renewed occupation with the study of it, that is alone able to close up the widest circle which Judaism is capable of drawing within itself, the circle of Jewish solidarity, of Jewish feeling for communal life. Not the common race, not the blood relationship and not the common history are powerful enough to accomplish this, for otherwise apostasy from the Jewish religion would not extinguish the feeling of solidarity. The common Jewish Law—and there is special need today to emphasize this truth—alone forms the foundation for the Jewish community and determines the contents as well as the extent of the Jewish feeling of solidarity. We call ourselves in the Kedushah the people consisting of those who pronounce the Shemah in love and devotion twice daily, in the morning and in the evening. And truly, also today we cannot circumscribe the circle of Jewish feeling of solidarity in any better way than by saying: it embraces all those who may say it twice daily, or more seldom or not at all it embraces all those who recognize the Shemah Yisroel in any kind of a form in love as a common watchword and sign of recognition.

By the connection with the Jewish Law and be this ever so loose, every individual Jew becomes in some part a co-bearer of Judaism. This is the reason why Judaism is touched through the Jewish feeling by the act of an individual Jew, be it in a good or a bad sense. Every ignoble manner of action of a Jew in particular causes at once the Jewish feeling of solidarity to wake up, because the Jewry feels painfully the shadow which falls outwardly upon Judaism. But vice versa the lustre of Judaism also falls back upon every individual Jew. Also the last Jew is in truth still in some part inwardly tied to Judaism and can therefore not be bad as far as this part is concerned. For the sake of this part it is worth while to extend love even to the last Jew. Regarding the faults of the individual Judaism has only one standpoint and this is the standpoint of justice, its main and fundamental virtue, which alone can realize the moral aim of history. But just for this reason love dares to step to the side of justice, the love which is not extended to those mistakes but to the complete human being. It is that love for which the noble hearted Beruria, the wife of Rabbi Meir, invented the interpreting turn which has always remained alive in Israel: "Sin may perish, but not the sinner!" It is the same love in whose favor Gottfried Keller pleads when he says: "So is every mischief still tied to humanity with a small gold ribbon." It should be our aim to find and to lay hold on that small gold ribbon which still ties every Jew inwardly and in truth to Judaism. Not for the sake of the common affliction, but for the sake of that small gold ribbon we are permitted to adhere for all times and for all circumstances of time to the maxim "Kol Yisrael ahim," "All Jews are brothers!"

But as in Judaism every smaller ring always widens itself to a larger size, so it is here. For the thing that unites all Jews as brothers is, as we have seen, only the fundamental idea of Judaism, the idea of the one God and the humanity united under Him. It makes no difference with how much or how little firmness the common tie may bind the individual to the Jewish community, even the last feeble small ribbon also bears something of the golden lustre of the great ribbon which is rolling along through history. But this ribbon exposes openly a way out of this seemingly exclusiveness and when this is understood the community of co-religionists expands itself to the proportion of a community of all mankind. Looked upon in this light, the solidarity of all those who are born of woman beckons from behind the Jewish solidarity. The ring of the Jewish solidarity proves itself to be the ring of the solidarity of humanity. The conception of the Kiddush ha-shem, which was born directly out of the Jewish feeling of solidarity, which at the same time extends itself to all humanity, proves that this assertion that the Jews with all their exclusiveness always turn their looks to entire humanity is more than a theoretical construction. The Kiddush ha-shem, this peculiar creation of Jewish ethics, is the same sanctification of God which every noble deed effects before man when it is known to him, because such an act signifies for all who learn of it a visible victory of God's thought. To have achieved such a Kiddush ha-shem, or to signify it by his entire personality, is the highest that can be said of a Jew. In some way it is as though by every Kiddush ha-shem humanity is being helped to advance quite a visible distance ahead on its way towards its moral aim.

And so I have again arrived there whence I started, namely, at the faith in the moral aim of all development. But this aim, as dark and as endlessly far away it lies before us, it cannot be thought of for this earth in any other way than as I have already said, namely, a humanity morally united under God as the God of morality.

And so I could properly close my deductions. However, I am not merely following an outward form, but an inner necessity, when in connection with all these reflections I ask at the conclusion: In what relation does our closer union stand to all this? And I consider it as a direct proof of the accuracy of my train of thought if I can demonstrate here a complete harmony. In this happy situation I find myself today.

Our Order has made it its duty to unite Israelites for the highest and most ideal interests of humanity, to further develop and elevate the mental and moral character of our race and to inculcate into it the purest principles of honor and patriotism. Our Order, therefore, stands as its name already indicates, upon the soil of Judaism. But from this soil it strives to attain the best for the fatherland and for humanity. The best for humanity, for it is a humanity society, the best for the fatherland, for it is an Austrian humanity Society, and both came from the soil of Judaism, for it is a Jewish Society. And this society finds itself, according to its general tendencies, in full harmony with the tendencies of Judaism. But we can even establish more. Historical endurance and joyful confession of Judaism as radiations of the Jewish optimism must have been at work so that it could altogether dare to set this aim before itself. Jewish spirituality must illumine the way to this aim just as it lastingly renews its inner life in the unerring outlook upon this aim. Jewish piety and Jewish charity, the common feeling which is akin to the Jew and to humanity has at last created those creations each one of which is recognized as a kiddush hashem.

May these best characteristics of the Jewish nature remain true to us! They have proved true in the blessed times of peace which lie behind us, may they also prove true in the future and in the face of their mighty problems, so that this future, when it too has become the past, shall appear as a blessed one to the coming generation, blessed as a time of the unfolding of the Jewish nature.

THE JEWISH COMMUNITY AT GORIZIA.

The town of Gorizia, which has suffered severely through being bombarded by the Italian troops, has a Jewish community with a very long record. Jews resided there more than a thousand years ago, and for a great period in their history they were confined to a ghetto in the district now covered by the Via Ascoli. One of the most famous of modern Italian scholars, the late Professor Graziadio Ascoli, was a Jew who originally came from Gorizia, and the present Chief Rabbi of Alexandria, Professor Della Pergola, was at one time Rabbi in the first-named town. The Synagogue is a fine structure, built one hundred and fifty years ago, and possesses fifty Scrolls of the Law.

JEWISH PROFESSORS AT CONSTANTINOPLE UNIVERSITY.

Dr. Leo Schonmann, a lawyer, has been appointed Professor of Public Law at the University of Constantinople. This appointment raises to four the number of Jews who hold chairs at this University, the three others being Professor Moise Ventura, Roman Law, Professor Moise Cohen, Financial Science, and Professor Abraham Galante, Semitic Languages.

The President's Tribute to Brandeis

The following letter was sent by the President to Senator C. A. Culberson, giving reasons for nominating Mr. Brandeis for Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court:

"I am very much obliged to you for giving me an opportunity to make clear to the Judiciary Committee my reasons for nominating Mr. Louis D. Brandeis to fill the vacancy in the Supreme Court of the United States created by the death of Mr. Justice Lamar, for I am profoundly interested in the confirmation of the appointment by the Senate.

"There is probably no more important duty imposed upon the President in connection with the general Administration of the Government than that of naming members of the Supreme Court; and I need hardly tell you that I named Mr. Brandeis as a member of that great tribunal only because I knew him to be singularly qualified by learning, by gifts, and by character for the position.

Many charges have been made against Mr. Brandeis: The report of your subcommittee has already made it plain to you and to the country at large how unfounded those charges were. They threw a great deal more light upon the character and motives with whom they originated than upon the qualifications of Mr. Brandeis. I myself looked into them three years ago when I desired to make Mr. Brandeis a member of my Cabinet, and found that they proceeded for the most part from those who hated Mr. Brandeis because he had refused to be serviceable to them in the promotion of their own selfish interests, and from those whom they had prejudiced and misled. The propaganda in this matter has been very extraordinary and very distressing to those who love fairness and value the dignity of the great professions.

"I perceived from the first that the charges were intrinsically incredible by any one who had really known Mr. Brandeis. I have known him. I have tested him by seeking his advice upon some of the most difficult and perplexing public questions about which it was necessary for me to form a judgment. I have dealt with him in matters where nice questions of honor and fair play, as well as large questions of justice and the public benefit, were involved. In every matter in which I have made test of his judgment and point of view, I have received from him counsel singularly enlightening, singularly clear-sighted and judicial, and, above all, full of moral stimulation. He is a friend of all just men and a lover of the right, and he knows more than how to talk about the right—he knows how to set it forward in the face of its enemies. I knew from direct personal knowledge of the man what I was doing when I named him for the highest and most responsible tribunal of the nation.

"Of his extraordinary ability as a lawyer, no man who is competent to judge can speak with anything but the highest admiration. You will remember that in the opinion of the late Chief Justice Fuller he was the ablest man who ever appeared before the Supreme Court of the United States. He is also, the Chief Justice added, absolutely fearless in the discharge of his duties.

"Those who have resorted to him for assistance in settling great industrial disputes can testify to his fairness and love of justice. In the troublesome controversies between the garment workers and manufacturers of New York City, for example, he gave a truly remarkable proof of his judicial temperament and had what must have been the great satisfaction of rendering decisions which both sides were willing to accept as disinterested and even-handed.

"Mr. Brandeis has rendered many notable services to the city and State with which his professional life has been identified. He successfully directed the difficult campaign which resulted in obtaining cheaper gas for the city of Boston. It was chiefly under his guidance and through his efforts that legislation was secured in Massachusetts which authorized savings banks to issue insurance policies for small sums at much reduced rates. And some gentlemen who tried very hard to obtain control by the Boston elevated railway company of the subways of the city for a period of ninety-nine years can probably testify as to his ability as the people's advocate, when public interests call for an effective champion. He rendered those services without compensation, and earned, whether he got it or not, the gratitude of every citizens of the State and the city he served.

"These are but a few of the services of this kind he has freely rendered. It will hearten friends of community and public rights throughout the country to see his quality signally recognized by his elevation to the Supreme Bench. For the whole country is aware of his quality, and is interested in this appointment.

"I did not, in making choice of Mr. Brandeis, ask for or depend on 'endorsements.' I acted upon public knowledge and personal acquaintance with the man, and preferred to name a lawyer for this great office whose abilities and character were so widely recognized that he needed no endorsement. I did, however, personally consult many men in whose judgment I had great confidence, and, am happy to say, was supported in my selection by the voluntary recommendation of the Attorney-General of the United States, who urged Mr. Brandeis upon my consideration independently of any suggestion from me.

"Let me say by way of summing up, my dear Senator, that I nominated Mr. Brandeis for the Supreme Court because it was, and is, my deliberate judgment that, of all the men now at the bar whom it has been my privilege to observe, test, and know, he is exceptionally qualified. I cannot speak too highly of his impartial, impersonal, orderly, and constructive mind, his rare analytical powers, his deep human sympathy, his profound acquaintance with the historical roots of our institutions and insight into their spirit, or of the many evidences he has given of being imbued to the very heart with our American ideals of justice and equality of opportunity; of his knowledge of modern economic conditions and of the way they bear upon the masses of the people; or of his genius in getting persons to unite in common and harmonious action and look with frank and kindly eyes into each other's minds, who had before been heated antagonists. This friend of justice and of men will ornament the high court of which we are justly proud.

"I am glad to have had the opportunity to pay this tribute of admiration and of confidence; and I beg that your committee will accept this nomination as coming from me quick with a sense of public obligation and responsibility.

"WOODROW WILSON."

Dr. Edward N. Calisch Honored at Anniversary

Distinguished co-religionists from many sections of the country assembled in Richmond for the three notable services held at Beth Ahabah Temple in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the synagogue and for the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rabbinate of Dr. Edward N. Calisch.

Exercises began with regular Friday evening services on May 26, 1916, participated in by some of the leading Rabbis of the country, including Rev. Dr. William Rosenau, Baltimore, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis; Rev. Dr. Louis Wolsey, of Cleveland, president of the Alumni Association of Hebrew Union College; Rev. Dr. Abraham Simon, Rabbi of the Washington Hebrew Congregation; and Rabbi L. D. Mendoza, of the Ohev Sholom Congregation of Norfolk.

The program for the celebrations were so arranged as to have a prominent speaker address the congregation at each of the three services. The first two services were devoted chiefly to the observance of Dr. Calisch's silver anniversary, and on Sunday night the exercises were in commemoration of the diamond jubilee of the congregation.

Dr. Calisch came to Richmond in 1891, and has been actively identified with the work of his congregation ever since. He has gained a wide reputation as a forceful and eloquent man in the American Jewish pulpit and is a prominent figure in all movements which have for their object the betterment of existing conditions. In the world of literature he is an author of no little reputation. As a B'nai B'rith he has been most active in the furtherance of the Order's aims and objects. He has been a member of the Executive Committee of the Order representing District No. 5 for the past fifteen years.

Among the many congratulatory messages received by Dr. E. N. Calisch on the twenty fifth anniversary of his ministry at Temple Beth Ahabah, coming from all denominations, is the following from Rev. Edward Leigh Pell, D. D., a distinguished Methodist minister and writer:

"My Dear Dr. Calisch:—The life of a recluse, such as I have been compelled to live for many years, though seemingly the narrowest of all lives, is not wanting in opportunities for uncolored visions or unbiased judgments; and I hope I shall not be regarded as merely emotional when I say, as I am now glad to say, that in my opinion no man has done so much for the spread of Catholic ideas and the Catholic spirit among us, for the development of our sense of human kinship, for the destruction of senseless prejudices and for the encouragement of a cordial sympathy and understanding between races as you have done in your twenty-five years of distinguished service in this city.

"In many ways you have helped to quicken our consciousness of the essential unity of humanity You have helped us to realize that as God is one so his people are one. You have helped the hearts of Jew and Gentile to beat together; you have helped Hebrew and Christian to believe in each other; you have helped us to remember that as the heart of the Eternal is wonderfully kind so His children should be not merely tolerant but kind—wonderfully kind—toward one another.

"I hope that you will live to see the day when, through the influence of your spirit and teaching, the last vestige of the most inexcusable of all prejudices shall have vanished from among us. Great as your work has been there is still enough of this sin among our people to make us hang our heads in shame. I presume there are still some Jews who are unable to understand how any good thing can come out of Nazareth, but I confess I have neither the heart nor the face to complain while so many of my own people are still blind to the good that has come out of Jerusalem. There are some things in this world of which [illegible] are proud but as a Christian the thing that humiliates me most of all is the [illegible] social attitude of many Christian women, which, more than anything else it seems to me, has delayed the day of perfect amity between Jew and Gentile. Women, I suppose, will be the last mystery to be solved, and I therefore expect to remain more or less mystified to the end, but I should like very much before I go to understand [illegible] is in the heart of a Christian woman that makes her do one thing. I [illegible] understand what it is that [illegible] after growing up with a [illegible] whom she has learned to [illegible] to her in subsequent [illegible] help in all her fine philantrophies; after raving over her beauty, her talent, her cleverness, her charming personality, her gentleness of spirit, her purity of heart; after saying a thousand times that she should grace the highest social station in the land, and, above all, after assuring herself that this friend of her girlhood has the bluest of blue blood in her veins, that kings and poets and prophets adorn her ancestral line, and that she comes of a race that gave to the world Him whom she calls her Lord and Master—I should like, I say, to know what is in the heart of this Christian woman that prompts her the moment she enters a social club to turn and slam the door in the face of the sister of her Christ!

"I am sure that your own immediate friends and congregation are not more grateful for your achievements than many others among our own people who, though bearing a different name, are proud to think of you as a leader among us; and it is with a keen sense of obligation that I am sending you with this feeble apreciation of my own sincere thanks and congratulations upon the completion with honor of these twenty-five fruitful and noble spent years. May the blessing of God rest upon you and yours, and may He spare you for at least another quarter of a century of equally fruitful service in our community.

"Very sincerely yours,

(Signed)

"EDWARD LEIGH PELL."

"THE RABBI."

ADDRESS BY DR. WM. ROSENAU AT ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES.

It is hardly necessary for me to state that I feel deeply honored to have been invited to participate in this, your double celebration. While I am here as the presiding officer of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, I am also here as the personal friend of this congregation and as an old friend of its spiritual leader. Congregations are rarely known to have grown as steadily in numbers and influence, as has Beth Ahabah of Richmond. Your three-quarters of a century is rich in accomplishment. Much of that which now redounds to your glory is undoubtedly due to your co-operation in congregational endeavor and your loyalty to Jewish ideals. Most of it, however, must be regarded as the fruit of the labor of the hands of your ministry, most important in which has been the man who has stood at your head for these twenty-five years.

I cannot allow the occasion to pass without first and foremost congratulating your congregation and your worthy Rabbi, hoping and praying that whatever has been the praiseworthy work of both you and him, will prove but an earnest of more praiseworthy endeavor in years to come, to be brought to fruition by the help and grace of divine Providence.

It is indeed meet, that one of the themes for discussion on this festival should be "The Rabbi." And may I say, that I feel delighted that the treatment of this theme has been assigned to me.

The Rabbi's function in the community has changed with the centuries. The conditions existing at any one time narrow or broaden the Rabbi's responsibilities and prerogatives. Let me ask you to consider what the Rabbi was prior to these days of every religion's readjustment to the spirit of the times. He was a student of the closet. His labors were in the realm of Jewish scholarship. To it indeed he was confined.

I do not by any means fail to appreciate his restrictions. They were justified by the demands of the hour. In fact, had the Rabbi of the olden days not devoted himself solely to the preservation and development of Jewish scholarship "eo ipso," much of that, which we prize as our Jewish heritage, might have been lost amid the storm and stress of the days of persecution.

The Rabbi of today, while obliged to cultivate the science of Jewish learning, is obliged to enter into the various phases of the Jewish social life with directive power. I can picture him to thebest advantage by quoting a passage from Sacred Writ. It is taken from that part of the Book of Hosea, which is the prophetical portion to be read tomorrow in the synagogues throughout the land. It runs: "I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness and in mercies. I will betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and thou shalt know the Lord." (Hosea 2 21-22.)

It is not my intention to mislead you. I would not have you imagine that these words were spoken with reference to the relationship on the part of the minister to the congregation. It pictures the relationship which the prophet conceived to exist between God and Israel. God was known to be the husband. Israel was declared to be God's wife. Similarly, let us say, that because the spiritual leader of your community proclaims to his people the saving message of divine truth, he, on his part, must be ready to promise to his congregation loyalty and devotion characteristic of marital conditions

Yes, the Rabbi is to betroth the congregation unto himself forever, if that is possible. The possibility alone can exist provided the Rabbi has a sense of righteousness, exercises judgment, shows mercy, evinces loving kindness and exhibits faithfulness. All these virtues must be his, not only in his official capacity, as minister at the altar of God, but also as friend among the people, as worker in the social life and as champion of philanthropy. He must never forget that of all the forces of civilization, religion of which he is the exponent, is the most powerful and the most effectual. Only in the degree in which these virtues are manifested and cultivated by him, can the people whom he leads be expected to know God in belief and practice.

The Rabbi is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts as was the prophet of old and the priest who preceded the prophet. Of the Rabbi it can be said, in very truth: "His lips are to guard knowledge and the law are the people to seek from his mouth." And when I speak of "knowledge" and of "law" I refer to that knowledge and that law which bear the divine stamp of truth, and are sure to further the well-being of the social order and the happiness of mankind.

No congregation knows the sacrifices a Rabbi—and for all that any preacher—is obliged to make in order to measure up to the standard which I have just expounded. They are sacrifices of pleasure, leisure, strength and health. Nothing that a constituency can do for its minister to honor him can ever be hoped to repay him for all that he was obliged to do as a worker in the vineyard of the Lord.

I do not desire to indulge in personalities. But I believe I am not exaggerating his worth when I say, that the man whom today you have gathered together to honor, has done for you all that which is implied in the text I have chosen as a basis of my remarks on this occasion: "I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies. I will betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and thou shalt know the Lord." Whatever knowledge of the Lord you possess and you apply, is the result of your Rabbi's instruction.

Tomorrow there will be opened in the course of the Pentateuchal reading, the fourth book of the Mosaic dispensation. In that fourth book I see by way of comparison with the others, an intimation of the great text to which the Rabbi is subjected. If Genesis may be made to stand for the Rabbi's fitness, Exodus for the necessity of his instruction and Leviticus for his consecration, then Numbers, which covers for Israel the greater period of its wandering, must needs stand for the period of the Rabbi's activity. Just as in the days of which the Book of Numbers speaks, the Israelites were tried and tested in a thousand and one ways, so the Rabbi, in the course of his active career, is tried and tested. When at least he stands at the completion of his work and he enters the period of Deuteronomy, which signifies the review of all his past service and teaching, all the reward that he can, should and does expect, is the consciousness that he has labored in that spirit of righteousness, judgment, loving kindness, mercy and faithfulness, for which his profession calls.

May God spare your Rabbi to witness in distant days to come, amid health and strength, with not a single one of his powers diminished, the rich fruition of his honest labors, so that the life he has lived among you may be an inspiration to the Rabbis in Israel in days to come.

JEWISH COMMUNITY OF DUBLIN.

In Dublin, the Irish capital, which has been the center of the world's interest during the past weeks, there is a Jewish population of nearly 3000 souls. There is no real "ghetto," but the Jews are scattered all over the city. The Jewish community has several J. P.'s, the most prominent of whom is Mr. M. E. Solomons, formerly Consul General for Austria-Hungary. There is a Jew, Mr. Isaacs, on the City Council. The Jews have one large synagogue, on Adelaide road near Leeson street. There is also a Jewish Board of Guardians, Zionist and literary societies and various Chevrahs. Nearly all the Jews of Ireland, numbering 6000, come from Russia. Most of the Dublin Jews are strictly observant and the Sabbath is generally kept holy.

MASS MEETING AT CHICAGO TO RAISE FUNDS FOR JEWISH WAR SUFFERERS.

A gigantic public meeting for the relief of Jewish War Sufferers was held at the Auditorium Theater on Thursday, May 18, 1916. The following speakers addressed the meeting: Rt. Rev. Mgr. Francis E. Kelley, representing his Grace the Archbishop; Dr. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Hon. Wm. J. Calhoun and Dr. J. L. Magnes. Levy Mayer, owing to the illness of Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, presided.

The Executive Committee having charge of this meeting issued the following appeal to all co-religionists in the city requesting their presence at the meeting:

"We appeal to the human sympathy of America and to the conscience of the world.

"More than half the Jews of the world are in the eastern theater of the European conflict. They have endured the inevitable hardships of war. Their cities and villages have been devastated by three invasions of opposing armies, and are threatened by a fourth. They are facing utter annihilation.

"Hundreds of thousands—the aged and infirm, women and children, mothers and babies—by decrees of expulsion have been driven from their homes, native villages and provinces with cruelties unspeakable and horrors unbelievable.

"Whatever relief may have been brought to others in distress, three million Jews—innocent non-combatants, unfortunate victims—are face to face with death from exposure, starvation and plague. The Rockefeller Foundation reports: 'Conditions in eastern Europe are much worse than the worst in Belgium.'"

On the evening preceding the mass meeting, a dinner was given by Mr. Julius Rosenwald to about one hundred prominent co-religionists, at which the details of the campaign for contributions were worked out.

The appeal sent out by the Committee was strengthened by the public statement issued and signed by the following men: Victor F. Lawson, Ernest A. Hamill, David B. Forgan, Geo. M. Reynolds, Walter S. Brewster, William B. Kelley and Charles G. Dawes.

"In Chicago, as throughout the United States," their message declared, "the Jews have always responded most liberally whenever there has been any distress to relieve or any philanthropic purpose to serve. We express our earnest hope that the people of Chicago will appreciate the unusual character of this appeal, the worthiness of the cause, and will co-operate with their Jewish neighbors in a great human task."

As a result of the eloquent appeals the sum of over $400,000 was pledged by those present. Since the meeting committees have been actively at work gathering subscriptions from those who for various reasons were unable to attend the mass meeting. At the present writing the sum of $500,000, originally set as the goal, has been exceeded and the Committee has set a new goal, namely, $600,000.

It is most gratifying to the B'nai B'rith News that of the sum of $500,000 gathered more than $100,000 was contributed by members of the I. O. B. B.

CONVENTION OF ORTHODOX RABBIS.

The Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada held their 13th annual convention at the Broadway Central Hotel, New York, on Sunday, May 14, 1916. Some of the matters discussed were relief of young Rabbinical students suffering in the war zone, ways and means of strengthening the religious feeling in children of orthodox parents, and the effect of the Gary system on the religious schools

The Rabbis passed resolutions opposing the feature of the Gary plan which provides for the absence of pupils from schools for religious instruction elsewhere. It was held that the Gary plan, in its present form, would introduce religious quarrels in the schools.

Resolutions were also adopted against the establishment among Jewish communities of radical schools which omit all reference to religion. It was urged that all Jewish schools should be placed under the supervision of Rabbis. The convention also went on record in favor of establishing more religious schools for Jewish children.

DR. WEISELBERGER KNIGHTED.

Dr. Weiselberger, the Jewish mayor of Czernowitz, who had been taken a prisoner by the Russians because he would not disclose the names of the prominent citizens of the town, whom the Russians wished to take as prisoners, and who was subsequently released, was lately raised to the nobility by the order of Emperor Francis Joseph.

The 64th annual convention of the District Grand Lodge was held at the B'nai B'rith Building, in the city of Cleveland, on Sunday, May 21, 1916. Delegates representing Lodges in seven states comprising the District were in attendance.

The convention was opened with prayer by Rabbi Morris M. Feuerlicht, of Indianapolis, and this was followed by addresses of welcome on the part of Hon. L. T. Beeman, Director of Public Welfare; Homer H. Johnson, ex-president of the Chamber of Commerce; and Brother W. Weidenthal, president of Cleveland Lodge. Brother Karl M. Vetsburg made a fitting response.

The convention was thereupon organized and the Grand Lodge degree was conferred upon a number of past presidents.

The message of President Samuel J. Kornhauser followed. In his message he referred extensively to the propaganda campaign that was waged during the past year within the District and the wonderful results achieved thereby. He called attention to the necessity of training the new members to a deep sense of obligation and unfailing loyalty to the principles of the Order. The message of the president was received with marked demonstrations of approval.

Brother Victor Abraham, as secretary of the District Grand Lodge, then submitted his report, from which an increase of membership from 5,351 to 8,711 was apparent. The financial and statistical report of the secretary showed the District in a most excellent condition.

Dr. Simon Peiser, superintendent of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum, presented his report in which he spoke of the 500 orphans who are now inmates and expressing the belief in the desirability of moving the home to a new and better location.

This was followed by the report of Brother Jacob Furth as chairman of the Endowment Committee.

In the evening there was a musical, attended by a large number of delegates, members of the Order and their friends. The affair was held in the B'nai B'rith Building, and was brought to a close with a ball.

Monday Morning Session.

The Monday morning session was opened with an invocation by Rabbi Joseph S. Kornfeld of Columbus, Ohio.

Reports of the Committee on Endowment, of the secretary and treasurer, and of the General Committee were presented and considered .

A special feature of the morning session was an address by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, director of the Social Service Department of the Order. He spoke of the efforts of the Social Service Bureau to get Jews back to the land, of the successful movement to organize Big Brother Clubs, and the establishment of Free Employment Bureaus in the various Jewish centers.

Prof. Dr. Gotthard Deutsch of Cincinnati submitted report on the condition of the Jews in belligerent countries. He pleaded for their betterment and careful study and investigation of conditions.

During the day various amendments to existing laws were considered and acted upon, among them the basis of representation at the Grand Lodge conventions was changed.

In the evening the ladies attending the convention were entertained at a performance at the Hippodrome, as guests of the local committee.

Tuesday's Sessions.

The session opened with prayer by Dr. Samuel Sale of St. Louis. The main feature of the meeting was the adoption of the constitution and a discussion which resulted in a definite decision approving the plan for the establishment of a new Orphan Asylum in Cuyahoga County at at approximate cost of $1,000,000.

Resolutions were adopted asking the United States Government to intercede in behalf of the Jews in Russia.

The immigration bill pending before Congress was declared objectionable on account of its literacy feature, and resolution was adopted expressing opposition to the passage of this bill. Copies of the foregoing resolutions were ordered sent to the president of the United States and members of Congress.

Brother Jacob Furth of St. Louis was re-elected trustee of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum and Brother Martin A. Marx was elected to fill the vacancy on the board of trustees caused by the death of Kaufman Hays.

The convention appropriated $100 for the maintenance of the National Farm School; the sum of $1,500 was voted toward the maintenance of the Leo N. Levi Hospital at Hot Springs. It was resolved that increased emphasis be placed on the work of the Educational League.

It was further decided that the General Committee be requested to stimulate the activities of the Orphan Asylum and other institutions.

Cincinnati was chosen for the 1917 convention.

The election and installation of officers brought the convention to a close. The following officers were elected: Karl M. Vetsburg of St. Louis, president; Louis J. Borinstein of Indianapolis, first vice-president; Joseph Seligman of Louisville, second vice-president; Victor Abraham, Cincinnati, secretary; William Ornstein, Cincinnati, treasurer. Members of the General Committee: Harry Levison, Toledo; Harry J. Levi, Cincinnati; Phil Scheir, Kansas City; Rabbi Louis Bernstein, Joplin, Mo.; Sidney G. Kusworm, Dayton; Joseph Stampfer, St. Louis.

The convention adjourned following the benediction by Rabbi Alexander of Toledo.

Report of the Committee on National and International Questions.

To the District Grand Lodge No. 2, I. O. B. B.

Your Committee on National and International Questions begs leave to submit the following report:

The present war presses upon us the consideration of problems, both national and international, such as the Jew has never before been called upon to face. Calamities as well as opportunities may present themselves as a result of the war; how to prepare to meet either must be the burden of our thought and concern.

We are irrevocably committed to the inextinguishable hope that the world, as it rolls upon the wheels of progress and civilization, will bring opportunities for relief rather than for oppression, and, with this in view, we are constrained to believe that now is the time to call for a final solution of what is thoughtlessly termed the Jewish question. This question is, how to secure for the Jew complete recognition as a citizen of the country of which he forms a part and for which he has been so unstintingly pouring out his life blood as evidence of his loyalty and patriotism.

Our attention is therefore immediately directed to the impossibility of the position of the Jew, politically and economically, in Russia and Roumania. Russia's atrocious treatment of the Jew is proverbial. Notwithstanding that according to modest estimates no less than 385,000 Jews, more than one-half of their number capable of bearing arms, are marching under Russia's standard today, still she is as oppressive as ever —under the circumstances even more oppressive than ever—toward her Jewish subjects. With these facts before it, the rest of the civilized world stands aghast and must resolve that when this hateful war shall have ended, the Jew of Russia shall finally come into possession of those rights which belong to him as a citizen.

We therefore recommend that District Grand Lodge No. 2, I. O. B. B., request the United States Government, true to its traditions as the champion of the oppressed of all lands, to exert its utmost in the council of the nations to accomplish this end.

No better are the conditions of the Jew in Roumania. There, too, he is the victim of every possible discrimination. Though bound by the treaty of Berlin to grant the Jew full rights of citizenship, she has wilfully violated her international obligations—nay, more, in annexing portions of Bulgaria, where the Jews had enjoyed all the rights of citizens, contrary to the fundamental principles of the law of nations, she deliberately deprived them of those rights.

We therefore recommend that in the Congress of Nations following the close of the war, the signatory powers shall reiterate these treaty obligations, and insist that, failing to carry them out, Roumania shall forfeit the respect of the nations.

The shifting of boundary lines, which may be anticipated as the result of the present world conflict, is apt to intensify sectionalism among our people, and strengthened by a short sighted policy, some of our co-religionists may overlook what they owe to our brethren in distress. We therefore express the hope that wherever the question of the rights of Jews in territories changing their sovereignty shall arise, no Jew will forget that it is his duty to extend a helping hand, and we therefore request the Executive Committee to transmit this expression of our sentiments to the European Grand Lodges.

Galicia—Although in Austria the constitution of December 20, 1867, vouchsafed to the Jew complete equality, the political and religious conditions of Galicia have retarded the progress of the Jewish masses. Economic conditions have affected the proverbial purity of Jewish womanhood, which, though percentually insignificant, is a burning shame, the more so because the panderer, unfortunately not infrequently is of our own people and finds in the poverty stricken towns of that unfortunate country the most fertile field for his execrable activity. The law of Israel, which places the protection of womanly purity on a level with the protection of human life, makes it our solemn duty not to stand idly by the blood of our brother.

We therefore recommend that our Executive Committee enter into correspondence with the Lodges in Austria to determine how the Lodges in this country can co-operate in this work of protection.

Palestine—Aside from any controversy over the question of the place which Palestine is to occupy in the future history of the Jewish people, our Order, destined to unite Israelites the world over, must consider the Palestinian relief work as a matter of supreme importance. It is our duty, however, not only to relieve the temporary distress now commanding our exclusive attention, but also to continue our interest after the war in the cause of charity and education. The work of agricultural colonization, so conspicuously and successfully inaugurated by Baron Edmond de Rothschild, the noble scion of an historic family, ought not to be permitted to suffer by reason of the calamitous conditions that have befallen Palestine. Nor ought the educational institutions which have so auspiciously started out upon the work of combatting pauperism and of raising both the intellectual and the moral status of the Jews in the land of our fathers, be forgotten.

We recommend to our Lodges that they assist in this admirable work and inaugurate a campaign of renewed activity when, with the end of the war, the problem shall have become more clearly defined.

Rural Settlements—Although we feel no necessity for apology for the fact that historic conditions, not of our own making, have turned the Jew largely to commercial activity, the fact should not be overlooked that our people in this land of freedom and opportunity should furnish their pro rata to agricultural pursuits, if Israel is again to return to the normal conditions of its former life.

Of the various attempts to bring about this end, experience has shown that none has proved to be more productive of results than small rural neighborhoods adjoining cities with large Jewish centers.

We recommend this Grand Lodge to urge upon the constituent Lodges cooperation with the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society, which has labored so successfully and nobly in this field.

Organization—United as we are in our aims, we must wish that the grave problems with which we shall be confronted at the close of the war, be faced by American Israel undivided. Let there be no division in the household of Israel. The hope expressed in our ancient liturgy, "The Lord who so miraculously saved our fathers from all perils will save us through the brotherhood of an united Israel," we still offer with sincere faith.

We recommend our Executive Committee, in whose well proved wisdom we place implicit trust, to use its best efforts in the accomplishment of this fervently desired and originally needed end.

Immigration—Standing upon the platform proclaimed by Israel's great lawgiver, that there shall be one law and one statute for the native and the alien alike, we renew our protest against any restriction on immigration other than that aimed to exclude the criminal and the defective; and while the literacy test will scarcely affect our people, we consider this clause in the bill now pending, as unnecessary from the viewpoint of protecting the interests of this country; fundamentally subversive of the principles of Americanism, and unjust to people who are essentially the victims of maladministration.

We recommend that a copy of this portion of our report be transmitted to the president of the United States and to each member of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Report of Committee on Resolutions.

To the District Grand Lodge No. 2, I. O. B. B.:

The past year has been one of the most remarkable in the entire history of District No. 2, and your representatives justifiably looked forward to an equally notable convention and meeting, and it is hardly necessary to declare that these expectations have been abundantly realized. Cleveland Lodge and the Cleveland Jewish community have always stood at the forefront of B'nai B'rith activity, and this meeting here has been unusually appropriate and timely. Cleveland, the city where is located the Orphan Asylum, the institution nearest to our hearts and the pride of our Order, the home of President Samuel J. Kornhauser and of so many of our honored and revered past presidents, the proud possessor of the first B'nai B'rith Building in the District and the home city of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, has well merited its reputation as a center of Jewish influence.

We congratulate Cleveland Lodge upon its magnificent home, and confidently believe and hope that the convenience and the pleasure that it has afforded us in our deliberations during this meeting will prove an inspiration and stimulus for the establishment of B'nai B'rith Buildings by many other Lodges of this District

We appreciate the warmth, the cordiality and sincerity of the welcomes extended to us on behalf of the municipality of Cleveland by the Honorable Lamar T. Beman and Homer H. Johnson, Esq.

Our thanks are due to Brother Rudolph I. Coffee for his coming and for his eloquent and instructive address, and the broad view that he has given us of the activities of the Social Service Department and the Anti-Defamation League. The work of these two bureaus exemplify, to a high degree, the principles of the Order and supplement its high idealism. We also thank Brother Rabbi Louis Bernstein for his able and eloquent address on the "Watchword of the Order" and on the humane service to which we are pledged.

Our sincere thanks are due to the brothers of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, to the Jewish citizens of Cleveland and to the General Committee on the convention. Every want and need of the delegates and visitors has been anticipated. Our visit has been a most enjoyable and deligtful one, and we shall depart with grateful recollections and memories of their boundless and fraternal hospitality.

We acknowledge our obligations to the ladies of Cleveland, the Women's Auxiliary Committee and the Cleveland Council of Jewish Women for their tireless efforts and the splendid entertainment they have extended to the visiting ladies.

Among so many who have manifestly contributed their time, their thought and their labors, it would here be impracticable to mention all who are deserving of special thanks, but we cannot refrain from commending specially the constant and untiring attendance and thoughtfulness of Brother Max E. Meisel, chairman of the General Committee of the convention; of Brother A. Lewenthal, and of Brother William Weidenthal, president of Cleveland Lodge.

We are grateful to Brother Simon Peiser, superintendent of the Orphan Asylum, and to his able corps of assistants, for the splendid reception given our delegates. We are specially grateful to the children of that institution for the entertainment which demonstrated so impressively the thorough training they are receiving.

The thanks of the convention are due to all of the retiring officers of District No. 2 for the successful administration of its affairs during the past year, and especially to President Samuel J. Kornhauser for his uniform courtesy and constant efforts on behalf of the Order. We recommend that the incoming General Committee be authorized to provide a suitable testimonial to him in appreciation of his able work and as evidence of the respect and regard in which he is held by the members of District Grand Lodge No. 2.

We thank the Jewish Independent for the complimentary B'nai B'rith edition of that splendid paper, and the local press for the attention and publicity they have so generously accorded us and our proceedings.

We recommend that copies of this report be transmitted for publication to the B'nai B'rith News and to the Jewish Independent, and that a copy be sent to Cleveland Lodge No. 16.

RUSSIAN GOVERNOR AND POGROM PANIC.

The Governor of Oryol has reprimanded the Chief of Police of Priansk for creating a pogrom panic in the town by means of an official accusation that the Jews were responsible for the high prices of food. The Liberal organs demand that the Government should categorically prohibit all such maneuvers of anti-Semitic officials.

JEWISH SOCIAL SERVICE BUREAU OF LONDON LODGE I. O. B. B.

A Useful Movement.

No communal movement in recent times has been more inherent with possibilities of usefulness than the Jewish Bureau of Social Service recently founded by the B'nai B'rith. Broadly, the aim of the Bureau is to bring institutions in need of workers into touch with men able to devote a portion of their leisure time to communal work. It was no doubt a little venturesome to embark upon a new organization of this kind during wartime when public attention is absorbed by great national issues. But it is just at this time of crisis that the work of the Bureau is most needed. Most of our institutions have been sadly depleted of their male workers and find it a matter of extreme difficulty to maintain their normal activities. This particularly applies to the Boys' Clubs, which depend for their control upon the services of young workers.

It is an undoubted fact that the number of active communal workers bears a very small proportion to the forces available, and no organized effort has hitherto been made to remedy the deficiency. There has been no center where gentlemen willing to do a certain amount of work have been able to go for information and advice. The Bureau supplies this need. Its Committee is composed of men associated with varied fields of communal endeavor. The Boys' Clubs, School Care Committees, the Board of Guardians, and other leading institutions are represented. Would-be workers can, therefore, obtain first-hand information concerning the work most likely to be congenial to them. The Bureau has announced that it contemplates the issue of leaflets dealing with forms of work for which there is a constant demand for workers; leaflets concerning Boys' Clubs and School Care Committees are in course of preparation.

There are many directions in which the work of the Bureau may develop. The close touch that it will be able to maintain with our institutions should place it in a position to draw attention to directions in which communal organizations may be improved, and if it works in a scientific spirit it may fulfil many of the functions of the Society for Jewish Statistics (founded by the present President of the B'nai B'rith some years ago), the untimely demise of which was regretted in many quarters.

It is to be hoped that the facilities afforded by the Bureau will be largely taken advantage of. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. Maurice Myers, who may be addressed care The British Institute for Social Service, 1 Central Buildings, Tothill Street, Westminister.—London Jewish Chronicle.

LAWYERS INTERCEDE FOR JEWS.

During a convention of Russian lawyers which was recently held in Petrograd the question of the restrictions against Jewish lawyers was freely discussed by those present and a resolution was unanimously adopted to petition the government to remove all restrictions from Jews in the legal profession. The resolution was forwarded to the Premier. Jews are allowed to practice law in Russia only in a very limited number and even the associate lawyers number but few Jews among them.

EXPULSION OF JEWS IN RUMANIA.

The Rumanian police authorities have again become very active in expelling Jews from towns and villages, where they lived for many generations, on the ground that they had no right of domicile there because they were considered as foreigners. The condition of these expelled Jews is terrible, because the large cities are already overcrowded and there is no outlet beyond the boundary line. A well-known Rumanian general, M. [illegible], came out with a strong protest against this action of the government, pointing out the services which the Jews rendered the country in the last Balkan war and their readiness to serve the country should a time of need come again. This protest made a very favorable impression in political circles and the question was even taken up at one of the recent sessions of the Rumanian Parliament when it caused a very stormy debate among the deputies.

JEWS AS GENERALS IN AUSTRIAN ARMY.

From Austria the decoration of Major General Karl Schwarz commanding a Landsturm brigade has been reported. There are at least three Jewish generals [illegible] in the Austrian army of whom Adolph von Kornhaber holds the highest rank as lieutenant field marshal. The [illegible] of colonels commanding regiments are not all known, but they must be considerable for two were prominently mentioned in connection with the [illegible] in the Balkans.

DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 7,

Independent Order B'nai B'rith.
Office of the President.
Shreveport, La., May 29, 1916.

To the Officers and Members of the Lodges of District No. 7, I. O. B. B.

My Dear Brethren:

I am enclosing a copy of resolutions adopted by Louisiana Lodge No. 107, of this City, which I would thank you to read at the next meeting of your Lodge, and I will appreciate your views thereon. The purpose of these resolutions is to stimulate the membership of all local Lodges, and to emphasize that our Institution has ideals other than that of a Humane, Charitable and Philanthropic nature.

You, no doubt, have had the same experience as I in propaganda, by being repeatedly told that our Order is not needed in dispensing charity. The response is given in the set of resolutions herewith enclosed, as our Order promotes intellectual culture, develops character, intensifies our Jewish ideals, and fosters our social relations. It is the hand-maiden of the Synagogue in preserving our Jewish entity, and acts as a beacon light to those of our Faith in living in communities where we have no houses of worship to inspire them with the Inspirations and Aspirations of Israel. The cry is loud, and the cause urgent, and I entreat your especial efforts in such communities, and among such members of our Faith where apathy exists. The Jew who lives in villages or in the smaller towns, should be aroused to a sense of his duty to the Faith of his Fathers, and to the lessons of his Youth and Infancy.

By concerted action of the Brethren of District Number Seven, our membership could be easily increased one thousand, and our enthusiasm intensified through such a laudable undertaking.

Please let me hear from you just what I may reasonably expect in the way of your individual efforts, as well as the efforts of your local lodge; what nearby communities exist through which the membership of your local lodge may be increased; what prospects there are for increase in membership in your local communities; and I would thank you to suggest such towns or cities where sufficient numbers of our Faith live and new lodges could be instituted.

Thanking you in advance in anticipation of your most hearty cooperation, and, with fraternal greetings, I am,

Yours in Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony. E. R. BERNSTEIN, President.

SWISS JEWS AND PEACE.

A number of prominent Jews in Switzerland have formed a committee to which they have given the name of "Pro Causa Judaica." They propose to take action in that country and in other neutral States in the interests of Jews directly affected by the war on lines parallel to those on which Jews in the United States are working. The committee has issued an appeal to politicians and intellectuals in Switzerland and has received promises of support from members of the two Representative Houses. The committee will press for an opportunity to be given to Jews at the coming peace negotiations to claim the grant of full rights for those who do not now enjoy them.

JEWS CHARGED WITH POGROM.

A remarkable trial will soon take place at Kieff. Thirty-one Jewish residents of Lubar (Volhynia) will be tried for having organized, in September, 1913, a pogrom against Christians. A hundred witnesses have been summoned.

THE B'NAI B'RITH AND CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE.

its hills, its fields of wheat and barley, its plantations of vines and fig trees, made upon the Israelites is profusely interspersed throughout Biblical literature. "A land that flowed with milk and honey" was the promise held out to our forefathers, and this promise cannot be applied to commercial pursuits. The Song of Deborah and the Book of Ruth, with its significant picture of fields of waving grain and Ruth following after the gleaners to pick up her measure of barley, represent a people given to the enjoyment of agricultural pursuits. The love for agriculture became so ingrained in the Jew that the trader was as contemptuously held by him as many of the present occupations of the Jew are held by some of his present day neighbors.

This attachment to the soil and its cultivation continued until the great catastrophe came upon the land in the conquest of Palestine and the destruction of Jerusalem. From the time of the dispersion from their native land, until recent times, there have been numerous attempts to bring the Jew back to the cultivation of the soil, but it was not until perhaps the middle of the nineteenth century that any concerted effort was made in this direction, although we have evidences that as far back as the beginning of the last century, efforts at colonization, successful for the time being, were made. It is true that a number of these movements have been due to the aid of philanthropic co-religionists, nevertheless, there are many instances that the Jew has been anxious of his own initiative to take up farming as a livelihood.

Students of Jewish affairs are familiar with the colonization enterprises of the Jew in Palestine, in Russia, in Argentina and in America, and although many have been prone to say that these efforts have resulted in nothing but failure, that whatever may have been the agricultural instinct of the Jew in Biblical times, the modern Jew is of a commercial and industrial nature, and is entirely unfitted for the farm. There are, nevertheless, those who hold to the opinion that the commercial and industrial life of the Jew is the result of unjust restrictions and religious persecution, that the agricultural instinct is just as strong in the modern Jew as in the ancient, and that it only requires opportunity to develop this natural instinct. I am one of those who hold to the latter view. In me, there is a longing for the farm and the simple life, just as strong as ever existed in the breasts of my ancestors.

The experiences of the colonies in Palestine, in the Argentine Republic, in Russia, in Canada and in different parts of the United States, such as Alabama, the Dakotas. New York, New Jersey, and other states, are conclusive proof to me that the movement back to the farm is not only a possibility based on historical instinct, but is already an established fact. That they have had the aid of such philanthropists as Sir Moses Montefiore, Baron Rothschild and Baron De Hirch, does not at all mean that the Jewish colonists cannot exist without philanthropic aid. In fact, it is clear that in many instances such aid has been a draw-back rather than a help, and the failure of many colonists has been traced directly to unwise assistance of this sort.

And it is here I propose that the B'nai B'rith can do a great work of a constructive nature. The incentive for such work is furnished in the chronicles of our past activities. The problem of the crowded tenement districts of New York and other large cities may here be solved. The picture of a crowded tenement with its fifty or more families, some with six or eight members, occupying two or three small rooms, besides the boarders, with the filth and unsanitary conditions, with the children inhabiting the street, the girls exposed to unescapable dangers, form such a strong contrast to the picture of a peaceful and happy life on the farm, with fresh air, the house with its garden, its poultry yard, its cows and its green fields, that no Ben B'rith should hesitate to assist in bringing about the transition from the one to the other. And this work need not be delayed. Right here in our own institutions a start can be made. Our orphans for whose welfare we are held directly responsible can be instilled from earliest childhood with the agricultural idea. Agriculture can be made a part of their education, and when that is completed and they are ready to fight the battle of life, they will be equipped with an occupation that will not only give them the means of making an honest livelihood, but they will be able to hold up their heads and proudly assume a position among their fellowmen.

At this time when our hearts are sore beset with the spectacle of a great European conflict, where among the tragedies daily enacted that of the Jew, arraigned brother against brother, and fighting for countries that despise and degrade him, is by far the greatest. We look with longing hearts to the prophecy of Isaiah and Micah, a prophecy born in the minds and in the hearts of men who condemned commercialism with all the fibre of their lives, and "they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more, but they shall sit, every man under his vine and under his fig tree and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of God of Hosts hath spoken it."

HISTORY OF THE JEWS OF RICHMOND.

Two members of Rimmon Lodge No. 68, of Richmond, Va., namely, Herbert T. Ezekiel and Gaston Lichtenstein, have in course of preparation an elaborate history of the Jews of Richmond which will appear during the latter part of the year. Brother Ezekiel traces his ancestry back to the New York settlers of 261 years ago, and has abundant reason to be proud of the American record of his ancestors, who were prominent both in war and peace.

DEDICATION OF LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL.

The Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital of Hot Springs was formally dedicated on Wednesday afternoon May 3, 1916, in the presence of all the officers and delegates of District Grand Lodge No. 7. The ceremonies were held at the hospital and were open to the public.

The officers and delegates of District Grand Lodge No. 7 arrived at Hot Springs on a special train and were met upon their arrival by a local committee with automobiles.

Among the distinguished guests were two daughters of the late Leo N. Levi in whose memory the institution was named.

At noon time a luncheon was served to the visitors at the Arlington Hotel.

Hospital Is Non-Sectarian.

The institution dedicated is the outgrowth of many years of endeavor. In 1904 District Grand Lodge No. 7 appointed a Committee to make the preliminary arrangements for a Hospital to take care of the poor and sick in Hot Springs. The Committee worked for eight years and during this time took care of more than one thousand patients. It was found, however, that a hospital building was indispensable, and in 1910 the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association was formed and through the work of this Committee necessary funds were raised and work on the hospital was begun in March, 1913. The building was completed in the spring of 1914, and since its opening in November, 1914, 191 patients have been taken care of. The hospital is non-sectarian.

Treatments Free.

All the treatments accorded to patients are free, and this, of course, includes also the famous radio-active hot baths.

In the construction of the building great care was taken that all patients should get the benefit of fresh air. There are two male and two female wards with a total capacity of 48 beds in addition to regular ward equipment and apparatus.

Baths are also maintained in connection with the hospital. A laboratory is maintained so that cases under treatment may be given thorough examination and analysis.

In connection with the dedication ceremonies the following program was carried out:

Overture—Arlington Hotel Orchestra.

Introductory Address—Gus Strauss, chairman board of managers, Leo N. Levi Hospital, and president of the Business Men's League of Hot Springs.

Invocation—Rabbi Louis Witt, of Little Rock.

Vocal Solo—Miss Juanita Gilliam.

Oration—Mr. Ralph J. Schwartz, of New Orleans.

Vocal Solo—Miss Edith Katz.

In Memoriam (David Laser, treasurer Leo. N. Levi Hospital 1904-5)—Rabbi A. B. Rhine, secretary of Leo. N. Levi Hospital Association.

Prelude—"Siciliana and Intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana"; solos by Prof. R. H. Barton and J. Heindel.

Address—Mr. Charles J. Haase, Memphis, Tenn., president of Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association.

Benediction.

The Hospital, although a national institution, derives its main support from the Order, its Grand Lodges and individual members.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE.

An additional meeting of the American Jewish Committee was held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Sunday, May 14. The Executive Committee presented a report of its activities during the past six months, an abstract of which is given herewith.

The committee again discussed the question of a congress, and finally adopted the following resolution:

"That the Executive Committee be authorized to proceed in conjunction with such other national Jewish organizations as are prepared to unite with it in issuing a call for that purpose to convene a conference of national Jewish organizations at some time during June, 1916, at a place, and on a basis of representation agreed upon for the purpose of considering suitable measures to secure full rights for the Jews of all lands and the abrogation of all laws discriminating against them, it being understood that the phrase "full rights" is to be deemed to include civil, religious and political rights and, in addition, wherever separate group rights are recognized in any land, the conferring upon the Jews there of such rights if desired by them."

It was also determined to enlarge the membership of the Committee to about 200, about 100 of whom should represent states and cities, and the rest of whom should be representatives of national organizations of members-at-large.

The Care of Our College Students

By Dr. Max L. Margolis

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

The Jewish student in American colleges and universities has of late become an object of care to us. In a previous generation he took his care into his own hands, and the truth of the matter is that his chief concern was to make himself unrecognizable. So soon as he left the paternal home which was none too Jewish, he cast his spiritual affiliations to the winds. He attended faithfully to his studies. He entered into the college life moderately. He was just tolerated. He might if he was popular rise to the dignity of treasurer in his class. Jewish issues were not to be raised. Unable to get into the fraternity, he was comfortable in his dormitory, herded together in a row with his kind. When he left college he was engrossed in his special avocation. Socially he found himself confined to Jewish circles, and frequently he was forced to associate with his inferiors. Life might draw him into Jewish activity. But his college years had not prepared him for the right kind of leadership. He would naturally be led. He was a layman in Jewish matters, though he was an expert in medicine or law or a sought-after architect. A noticeable transformation of the Jewish student-body has occurred. The Jewish student flocking to the halls of learning belongs largely and predominately to a recent layer of immigration. In the city university he remains the same boor that he was before he entered. If he is fortunate to seek the more scheduled seat of learning, the college atmosphere will transform him. He becomes a cultured American gentleman in manner and speech and habits of life. He attends lectures, but he also mingles with his fellow-students as far as he is allowed. Whatever of Judaism he brought with him is exposed to the danger of attenuation. But the large number of his kind upon whose society he is mostly thrown has proved a wholesome influence. Somehow he cannot forget his home training. As a matter of fact these young men and women have also taken their care into their own hands. The trouble began when others meddled with them and construed them as an object of care.

Now the very essence of manliness is the ability to take care of oneself. If at all, we—the older men—presume to take a hand in the matter, we must not presume to dictate, and if at all we guide we must do it gently and wisely. What we must keep in mind uppermost is this. The college, to be sure, is a part of life, but the life without must not dominate the college; it is the college in which older values are tested and perchance found wanting. The student is surrounded by an ideal atmosphere free from many of the sordid entanglements of the life without. We look to the college to coin new values; it is the home of idealism and ideals. The strife without ought not reach the sacred precincts. The college graduate is to be our leader. Let him not be indoctrinated at the start. Let him learn to construct his own view of life. Let him build up his mode of Judaism. We may come to his succor and furnish him with the means, financial and otherwise. We may stack the college library with books Jewish. We may send him men to inspire him with a love for Judaism, men expert in their subject, men who will not try to proselytize and win converts to this or that form of Judaism, men who will rather in an academic tone discuss Jewish problems and Jewish history. The choice must be left to the thinking student. He is encouraged to exercise his private judgment throughout his college curriculum. What we want him to be and to remain is a Jew, a man with a Jewish outlook upon things which the university cannot provide for and in many instances runs counter to. If we wish him to worship in a synagogue, let him, like his Christian classmates, join the synagogue without. In the state university in particular the authorities rightly frown upon student churches. If the student is a Presbyterian, the Presbyterians of the town will welcome him. Many church activities are called into being for his sake. But he is drawn into them not as a student, but as a Christian. The Jewish student should fellowship with his brethren in town, and be they of the humblest kind. Religious fellowship knows no differences that are social. The rich and the poor must be on the same plane in the house of God. Without necessity creates the neighborhood synagogue of a distinct social complexion. The synagogue obviously cannot stand on the campus, but outside. And there it must be the town synaagogue, albeit in some cases it may be wholly recruited of students. A student synagogue it may be in fact, but it must not be such in name. And if the synagogue is to attract the entire Jewish student body, we must beware lest we from without interfere by introducing a mode of worship which may suit the fashionable bourgeoisie in the city, but must repel the idealist and shock the great majority to whom it is foreign. And with that majority the trend of things is not to be integrated into a system not of their own creation, which they would not countenance were they free to choose. If I were a student I would reason (objectively) thus. On the plane of reality I find diverse forms of Judaism. There is the orthodoxy perchance which I left behind. There are other varieties which do not appeal to me. I have somehow come in touch with newer movements and newer ideals which potently influence me. I may have heard of Achad-haam and perhaps read some of his essays in English translation. I somehow feel that Reform is a German product, just as Zionism comes from the East, though a Western man took it under his tutelage. I am a member of a Menorah society, and read the Menorah Journal. I have turned its pages and have come across a defence of orthodoxy by a man of science. I am not so sure that things have been settled. I find on all hands a state of affairs decidedly unsettled. I have heard one of my professors say that the sum of knowledge is a bundle of questions. Things are not so certain and clear-cut as our would-be leaders in Jewry tell us, as our visiting Rabbis tell us. I have learned that the essence of culture is Catholicity. One of my instructors in history has shown us how the Catholic Church was a compromise between many heresies, each claiming for itself the whole truth. And I begin to reason out in my lay mind that after all the future in Judaism is with a form that will be neither the one nor the other of those already existing. Why not create that Judaism of the center right here? My fellow students belong to many strata. Their fathers came from various lands. Here at least it is not a question of whether one form or the other will prove a success. Here we are not in need of the trappings that will draw the crowd. Here we need not trouble ourselves about attracting an audience. Here my fellow students at large are big with schemes for the improvement of the race. The Socialist may be abhorred outside, here many students are rank Socialists. They all dream of doing something that has not been done, of trying many an experiment in sociology, in ethics, in religion. Let us Jewish students experiment with a new formula of Judaism. Some of us are Zionists outright. I am in sympathy with the redemption of the land of our fathers. But I for one, though a dreamer, am a bit more given to seeing the realities about me. I confess that we shall have to remain in the diaspora for some time. And I cannot warm up to a nationalistic creed. In my humble and unsophisticated way of looking at things, I cannot conceive of America as a bundle of nationalities. The Jew then will have to base his distinctness upon his religion, upon the synagogue. I want a synagogue, but it must be one to which I may withdraw from the environment as to a Jewish sanctum. I want my fellow-students to know that my synagogue is not a church; for if it were a church, the synagogue would not be needed. I want them to witness a Jewish service. And the Jewish service must be conducted in Hebrew. There must be an individuality about the synagogue. I may not like the bulky volume that at home they use for their devotions. But it is a far cry from a Jewish prayer book, however shortened, to a Sunday service manual with its thanksgiving for the restful hour of devotion (that looks like investing Sunday with the Sabbath spirit, after all) and its scripture lesson chosen at random without reference to the calendar and with the introduction thereto which seems to say: Yes, we are far above those ancient volumes, we moderns, but then there are a few good things there anyway.

Of such thinking students there is a goodly number in our colleges. It would be strange if the university training and the quiet atmosphere did not create them. Such students will take good care of themselves. Come to their help, if you choose. Don't regard them as your parishioners. Don't inflict upon them your formulas. Don't make them an object of your care. And don't, please, look upon yourself as a missionary to convert the student whose origins are Eastern, to your Western heresy.

signal success. W., whose entire earthly possessions when he bought a farm in Colchester, Conn., six years ago, consisted of $300, now has an equity of $1,500 in his farm and equipment. This in itself may not be noteworthy, but it is remarkable when we consider that he is the father of ten children, the oldest 15 at the time of settlement, and all of whom were dependent upon the father and therefore upon the farm for support. I am told that the family income was enhanced to the extent of $300 last summer through the sale of wild berries that the children picked and which would otherwise have gone to waste. L. went into farming nine years ago with so little money that he could barely rent a five-acre farm near Pine Brook, N. J. Today he owns a large, modern, well-equipped farm and is reputed to be worth $8,000. K. seventeen years ago started on a small farm in the same neighborhood, his entire capital consisting of $500. Now he owns a farm of 140 acres, the best in the locality. Conservative estimates of his wealth place it at upward of $50,000. Five grown-up children, two of whom are married, have remained with him. P. with his two sons left the sweatshop in New York where by dint of hard work they had accumulated $1,000. This they invested in a farm near Centerville Station, N. Y. After twelve years they were the proud possessors of a farm worth $12,000, exclusive of live stock and farm equipment. G. cuts fifty acres of alfalfa, has sixteen cows, a silo, up-to-date farm equipment, is independent, and all this the result of an investment of $500 seven years ago.

Instances could be multiplied but lack of time forbids. I concede that individual cases do not prove the general proposition, but they do serve as an indication that farming holds forth possibilities for our immigrant brothers. And that is my entire purpose.

If the progress of individual Jewish farmers has been marked, their achievements collectively are still more conspicuous. Jewish farmers have in the last decade been in the vanguard of every forward movement in American agriculture. They it was who introduced the principles of co-operative credit into the United States through the organization of the first—and thus far the only—agricultural credit banks on American soil, and who now operate nineteen such banks in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts. It was the Jewish farmers, too, who were the first to take advantage of the New York Land Bank Law, enacted last year, and thus to make a beginning toward relieving the vexing problem of obtaining mortgage loans on farm property. Hardly had the law been passed, when the enterprising Jewish farmers in Sullivan and Ulster Counties formed the First Farmers' Savings and Loan Associations, which, as its name denotes, is the first savings and loan association to be formed by farmers in this State. This organization was in turn the first to receive an allotment of funds from the Land Bank.

When the Jewish farmers in these counties found it impossible to obtain fire insurance, or at best at prohibitive rates, they formed the Co-Operative Fire Insurance Company of Sullivan and Adjoining Counties. Although not yet three years old, the insurance company carries about $1,250,000 insurance and it is estimated that it has saved its members through the decreased cost of insurance and the reduction in the premium rates forced upon the stock companies, not less than $50,000.

Similarly, when the Jewish dairy farmers in and around Hurleyville, New York, suffered discrimination at the hands of the local creameries, they organized their own co-operative creamery. They put up an excellent creamery building and installed the most modern equipment. The plant called forth laudatory comments from the authorities of Cornell University. Now these farmers are no longer compelled to witness the rejection of their milk on the flimsiest pretext, nor to accept less than the prevailing rates; they are dependent no more upon the whim and caprice of avaricious creamery proprietors.

There are other co-operative undertakings set on foot by Jewish farmers, but it is not necessary to describe them. The mere mention of them will suffice to show the extent to which the principles of co-operation have developed and expanded among our farming brethren. Thus there are the Colchester Farmers' Co-Operative Feed Store, Fallsburg Jewish Farmers' Co-Operative Exchange, Parksville Jewish Farmers' Corporation, New Lots Pasteurizing Plant, and last, but not least, The Federation of Jewish Farmers of America with its fifty-six constituent societies scattered throughout the United States and Canada.

It cannot be gainsaid that progress denotes success and that the progressive community is composed of successful individuals. If, then, the Jewish farmers in the aggregate have shown such development, who can deny to the individual Jewish farmer his just mead of credit for his contribution to this growth and expansion?

That Jewish farmers can and do succeed, their achievements individually and collectively bear eloquent testimony. By no means do I wish to convey the impression that every Jew who goes into farming makes good. It is only too true that there are many failures. But then there are failures among Jewish lawyers, Jewish physicians, Jewish business men, Jewish peddlers, and Jewish laborers. Nor are all non-Jewish farmers models of success. Either through the ordination of God or the machination of man—I believe the latter—more of us seem doomed to fail than are destined to succeed. If, then, many Jewish farmers fail, it is simply because they are no exception to the general rule. After all, Jewish farming has barely yet emerged from the stage of infancy. In comparing the immigrant Jewish farmer with his native American neighbor, let us not forget the conditions under which each comes to the farm. One is born and bred to the soil and falls heir to the parental farmstead; the other comes with little capital, less experience, a stranger in a strange land. Time will remove these handicaps and overcome these obstacles, and the Jewish farmers in the United States will form an ever growing body of self-respecting, independent, progressive husbandmen.

Our country is vast; its resources well nigh inexhaustible. It can still absorb countless numbers of our unfortunate brothers, if properly distributed. In these trying times, when half of Israel is suffering a thraldom worse than Egypt, the stricken sons of Jacob are casting their glances towards the millions of America's untilled acres as holding forth a a means of redemption and salvation. How long this gigantic struggle will last, no one but a prophet can foretell. But no matter what the outcome, there is little hope that the lot of the Jew will improve or his misery lessen. There will yet remain the iron fist of the hand of Esau and we still shall hear the mournful wail of the voice of Jacob. Whether a larger number of our co-religionists will seek asylum on these hospitable shores is a matter of conjecture. It is safe to assume, however, that even if Jewish immigration will not take on unusual proportions, it will at least resume its normal flow. The task of receiving and advising these immigrants and of directing them into lucrative fields of employment will fall upon us, who have been more favored by Providence. If we of the B'nai B'rith will do our part toward establishing these people, our own brothers, B'nai B'rith like ourselves, in this blessed land, under heavens that will smile upon them and beneath a sun whose rays will diffuse cheer and comfort, then I for one will be proud of being a Ben Brith.

ANNUAL MEETING OF JEWISH PUBLICATION SOCIETY.

The 28th annual meeting of the Jewish Publication Society was held in Philadelphia on Sunday evening, May 7, at Dropsie College.

President Miller, in submitting his annual report, called attention to the membership of the society, which is larger than ever before, due to the fact that more than 4,000 new members were enrolled during the present year; that by the end of summer the new translation of the Bible will be in the hands of the public.

At the meeting announcement was made that Jacob H. Schiff had donated $50,000 to be used in translating and perpetuating in the English language a number of the best Yiddish classics.

Election of officers which brought the meeting to a close resulted as follows:

President, Simon Miller, Philadelphia; vice-presidents, Henry M. Leipziger of New York, Horace Stern of Philadelphia; treasurer, Henry Fernberger, Philadelphia, and secretary, Benj. Alexander, Philadelphia.

RESTORATION WORK IN WARSAW.

Under the designation Binyan Haneharasoth (Rebuildings of the Devastated) a society has been formed in Warsaw with the following objects. Rebuilding of synagogues, yeshivoth, schools, ritual baths, hospitals, and residences of Rabbis and other synagogal officials; the support of philanthropic institutions which are working beneficially during the war among Orthodox Jews; subventions to Rabbis, Chazanim, Shochetim, and Mohelim. Only Orthodox persons are eligible for membership.

PRINTER'S INK.

A new Jewish weekly made its appearance in New York during the month of May. We quote, in part, one of its editorials:

"Professor Martin Philippsohn, the well-known historian and a leader of the Hilfs-Verein Deutscher Juden; Dr. Paul Nathan and James Simon, the acting chairman and president of that organization, have agitated in private and have publicly urged that Polish Jews be kept from entering German territory. * * *

"From the news report printed elsewhere in this paper it will be seen that both leades of the Hilfs-Verein, Dr. Paul Nathan and James Simon, have petitioned the German government in behalf of the Relief Committee which they represent 'that the government should for the present cease helping the Polish Jews.' * * *

"This underhanded and treacherous assault on eastern Jewry by those who pass as Jewish leaders in Germany and who are thought that by many American Jews may prove completely ruinous to Jews in Poland, if the German government should for one moment consider the criminal charges and proposals made by these so-called helpers of Israel. Nobody knows the future fate of Poland or that of her Jews, but every charge against the Jew made today falls upon willing ears of people ready to discredit them and adds to the enormous perils they already face.

"As things are, it is futile to argue with men like Nathan, Simon and Philippsohn. They seem to be men who heedlessly sacrifice momentous Jewish interests to their own petty conceptions of what is vital to the Jewish people. Time and again American Jewish leaders have been warned against raising them to the position of power and confidence they now occupy. These warnings they have never listened to, and in spite of them have continued to entrust these leaders in Berlin with the vast sums sent for distribution in Poland."

In this country, free of government censors, yellow journalism has found a home. But the above editorial is the [illegible]. The men attacked have given un[illegible] for a generation their service [illegible] to aid and help the down[illegible] of our race. They are gentlemen of high culture and standing, who have virtually consecrated their lives to unselfish service for the Jewish cause. They have at all times tried to do the right thing according to their best judgment.

From our personal knowledge of them we say without hesitation that if they cannot be trusted, no men living can be trusted. Perhaps the new weekly based its editorial wisdom on a report which was intended to reach the Editor on April first.

That even a small quantity of printer's ink may become, if not dangerous, at least a nuisance, was proven a few days ago.

If there is a man in the United States who has always been more ready with sound counsel and liberal contributions of funds to help the Jewish cause than Mr. Jacob H. Schiff we would like to have him named; and yet Mr. Schiff was so attacked by some yellow Jewish journal on account of something he was alleged to have said, but which was misquoted, that he delivered what, according to the press, he called his "valedictory". He said in part:

"I have been hurt to the core, and hereafter Zionism, nationalism, the congress movement and Jewish politics, whatever form they may take, will be a sealed book to me. I shall continue to work for the uplift of my people, and I shall continue to co-operate as far as I can, in procuring full civic rights for our brethren in the war zone, for they are flesh of my flesh and bone of my bone, but beyond this, my friends, my duty ends."

We have laws compelling doctors, druggists, and in some states even barbers, to undergo an examination before being permitted to practice or do business. Why not have a law to test the character and sanity of editors?

THE COMING CONVENTIONS.

In a few weeks we shall have upon us the din and noise of several conventions, Jewish conventions. Although incommensurable with the great national conventions which are general in interest, these minor assemblies of a fraction of the citizens of this country bid fair to raise dust in their way. The summer months are naturally chosen because in them we lay aside in a manner our personal business. And the heat of debate within the hall is on a par with the heat without. We shall witness arenas of conflict. It will be a conflict of words. Orators are priming themselves for the feat. A few have something to say, and those say it without oratorical fireworks of any kind. The sanest opinion is not shouted out. It needs not the embellishment of figure and simile and flowery language. Still we live in a talking age. And it is a wise policy to let the talkers talk themselves out. Then business may be proceeded with.

It is not our province to offer advice where advice is unsought. We are at best interested spectators. Yet nothing that is done by one section of Jewry, by this or that organization, can fail to influence all, even the outsider at a distance. Just because the average convention must necessarily represent sectional interests, it may and will happen that with the loss of perspective an untimely word is said which arouses antagonism outside the immediate precincts or sphere. Wise men, guard your words! Remember that you are after all not the representatives of detached interests. Remember that you are Jews, and nothing can be said or done by one Jew without affecting all Jewry. Those that have a political business on hand, be it the conception of one master-mind or of an aggregate of master-minds, it certainly behooves them to be particularly politic and circumspect. Politics is indeed a business not for the many. The many can talk, and they that do the talking are blessed with that freedom from prejudice which comes from ignorance. The Jewish people abroad is indeed sore bestead. But, as many cooks spoil the broth, so a concert of many physicians hastily summoned from diverse quarters will kill the patient. After all it is not so much the remedy, it is not this or that nostrum, upon which we must insist. It is the life of the sufferer that we must save. If there are troubles ahead for the Jewish people, shall we selfishly cling to formulas, however skilfully worked out? Here as elsewhere common sense will pull the patient through. This is no time for quarreling about methods. The end to be attained ought to stand in foremost consideration. And the end will be best attained by ceasing to quarrel. Our Order is willing to co-operate with any and all agencies provided they agree to submerge their individual preferences, their individual idiosyncracies and sometimes idiocies. Let not the fate of the Jewish people be turned into advantage for this or that coterie, this or that organization. None of us must have an axe to grind, or the people will be ground between two or more millstones.

Bend, then, your efforts, wheresoever and under whatsoever auspices assembled, to the common cause. The common cause dictates a united front. Much has been said hither and thither in the heat of passion, because of a personal petty scheme thwarted. Let much more remain unsaid. Act at last, and don't say anything at all. Act in unison with any and everybody who is willing to act. Jews we are and Jews we shall remain. Hyphenated Jews are as much an abomination as hyphenated Americans. Safety first! must be the watchword of all Jewish organizations; safety for the Jewish people. What the outcome of the world conflagration will be none can foretell. Perhaps that when time comes the formula will evolve itself. And ten to one it will be none of the cherished formulations of yesterday. An elastic attitude is the safest and sanest. We must not be enslaved to our own past remedies. The salvation of a people is not in the hands of the extremists at either side. And this applies to our religious questions as well. The ham and bacon variety is not Judaism. Nor is that hyperorthodoxy that cleanses opinions as well as pots. The safest Judaism is found in the center. And with the center are the broad masses of Jewry.

SAFE AND SANE.

The reckless manner in which the big and little children celebrated the Nation's birthday has led to the movement for a safe and sane Fourth of July. The toll of human life cut off before its time, of injury to limb and body, of lovely little faces disfigured, has grown to an appalling degree. The thoughtful clamor for a stop and certainty for moderation and caution. The whole mode of playing with fire is a relic of barbarism ill-befitting a civilized nation. If patriotism must needs make a show of itself, why the din and noise and the unnecessary conflagrations and the snuffing out of young breath? Quite as dangerous as the toy pistol is the fiery speechmaking of the politician-patriot who for selfish reasons inflames class against class and race against race. The display of love of country must equally proceed along lines safe and sane. Self-adulation is not the mark of the true friend of his people. Catchwords are seized upon to divide a united nation. Ours is a vast country with sectional interests which are quite natural. Ours is a composite nation of diverse origins. We have our multifarious creeds in politics as well as in religion. A free people must exercise individual judgment. The mature citizen has outgrown leading strings. He cannot be expected to do the bidding of a chieftain, however illustrious. And if we are to look up for guidance, it must be of the self-forgetting sort. If we have honors to bestow, we must be sure that the place will seek the man. Our government is not constructed on lines of a sacrosanct character, of the Touch-me-not variety. We are freely given to criticising those in power, those whose lofty position is but a gift from the people. In the nature of things our supreme magistrates are named by party machinery. But woe to the incumbent in office, woe to the office-seeker, who elevate party above the people.

We have our problems in every generation, in every emergency which often is not of our own making. Shall we not go about them in a manner safe and sane? Would that we could dissociate ourselves from the rest of mankind, to the end that we might be permitted to go about our affairs in our own way, perfecting as we go along our free institutions! But no great country can isolate itself if it would. We have our dissensions within. We have upon us the clash of interests, the interests which are sordid and grasping. We must find a way out. Differences must be composed. It is treason to accentuate them. But it is just as treasonable to shut our eyes to the conflicts of honest conviction. If we are safe and sane, we shall take off the keen edge of strife by the loftier patriotism which puts the welfare of all above self-interest. We must be reasonably sure that what we do is calculated to safeguard the people's legitimate prerogatives. There are things which we shall never surrender to others, the things of conscience. There is business which we shall attend to ourselves. But there are things which we ought to expect our government machinery to do for us, which indeed to do we, the people, choose the men that will and must serve us best. The world's burden is upon us. We shall fulfil our obligations. We must all equally bear whatever burden is imposed upon us. But we cannot tolerate that our burdens are increased for the sake of selfish gain, that the rich may grow richer and the poor poorer. Shall we suffer conditions to arise in a free people calling for a dictator to curb the grasping of wholesalers and jobbers who raise the prices of the most necessary articles of sustenance? It were the acme of sheer insanity to permit things to come to that pass in times of peace hereabouts. Yes, a safe and sane patriotism all around is what we are in need of. And that patriotism must stand sentinel over the inalienable rights of the many against the rapacity of the few. We have done well as a nation, aye, wonders. Our resources are rich beyond measure. Let them not be monopolized by the magnates. They belong to the people. Nor must we delegate patriotism to the self-appointed guardians of that sacred love which is in every citizen's keeping. Let it above all be marked by safety and saneness, the safety that comes from a saneness of judgment. Then we shall have peace within and without.

PRAISE FOR LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL.

Dr. Frank W. Lambden of the medical staff of the German Hospital of Chicago had occasion to visit Hot Springs, Ark. In a letter to a friend he writes as follows:

"I called at the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital and had a long visit with the doctor in charge. He is a very fine man and a very clever physician and student.

"The Hospital is beautifully appointed and excellently arranged for the work it is intended for. The therapeutic advantages are wonderfully complete.

"It is a Godsend to the poor indigent who are fortunate enough to be sent there. The B'nai B'rith certainly deserve great praise for their liberal generosity."

SHOLEM ALEICHEM FUND.

A committee has been constituted with Dr. J. L. Magnes of New York as chairman to establish a Sholem Aleichem Fund, the benefits of which shall go first to his family, and then, if sufficient funds be collected, to the fostering of that Yiddish and Hebrew literature to which he devoted his life.

Any one who is inclined to make a contribution to this fund can send it to Dr. Magnes, at 356 Second Avenue, New York City.

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

A noteworthy trip of the National Director, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, was a visit of three days to Indianapolis, Ind. On Sabbath evening, May 5th, he occupied the pulpit of Rabbi M. M. Feuerlicht and explained the constructive labors which the B'nai B'rith is now carrying on. The Social Service Department is founded on the principle of justice and does not concern itself with "charity," as that word is commonly understood. The average man wants a fair trial and equal opportunity. He does not seek alms or some donation of money.

On Monday afternoon at the session of the National Conference of Jewish Charities, Doctor Coffee presented a paper on "Special B'nai B'rith Work." He explained the activities which the new Social Service Department was undertaking, its chief aim being to better and improve Jewish conditions in America. The discussion, after the reading of the paper, showed that social workers throughout the country felt the B'nai B'rith has a splendid opportunity and was starting along right lines. Special commendation was expressed for undertaking the Big Brother Movement. The trained social workers said that if this Order would do nothing more this year than successfully launch that new phase of work, it would be entitled to grateful thanks from all earnest Jews.

Last month the Doctor undertook an extended tour through many of the important cities in District No. 5. Atlanta, Ga., was visited on Friday and Saturday, May 12th and 13th. Directly on his arrival he was met by members of the Social Service Department and local conditions were discussed in great detail. The afternoon was devoted to a visit to the Federal Jail, which receives prisoners from all the Eastern states. Quite a few Jewish prisoners have been sentenced to the Federal prison in Atlanta, chiefly from New York, Philadelphia and other large Northern cities. It was most gratifying to know that the local Social Service Committee has been looking after the welfare of these prisoners in most helpful co-operation with the Federal authorities. That night and the following morning, the Director occupied the pulpit of Rabbi David Marx, his themes being: "What the B'nai B'rith Stands For" and "Is God Cruel?" In addition to expounding the new ideas of the Social Service Department, special emphasis was given to the work of the Anti-Defamation League. Atlanta was the home of Leo M. Frank, and a very receptive audience listened to the plea for a stronger local B'nai B'rith organization to fight unworthy and un-American prejudice. Before departing Saturday night, Doctor Coffee was tendered a dinner at the Standard Club, which was attended by Brother Milton Klein, president of District No. 5, and fifty of the most prominent B'nai B'rith members of the community. Every man present pledged his support to the Big Brother Movement and plans were outlined for organizing this much need work immediately. Much earnestness was manifested. While Atlanta has serious Jewish problems, there are fine and devoted souls in the B'nai B'rith to grapple with them.

Savannah, Ga., was visited on Sunday, May 14th. In recent months, the Jewish people have realized the value of fine and constructive social work. The Educational Alliance, although open but a few months, is already too small for the many phases of activity centering within its walls. Judge Fiedelson, Social Service Director No. 5 and Brother Rabbi George Solomon, Secretary of District No. 5, reside in Savannah and will further Jewish Social work through the agency of our Order. There are a number of immigrant families in the city, and considering the richness of the soil, many co-religionists should be encouraged to settle in that part of the State. That night Doctor Coffee lectured before a large and enthusiastic audience on "Judaism and Social Service." Savannah has not utilized her natural advantages, but the merchants now see their opportunity. The city is growing and there seems to be room for Jewish immigrants.

The following day, May 15, Charleston, S. C., was visited. The field here is unquestionably limited. While conferring with the Social Service Committee men, the argument was again offered that Jews have little chance of progressing in the South. The Jewish energy and vigor, which had so successfully taken hold of the New England farms which shrewd Yankees had given up, will also avail in Southern districts, if given due encouragement. While traveling in northern Georgia, the brakeman pointing to a distant farm said, "That is the finest peach orchard in northern Georgia. A Jew owns it." Charleston is rich in Jewish memories of past centuries. Its Social Service Committee has promised to assist in the new work most faithfully. That evening the Doctor lectured in the historic temple, where Reform Judaism in America is said to have started. The subject was, "Justice, Not Charity," and the speaker pleaded with the audience, which consisted largely of non-Jews as well as co-religionists, to provide equal oportunity and a square deal for all. A most pleasing result of the lecture was the coming together of local Jews representing all factions. The plea for social work was the common platform on which all promised to work.

Tuesday, May 16, Norfolk, Va., was visited. Norfolk is unusually blessed by nature. Near the very center of a remarkably rich peanut district, with hundreds of acres of fine soil devoted to truck farming, and having one of the largest harbors on the Atlantic Coast south of New York, this city is destined to grow steadily. With this expected increase in business, the Jewish population will continue to grow, even as it has done in the past. These natural advantages, however, have brought certain very serious problems to the Jewish community. In the conference with the Social Service workers, these facts were made very clear, and that night, Doctor Coffee speaking on "Social Service Work," pleaded for the immediate start of the Big Brother Movement. Prominent Social workers promised their hearty co-operation in undertaking our new work. The delinquent child and especially the newsboy, are pressing problems which can and should be met by the Social Service Committee.

Wednesday, May 17, was spent in Richmond, Va. A conference was held with the members of the Social Service Committee, which mapped out a plan of action for the needs of that fine Jewish community. The afternoon was spent in calling at various institutions. The visit to the Virginia State Penitentiary situated withn a few moments of the heart of Richmond's business district, proved most profitable. There are four Jewish inmates out of the thousand and more prisoners. The building is historic, having been planned by Thomas Jefferson, and it is regrettable that contract form of labor still obtains. So far as can be investigated, there are no Jewish prisoners in the state penitentiaries of Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia or South Carolina. The Jewish inmates at Richmond are from the North, chiefly New York City, as are the majority of those in the Federal Prison at Atlanta, Ga. One of these Jewish prisoners at Richmond was sentenced by a mountain judge, ignorant of the law, for ten years, whereas the maximum penalty is only three. Another prisoner was given ten years for an offense, while his partner in wrong-doing, a non-Jew, received but four years. These facts were substantiated by the assistant warden, and will be presented at the earliest possible date to the governor for commutation of sentence. Another prisoner, serving twenty months of a sentence, has never met his little baby now sixteen months old. The local committee promised to take a personal interest in this case and defray the expenses of the wife when she is able to visit her husband. Late that afternoon memorial services were held at the cemetery. Yearly exercises are held in memory of those Jews who died for the Confederacy during the Civil War. In the course of his remarks, Doctor Coffee emphasized the changed ideals of our day. In the nineteenth century, men fought to kill their brother. Today, the greatest of all wars is now being waged to lift up and support our brother. We must fight for humanity and to abolish poverty, disease and sin from this earth. Our weapon is not the cannon, but Social Service; not the uplifted hand to kill with the sword, but the outstretched palm to lift up and strengthen the weaker brother. That evening he lectured at the John Marshall High School on the "Newer B'nai B'rith Ideas." He emphasized the fine constructive work of the Anti-Defamation League and also pointed out how Richmond could greatly benefit her Jewish people and thus the general community by doing social work among the newer arrivals.

Thursday, May 18, was spent in Baltimore, consulting with the various philanthropic workers in showing how the B'nai B'rith, by co-operation, could be helpful and of greater assistance. That night, in the Munsey Building, he addressed a splendid gathering of the leading Jewish citizens of Baltimore in which he emphasized the great part which the B'nai B'rith will shortly play in American philanthropy. The Order has upward of thirty thousand men, coming from among the best Jewish families. A large number of these are earnest and willing to volunteer in social work.

On Sabbath morning, Doctor Coffee occupied the pulpit of Rabbi C. A. Rubenstein.

Friday, May 19, he spent in Washington, meeting the Social Service Committee and explaining how the fundamental principles of this department can apply to work in the National Capitol. That Sabbath evening he occupied the pulpit of Rabbi Abram Simon, preaching to a large gathering of earnest people. At the conclusion of the sermon all members of the B'nai B'rith adjourned to the vestry rooms, where the practical working of the new department was very clearly set forth through questions and answers. Brother Simon Wolf concluded the evening's gathering by expressing his thanks and those of the audience to the speaker. The following afternoon, some forty of the most earnest and active members of the Order met the National Director and discussed the local problems concerning the Social Service Department. There are a number of gifted and highly intellectual Jews in Washington, occupying high positions in the government service. Too few of these men are affiliated with Jewish organizations. The one result of this conference was the determination to interest these men in intellectual and Social Service problems. Some of these officials have never been brought in contact with Jewish forces, and members of the Order pledged themselves to bring these government experts in touch with Jewish activities.

That night, the director left District No. 5 for Cleveland, Ohio, where the Grand Lodge of District No. 2 was then in session. He spent Sunday morning in Pittsburgh, where Saar Sholom Lodge held its regular monthly meeting. An enthusiastic gathering of friends were present and Doctor Coffee aroused the ardor of his hearers by telling the constructive work he had witnessed and the earnest promises he had received during his Southern experience. At the conclusion of his remarks, Brother L S. Levin, chairman of Pittsburgh Social Service Committee, told of the problems seeking solution in their very midst. He narrated a court scene of the preceding day, which showed that the Jewish youth in the "Hill" District was not being properly looked after.

In attending the Conference in Cleveland, the national director was able to meet many able and earnest social workers of District No. 2. This District prides itself on having paved the way toward the creation of the Social Service Department. One hour Monday night was devoted to a report by the national director, and his message called upon the Social Service Committees to organize the Big Brother Movement in their several Districts to aid in finding employment for all Jews out of work and look after parole and released prisoners.

Minneapolis was visited Thursday, June 1, and Duluth the two following days. The Social Service Committee in Minneapolis had already been appointed and this visit to the largest city in all the Northwest will focus activities of the Social workers into early fruition. Minneapolis is a thriving community. The Jewish people have fine opportunities. The Talmud Torah in the southern part of the city is testimony to the earnest zeal of resident Jews. All the workers conceded the great benefit which can come through the Big Brother Movement. The prison work is well in hand. There are very few Jewish inmates in the penal institutions. A growing problem is the finding of employment for Jews who desire work. New avenues of industry should be found, into which Jews may be called.

A splendid supper party of many earnest workers interested in Social Work preceded the regular meeting of Minneapolis Lodge. That night, all the older members had been specially brought in automobiles and the largest meeting of the year, as well as the most enthusiastic in many years, heard the message which the Social Service Director brought. Minneapolis should be one of the leading cities in Social Service work.

On Friday and Saturday, Doctor Coffee was in Duluth, where he occupied the pulpit of Rabbi Lefkovits, preaching on "The New Ideals of Our Order." That afternoon he had been taken to the "Model" city, which consists of over two hundred and fifty dwellings erected by the Steel Corporation for its working people. Precisely what is being done in this particular city by capital for labor, the better situated Jews of America must do for their poorer brethren. We must show the world that our one aim in life is not to make money, but to enrich by our lives, this blessed country which shelters and protects us. There are a number of smaller communities near Duluth on the Misaba Range where the large output of iron ore comes from. Here and in other parts of the state many opportunities await Jewish arrivals. Just because these communities have no poor Jews is proof that they should receive families from the crowded larger cities.

On Sunday, May 28, at the invitation of Rev. A. J. Patrick, chaplain of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, the director addressed the sixteen hundred male prisoners, and in the afternoon addressed the forty-five women prisoners, not one of whom, we are pleased to add, was a Jewess. In former years it was the custom for the prisoners to collect money and purchase food for the meal to break their Yom Kippur fast. Last year the good Jewish women of Joliet prepared a special meal and sent it to the prisoners. The national director is hoping that this custom will become a fixed one for all state and federal institutions in America. We ask God on the great Day of Atonement to forgive us our sins. As God pardons us, so shall we forgive our neighbor. Let us manifest this spirit of forgiveness by our deed.

Another very interesting fact comes from Winnipeg, Canada. Brother L. Rice, chairman of the Social Service Committee, organized the Big Brother Movement in April. So successfully have fourteen Jewish boys been looked after, that Judge F. J. Billiade, presiding over the Juvenile Court of that District, has asked our co-operation in organizing the larger Big Brother work for his entire Distict. What the Jew has so successfully started, the entire District now wishes to undertake.

The following event illustrates the work of the Big Brother Movement. Two months ago David ——— was a fifteen-year-old boy in the Parental School of Chicago. His parents were dead and he had not a friend in the world. According to custom, David would have been provided with a position and allowed to shift for himself. The Bureau of Personal Service interested us in this case and a Big Brother was provided for David, who found him a good position and called on him frequently at his boarding house. Through this Big Brother, David attended Synagogue, joined a circulating library and was enrolled in night school for the rest of the season. Within a month he had made such a favorable impression upon the Big Brother, that he gave him a position in the establishment which he controls. Last week the Big Brother informed us that if David continues his fine record it will be his personal pleasure to enter David in High School this fall and give him every opportunity to obtain a college education. Two months ago, David was absolutely without a friend. Today he is working industriously, has money in the bank, and sees his way toward obtaining a college diploma. The Big Brother Movement did this.

FOUNTAIN DEDICATED IN MEMORY OF HENRY GREENEBAUM.

On Memorial Day, May 30, 1916, District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., dedicated a fountain in the B'nai B'rith Cemetery of Chicago in honor and memory of the late Brother Henry Greenbaum, first president and founder of District Grand Lodge No. 6.

A special train chartered for the occasion conveyed a large number of members of the Order and their friends, including also members of the Greenbaum family.

The program of exercises consisted of opening remarks by the president of the District, Brother B. J. Samuels, followed by an address by Brother Julius H. Meyer, chairman of the committee having charge of this memorial. Brother Philip Stein, president of the Chicago B'nai B'rith Cemetery Association, then delivered the address of acceptance of the memorial in the name of the association. The principal address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Gerson B. Levi of Chicago, who reviewed the life and achievements of Henry Greenebaum, emphasized his noble qualities and his kind deeds.

The memorial is in the form of a drinking fountain hewn out of solid granite and on top of which is a bronze tablet bearing the inscription that the fountain was erected in honor and in memory of Henry Greenbaum.

A CARD OF APPRECIATION.

Owing to the practical physical impossibility of answering individually the very many letters and telegrams of congratulation that he received on the occasion of the celebration of the 25th anniversary of his ministry in Richmond, Rev. Dr. E. N. Calisch takes this method of acknowledging, and thanking them, and begs his friends to accept this expression of his appreciation.

THE KEHILLAH, XXIV

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

Mordecai Benet. I.

Men may be great as writers, but it does not follow that all great men must be great writers, or even writers at all. Nor is there a unanimity of opinion on who actually is a great writer. Surely different generations have different opinions on this subject. This, however, does not concern us. I wish to repeat that the importance of a man, even in the field of theology, does not lie always in his writings. The power of personality is something that cannot be measured or weighed. It belongs to what Bismarck called "Imponderabilien." In this way we are able to understand the powerful influence which Mordecai Benet or, as he was officially called, Marcus Benedict, the greatest of the Nikolsburg Rabbis and Moravian Landesrabbiner of modern times, exercised on his contemporaries. Let us say something first about the name, for the study of names is an important piece of Jewish "Kulturgeschiechte." The name Benet probably comes from the French, Benoit, and is the equivalent of the Hebrew Baruch and sometimes of Yomtob. In the sixteenth century we find a physician to the Pope called Bonet Lattes. Occasionally the name will be pronounced Bendet, which is a corruption of the Latin Benedict. The Jews began in olden times already to adopt such names from their environment and using them as equivalents for the less popular and probably less pronouncible Hebrew names. Thus in the Midrash already complaint is heard that many a Reuben called himself Rufus, and many a Judah called himself Julian. In the Greek period, beginning with Alexander the Great's invasion of the Orient, the adoption of such names was certainly done for the purpose of what we might call today assimilation. Thus a high priest, Joshua, called himself Jason, evidently using, as still is the case, the alliteration as a suggestion for the secular name. This, however, is not always the case. The Maccabaean King Alexander was really called Jonathan. During the Middle Ages, however, it does not seem likely that a Jew, adopting a name taken from the language of the country, tried to dissimulate his Judaism. His purpose must have been simply to make it easier for his neighbors to pronounce or to remember his name. Medieval English documents from Norman times give us usually French names for Jews, which are a direct translation of the Hebrew, so Dieulecroisse for Gedaliah, Vives for Hayim. The latter name is also used in the Latin form Vivus and adapted to the German as Feibus, Feibusch, Feibisch, Fabisch, Feibel, Feis, and the like. So the name Benet undoubtedly points back to some ancestor who had this surname as equivalent for Baruch or Yomtob. Some branches of the family spelled it differently. Thus a relative and pupil of our hero, called by the same name, signed his name Baneth. He was Rabbi in Stampfen, Hungary, and died in 1849. His surviving brother, Ezekiel, who died five years later, was Rabbi in Neutra. A grandson of the latter, named for the grandfather, preferred to call himself Eduard, although he is professor at the rabbinical seminary of Berlin, and left his former charge, the rabbinate of Krotoschin, because of his orthodox views, being opposed to the introduction of an organ.

Enough about names. Mordecai Benet was born in Csurgo, Hungary. Between Moravia and Hungary there were many connections. The most important reason that so many Jews of Moravia emigrated to Hungary lay in the restriction of marriages. Owing to the enforcement of the rigorous law that limited the number of families, a great many young people went to Hungary, because this country, enjoying the benefits of a loose form of government, did not know these restrictions and therefore they could marry there. Another reason was the law of recruiting which also does not seem to have been so strictly enforced in Hungary as it was in western Austria. Thus it happened that there was hardly any Jewish family in Moravia which had not near relatives in Hungary. At the time of my childhood yet I could hear in every house a brother Berl or Mordche in Hungary spoken of.

This gives me the opportunity to relate some very interesting recollections of the stories heard from older people in my childhood, stories which will throw an interesting light on Jewish conditions. The most interesting of these stories I heard from a man named Mordche Loeb Deutsch, a brother of the pioneer of deaf-mute education among Jews, Joel Deutsch (1813-1889). This "Wachtmeister" Deutsch, as he was called, was the policeman of the Jewish congregation. It must be remembered that the ghetto formed not merely a secluded part of the town, but had its own municipal government, and Austria, the land of anarchronisms, has still twenty such congregations in Moravia, possessing the right of their own municipal administration. Wachtmeister Deutsch had any number of very interesting stories to tell, of which I can only remember two. It was a very difficult thing to get poor young men for conscription. There was up to 1867 no general conscription in Austria, but every town had to furnish its pro rata of soldiers who were drafted into the army. Other young men who were examined for service, but not needed, were free. It was natural, under these conditions, that the rich shirked the service by bribe or by other tricks which allowed them to put the poor in their place. Any one who could afford to buy a soldier, was free from all service. I remember a Jewish young man who had served his eight years in the army, and volunteered a second term, serving for a rich, by the way, a Christian manufacturer. Even in my childhood, up to the latter part of the sixties, it was permitted that one could pay one thousand florins in lieu of military service.

That young men under such conditions, were not willing to sacrifice their own lives for the sake of lightening the burden of the rich is quite natural, and therefore, they tried their best to hide themselves at the time of conscription, which, for this reason, was not definitely announced. It was then in the interest of the rich that these poor young men should be prevented from escaping. This again was one of the main objects of the police, who was paid for this purpose. The congregation had to furnish for this year, let us say, two and a half soldiers. Comical as this would appear, such a fraction of a soldier was actually demanded. It meant that either the congregation sent one man more, and had half a soldier to its credit, or sent one less, as was charged for the next conscription term with this half soldier again. It was in the interest of the "Wachtmeister," as was said before, to prevent the young men from hiding. He knew of Nota, a struggling young fellow, who would have made an excellent soldier, but it was absolutely certain that, if Nota knew, when conscription was held, he would be hiding somewhere or would be on the other side of the Hungarian border before the commission had a change to examine him. Thus the Wachtmeister devised the following trick: He met Nota on the street, and as if just thinking of it by accident, said to the young man, who was a horse dealer, 'Say, Nota, do you know of a fine saddle horse?" Yes, Nota knew of it. "Well," said the Wachtmeister, "the Amtmann is looking for one, and he does not care what the price is, if the animal will suit him. Go there quickly, and say Wachtmeister Deutsch sent you." Poor Nota went right away, just as he was, in his wooden slippers, and asked to see the Amtmann. Asked what he wanted, he said, "The Wachtmeister Deutsch sent me on account of the saddle horse". Very politely he was shown into an adjoining room, and before he knew it, he was handcuffed, to be sent with the next transport to Bruenn, where conscription was held, and he had to serve his fourteen years in the army.

Another case was still more fiendish. There were two brothers, the one named Zodek—the name of the other. I have forgotten, but let us for convenience sake call him Moshe. Zodek and Moshe had not waited to take any chances, but had gone to Hungary where they were working. The Wachtmeister had found out that they were in Budapest, or were at least supposed to be there. Expenses were of no account, because the rich young men, who wanted to see the quota of two and a half soldiers for the year raised, provided him with ample means. So the Wachtmeister came to Budapest. To find Zodek was not very difficult. He knew that the young man was a tailor and he would work at his trade. All he had to do was to go to the office of the Tailors' union, called guild, where all workers in that trade had to be registered and without difficulty he located the master for whom Zodek was working. To get Moshe was a more difficult problem. All the Wachtmeister knew was that Moshe had been working in a silk mill. If he went from one place to another, the chances were that before he would ever find his man, some good friend, who was up to that trick, would warn the intended victim and the latter would escape. The Wachtmeister, therefore, devised another trick. He got a warrant for the arrest of Zodek as having stolen a piece of silk goods at home. Officials, when paid their fees, and a little tip besides, asked no more questions. Just furnished with his warrant Mordche Loeb went to the tailor shop, where Zodek was working, but took care to hide himself behind the door while the two local policemen entered and made their arrest. The poor tailor was shocked to death, and naturally asked what the charges against him were. The policemen accommodated him, saying that he had stolen a piece of silk goods from a factory and had sold it to a merchant. Poor Zodek, who naturally was unsuspecting, said, "I could not have done such a thing, and I am sure my brother is meant, who, though I do not believe him capable of committing a crime, may have been suspected of having done that thing, because he is working in a silk mill." The officer who made the arrest said very calmly, "We shall see about it. Tell us your brother's address." Zodek naively furnished the desired information, and the second brother was arrested, too. After both young men were placed in Mordche Loeb Deutsch's custody, they were taken to military barracks, and sent handcuffed by convoy to Bruenn. It pains me to say that Mordche Loeb told the story like many others of similar nature, with absolute unconcern, and I am only sorry not to have availed myself of the opportunity to record more of these "pre-March" stories.

The related incidents should suffice to make everybody understand why so many Jews sought refuge in Hungary, and why up to this day the border towns of western and northern Hungary still have a very large Jewish population, though they have furnished a considerable portion of the nearly two hundred thousand Jews, now living in Vienna, most of whom are new settlers or children of such.

Mordecai Benet was the son of a Hungarian Jew, a poor butcher, but his mother, who was from Nikolsburg, brought him to that city, where he received his education. As a promising young man, he aroused the interest of Gabriel Markbreit, president of the congregation, who as the name indicates, was a native of Bavaria. From times immemorial, it was customary to send young men to different places for the sake of their studies. The Talmud already reports that Judah Hannasi sent his son from Tiberius to Cesarea. In the Responsa of Moses Sofer, a case is discussed in which a man in Amsterdam left a legacy for the purpose of giving a young man the opportunity of attending a Yeshibah in a different place. So young Benet was sent first to Oettingen, and then to Fuerth, where he studied under Rabbi Joseph Steinhart (1706-1776), one of the last Talmudic scholars of the congregation, known as early as the seventeenth century as Little Jerusalem. Steinhart, by the way, was somewhat of a modernist. One must not think that this means a reformer. By no means! He strongly denounced dancing, and tells the story that in his former congregation a little town in Alsace, some progressive members brought charges against him before the local authorities, because he threatened with strong disciplinary measures, if the young people would persist in this godless amusement. The governor threatened the Rabbi with legal procedure, but the latter remained firm, and said he would rather lose his position than risk the salvation of his soul by winking at godless practices of his parishoners. Still. Steinhart measured by the standard of his time, was a progressive. In his work, he discusses already strictly scientific problems on Talmudic archeology and philology. His nephew, Mendel Steinhart, was indeed a full-fledged reformer and acted as member of the consistory organized upon the advice of the great philanthropist, Israel Jacobson in Cassel, during the time of the Napoleonic regime in 1808.

At the time when Mordecai Benet was a student in Fuerth not a soul thought of any deviation from the traditional mode of worship, and methods of education. At the age of eighteen the young man came back to Nikolsburg, where he married Finkel, the daughter of Gumpel Prositz, evidently a prominent member of the congregation. There is in my possession a little illuminated manuscript written on vellum, a masterpiece of penmanship. It contains some of the exceptional prayers, used on special occasions, and is written in a booklet of small size for the purpose of being taken along while traveling. It was written in 1755, for this Gumpel Prositz. The way it came into my possession is interesting. I suppose Gumpel gave it to his son-in-law, and the latter bequeathed it probably to his grandson, Laemmel Teltsch, who, dying early, left it to his widow, and the latter marrying in a second marriage an uncle of mine, left it to me.

In those days the rabbinic statement that eighteen years is the time for a young man to marry was taken as seriously as the other statement that at the age of thirteen, he has to fulfill the ritualistic practices. Just as even in my boyhood days the Bar Mitzvah received his first Tefillin from his father, so in those days he received at the age of eighteen his wife, provided as was unfortunately the case in our country, the restrictive state law did not interfere. Such a young couple were cared for by the wife's parents, and in time Mordecai Benet was appointed member of the Beth Din. The minimum membership of such a rabbinical college was three, but Nikolsburg, as a large community, had usually five Rabbis. As member of the rabbinical college Mordecai Benet signed the approval of the ghost stories, of which a description was given in the last article. He signed this document modestly with a pun on a Biblical passage (Gen. 27:11), "I am a young man." Subsequently he was Rabbi in the neighboring congregation of Lundenburg, then an insignificant town but now as a railroad and industrial center, far more important than Nikolsburg. He was then called as Rabbi to Schossberg in northern Hungary, but through the influence of his protector, Gabriel Markbreit, elected as successor of the aged Gerson Chajoth as Landrabbiner of Moravia in 1790, at the age of thirty-seven, which was an unusual success for so young a man in those days. He held his position from that time on until his death in Karlsbad, at the age of seventy-six, August 12, 1829.

Karlsbad had then no Jewish congregation. Jews were permitted to come there during the summer season to use the waters, and some were permitted to stay during the whole season, doing business, such as the Jewish boarding-house keeper, whose services could not be dispensed with. The nearest congregation was that of Lichtenstadt, now reduced to a few families. There the Rabbi was buried. His congregation was very unhappy at the fact that the body of the sainted teacher should not rest in her own cemetery and moved heaven and earth to obtain permission for its disinterment. The objection came largely from the congregation of Lichtenstadt, who not only wished to retain the body of the great teacher, but had some materialistic motives, because so many visitors, especially patients seeking cure at the famous springs, would come to the grave of the Rabbi to pray. The congregation of Lichtenstadt had another strong argument. Under Joseph II some old cemeteries, situated within the city limits, were closed for sanitary reasons. There was great danger that they would be condemned, in spite of the rabbinic law, which does not allow that the rest of the dead should be disturbed. Lichtenstadt argued that if the body of such a prominent man would be removed, the government would find in it a precedent for the right to condemn any cemetery. The question was submitted to some leading Rabbis, among others Moses Sofer of Pressburg, who had received his rabbinical diploma from Mordecai Benet, though he was not his pupil. The legal condition was this: The Rabbi of Nikolsburg as Landrabbiner, had the right to submit any man, elected to a rabbinical position in Moravia, to an examination. Moses Sofer was a native of Frankfort am Main, and came in 1784 with his teacher, Nathan Adler, a relative of the London Chief Rabbi by the same name, as Rabbi to Boskowitz. His disciple insisted on accompanying his teacher, but when Nathan Adler, whose piety was too eccentric even for Boskowitz in the eighteenth century, returned again to his native city, Moses Sofer returned to Moravia, settling in Prossnitz, where he married a widow, whose family was to support him, while he was to devote all his time to the study of God's law. It was the highest ambition of a pious scholar, not to make of the Torah "a spade to dig with," but Providence willed it otherwise. Moses Sofer had to accept a rabbinical position and found it in the congregation of Strassnitz. This place in Moravia, being under the jurisdiction of the Landrabbiner, required that the latter give to the young man a diploma, which he issued in the most flattering terms. Meantime Moses Sofer who, born in 1762, was only nine years younger than Mordecai Benet, obtained a greater fame as rabbinical scholar, and was requested by the Beth Din of Nikolsburg to give his opinion on the very important question of disinterment.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, May 19, 1916.

"To put back the hands of the clock" is an expression often met with, and many are the people whose temperament and inclination urge them in that direction. But to put the hands of the clock forward is a new thing. The European war has upset so many standards and made so many cherished usages topsy-turvy, that nothing is really surprising in the way of novelties. For many a year past "time reformers" have preached their gospel in England. Why not obtain more sunshine in the summer? they asked. Introduce an artificial time for summer months only, put on the hands of the clock, play at make-believe in the matter, and you will enjoy the light of day an hour longer. They preached in vain. People called them impractical. And now, almost at a stroke of the pen, a large number of countries in Europe have adopted this very scheme. The old world has a new conception—Summer time. It may not be altogether unworthy of note that Germany, which has also adopted the scheme, calls it "German Summer Time!" There are indeed people who say that if the Germans were gifted with a sense of humor this war might never have been. But be that as it may, the new method of saving artificial light, as no doubt our readers are aware, is to put on the clock one hour at a certain given point of time; to retain the new summer time all through the warm months of the year; and to put back the hands of the clock one hour at a certain given point of time in the autumn. Thus in England the clocks will be put forward one hour at 2 a.m. on Sunday morning, May 21st, and will be put back an hour at 2 a.m. on Sunday morning, October 1st.

The matter would hardly deserve attention in this column were it not that it has a Jewish aspect. Nineteen Sabbaths in the year are bound to be affected by the institution of summer time. In London, for example, in the summer months Sabbath normally commences at 7 o'clock on Friday. But 7 o'clock on Friday real time will be equivalent to 8 o'clock summer time. Similarly with the conclusion of the Sabbath. At the height of the summer Sabbath terminates at 9 o'clock and even later. But the corresponding summer time will be 10 o'clock. At first sight there does not seem to be any very great difficulty on the point. But one consideration had to be weighed. If you fix the commencement of the Sabbath at 8 o'clock, are you excluding children unnecessarily from participating in the Friday evening service? The ecclesiastical authorities took the common sense view that as summer time was one hour in advance of astronomical time, the Sabbath should begin and end one hour after the prescribed normal. The social and religious question of the influence of the change on the young did not seem important to them. And rightly so. If the truth must be told, the Friday evening services, certainly in the majority of London synagogues, is not greatly patronized, partly because of the general lack of interest in synagogue affairs and services, partly, too, however, because in a good many Jewish homes in England Friday night is a purely domestic institution, including not only Kiddush and the Sabbath meal, but the Friday evening prayers as well. There is much to be said for the custom, and where it prevails the introduction of summer time will hardly have any influence at all.

The apathy to which we have just called attention was manifested once more at the annual meeting of the constituent congregations of the United Synagogue held last Sunday. Very few of the gatherings were largely attended; fewer still gave evidence of anything like enthusiasm. It should prove of great interest to a student of psychology to account for the seeming deadness of synagogue life in England. Is it the fault of the services? ("I shall die, as I have lived, a Jew; but I dislike the ceremonies and liturgies with which Jews have allowed their religion to become encrusted." So wrote Sir Nathaniel Nathan in his will, just published.) Are the Ministers not as capable as they might be? Is it the stress of modern economic life? Is it that we lack an ancient tradition? What is it? Readers of "The Children of the Ghetto" will recall the discussion on the United Synagogue in the first chapter of Book II. of that masterpiece. Not one whit of real improvement has shown itself since the days when that book appeared. More synagogues—yes! More members—certainly! Perhaps a greater turnover. But more public religious life, more interest in religious affairs, more devotion to knowledge, without which Judaism must die? He would be a bold man who could answer in the affirmative. And yet Judaism possesses eternal truths, the very highest moral teaching, the very noblest expression of social duties. Who is at fault?

Questions such as these suggest themselves to the mind as one observes, calmly and dispassionately, the gradual and increasing drift. The war and its problems certainly call for immediate attention. But in solving these, in doing our duty which the day demands, those larger problems of life and thought are apt to be pushed into the background. The belligerent countries contain a very large percentage of Jews; the war and its influences will therefore affect Jews in Europe to a high degree. Everywhere the foundations are shaken; can we hope and expect that Jews and Judaism will remain untouched? It is not so much the question of whether services are provided for soldiers, or Jewish chaplains for the field. It is the question of lengthening the cords and strengthening the stakes. For a century perhaps our Jews' Free School has given religious instruction to its pupils on Sunday mornings, as an "extra," of course, i.e., the teaching was outside the prescribed code of the Educational authorities, and the cost of the special teaching was borne by the community. Some people may not have been satisfied either with the quality or the quantity of that Sunday morning work. But it was there, and it was something. Now, because of lack of funds, this Sunday morning religious teaching has had to be discontinued. Every loss of teaching means the diminution of opportunities for acquiring Jewish knowledge, and ignorant Jews are an abomination. It is contrary to all their feelings, contrary to all their ideals. George Bernard Shaw spoke true when, the other day, in "The New Statesman," he gave the Jews an excellent testimonial for their devotion to culture and their love of learning. In a time when "the things that are more excellent" are being scrapped, the ideal of the People of the Book can be usefully trumpeted abroad, and it is pleasing that a man like G. B. S., should be the trumpeter.

There is little fear of the Jew losing his devotion to general culture. But it is Jewish culture that needs booming—not only for the Jews' sake, but for the sake of the world. When the social organism after the war comes to be set up anew, it is bound to be built on the foundations of social righteousness, and on social righteousness the Jew has much to say. But it is not said in the synagogue; rather does one hear of it in the B'nai B'rith Lodge, in the Literary Society, in the Study Circle, in the Sinai League and the rest. The Synagogue, as it is at present, has no living inspiration. It has not moved with the times—so it would seem. Possibly the general lethargy of the London United Synagogue is but an expression of the general phenomenon. That it existed one knew. But we hoped for improvement. We have been disappointed. Perhaps it was another illustration of Shakespeare's doctrine about the tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune, but if omitted, life continues in shallows and flats. The congregational life of Jewry in this country is certainly in those low levels.

Shakespeare has been in our mouths of late, and we do not doubt that America has participated right worthily in the tercentenary celebrations. Of these celebrations in England a Jewish scholar has been Honorary Secretary—Professor Israel Gollancz, one of the foremost Shakespearean students. Among other things he also edited "A Book of Homage" to which men of letters all over the world have contributed, and it need hardly be added that Jews were of the number. Dr. Gollancz will round off his work in connection with the Shakespeare celebration by delivering a lecture on "Shylock" to his fellow members of the Jewish Historical Society of England.

The Royal Academy of Arts opened its usual Summer Exhibition early this month, and a sprinkling of Jewish artists are represented in the show Mr. Solomon J. Solomon (now Lieut.-Colonel) is of course of the number, being himself an Academician. He has a portrait of Sir Edward Clarke. Of the distinctly Jewish production may be mentioned Mr. Pilichowski's large canvas, called "Sorrow." It is Jewish to the core; showing an old Jew as its theme. Mr. Pilichowski (who, by the way, is a member of the First Lodge of England, and we are proud to have him) is an artist not only of great promise but of great achievement. He came into our midst from abroad as a result of the upheaval caused by the war, and already he has a host of friends. It should be stated that beside being a first-rate artist, he takes a very lively interest in the Jewish question, and at the deliberations of the Council of the London Lodge on the great re-arrangements after the war his advice, especially on the Russian Jews, has been greatly appreciated.

"It may interest you to know that I have here, fighting under my orders, a purely Jewish unit. As far as I know, this is the first time in the Christian era such a thing has happened.

The men who compose it were cruelly driven out of Jerusalem by the Turks, and arrived in Egypt with their families absolutely destitute and starving.

A complete transport corps was there raised from them for voluntary service with me against the Turks, whom they naturally detest.

These troops were officially described as the "Zion Mule Corps" and the officers and rank and file have shown great courage in taking water and supplies up to the fighting line under heavy fire. One of the private soldiers has been specially recommended by me for gallantry and has duly received from the King the Distinguished Conduct Medal."

So wrote General Sir Ian Hamilton to a correspondent, and the formation of the corps was noted in this column many months ago. The corps is now disbanded, but a record of its doings has just been published by its commander, Lieut. Colonel J. H. Patterson, in a vividly written book called "With the Zionists in Gallipoli." Possibly since the days of the Maccabees this was the first specifically Jewish unit, and Jewish readers will find the book interesting. Another volume, likewise of Jewish interest is also about to be issued. Its title, "Zionism and the Jewish Question," sufficiently indicates its scope.

A little incident which some time ago occurred in Salford, Manchester's twin city, is worth chronicling. It shows that if to err is human, to be just is English. In connection with the enlistment of soldiers local tribunals have been set up all over the land (and Jews will be found on several) before whom appeals are heard of claims for exemption from service. Often the exemption granted may be for a given period, and on one occasion a Jew was granted such a temporary exemption by the Salford tribunal. On his expressing his dissatisfaction, the Chairman of that tribunal, who is one of the local stipendiary magistrates, remarked, "You are like a Jew, vexed because you have not asked for more." This was reported in the local press, and Mr. Nathan Laski, one of the most prominent citizens of Manchester, who is also on the bench of magistrates as a justice of the peace, wrote with characteristic energy to his colleague who was guilty of momentary bad taste. "As a Jew," wrote Mr. Laski, "as a citizen, and as a fellow magistrate, I must enter a strong and indignant protest against your remark, which was callous and uncalled for. We, as a community, have done, and are doing, our 'bit' for the welfare of this country of our adoption. There is hardly a Jewish family whose sons of military age are not shedding their blood. I do not for a moment say that there are no shirkers in our community, but not any more than in any other. As Chairman of a Tribunal you have no right to pick out a Jewish applicant to make remarks of an offensive character, which insult the whole community. Especially it is in bad taste coming from a gentleman of your learned profession, whose chief, Lord Reading, is a Jew."

The offending Chairman at once acknowledged his fault. "I made a remark which I regretted as soon as I said it," he wrote in reply. And he took an early opportunity at meeting of the tribunal to make a public statement to the same effect, saying that he frankly regretted his harsh remark, and expressed his sorrow to a community who were standing so loyally in this time of stress.

NAT STRAUSS.*

By Charles Rosen.

Nat. Strauss is no more. He, who for more than a quarter of a century was with us every year as Secretary of our District, is with us no more. On November 2 last, at the grand old age of eighty-one, he passed away. What that meant to us, what that meant to this District, the younger men here today for their first time cannot possibly know. They will read the simple chronicle of his story, simple facts of his life that he was born in Alsace on September 10, 1834; that he came to this country—which became to him, as it does every Jew, his very own—in 1852, a stripling of eighteen; that he lived at Port Gibson and at Clinton; that when the Civil War broke out, true patriot, though young immigrant, as he was, he joined the Confederate Army and served as adjutant-general on the staffs of General Miller and General Bragg in the Army of Tennessee and the Army of Northern Virginia, and proved himself a brave officer and soldier; that when the war was done, he located in Mobile, and afterward served in the legislature of Alabama; that he was elected in 1890 Secretary of District No. 7 and moved to New Orleans, the seat of the District, where he resided until he died on November 2, 1915; and that as his body was being consigned to the dust by loving friends, the sad notes of the buglers' taps of the Armies in which he had served were sounded, to show that the service he had rendered fifty years before and to which in all his life he had never thereafter referred, had not been forgotten.

These simple facts they will read. But will they tell his story? We who knew him—we who knew the touch of his vanished hand, the sound of his voice that is still—we know they will not. Only those who were with him for the past quarter of a century while he was Secretary of the District—who saw him here at these Conventions year after year—saw him at his desk—the familiar figure, the kindly smile, the gladsome greeting, the desire to serve each and all, can feel what manner of man has passed away, and what we have lost.

What wealth of personal affection he had won through the years, what treasures of personal love and esteem he had won, he was fortunate to learn during his life; for some measure of it was born in upon him, to his great joy, when at our last Convention—the last he was ever to attend—we testified our personal love in words of affection, first put on parchment, and later engraved on the loving cup given him on his last birthday—just two months before he was taken away—that "the members of District Grand Lodge No. 7 extend to Brother Nat Strauss their heartfelt congratulations on the 25th anniversary of his service as Secretary of the Grand Lodge and convey to him their personal love and affection for his work."

But Nat. Strauss was more than Secretary of District No. 7. He was part of its history. He was one of the pioneers who nearly half a century ago, organized it in this Empire of the South of then scattered Jewish communities, where such a bond was needed among Jews—one of the young men of the New South who in the dark days of reconstruction upheaval, and of poverty and epidemic, and of prejudice in small community and scattered town, organized the lodge, sustained it, fostered it, developed it, and carried it forward as a power for good among the Jews. He was one of those who, in early days of beginning and of struggle, made our District what it is—a District among Districts—a blessing to our people.

Others this year have passed away—of these leaders and pioneers few remain. The old guard are leaving us behind. From the past we evoke as our monitors their silent beloved spirits to lead us on, to point the way to duty—Leo N. Levi, Godchaux Levi, Robert Samfield, Henry Hanaw, Joseph Magner, Jacques Loeb, Nat Strauss—the mighty figures of our past—the pioneers, the builders of District No. 7. They died in harness, true to the District to the last, every one of them, working for it, loving it, struggling for it always, sacrificing for it, their last breath a sigh, their last wish a prayer for the District and the Order which they loved.

Nat Strauss was one of these—one of the men who really and truly bring credit to our people, who really and truly advance the interests of humanity, who really truly lift up and exalt the Jew.

God bless his memory and ever keep it green among us; so that we may preserve it as a light to lead us on that path of goodness and unselfishness, noble work for others, which all his life he trod.

*A tribute spoken at the Convention at Little Rock, May 2, 1916.

Anti-Defamation League

The following circular letter was sent recently to the local managers of all the vaudeville theatres in the country:

"During the past two years we have had at least two hundred complaints in regard to vaudeville acts which, it is alleged, caricature and defame the Jew. We have made a careful investigation of each complaint and have found in many instances that the complaints have been justified.

"We believe that misrepresentation of Jewish character and characteristics upon the vaudeville stage is a powerful influence in arousing prejudice against the Jew. Many of these acts describe the Jew as a sneak, a mercenary egoist, a crafty materialist or a disreputable character of one kind or another. It is seldom that he is depicted as a man of honor or an idealist. The defamation which is practiced is usually masked with an attempt at humor. Witticisms in regard to fires, bankruptcies and mercenary marriages form their foundation; vulgar and indecent dialect songs constitute the background, and a dirty mis-shapen suit of clothes, or a vulgar over-display of jewelry are usually employed in the 'make-up.'

"We have complained to the booking agencies on numerous occasions in regard to these scurrilous acts, and in many cases have been successful in securing the modification of the act, or its withdrawal from the circuit.

"We do not believe that your theatre would knowingly present any act which slanders or defames any group of people on account of its religion or race. We believe that you are as anxious as we are to prevent the booking of acts which bring protests from the Jewish people. We believe that if the managers of the theatres will co-operate with us we shall ultimately eliminate from the circuits many acts that today belie the American reputation for fairness.

"We do not object to an act merely because the actor refers to the Jew or impersonates a Jew, but we do object most strenuously where it is apparent that his principal purpose is to cater to the antipathies and prejudices of his audiences. where he ridicules and slanders a whole people. where he ascribes ignoble characteristics or disgusting mannerisms to the Jew, where he ridicules Jewish customs, or where he makes the Jew a sneak, coward, a schemer, a defaulter, a fire-bug, a fence or a defective.

"The booking agencies are well aware of our attitude in regard to these acts. They do not seem to realize, however, the strong public opinion which exists in all sections of the country against acts that slander or defame the Jew.

"If you believe we are justified in our attitude, please send a letter to the booking agencies which supply your theatre, requisting them not to book acts for your theatre which come within the above category. We should appreciate it if you would send us a letter approving our position and offering such suggestions as may be helpful to us in this connection.

"We are mailing you. under separate cover, a copy of our annual report which sets forth, on pages 22, 23 and 24, the general scope of our work in connection with vaudeville acts.

"Trusting that we may have your assistance in this connection, and that we may be favored with an early reply, we are,

Very respectfully,
MANAGING BOARD."

The booking of vaudeville acts in practically all of the first-class theaters is controlled by a few large circuits. The managers of these ciccuits have been co-operating with the League in its efforts to drive out the scurrilous and malicious songs and jokes which so often form a part of acts caricaturing the Jew. Complaints made to them with reference to objectionable portions of individual acts have always elicited prompt and courteous response. Often, however, it is difficult for the booking office to reach the root of the evil, as a clever performer is constantly interpolating new jokes and songs and inventing new "stunts." What may be a perfectly proper act when the contract is signed may, therefore, be objectionable a few weeks later. When an actor finds that a defamatory joke will draw a big laugh, he is not easily dissuaded from repeating it. In such a case the booking office would never know the true facts with reference to this act, unless some representative of the League happens to be present. The above letter was sent to the local managers in order that they might act as a check. The many replies which we have received indicate a thorough willingness to co-operate and assist and an intelligent appreciation of the motive and necessity for our activity in this regard. The League is not dependent entirely on the good will of the managers as its representatives throughout the country will sooner or later be informed of the objectionable portions. In fact, the League is able to trace an act from town to town and to determine through its local representatives whether promises made by an actor to eliminate defamatory matter are kept.

Several of the replies expose a festering ulcer which must be cleansed thoroughly before complete success is achieved in this line of the League's endeavors. The following extract from a letter received from the manager of an Ottawa, Canada, theatre explains the situation:

"You state in your letter that you have appealed to various booking agencies in regard to these scurrilous acts, but did it ever occur to you that fully ninety-five per cent of the Jewish impersonators are Jews themselves, and I will further state that a majority of the songs and comedy of which you complain are written by men not of the Gentile race. While this theatre is always ready, as hundreds of our Jewish patrons in this city will verify, to raise the standard of its entertainment and eliminate as far as possible acts to which you refer, it strikes me, basing this statement upon my experience, that a direct appeal should be made to the members of your own race in the profession asking them to eliminate vulgarity and try to elevate the Jew instead of making him a character that is liable to arouse the prejudice of others."

Though somewhat exaggerated, no one can deny that the facts stated in this letter are in the main true. It is a sad commentary that we must restrain Jews from defaming Jews. We have found, however, that in many instances these actors do not realize the consequences. They do not know that they are contributing to the burden of prejudice which has been weighing down upon the Jew for centuries. Let it be said in justice to them that when convinced of this fact, they are always glad to comply with our requests. There is no people more passionately loyal to our country and its ideals of justice, liberty and equality than the Jew. There is no people which more quickly assimilates all that is best in America than the Jew. Vaudeville actors of the Jewish faith are no exception to this rule. They have no desire to create another hyphenated group. Like all of us, they desire the Jews of this country to be known as American Jews, not as Jewish-Americans. When the fact is impressed upon them that their act tends toward the latter result, they are always eager to work with us.

It is not an easy matter to decide what method to pursue in the case of any individual actor unless a detailed statement of the objectionable portions of an act are forwarded to the offices of the League. All representatives of the League are therefore urged to present as detailed a report as possible. It is only by constant and unremitting effort that we will finally succeed in removing from the stage this great source of prejudice.

THE KEHILLAH

Rabbinic law insists on the inviolability of the grave, making an exception, however, in the case of danger of desecration, or of destruction by flood, and finally in the case of a removal to what in our language might be called a family lot. Moses Sofer argues that in as much as some members of Benet's family are buried in Nikolsburg, and in as much as the congregation is the spiritual family of a Rabbi, the disinterment is permitted. Thus in March, 1830, the body was removed from Lichtenstadt, and buried with great ceremony in Nikolsburg. The honor of occupying the vacated grave was awarded to another Rabbi of Moravia, Meier Blatt, whose great grandson, Joseph Blatt, is now Rabbi of Oklahoma City. Whether he appreciates this fact, or whether he is even aware of it, I do not know.

The ideals change in the course of three generations, and I had ample opportunity to experience it in Mordecai Benet's family. One great-grandson of his was a fellow student of mine at the Gymnasium at Nikolsburg, and neither in learning, nor in religious observance did he do justice to his pedigree. Two other boys, one a great-grandson, and one representing the fifth generation, were students of mine when I taught school in Bruenn. They could barely read Hebrew. If one should have told the great Rabbi that sixty years after his death, his lineal descendants would present such a strong type of the decline of Jewish learning, he would hardly have been willing to accept such prophecy as true. But such is history.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF JEWISH CHARITIES.

A most interesting and largely attended convention of the National Conference of Jewish Charities was held at Indianapolis, Indiana, beginning Sunday, May 7, 1916.

The opening session was held at the Temple. Governor Samuel M Ralston, of Indiana; Father Francis H. Gavisk, president of the National Conference Charities and Correction; Rabbi Morris M. Feuerlicht and Miss Minnie F. Low, president of the Jewish Conference, were the speakers of the evening. After the formal addresses the president, Miss Low, read her annual report, tracing the history of the organization from the time of its formation in 1900 down to the present day.

Monday's sessions were taken up with various phases of Social Service. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of the Social Service Department of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, read a paper on the Big Brother Movement, and the efforts of the members of the Order in the matter of securing work for released prisoners.

Mr. L. H. Levin of Baltimore gave an illustrated lecture at the banquet held at the Hotel Riley on Monday evening. His lecture dealt with his trip to Palestine as a member of the American Committee for Jewish Relief.

Tuesday's sessions were taken up by Dr. S. E. Goldstein of New York, speaking at the morning session on the subject, "Social Service in the Synagogue," followed by a general discussion.

At the evening session C. L. Sulzberger of New York spoke on "Co-operation Between All Groups in a Community." Fred W. Butzel of Detroit conducted the general discussion that followed.

Election of officers was held on Wednesday with the following result: President, Aaron Cohen of Pittsburg; Vice-Presidents, Fred M. Butzel of Detroit, Jacob Billikopf of Kansas City, and J. K. Hexter of Dallas Tex.; Secretary, Louis H. Levin of Baltimore; Treasurer, Bernard Greensfelder of St. Louis.

The election of the members of the Executive Committee, as well as the officers of the National Association of Jewish Social workers, marked the close of the four-day session of the conference.

More than 250 delegates and representatives from all parts of the country were in attendance at the seven meetings of the conference. A great number of them remained over in the city for the sessions of the National Conference of Charities and Corrections.

JEWS RECEIVE HONORS.

Among the birthday honors conferred by King George of England last week is included the name of Baron Reading, Lord Chief Justice of England, who recently visited the United States as chairman of the commission which negotiated the Anglo-French loan. He was decorated with the title of Viscount.

King George also conferred the Military Cross on Second Lieutenant Alan Edward Jacobs, for conspicuous gallantry on several occasions, notably when, after having been for the moment forced back by a superior number of the enemy, he rallied his platoon and led it in a counter attack, by which the enemy was driven back. Captain Lewis G. Harris, on whom the Military Cross had already been conferred, has been personally invested by the King therewith.

THE B'NAI B'RITH.

An event which will take place at Homrich Hall tonight should appeal with particular force to the Jewish people of Huntington. The B'nai B'rith, wherever it has been founded, has implanted the noblest of principles. Its conception of humanitarian duties and practices expresses the height of practical philanthropy. Service is its watchword, and the theory that it is more blessed to give than to receive finds every day exemplification among its members. It is an order highly dedicated to human uplift. It holds out the hands of friendship to the friendless and helps the helpless into the way of helping themselves. Leading Jews the world over are proud to belong to this order, since its tenets stamp upon character the finest and noblest things in Jewish tradition and reflect the splendid ideals that animate Twentieth Century Jewish philanthropy and brotherhood.—Huntington Herald-Dispatch.

JAPANESE SHIPS PROVIDE KOSHER FOOD.

Japanese steamship companies have agreed to install a kosher kitchen in the passenger steamers coming to Seattle. The first steamer with a kosher kitchen arrived in Seattle June 6, although it had only six Jews on board, three in first class cabins and three in steerage department.

700,000 JEWS IN NEED.

We publish herewith report of correspondent of the Associated Press of Berlin, as follows:

Of the normal total of about 2,450,000 Jews in Poland, Lithuania, and Courland, 1,770,000 remain, and of this number about 700,000 are in urgent and continuous want. About 455,000 of these are in Poland, and 50,000 of this number are persons who are without homes and in particularly distressful circumstances. The number of the needy is increasing from month to month. Opportunities to earn money are few, and thousands who are still living on their savings will, sooner or later, find these exhausted and become dependent on charity.

These estimates appear in the annual report of the German Hebrew Relief Association, which has taken upon itself the work of relieving its co-religionists in the occupied districts back of the battle line in Russia and Galicia. The sum of 500,000 marks (normally about $125,000) monthly is required to alleviate the distress of the most necessitous of the 700,000 sufferers, and even this sum, which is all that the relief association can devote to the work for the next few months can do little more than keep them from actual starvation.

With this sum 225 cities and villages in the occupied districts are being assisted. The Grand Lodge of B'nai B'rith in Germany has had a large share in the relief work, and more than a half million marks has thus far been received from America. Up to date nearly 2,250,000 marks has been paid out by the Hebrew Relief Association for Poland and Lithuania. Funds available have not been sufficient to afford relief to some 10,000 Jews in Courland, where the distress is not so great as in the other districts.

These activities have formed but a part of the work of the Relief Association. Quite as important and even more arduous has been its work as an intermediary between the residents of the occupied districts and the outside world. In this department no denominational distinctions were made, Jews and Catholics alike being aided. Chief advantage was taken of this work by relatives and friends in America of the Polish sufferers. About 8,000,000 marks has thus far been received from America for direct transmission, and the Relief Association handles as many as 100,000 letters monthly from and to America.

A slight alleviation of conditions may come from the recently secured permission of emigration from the occupied districts. Many families have already availed themselves of the permission, most of them going with tickets sent from America.

DR. BRANDES ON POLES AND JEWS.

The Copenhagen correspondent of a Lemberg Yiddish daily paper has had an interview with Dr. Georg Brandes, on the subject of the relations between the Jews and Poles. Dr. Brandes mentioned that the Poles, whom he had sharply attacked about a year and a half ago for their persecution of the Jews, were leaving no stone unturned in order to win him over to their cause, and although he had been prevailed upon recently to lecture to the Polish colony in Copenhagen on the Polish Question, he fully maintained his charges against the Polish people. The struggle between the Poles and the Jews, Dr. Brandes stated to the interviewer, should not be carried on with bitterness which must exclude the possibility of an understanding and lead to still further hatred on both sides. An understanding must be arranged, but this could only be brought about if the Poles, as the stronger body, treated the weaker body with humane methods, and if both Poles and Jews recognized certain basic principles. The Jews, on their part, would have to recognize that an independent Poland could not tolerate its political organizations being other than exclusively Polish; consequently the Jews would have to abandon all attempts to weaken this system. They would also have to admit the exclusiveness of the Polish national language, instruction in which they would have to cultivate intensively in their schools. The Poles, too, would have to understand that it would be impossible not to acknowledge the peculiar characteristics of a population numbering three millions. These characteristics in respect to language, culture, and religion would have to be taken into account, and every forcible repression of them should be avoided, as such a course could not but result in brutality and weakening. Only on the lines he had sketched out could an understanding become possible, an understanding which was so greatly to be desired in the interests of both oppressed peoples.

ACTIVITIES OF PROGRESS LODGE, PEORIA, ILL.

Inspired by the address of Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, director of the Social Service Department of the Order, the committee of Progress Lodge No. 113, appointed to do Social Service, undertook the care of the 63 inmates of the Illinois State Hospital for incurable insane. For 25 years these people were neglected upon the theory advanced by some Rabbis that it was sacriligous to hold divine service for insane people. Many of these patients were devoid of even the conception of the terms or the ideas of the Jewish service. As an experiment, with a view of getting them out of their lethargy, the committee inaugurated services for them on Sunday afternoons. Rabbi Aaron Cohen volunteered to read the services, but it seemingly had but little effect.

The first attempt was followed by another service the following Sunday which included not only the religious service, but also singing by a choir of seven boys, and it seemingly aroused them to a realization of what the service meant and was intended for.

On the following Sunday the Committee induced a number of ladies and gentlemen to attend this service and furnish the patients with refreshments after the service, and to make their personal acquaintance. This was followed up further by having on the following Sunday some ladies, in addition to the choir, render vocal music, and after the regular service a lecture of hope and comfort was given by the Rabbi.

On the following Sunday, being the sixth service, not only were all of the Jewish patients there, but they brought their friends, and the attendance was more than double.

The patients have lucid intervals, and only such as are in fair health attend these services. Almost every one of them learned to appreciate the efforts of the Social Service Committee.

The general expense of carrying on these services is borne by Progress Lodge, while the refreshments are served to Jews and Gentiles alike. All of the members of the Lodge and their ladies who have attended these various services are satisfied that the inmates are being made happier and are learning to appreciate the service rendered them.

In addition to the Sunday services, which will be held regularly every Sunday, the monthly social and musical evenings for not only the Jewish patients, but any of the patients of the Hospital who wish to attend, will be arranged.

Brother Isaac J. Levinson, chairman of the Social Service Committee of the Lodge, has also been appointed chairman of the Committee of Charities of the Association of Commerce, and it will be his work as such chairman to inaugurate similar entertainment at least once a week in the Hospital.

The work of the Lodge is being viewed by the Catholic and Protestant ministers with much interest, and it may be expected that the efforts of the Committee on Social Service will result in similar attempts by the Associated Charities.

The ladies of Peoria have undertaken the work of providing each Jewish patient with a neat suit of clothes, so that when they attend services they may look respectable.

The Social Service Committee is under many obligations to the superintendent of the Hospital and to the Board of Administration for the many courtesies extended, and assistance given them.

The Big Brother movement and Free Employment Bureau, as well as Juvenile Court work, have been in existence in Peoria for over three decades, and while not directly under the care of Progress Lodge, yet the members of that Lodge have been most active in furthering this work.

The Social Service Committee of the Lodge has also taken care of two paroled prisoners from the State Penitentiary, and while it was disappointed in one case, the second case has proven most satisfactory, as the paroled man is conducting himself properly, working diligently, and giving satisfaction to all who come in contact with him.

The Lodge has had intellectual advancement meetings each month at which local talent participated. Various subjects were discussed, papers were read and debates were held and lectures delivered on subjects of interest to the Jew.

These meetings are open to the public and not only a large number of members of the Lodge and their families, but many non-members attend them. The meetings have become an educational center for a large portion of Peoria Jews. Social evenings have been arranged by the Lodge from time to time and at the last annual banquet held under the auspices of the Lodge all the Jews of Peoria were invited to attend.

BANQUET AND CLASS INITIATION BY COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

Under the auspices of Covenant Lodge No. 569, of Duluth, Minn., the annual banquet was held at Holland Hotel on the evening of May 10, 1916.

Preceding the banquet a meeting of the Lodge was held which was largely attended and at which a class of sixteen candidates were initiated by the Degree Team of the Lodge, under the direction of Brother Charles E. Oreckovsky.

The meeting, as well as the banquet, was graced by the presence of Brother B. J. Samuels of Chicago, president of District Grand Lodge No. 6, and Brother Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the Grand Lodge. The guests of honor were entertained at a luncheon at the Duluth Commercial Club and in the afternoon they were taken on an automobile ride to the steel plant and the Model City.

Brothers Samuels and Frankel were the principal speakers at the banquet. In his address Brother Samuels urged the members and their friends present to enlist in a move to secure equal rights for Jews with all other inhabitants in the warring nations abroad. He emphasized the fact that the termination of the war will offer a favorable opportunity for securing relief for the Jewish people from oppression, particularly in those lands where the elementary human rights are denied to them. A move to have the Jews of America represented in negotiations at the end of the war is being made, he said. The importance of being organized when the close of the war comes was emphasized.

Opposition to the Burnett immigration bill, which includes a literacy test for immigrants, was voiced by the speaker. The bill was twice vetoed by President Taft and has once been vetoed by President Wilson, declared Mr. Samuels, but it is again pending in the Senate.

Mr. Samuel's talk was chiefly concerned with the Order, its work, and its aspirations.

Mr. Frankel, in his address, dwelt on the Social Service work recently instituted by the Order and urged the co-operation of all the members in this undertaking.

In addition to the addresses by Mr. Samuels and Mr. Frankel short talks were made by President Kapplin, L. S. Loeb, a director of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum, a B'nai B'rith institution; Dr. Maurice Lefkovits, B. Silberstein, I. Freimuth and S. M. Slonim, who spoke in behalf of the incoming class; and the following out-of-town visitors: Col. Edwin Romberg of Chicago, Leo Dietz of New York, Herman Baer and H. Rabinovitz of Virginia, and L. D. Coddon of St. Paul.

E. A. Silberstein was toastmaster. He was introduced by A. B. Kapplin, president of the Lodge.

E. A. Silberstein, Samuel Weinstein and S. B. Copilowisch comprised the committee in charge of the banquet and ceremonial.

MEMORIAL SERVICES BY SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Members of Springfield Lodge No. 684, B'nai B'rith, gathered in Odd Fellows' Hall last Sunday night for the annual memorial exercises, and to honor departed members. The speaker of the evening was Charles M. Stern of Albany, deputy attorney-general for the State of New York, who paid tribute to the memories of men who had, while living, lived those lives which best illustrated the precepts of the Order of which they were members.

President P. L. Davison opened the exercises with a reminder of the solemnity of the occasion, and was followed by Henry Lasker, who spoke briefly of the departed brothers and told of the work they had done for the Lodge and the Jewish community. Rabbi Samuel Price spoke of their work and reminded the audience that from such a solemn thing as death a note of optimism rises and that there is no real sorrow in the death of those who lived fine lives. Mrs. P. S. Silbert, at the piano, provided the musical part of the exercises when the audience sang "Hatikvah."

BARNETT LODGE, FORREST CITY, ARK.

Barnett Lodge No. 754, of Forrest City, Ark., held a well-attended meeting on Sunday, May 7, 1916. Brother Sol Lewis, delegate to the recent convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7, submitted report as to the activities of the Order and proceedings of the convention.

The Propaganda Committee of the Lodge is arranging to visit Marianna for the purpose of securing additional members for the Lodge from among the residents of that town.

The entertainment committee is planning an outing early in June

DAN LODGE, CHARLESTON, S. C.

The rapid progress made by Dan Lodge in 1915 under the leadership of President W. J. Bernstein has been ably continued by the present president, Jos. Fromberg, during 1916. The Lodge is continually evolving, with new members regularly added, new features introduced, new movements attempted. At the present time its membership is the largest in its history, and its finances are in very satisfactory shape.

But what is more important, perhaps, is the fact that more interest in the work of the Order is manifested by the members. Due mainly to the efforts of President Fromberg, features of unusual interest have been provided for the members at regular and special meetings, and it may safely be said that the Lodge has never been more active.

Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, director of the Social Service Department of the Order, visited Charleston on May 15, and delivered an address to a public gathering held under the auspices of Dan Lodge, at teh Beth Elohim Synagogue. After an introduction by the president, Dr. Coffee spoke entertainingly of the work of the Order in general and the work of his department in particular. He told of the Big Brother movement, and in a very interesting manner related a number of incidents illustrative of the good work done by the Social Service Department in the large cities.

His address, which was as instructive as it was interesting, was thoroughly enjoyed by his audience.

Dan Lodge has recently engaged in an experiment which has met with success. Once a week a meeting is held, mainly for the benefit of Jewish immigrants, whether or not they are members of the Lodge. At these meetings, which are well attended, short addresses are made in which the audience is lectured about the duties of American citizenship. Our system of government is explained, significant features in our history are related, and a deeper respect for the law is inculcated. In making better and more patriotic citizens this feature of Dan Lodge's work has proven popular and effective, and its success is due mainly to the zealous labor of Brothers J. Fromberg and E. L. Visnaska.

At the regular monthly meeting in May the Red Sea Degree was administered to a class of twelve candidates, and proved to be one of the most interesting efforts ever made by the Lodge. Elaborate preparations, including appropriate costuming, impressive scenic and lighting effects, and constant rehearsals, were made, and the largest regular meeting in the history of the Lodge resulted. The ceremony was enthusiastically received by the members, and the president received the thanks of the Lodge for his untiring efforts in making the degree a success. The initiating team in general was praised by the members, and it is expected that the Red Sea Degree will become a regular feature of the Lodge's initiation.

Dan Lodge holds no meetings during the summer months, but its work will continue, and from present indications its future progress is assured. Its opening fall meeting occurs in October.

ENTERTAINMENT BY MASSACHUSETTS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

On the evening of May 17, Massachusetts Lodge No. 27 held a stag smoker in Boston. The affair proved a most gratifying success. Each member was allowed to bring a guest. Fourteen new members were enrolled. A splendid series of musical and vaudeville numbers were offered. The very best professional talent was secured and it was the unanimous opinion of those present that never had they enjoyed a finer program. A wholesome atmosphere pervaded the affair.

Brother Judge A. K. Cohen favored the Lodge with his presence, despite the enormous demands now being made upon his time.

Massachusetts Lodge No. 27 advises sister Lodges to adopt similar methods to attract new members.

In the course of the festivities speeches were made by Brothers Leon R. Eyges, Jacob Kuhns, President Richard Hermann, Vice-President Jacob Wasserman (who acted the part of toastmaster most hospitably and wittily), chairman of the Membership Committee Warren J. Bloom and Judge A. K. Cohen.

Too much credit for the success of this entertainment cannot be given to Brothers Elias Friedman and Sumner Gordon, who labored untiringly for the good of the cause.

A very tasty dutch supper was served.

It might not be out of place to add a word of praise for Brother President Richard Hermann, who, by his engaging personality and conscientious efforts, has injected a new dash and ginger into the work of the Lodge.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.

Illinois Lodge No. 794 was instituted in the city of East St. Louis on Sunday, June 4, 1916. In view of the fact that all of the members of the newly organized Lodge were members of the Order belonging to Lodges in the city of St. Louis no formal institution ceremonies were held, and the institution assumed the form of a public meeting, attended by about 100 members and their friends.

Brother Dr. H. I. Davis of Chicago, first vice-president of District Grand Lodge No. 6, accompanied by Brother Albert F. Mecklenberger, member of the General Committee, and A. B. Seelenfreund, secretary of the District Grand Lodge, had charge of the ceremonies. The occasion was also graced by the presence of Brother Jacob Furth of St. Louis, member and treasurer of the Executive Committee of the Order; Karl M. Vetsburg of St. Louis, president of District Grand Lodge No. 2; Harry Simon of St. Louis, past president of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and a large number of officers and members of Missouri and Ebn Ezra Lodges located in St. Louis, Mo.

Addresses on the work of the Order were delivered by the Grand Lodge officers and distinguished visitors from District No. 2, and a musical program of vocal and instrumental numbers was delightfully rendered.

The new Lodge starts out with a membership of fifty and bids fair to become active in the Order's work.

After the institution of the Lodge, the installation of officers was held, and at the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent. The following was the program of exercises:

Address of Welcome by Brother Frank I. Marks, Illinois Lodge No. 793, I. O. B. B.

Institution of Illinois Lodge No. 793 by Grand Lodge Officers.

Installation of Officers of Illinois Lodge No. 793 by Grand Lodge Officers.

Instrumental Solo—Hattie Pogratsky.

Address—Brother Harry Simon, Past President District Grand Lodge No. 2.

Vocal Solo—Ruth Esserman.

Address—Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, Secretary District Grand Lodge No. 6.

Instrumental Solo—Leona Bernard.

Address—Brother Jacob Furth, Member of the Executive Committee Constitution Grand Lodge.

Address—Brother H. I. Davis, First Vice-President District Grand Lodge No. 6.

Instrumental Solo—Hattie Pogratsky.

Address—Brother Karl M. Vetsburg, President District Grand Lodge No. 2.

Vocal Solo—Ruth Esserman

Address—Albert F. Macklenberger, member General Committee, District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B.

WINNIPEG LODGE NO. 650, WINNIPEG, CANADA.

At the annual general meeting held by Winnipeg Lodge No. 650 on Thursday, June 1, the following officers have been elected for the ensuing term:

A. J. Abramovich, president; Moses Haid, vice-president; Dr. John Grambergu, assistant monitor; John I. Stein, treasurer; Roy Rosenblat, secretary; Abraham Squires, Morris Cates, Moses Cohen, trustees; Arthur Levin, warden; Louis Leipsic, guardian.

The members of the Lodge ought to be contgratulated on the selection of their new board. The new executive is composed of men who have been identified with the work of the Lodge and other institutions, and if past experience is the criterion of the new board, Winnipeg Lodge will have a banner year.

One of the most important undertakings of the Lodge during the past year was the formation of a Social Service and Big Brother Movement Committee. Many Jewish young boys have been saved from long terms in the penitentiary through the influence of this department. Ninety-nine per cent of the little boys who are under the care of a big brother are progressing favorably, and in time they will make good citizens, of which privilege they might have been deprived if Winnipeg Lodge did not have such a committee to look after them. This department has been in existence only a few months, and over fifty cases have been reported and properly looked after.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is continuing to do good work. The auxiliary has also formed a Social Service and Big Sister Department, which is a great help to the committee of the Lodge.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

DACOTAH LODGE, GRAND FORKS, N. D.

Sunday, April 23, marked a new epoch in the history of Dacotah Lodge at Grand Forks, N. D. Jointly with the local Lodge of the I. O. B. A., a session in the nature of a Seder Service was held on the afternoon of that day in the Lodge room. The event was a further step in the direction of securing greater harmony and unity among the local branches of Jewry. In view of the fact that the brethren of the Lodge occupy the most prominent positions of leadership in practically every Jewish organization in this city, an event in the nature of the one mentioned above met with the most hearty approval of every brother of the Lodge.

The session commenced at 3 p. m. President Brother George Papermaster of the B. B. Lodge acted as master of ceremonies, and in his opening remarks explained the purpose of the meeting and ordered the Seder prepared. Brother Rabbi Benj. Papermaster began the service by reciting the Kiddish. Then followed a series of talks which in a witty way correlated the significance of the Seder idea with its symbols and ceremonies to the present day Jew and its bearing upon the lofty principles of harmony, peace and unity. The following speakers participated: Sig Wolf, Isaac Dimond, Max Rabinovitch, M. Fishman, John Fishman, Isadore Papermaster, past president of John Hay Lodge; Emil I. Pyes and Rabbi Benjamin Papermaster. Brother Moses Abromovitch concluded the program by entertaining those present with a song of peace.

Dacotah Lodge is planning on some active work to make its influence in the local Jewry felt by every member.

EZEKIEL LODGE, NEWARK, N. J.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

Steubenville Lodge No. 789 was instituted with 29 charter members at Steubenville, Ohio, on May 7, 1916. The ceremonies were under the direction of Brother A. H. Kornhauser of Cleveland, president of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and Brother Edward Hemple of Pittsburgh, who was mainly instrumental in organizing the Lodge.

The degree work was conferred by Zion Lodge No. 62 of Columbus, Ohio. Following the installation ceremonies, a banquet was held at the private dining rooms of the Imperial Hotel.

At a public meeting held during the day fifteen additional applications for membership were secured and the new Lodge promises to become one of the live organizations of the community.

SAGINAW, MICH.

Under the auspices of Saginaw Lodge No. [illegible], of Saginaw, Mich., an open meeting was held on Sunday, May 7th. A large audience took advantage of the excellent program which consisted of a debate on "Zionism," affirmative Ellis I. Thal, negative David [illegible]. A [illegible] vocal solo was rendered by [illegible] Thal accompanied by Miss Levin-[illegible]. Short talks were also given by several members of the Lodge.

HERZL LODGE, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Herzl Lodge No. 608, of Houston, Texas, acted as host to local B'nai B'rith Lodges at a joint meeting held on Wednesday evening, May 17, 1916.

The delegates to the recent Convention of the District Grand Lodge made their reports at the meeting of the proceedings of the Convention.

The Lodges of Houston are making preparations for an extensive campaign to increase their membership and to enhance the various Lodge activities. It will also be the aim of the B'nai B'rith of Houston to put forward results achieved as the best argument for securing the Convention of the District Grand Lodge in 1918.

At the close of the meeting, nomination of officers was held and this was followed by the serving of refreshments.

HOUSTON LODGE, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

One of the largest gatherings of members of B'nai B'rith Lodges of Houston, was held at the Concordia Club on the evening of April 27, under the guise of a "Smoker." There was a splendid representation from all of the locals.

The purpose of this meeting was threefold in its nature. First, as a smoker and "Get-Together" meeting; second, as a night of initiation of candidates; third, as a send-off for the delegates to the Convention of the District Grand Lodge at Little Rock, Ark.

The evening was ideal for the purpose of initiation and the ceremonies were more impressive than usual. The success of the social features of the evening were attested to by all those present. Expressions of pleasure for having attended the meeting and the opportunity to greet members of other Lodges, were heard on all sides.

Addresses for the good and welfare of the Order were made by Brothers Kahn, Schnitzer, Greenfield, Wagner and Schoenman.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

The monthly meeting of Samuel Auxiliary to Samuel Lodge No. 668, of Vancouver, held its regular meeting, on May 10. Reports were read on Social Service and literary section.

The Sewing Circle closed its work for the summer and the last sewing was held at the residence of Miss Fleischman, where an enjoyable afternoon was spent.

During the first part of the winter the Sewing Circle prepared and distributed sewing for the poor. The literary section also proved very popular.

President A. H. Fleischman read papers on Jewish history. The auxiliary is planning to hold a picnic during the coming summer and other functions are being arranged.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Louisville Lodge No. 14, of Louisville, Ky., for the first time in its history conducted a Memorial Service in its Lodge room in the Y. M. H. A. on Sunday evening, May 28, in honor of its former members who have passed away during the past year.

The following program was carried out:

Opening Remarks—Louis Grossman, president Louisville Lodge.

Vocal Solo—"Draw Near All Ye People," from Oratorio of Elijah by Mendelsohn; Mr. Chester B. Solomon, accompanied by Miss Bertha Levenson.

Memorial Address—Rabbi A. Nowak.

El-Mole-Rachamim and Kaddish—Rev. Samuel Goldberg, Cantor B'nai-Jacob Synagogue.

Farewell (Schubert)—Miss Flora Marguerite Bertelle, accompanied by Mrs. Sidney J. Meyers.

Louisville Lodge now has a membership of about 400. The Lodge has arranged for many interesting events to be held in the near future, and is also planning to conduct another membership campaign this fall, as it is determined to increase its membership to at least 500 before the next meeting of the Grand Lodge.

At the Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 2, held in Cleveland, Brother Joseph Seligman of Louisville Lodge was elected to the office of second vice-president of the District. In view of the fact that this high honor was conferred on Brother Seligman, who is one of the most popular and influential members not only of the Lodge, but of the local Jewish community, it is expected that interest in B'nai B'rith work locally will be very much strengthened.

INSTITUTION OF SHOLEM LODGE OF CHISHOLM, MINN.

On Sunday, May 7, 1916, Sholem Lodge No 793, of Chisholm, Minn., was instituted with a charter membership of thirty-three. Brother Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District, and as its representative, called the meeting to order and requested Brother Chas. D. Oreckovsky of Duluth, member of the General Committee of the District, to act as temporary president.

After the initiation of thirty applicants by the Degree Team of Mesaba Lodge, of Virginia, Minn., under the guidance of the visiting Grand Lodge officers, election of officers was held with the following result: President, J E. Goldenberg; vice-president, Morris Peck; recording secretary, B. H. Craine; financial secretary, M. Sapero; treasurer, Max Wain; guardian, H. K. Goldenberg; warden, H. Bloom; and trustees, N. Nides, J. Lewis and S. B. Dubow. Brother Simon Sapero was appointed by Brother Frankel as monitor for the ensuing term.

The Lodge resolved to hold its meetings on the 2nd and 4th Sunday afternoon of the month in the vestry room of the Temple, and that the annual dues be $10, payable in four quarterly installments.

A committee was appointed to draft the necessary by-laws.

The officers of the Lodge were then installed by the Grand Lodge officers, after which addresses were made and the meeting was duly closed.

In the evening a public meeting of the Lodge was held, at which the visiting Grand Lodge officers delivered addresses and at its close an entertainment was given and refreshments were served.

The officers of Mesaba Lodge of Virginia and a large number of its members were present at the institution ceremonies, also representatives from Covenant Lodge of Duluth.

IBN GABIROL'S SOCIAL EVENT.

Large delegations from neighboring towns pilgrimaged to Pittsburgh to attend the minstrel show and vaudeville performance was by Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114, of Pittsburgh, Pa., at Moose Temple, on Tuesday evening, May 23. A special train was chartered to bring the guests and friends from the surrounding cities. The proceeds of the affair will be used for the furtherance of social service and philanthropic work of the Lodge.

The vaudeville and minstrel show were given under direction of M. Schonfield and I. A. Bernstein, who was in charge of the music. The performance lasted until about 10 o'clock in the evening, after which a dance was held until the early hours of the morning.

Ibn Gabirol Lodge is one of the old Lodges of the District, having been in existence nearly 48 years. Since its organization the Lodge has done much philanthropic work, particularly in the Hill district where the Lodge is located.

ISIDOR STRAUSS LODGE NO. 519, OF FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

An open meeting of Isidor Strauss Lodge No. 519, of Fort Worth, was held on Sunday evening, May 14, at the Hebrew Institute. The meeting was presided over by Rabbi George Fox. Bros. Victor Hexter, of Dallas, and U. N. Simon, of Fort Worth, delivered addresses. A musical program was rendered and at the close of the meeting refreshments were served.

A meeting of the Lodge was also held on Tuesday evening, May 9. Several reports were read by the delegates of the Lodge to the recent convention of District Grand Lodge held in Little Rock, Ark. The meeting was full of interest. The special order of business was the appointment of a committee to select suitable members for a Big Brother organization.

HAR SINAI LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

An interesting and enthusiastic meeting was held by Har Sinai Lodge No. 8 on Thursday evening, May 11, 1916, when eight new members were initiated as a class. At the meeting of the Lodge in April, ten candidates were initiated, and arrangements are now being completed for initiation of a class of 40 to 50 candidates at the June meeting of the Lodge.

An appropriation was made by the Lodge for the furthering of the Prison Aid work on behalf of the Jewish inmates of penal institutions in the city.

LINCOLN LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

A spirited and interesting meeting of Lincoln Lodge No. 780, of Philadelphia, Pa., was held at Hotel Walton on the evening of May 4. All committees entrusted with work made full report of their labors. The Committee for the B'nai B'rith Building reported that much data had been gathered for the Committee's consideration and that before long a well defined plan will be placed before the members of the lodge for their consideration.

The Committee on the reading of the Bible in public schools reported that it is working on the case and that a comprehensive report would be presented to the Lodge at the coming meeting.

The lodge was honored by the presence of Hon. Isador Sobel, of Erie, Pa., who addressed the meeting. Brother Sobel was accompanied by a number of well known members of the Order.

Lincoln Lodge gave its first May dance at Hotel Walton on May 23, 1916. Almost the entire floor of the hotel was given over to the affair. A buffet supper was served in the Indian Room.

Memorial service was held under the joint auspices of the Philadelphia Lodges on Sunday, May 28, 1916.

WORCESTER, MASS.

On May 9, 1916, Worcester Lodge No. 600, of Worcester, Mass., celebrated its 11th anniversary. The guests of honor were Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston, president of District Grand Lodge No. 1; Henry Lasker of Springfield, member of the General Committee, and Deputy Hyman Adesbin, all of whom delivered addresses.

An excellent history of the Lodge was read by Brother David B. Isenberg, past president and charter member of the Lodge.

During the month of May a membership contest was inaugurated between two teams of ten each, one captained by the president, Adolph Hirsch, and the other by the vice-president, David Goldstein. Up to the date of the meeting of the Lodge on May 9, thirty-four applications were presented. Arrangements are being made for a class initiation of about fifty to be held at the first meeting in June.

B'NAI B'RITH MEMORIAL.

Among the various exercises at the East Boston Cemetery of the Temple Ohabei Sholom, on Decoration Day, the one at the grave of Isaac Rosnosky was of special interest.

These exercises were in charge of a special committee appointed by District Grand Lodge No. 1 at its last convention in Boston, to honor the memory of the late Isaac Rosnosky, at one time the president of District Grand Lodge No. 1, I. O. B. B.

This committee consisted of past-President Jacob S. Kuhns and Levi Herman, and President Albert K. Sheldon, all of Amos Lodge No 121, who, together with past-President Brother Rabbi M. M. Eichler, also of Amos Lodge, conducted the exercises in a very impressive and eloquent manner, placing a very handsome wreath of immortelles on the grave, which was witnessed by the family of the late Brother Rosnosky, as also many members of both Lodges of the Order and many friends.

A similar service was recently rendered in Wakefield, Mass., at the cemetery of Temple Israel, by the same committee, in conjunction with Brother Rabbi Harry Levi of the Temple, at the grave of Brother Edward S. Goulston, who was also president of the District Grand Lodge during 1879, and one of the most prominent members of Temple Israel, in fact, its president for many years.

JOSHUA LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

Fifty additional new members were added to the list of membership of Joshua Lodge, No. 23, at the regular meeting on May 17, at the Hotel Majestic. There is no doubt but that the total membership will reach the 1000 mark before July 1, as there are still over 300 on the waiting list and another special meeting will take place in the near future for the purpose of initiating these candidates in a body. The social service work, in which the lodge is particularly interested, was discussed at length; reports of committees received and additional committees appointed so as to cover the ground thoroughly; officers were nominated to serve for the ensuing term, also representatives to the District Grand Lodge, the convention of which will take place at Erie, Pa., in July.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

OFFICIAL VISIT OF PRESIDENT SAMUELS TO THE TWIN CITIES.

Brother Benj. J. Samuels of Chicago, president of District Grand Lodge No. 6, took advantage of his presence in the northwest section of the District, where he had gone to attend the class initiation and banquet in Duluth, to pay an official visit on his return journey to St. Paul and Minneapolis

Upon his arrival at St. Paul on May 11 he attended a conference at the office of Brother Sylvan E. Hess, in which a number of the members of Minnesota Lodge and workers of the Twin City Council participated. At noon he was entertained at luncheon at the Commercial Club, at which there were about twenty members present, and general talks were indulged in with reference to propaganda campaign in that city.

In the afenoon he proceeded in company with Brother Hess to Minneapolis, where a meeting was arranged by Brother Jonas Weil lasting for several hours and attended by twenty-five leading members of the Lodge. Minneapolis Lodge has undertaken a number of activities during the past year. Their Social Service work is being well taken care of and is divided into various departments with special committees in charge, among the committees on amelioration of vice, juvenile offenders, juvenile courts, etc. The Lodge is arranging for an important conference at the end of the month, to which Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of the Social Service Department of the Order, will be specially invited. The program being arranged calls for an address by Dr. Coffee in the morning before the student body, a noon public meeting at the Commercial Club, also to be addressed by Dr. Coffee; in the afternoon a session of the Ladies Council, and in the evening, in as much as it is to be the annual Pioneer Day of the Lodge, a large meeting, which it is hoped will be attended by all of the members of the Lodge.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND

Before a special meeting of Portland Lodge No. 416, held on May 2, 1916, in B'nai B'rith Building, Mr. W. D. Wheelwright delivered a strong plea on behalf of the League to "Enforce Peace." Rabbi Jonah B. Wise presided.

On Tuesday afternoon, May 2, 1916, Daughters of the Covenant Auxiliary to B'nai B'rith Lodges gave an enjoyable card party in the B'nai B'rith Building for the benefit of the Fruit and Flower Fund for the Sick. Mrs. N. Mosessohn was hostess.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 416 and its Ladies' Auxiliary, the Daughters of the Covenant, are arranging a picnic for the benefit of the B'nai B'rith Building.

B'nai B'rith Kiddies' Day was celebrated on Sunday, May 21, 1916, when members of Portland and Theo. Herzl Lodges acted as host for children of poor parents, and took them for an automobile outing on the Columbia River highway.

An unusually well attended meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 was held on Tuesday evening, May 9, 1916. Several novel features were introduced during the meeting. Bro. Sig. Lipman read a splendid paper on "Jewish Loyalty."

A musical program consisting of violin and piano solos was rendered by three Russian refugees and was highly appreciated. During the musical the members of Daughters of the Covenant were admitted. After the program was concluded refreshments were served and cards were played.

JULIUS HOUSEMAN LODGE, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Under the auspices of Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238, the third annual debate was held on Sunday evening, May 21, 1916, in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel. The subject for the debate was:

Be it resolved, that an army and navy of sufficient size and strength to enforce international demands and contentions, as well as to repel invasion, is necessary and requisite to the continued peace and safety of the United States.

The teams participating in the debate were the following:

For the affirmative: Mr. Gustave A. Wolf, Mr. Hirsch Hootkins.

For the negative: Mr. Julius H. Amberg, Mr. Henry A. Ely.

At the conclusion of the formal talks, dinner was served by the Ladies' Auxiliary.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF JOSEPH LODGE, ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Joseph Lodge No. 73, of St. Joseph, Mo., very fittingly celebrated the 50th anniversary of its institution on Sunday, April 16.

Joseph Lodge No. 73 was instituted on April 15, 1866, and of its charter members there are two who are still members: Samuel Levy of King City, Mo., and Samuel Hess of St. Joseph, Mo. Owing to his advanced age Brother Levy was unable to attend the celebration.

A very impressive service was held in the afternoon at Temple Adath Joseph, which was very well attended. The program was as follows:

Organ—Suite Gothique .... Boellman
.... Mr. Rowley
Invocation—"Our Golden Jubilee"...
Rabbi Louis Bernstein, Pres. Joseph Lodge
Solo—"I Will Lay Me Down in Peace"

Evensong .... Johnston
Venezia .... Nevin
Mr. Rowley
In Memory of Our Departed Brethren.
Solo—"Fear Ye Not, O Israel".... Buck
Mrs Gore
Cantilena .... Golterman
Mr. Rowley
Benediction.

In the evening the members and their families attended a supper dance at Prinz's Academy.

Joseph Lodge presented to each of its charter members a beautiful Menorah, the emblem of the Order, suitably engraved, commemorative of the occasion.

Brother S. J. Kornhauser of Cleveland, Ohio, then president of District Grand Lodge No. 2; Brother Nathan Bernstein of Omaha, Neb., as well as representatives of the Kansas City, Leavenworth and Topeka Lodges, were present.

The event was one that will long be remembered by the Jewish community of the city.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

On Sunday, June 4, 1916, Huntington Lodge No. 795 was instituted at Huntington, W. Va., with a charter membership of 41.

The institution ceremonies were conducted by Brother Isador Sobel of Erie, Pa., past president of District Grand Lodge No. 3, assisted by Brothers Leon B. Stein, member of the General Committee; Rabbi A. H. Silver of Wheeling, W. Va.; Ben Nathan of Parkersburg, W. Va., and Edward Hemple of Pittsburgh, member of the General Committee.

The ceremonies were open to the public and the largest gathering Huntington Jewry ever had responded to the invitation to attend the institution of the Lodge. Large delegations from sister Lodges situated near by, also all visitors from Parkersburg, Ashland, Catlettsburg and Ironton were in attendance.

The ceremonies were presided over by Rabbi Samuel Meyerberg and Rabbi A. H. Silver delivered the principal address on the subject, "The Future of B'nai B'rith."

A great deal of enthusiasm was manifested by the new members and their friends, and Huntington Lodge promises to become a valuable link to the Lodges of District No. 3.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CHICAGO.

The Big Brother movement under the auspices of Chicago Lodges has made steady progress within the past few months. Members of local Lodges were asked to and did volunteer in large numbers to act as Big Brothers, and from among those who so pledged themselves, twenty-two are today in charge of little brothers.

A manual for the Big Brother Movement, issued by the Social Service Department of the Order is of much service and benefit to the Committee. The Chicago committee is composed of five representatives each from the three local Lodges. The officers of the Committee are Israel Cowen, president; Milton R. Hart, vice-president; Joseph Finer, secretary, and Benj. Samuels, treasurer.

CLEVELAND B'NAI B'RITH.

The Junior Circle I. O. B. B. Auxiliary to Cleveland Lodge held a well attended meeting on May 31. Arrangements were made for a tennis tournament to begin the first week in June at the University school tennis courts. A huge outing is also being planned for the month of June by the Social Committee.

Under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, a dancing party was held in B'nai B'rith Club Building on Sunday afternoon, May 14, 1916. Admission was free to all the members of the Lodge.

An entertainment of a very high caliber was presented before an appreciative audience of the Junior Circle at the B'nai B'rith Building on Saturday evening, April 29, 1916. The entertainment consisted entirely of club talent.

At the regular meeting of the Lodge held on Thursday, May 12, at the B'nai B'rith Building, an election was held to fill the office of vice-president and recording secretary. The Lodge gave a dance also on Sunday, May 7, which was largely attended.

TACOMA, WASH.

Not since the organization of Tacoma Lodge No. 741 has there been so much interest displayed either socially or otherwise as is now had. At every meeting members are being initiated as a result of the campaign inaugurated some time ago by the officers of the Lodge.

At the last social meeting of the Lodge held on May 25, it was clearly demonstrated the advisability of having occasionally "open nights" and public meetings. The hall was filled to its capacity with the members of the Lodge and their families, and the program rendered was thoroughly enjoyed. A feature of the program was the address of Lieut. M. Swartzkopensky, a former officer and member of the body guard of the Czar of Russia. He recited the suffering of the Jewish people in that country and enumerated the causes of their persecution as he personally observed, and he also related his experiences while effecting his escape from Siberia. Others included in the program were Dr. Joseph in an address, "The Importance of the B'nai B'rith Lodge"; musical numbers by Brother Bach and Miss Goldman, and closing remarks by Brother Karp. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a delightful evening was spent by all present.

THE SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

San Francisco Subcommittee of the District Social Service Bureau of the Order met on Thursday evening, May 4, 1916, to consider a number of cases which had been reported during the previous fortnight. Dr. A. E. Cerf, local chairman, presided. The members of the local committee are busy visiting hospitals and other institutions in pursuit of their work.

Rabbi Martin A. Meyer, Grand Orator of District Grand Lodge No. 4, gave the second of a series of lectures on "The Modern Interpretation of the Bible" on Wednesday evening, May 24, 1916, at B'nai B'rith Hall. This was a public meeting and was largely attended. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty representing the San Francisco Lodges.

The May dance held on the 28th ult. under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty of the San Francisco Lodges, included many novel features. The proceeds of the affair will be used to further the philanthropic and intellectual activities of the Committee.

Columbia Auxiliary No. 1, Daughters of the Covenant, held a Shakespearean evening the first part of May, and an interesting program was presented.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1, the Mother Lodge of the Order, has been very active of late both in increase of membership and literary and benevolent activities. It has now also a very efficient Degree Team which expects to be very busy next fall when the usual Lodge activities are resumed. Brother Myer L. Victorius, president of the Lodge, is in charge of the bowling alley which has been installed in the new headquarters of the District for the use of members.

Brother I. B. Scheiber, vice-president of Henry Jones Lodge, has organized a Chess and Checker Club. The club expects to have several tournaments. There are some very fine chess players in the club.

There has also been formed at the headquarters a Tennis Club, headed by Brother Sidney L. Fibel, vice-president of Jordan Lodge.

Jordan Lodge has appointed an employment committee which has secured positions for a number of applicants. Jordan Lodge is devoting much time and energy this year to social service.

The Ladies Auxiliary Society of the Home at Yonkers, an organization of prominent women who are interested in the welfare of the old people, held its annual meeting Sunday, May 14, at the headquarters of the District. The meeting was well attended. The report shows the society to be in a flourishing condition. The society is doing splendid work for the Home, and its services are greatly appreciated. Brother Myron Sulzberger, president of the Home; Brother Edward Sander, one of the governors; Brother Isidor Metzger of Mount Sinai Lodge, and District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan addressed the meeting. The officers of the society are: Mrs. Edward Loeb, president; Mrs. David Wile, vice-president; Mrs. George Bruck, treasurer, and Mrs. Emanuel Marx, secretary.

Chiefly through the efforts of Brother Rabbi Mann of New Haven, Conn., and Brother Joseph H. Ullman and several other leaders in B'nai B'rith circles, "The Merchant of Venice" has, by a decision of the board of education, been barred from the public schools, the reason being that the work holds up Jewish people to ridicule and that children of grammar and high schools are easily impressed.

Maccabee Lodge No 71 was addressed Tuesday, May 16, by Brother Rabbi Ludwig Roeder of New Brunswick, N. J., who spoke on the Books of the Prophets.

Zion Lodge No. 2 presented a substantial check to the Home at Yonkers to be used for the benefit and the comfort of the old people, $125 of which was the contribution of Brother Meyer Katzenberg. Bernard M. Kaplan, vice-president of the Lodge, in the absence of President Dr. Richard M. Stern, presided over the last meeting. The meeting was addressed by Brother Rabbi Dr. Marius Rasinsky of Paterson, N. J.; Brother M. Brodsky, the well-known Jewish journalist; Brother Myron Sulzberger, president of the Board of Governors at the Home at Yonkers, and others. Several candidates were initiated. District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan had the pleasure of initiating an old public schoolmate of his, Brother A. W. Levi.

Brother Herman Asher, past-president of the District, who is chairman of the Committee on Headquarters, sent out circular letters to the members of the Metropolitan District, asking for contributions toward furnishing the headquarters. The circular received a hearty response.

Jordan Lodge No. 15 visited the Home at Yonkers Sunday, June 4. An interesting program was rendered which the old people and the many guests present enjoyed very much. After the program, refreshments were served.

Edward Everett Lodge No. 97 held an interesting sociable at its last meeting which was very much enjoyed by the members and friends present. Edward Everett Lodge will celebrate its 50th anniversary next year, for which it is already making extensive preparations.

Chananiah Lodge No. 165 will celebrate its 45th anniversary next fall by a special entertainment to be given at the Home at Yonkers, in which Chananiah Lodge has always been especially interested.

Hillel Lodge No. 28, through Brother I. B. Schmidt and other active members, expects to initiate shortly a large class of candidates.

Flatbush Lodge No. 753 was addressed at its last meeting by Second Vice-President Brother Joseph Rosenzweig, who dwelt upon the great work of the Order which he said ought to appeal not only to every member of the Order but to every loyal and thoughtful Jew all through the world.

Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee; Brother Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein and the secretary of the District, Brother Bernard M. Kaplan, local representative of the Anti-Defamation League, were invited by the Universal Film Company to witness "The Marriage Broker" before releasing it. The manager of the company invited criticism, which he said the company would be glad to take cognizance of.

Secretary Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan occupied the pulpit of the Park Street Temple in Bridgeport Friday evening, May 19, and spoke on the principles o

Dacotah Lodge No 731, of Grand Forks, N. D., held its Seder services on April 23rd. This is an annual affair of the Lodge since its institution and has always proved a great success.

Bro. Morris Friend of Lincoln, Neb., member of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 6, is active in the mater of making propaganda for the Order in the smaller Jewish communities of the State. He recently visited Grand Island, where he secured three applications for membership and at Hastings he called a meeting of Jewish residents of the city and secured eight applications. All these candidates will be initiated as members of Lincoln City Lodge, of Lincoln, Neb., and a committee from the Lodges of Omaha and Lincoln will make a special trip to Grand Island and Hastings to do the initiatory work.

At the May meeting of Isaac Lodge No. 87, of Milwaukee, Wis., a class of four candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge.

A spirited discussion was held on the syllabus submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement, viz: "Should the B'nai B'rith cease to be a secret Order?"

Refreshments were served following the close of the meeting which was attended by large numbers.

John Hay Lodge No. 634, of Fargo, N. D., lost a valuable member and the poor a good friend in the death of Brother Mandel Naftalin. He was a fine type of the old school of Orthodox Jews. He was generous to a fault, ever ready to assist the poor stranger who needed help.

Under the auspices of Covenant Lodge No. 569, of Duluth, Minn., Brother Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of Social Service Department of the Order, delivered a lecture at Temple Emanuel on Friday evening, June 2, 1916. Dr. Coffee's subject was, "Ideals of Tomorrow." Following the services Dr. Coffee met with the officers of Covenant Lodge and the members of the Social Service Committee for the purpose of explaining and discussing the Big Brother movement in all its details.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Deborah Lodge No. 161, of Greenville, Miss., held a well-attended meeting on Sunday, June 4. Interesting reports were made by Brothers N. Goldstein and M. Goldstein, delegates to the recent convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7. A class of candidates was initiated, bringing the membership of the Lodge up to 70, an increase of eight members since the beginning of the year.

A well attended meeting of Gulf Lodge No. 221, of New Orleans, was held in the Y. M. H. A., on May 18, 1916. Bros. A. Steege, R. J. Schwarz and E. Mayer rendered reports of the Convention of the District recently held at Little Rock and an interesting round table discussion followed.

Little Rock Lodge No. 158, of Little Rock, Ark., celebrated its 45th anniversary at the Concordia Club, on Sunday, May 28, 1916. Mr. Lazarus Ehrenberg, one of the two remaining charter members, delivered an interesting address full of reminiscences. The other charter member, Mr. Jos. Pfeifer, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, was prevented from attending the celebration. Short talks in the nature of birthday offerings were made by several of the members.

The recent convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7 held in Little Rock, was instrumental in arousing a most enthusiastic spirit among the members of the Lodge, with the result that it is getting to be a badge of good standing to be known as a Ben B'rith in Little Rock.

Isidor Strauss Lodge No. 519 of Ft. Worth, Texas, held an open meeting on Sunday evening, May 21, 1916. Mr. U. M. Simon submitted report as to the accomplishments of the recent convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7, held at Little Rock, Ark. At the special request of the officers and delegates to Louisiana Lodge No. 107, of Shreveport, La., Bro. E. R. Bernstein, who has been honored with the election as President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, delivered an address at B'nai Zion Temple on Friday evening, May 12th, on the subject, "B'nai B'rith Ideals." In addition to the formal address reports were also submitted regarding important matters which engaged the attention of the recent convention of the District held in Little Rock. Brother Bernstein's address was the means of stimulating the endeavors of the members of the lodge and was in the form of an initial message as President of the District to his local community and Lodge.

At the recent meeting of District Grand Lodge No. 7, a resolution indorsing the forming of a $250,000 corporation to colonize Jewish farmers was adopted. The matter was referred to the agricultural committee, which is to start a movement for soliciting funds for the colony and make other necessary plans. The report of the success of the movement will be made at the 1917 convention.

The Golden Anniversary of founding of Beth Zur Lodge No. 84, of Mobile, Ala., will be appropriately observed during the coming fall. This was decided at the recent meeting of the Lodge.

At a recent meeting of the Y. M. H. A., of Waco, Texas, held at the Temple, the Waco plan encouraging agriculture, endorsed by District Grand Lodge No. 7 at its recent Convention at Little Rock, Ark., was thoroughly explained by Dr. I. Warsaw, who represented the B'nai B'rith Lodge at Waco at the Convention.

Before a deeply interested audience, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, delivered an address on April 21, 1916, at the Temple, "Church of Israel," Memphis, Tenn., on the subject, "Judaism and Social Service," dealing with the aims of the Order and the program of Social Service.

In the afternoon of the same date, at Chisca Hotel, a number of prominent members of Memphis Lodge No. 35, entertained Dr. Coffee at luncheon.

An interesting and well attended meeting of the joint committee of B'nai B'rith Lodges of New Orleans, took place on Thursday evening, May 11. Among the more important matters that were discussed and acted upon at the meeting was the passing of two resolutions—one by which a Social Service was appointed with Dr. J. W. Newman as chairman, and the other by which a B'nai B'rith Memorial Committee was created with Dr. M. Silver as chairman.

JEWISH SOLDIERS DISTINGUISHED.

According to Dr. Bloch's Wochenschrift, 5868 Jews serving the German army have received the Iron Cross up to the end of March, 1916.

JEWISH LEADERS
A SERIES OF HISTORICAL PORTRAITS
By RABBI SAMUEL S. COHON, Chicago

Introduction.

Through the centuries Israel has stood out as an enigmatic people. Numerically smaller than most other nations, and physically weaker, Israel has surpassed them all in its imperishable and far-reaching influence on the destinies of civilization. The kingdom of the spirit which Israel established has weathered the storms of the ages. The catastrophies which ruined other peoples only roused Israel to earnest heart-probing and to firm determination to live and sing God's song on earth. From each misfortune Israel rose purer and stronger. Out of the depths of its own soul the nation ever drew the healing balm for its rejuvenation. Thus Israel has been the "Am olam," the people as enduring as the stars in heaven, radiating light unto the world.

If we are to fathom the deep spirit, and comprehend the creative ideals which have energized and vitalized Israel—and all mankind through Israel—then must we turn to the lives of Israel's great leaders, to the "fire-pillars" which have moved before us in our dark pilgrimage through history, and which are still our guides in our journey through life, ever-living witnesses of the reality of the ideals that religion creates in our consciences.

The great benefactors of humanity are not always those who supply mankind with new machinery, or with great wealth, but rather those who show us the worth and the dignity of life, who show us how to redeem our years on earth from misery and sorrow, and who teach us to make our existence sweet and beautiful. Poverty, ill-health, and misfortunes do not always break man. Many people perish in wealth and the best of health, because of lack of ideals. In full comprehension of the dangers of the weakness of the spirit the Psalmist exclaimed: "Give me understanding, that I may live."

At no time in our sad Golus career has there been sorer need of the spirit of our great leaders of the past to inspire the spokesmen of the day than at this hour of twilight, of indecision, and or moral confusion. We need men who, filled with true Jewish idealism, could take us by the hand and lead us out of the darkness, whose manly voices should renew the holy convictions of our hearts, who, by personal example should call to life the dormant faculties of heroism in the Jew, as the rising sun awakens the sleeping flowers. We need men, humble and strong, courageous and tender, men of faith in God and in the future, men of heart and of vision, men who should again reveal to us the genius of the Jewish people.

The presentation of the lives of our great men (this tracing, to their sources, of the creative ideals that have been operating in the life of our peaple)—always a difficult task—was comparatively easy in older times, since all that was required was a re-statement of the facts narrated in our historical books about them. With the progress of the critical studies, and with the new light that the re-discovery of the ancient civilizations of Egypt and Assyro-Babylonia are shedding upon our past, the picturing of the leaders of Israel becomes increasingly more difficult. The re-awakened generations rise from the tomb of silence to whisper to us, in broken syllables and in strange tongues, of glories that are no more. And it is our task, at least in some measure, to revive them in order to give color and atmosphere to the stories of our heroes. With due recognition of the limitation of our task, we tremblingly approach "the corridors of time" to catch the echo of "the distant footsteps" of the dreamers, kings, prophets, and singers of Israel.

I. MOSES, THE FOUNDER OF ISRAEL.

There is a legendary flower which, for a hundred years, grows unobserved and trampled under foot but suddenly blooms forth, expands, and unfolds into matchless beauty. This glorious condition of the flower is supposed to last only three days, then its splendor vanishes, and it returns to its former state. Such is the history of the children of Israel. Trodden under foot for centuries, the flower of Israel suddenly sends forth, out of its heart, a most wondrous blossom in the person of a Moses, David, Elijah, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Hillel, Jehuda Halevi, Mimonides, Spinoza.

Great souls appear at wide intervals. They spring from chaos, and disappear into the void. Somehow they do not seem to be part of ordinary humanity. They tower so high above us that we can only look on and adore in silence. We may be able to explain the conditions under which they labored, but for their genius we have no explanation. It is as mysterious as the star's twinkle and the lily's beauty. Some claim that great men are the products of circumstances. History knows, indeed, of little men who in an hour of peculiar conditions were elevated to prominence. Circumstances, however, only made men important, but they never made any one great. Caruso's voice and Spinoza's luminous mind are not the products of circumstances. They are gifts of God. The genius is not merely the creature, but also the creator of his environment. He tunnels a way for himself through mountains of difficulties. He is a builder of new eras, a creator of new values, and a molder of a new world order. Of such nature was the life and work of the founder of Israel, Moses ben Amram.

The descendants of the world's first iconoclast, Abraham, driven by a severe famine out of the land of Canaan, settled in Egypt. The Asiatic Shepherd Kings, or Hyksos, who were then in control of Egypt, received them kindly, and assigned to them the pasture lands of Goshen, on the eastern delta of the Nile. There the Israelites lived for many years in peace, preserving their old language, customs, and—at least in part—the religion of their fathers. About the year 1700 B. C. E., the native princes succeeded in breaking the power of the Hyksos, and in driving them back to Asia, through Palestine. Naturally, the former friends of the Hyksos, the Israelites, who formed an alien element on the eastern border of Egypt, aroused the distrust of Thothmes III, now ruler of the land, and declared enemy of the Asiatics. Fearing that, in case of an invasion, the Israelites might join the enemy, this Pharaoh decided to break their power. He robbed them of their independence and impressed them into state slavery. "And they built," so writes the old historian, "cities of fortification for Pharaoh: Pithom and Raamses." Their lives were thus embittered, and their spirits crushed by the heavy burdens laid upon them. And they filled the heavens with their cries of anguish.

In this hour of stress a deliverer arose unto Israel in the person of Moses. He was a man of such overtowering personality that some modern critics, unable to interpret him, have vainly tried to relegate him to the realm of myths and legends. He was a veritable giant, the greatest hero not only of Israel, but of all nations and of all times. Later ages, musing lovingly over the popular hero, and recalling his mighty achievements, adorned his head with wreaths of fancy. However, these legends do not diminish his historicity. No one disbelieves in the existence of George Washington or of Abraham Lincoln because of the tales that cluster round their names. Neither would any one doubt the historicity of Sargon I or of Cyrus the Great because of the miraculous accounts of their childhood days. The wonderful stories that are woven into the biographies of Moses, if properly read and interpreted, show the love with which men of later times treasured the memory of him who

The Problems of the Small Jewish Community
By E. J. LONDOW

There are evidences in American Jewish journalism of a growing interest in the problems of our smaller communities. The importance of this attention is evident if we but consider that at least several hundred thousand Jews live in cities and towns having a population of fifty thousand or less. Scattered through every state in the Union, these settlements, often far removed from the strongholds of Judaism, are outposts in the forward movement of our people on this continent, where they are seeking to establish peaceful homes for themselves and their children. But these people, like all pioneers in their struggle for existence, have very often been unable to provide for their communal needs. The chaotic condition in which their organized or rather unorganized social life finds itself presents a situation calling for the earnest attention of our leaders. We who love Judaism and its fair name must understand these problems and work for their proper solution. We should remember that the character of these country Jews and of their institutions will often determine the opinion of the general American public of the Jew, for the provincial Jew usually comes in more direct contact with his Christian neighbors than the city Jew. If, for instance, the impression which the rural Christian forms of the peddler or the town merchant is that of an honorable and self-respecting Jew, we shall win and deserve the goodwill of the American people.

But we must be concerned not so much with the traditional fear "Lomo yomru hagoyim" as with the preservation of Jewish life where the powerful forces from without and the disorganization within operate against Jewish culture. Besides, American Judaism as a whole must suffer from the materialism which besets those who are distant from sources of inspiration.

This strengthening of the cultural interests of our brethren merits the support of those especially who desire to deflect part of the great current of immigration which is expected after the war to the South and West. They must remember that the immigrant often chooses his new home where Jewishness is prevalent. The problem then is to organize the social life of our co-religionists in the towns and even rural districts so that the necessary appeal can be made to the newcomer who must be given the opportunity of preserving his Judaism as well as becoming a thorough American.

True it is that the large cities where the majority of our people dwell have problems of their own. New York, for instance, is providing religious instruction for but a part of its children. Yet it must be borne in mind that these centers contain the headquarters of institutions and organizations which are concerned with Jewish education, culture, and relief. Here, again, we find many prominent workers who give their energies to their people, some devoted to one cause, some to another, but all, the sort of leaders without whom progress is impossible. In the third place, the very size of the Jewish population makes the preservation of Jewishness less difficult—thousands of Jews are born, bred, and have their being in the Jewish atmosphere created by synagogues, clubs, newspapers, lectures, theaters, language, and what not. Here there are being built for the proper handling of the manifold problems of the community remarkable institutions such as federations of charities, and what is more to the point. Kehillahs, which, to judge from their early achievements, will produce beneficent results in the future for American Judaism.

The main difficulty of the small congregations lies in their size, which in turn is responsible for the lack of efficient leadership. In a population of fifty thousand or more there can be found many enterprising and gifted men and women, who, with the diversity of their interests, foster the various movements necessary to a healthy social life. Anyone who has had any experience in small cities has realized the immense difficulty of securing volunteers for communal work, and when they are found, their task is so great and so varied that their results cannot be entirely satisfactory. In the absence of paid workers, the importance of their achievements cannot be overemphasized, but it should not be forgotten that it is this same small band of elect that carries almost all the burdens in all the organizations, and it is only the spare moments which they can devote to what often appears, in the face of disheartening criticism, as a thankless job.

There are other important factors which must be reckoned with in a study of our local problems. Chief among these is the estrangement between the so-called Reform and Orthodox elements. This differentiation is caused not merely by differences in religious views and practices, but also by the assumed sense of social superiority on the part of one element in its attitude toward the other. On the one side we find Reform Jews who are either native born or descendants of German settlers. The German Jews in the main, have become well established throughout the land, and are enjoying material prosperity and influence in public life. With a knack for organization, they have built institutions of remarkable usefulness. Spiritually, as well as physically, they feel at home in America.

Side by side with many of these well established and flourishing communities there have been appearing for the last twenty years groups of Orthodox imigrants. They are chiefly Russian Jews from Lithuania and Poland, occasionally from Galicia and Roumania. In many places, particularly in the East, they are forming the major part of the Jewish population. Concerned as new settlers must be with the problems of livelihood, they have failed as yet to bring order out of the chaotic condition of their communal affairs. In saying "theirs," I have in mind the separation existing between the recent Jewish immigrant and the old settlers in religious and social life. The Reform element it must be confessed have in many instances refrained from assisting their brethren in their pitiable efforts to realize their social aims. A sympathetic understanding of the nature of their problem has been wanting. Men who have been reared in a Reform atmosphere and find themselves comfortable there, often fail to understand the religious problems of their neighbors. Coming from lands where traditional Judaism is in unabated force, they seek here to perpetuate at least some of the customs to which they are bound in feelings and training. It is idle of the Reformer to contend that, their environment being different here, they should adjust their religious forms to modern life, that in practice they are radically unorthodox in that many do not observe the Sabbath, and violate many other important practices of our faith. The truth is that pure logic rarely appeals to the masses of men in religious discussion. The life of the Temple with its abbreviated prayerbook, the minimized Hebrew, the church-like organ, the mixed and only too often Christian choirs, the subdued atmosphere, are not only too foreign and too cold but un-Jewish as well. To them a radical departure from the teachings of the Fathers amounts almost to conversion. To go into the logic of their point of view is futile.

This is not an argument for Orthodox Judaism. That view of Judaism will always have its noble adherents and brilliant defenders. To the writer it seems that the time has come when those who wish to see Judaism preserved breathed the spirit of national unity and of self-assertion into the enslaved masses, who revived their faint hearts, and who fired their minds with holy zeal for freedom and for God.

Tradition tells that at the time that Moses was born the Israelite mothers were compelled by the Pharaoh to throw their infant sons into the river. One mother refused to destroy her child. For three months she kept him in the house. When she could hide him no longer, she placed him in a waterproof basket ,and "laid it in the rushes by the river's edge," where the daughter of Pharaoh was accustomed to bathe. The scheme worked admirably. The princess, on seeing the crying babe, was moved to pity. At this point the child's sister, who had stood watching from a distance, ran forward and offered to call a Hebrew woman to nurse the infant. When the princess consented, the girl called the baby's mother. With the milk that the child drew from his mother's breast he imbibed her deep love for her unfortunate people, her attachment to the religion of Abraham, and her dreams of rosier days. When he grew up, she brought him to Pharaoh's daughter. The princess adopted him and gave him the Egyptian name: Moses (Meshu—"child"). In the court of the Pharaohs the boy had access to the knowledge, to the sciences, and to the religious mysteries of ancient Egypt. Here he grew to manhood. And then, with a brilliant future before him, with the limitless opportunities of an Egyptian prince to rise to the pinnacle of power and of influence, he turned his back on all this and devoted himself to his suffering brethren. The prayers of his mother lived in his heart. He would cast his lot with the oppressed rather than with the oppressors!

Love in all its hidden wealth and power manifested itself in his big heart—a love that knew no bounds, and that defied the powers of death itself. One day he found an Egyptian taskmaster beating a Hebrew. Filled with moral indignation, he looked around and, seeing nobody, he struck the Egyptian, and killed him. The following day he found two Hebrews fighting. Upon his attempt to make peace betwen them, one of them angrily exclaimed: "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Intendest thou to kill me, as thou didst kill the Egyptian?" Moses was filled with fear. His secret was divulged and—what was most painful—divulged by a brother Israelite. When the king was informed of the murder of the taskmaster he ordered the execution of the murderer. To save himself the young Moses fled to the land of Midian, in the desert of Sinai. Here a beautiful romance adorned his life. As he rested by a well in the oasis, the seven daughters of the priestly chieftain of Midian came to fill the troughs with water for their flock. But rude shepherds drove the girls away. Thereupon Moses, the strong champion of the weak, chased the intruders away, and helped the girls water the sheep. His chivalrous act was appreciated by the priest. He was invited to the tent and given a home and wife. Moses settled with his father-in-law, but his heart was with his people far away. It is significant that his first son he named Gershom, to express the idea that he was a "stranger in a strange land." The name of the second son, Eliezer, is indicative of the faith that lived in his heart. "The God of my fathers," he said, "has been my help, and he has saved me from the sword of Pharaoh."

How to redeem his people from the degrading bondage of Egypt became the consuming passion of his soul. This was the thought which dominated his mind when, as shepherd, he spent his days with the flock of his father-in-law in the desert. There is something awe-inspiring in the desert atmosphere, in its wide range, its unbounded expanse, its pure and invigorating air. In the wilderness round Sinai, "the oldest rock known to geology," the spirit of Moses took wing. A spark of God's sacred fire flashed through his soul. The God of his fathers revealed Himself to him in all His glory, as "Eh'ye asher Eh'ye," the eternal God of justice and of love. A holy resolve now took possession of his heart. He perceived the power by which his people could be delivered from bondage. He would, therefore, go and, in the name of the God of justice remove from them their shackles of slavery. Upon receiving the information that a new Pharaoh sat on the throne of Egypt and that his former enemies had died, he left his wife and children with his father-in-law, and set out for Egypt to execute his great [illegible].

In Egypt he was confronted by the double task of arousing the latent manhood in the crushed Israelites, and of [illegible] Pharaoh's good-will. But his [illegible] spelled success for him. Having [illegible] the confidence of the elders of his [illegible] people, he, with Aaron, his brother, went to Pharaoh and appealed, in the name of Yahweh, the God of Isarel, to permit his brethren to go for a feast in the wilderness. "And Pharaoh said: Who is Yahweh, that I should obey His voice, to let Israel go? I know not Yahweh; neither will I let Israel go." And Moses and Aaron said: "He is the God of the Hebrews, to whom we are dedicated.* Let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto Yahweh, our God, lest He strike us with the pestilence or with the sword." Pharaoh turned a deaf ear to their entreaties. "Why," he said, "do you disturb the people? Get you unto your burdens. You are idle; that is why you want to celebrate." To punish their impudence he increased their labors. Thereupon the Israelites turned against their leaders, saying: "May God punish you, for you have made us abhorrent in the eyes of Pharaoh and of his servants. You have placed a sword in their hand to slay us."

The heart of Moses was now riven with anguish. He had meant to help his brethren, but had only brought great evil upon them. However, his spirit was not broken. He saw that a new mode of procedure was necessary. He was going to convince Pharaoh that he was no imposter. Profiting by his rearing in the Egyptian court, he met the Egyptian magicians and priests on their own ground, answering their "miracles" with jugglery yet more astounding. Such sleight of hand performances were, in those days, effective credentials of truth. He thus established his authority in the eyes of his own people as well as in the eyes of the Egyptians. Tradition enlarged upon these events, and created the story of the ten plagues which were supposed to have induced Pharaoh to let the people go, to celebrate in the desert.

The magic veil of legend obscures the historical course of the following events. All that we know is, that some fifteen hundred years before the common era, during the reign of Amenophis II or Thothmes IV, on the eve of Pesach, the Spring festival which they had preserved from nomadic times, the children of Israel, under the leadership of Moses, left Egypt. Pharaoh, according to our narratives, was under the impression that after the three days' festival, his slaves would return. How great was his surprise when he was told that the Israelites had escaped, and were stranded in the wilderness! He immediately dispatched his charioteers to bring the renegades back. The Egyptians overtook the Israelites at their encampment, some ten miles north of Suez, called Yam Suf, "the weedy sea" or the "Red Sea." At the sight of their pursuers behind them, and of the sea in front of them, the Israelites turned to Moses, crying: "Is it because there were no graves in Egypt, that thou hast taken us away to die in the wilderness?" Their undaunted leader allayed their fears by calling upon them to wait for the salvation of God.

Here a great marvel of nature took place. The waters of the narrow channel (about two miles across) by which the lakes then discharged into the sea, were driven back by a strong wind. We are told that "in 1882, Sir Alexander Tulloch saw the waters of Lake Menzaleh driven back more than a mile by the East wind." We are also informed that the mouth of the river Kishon, where a shoal exists, is "dry with a West wind, but under water and impassable when the wind blows down the river." (C. R. Conder, art. Exodus, in Intern. Stand. Bible Encycl.) Thus as the shallow waters of the channel were divided, a shoal was formed, "the waters being heaped up, so that when the wind ceased, they rushed back." The Israelites took advantage of this fortunate occurrence, and crossed the channel, the waters being walls of defence on their right and on their left. The Egyptians pursued them. As the place was unsuited to the employment of a force consisting largely of horses and of heavy chariots, the Egyptians were thrown into confusion, and began to retreat, hoping that the land wind would hold out. But as they returned, the wind changed, and the waves rushed back and covered horse and rider in the bed of the sea. (Ibid. v., also Kittel, Hist. of the Hebrews, I:p. 226-7.) Perfectly natural as the phenomenon of the drying up of the arm of the sea may have been, people saw in the opportuneness of the event, a direct sign of God's intervention. "And the people feared God," adds the old historian, "and they believed in God and in His servant, Moses." In one accord, the Israelites sang, with Moses, the great song, the sweet melody of which has filled the centuries since, with gladness: "Who is like unto Thee, O Yahweh, among the gods; who is like unto Thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, working wonders!" And, with the music of the words: "Adonoi Yimloch l'olam voed"—God will be King forever—a new nation was born.

To escape the further pursuits of the Egyptians, Moses led the people toward the southern end of the Sinaitic peninsula, thus interposing the broad arm of the sea between Egypt and Israel. His destination was Mt. Sinai, where the friendly tribe of Midian dwelt, and where he hoped to be reunited with his family. Amid his troubles to find water and food for the people, he was attacked by the desert tribe of Amalek. Fearing that the oasis of Sinai would not be large enough to support the Egyptian refugees as well as themselves, they tried to check the advance of the Israelites. A successful battle was fought under the generalship of Joshua, while Moses stood with uplifted hands, inspiring the people with courage. With the Amalekites out of the way, Moses led the people forward to where the most important event in the world's history was soon to take place.

At Mt. Sinai, amid "the waste and howling wilderness," Moses promulgated the Ten Commandments, mankind's first and most important charter of liberty, the first Bill of Rights, and Declaration of Independence. Moses did not proclaim a new religion. He appealed to his brethren in the name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. But he vitalized the old faith, and applied it to the fresh circumstances of the day. He also deepened the knowledge of God. The patriarchs had worshipped Him as "El Shaddai," the almighty God; Moses learned to know Him also as Yahweh, as the Creator and the Eternal, who not only demands homage, but who also extends His love and help to His faithful servants. He was Israel's protector and ruler; but He was not a tribal God, like Kemosh, the god of Moab and Milkom, the god of the Ammonites. Those deities were supposed to favor their tribes in right or wrong, whereas God, as Israel was taught to look upon Him, favored His people only as long as they followed righteousness. He loves the good, and He hates the evil. This was the greatest service of Moses to religion: he established the worship of God on a moral basis. Henceforth, mankind should know that justice and righteousness are the habitation of God's throne, that mercy and truth greet His countenance.

At the time of the Exodus, the world had already reached a high stage of civilization. The Babylonians had long possessed the laws of Hammurabi, those marvelous regulations, the discovery of which in 1902, by DeMorgan, justly took the world by storm. Though they were far advanced in the arts and the sciences, they were childishly simple in religious thought. They believed in a whole brood of gods, each pushing and elbowing his way to get a seat in the Pantheon. At Babylon, Marduk was worshipped as the chief god; but there was also Ishtar, the liscentious goddess, whose love-intrigues would make more sensational reading than the confessions of a modern Parisian demimonde. Beside her, there were also other deities, reeling drunken through the hall of the gods. In Egypt, a few chosen spirits may have already freed themselves from the curse of polytheism, but they kept their speculations to themselves. The masses still wallowed in mire and degredation, kneeling before the cat and the ibis, and prostrating themselves before the bull and the crocodile.

To what heights did Moses take his slave people, when he taught them to proclaim: Adonoi echod—God is one! The arid wilderness resounded with the new message of God: "Thou shalt have no other gods besides me." The very word for goddess is missing in the Hebrew language. Subordinate deities were never tolerated by the religion of Israel. God was to receive an imageless worship. No likenesses in wood, stone or brass, were to be made of Him. This commandment, perhaps more than any other, helped to keep the religion of Israel pure, and to raise it above the religions of all other nations. God is to be worshipped in the spirit of truth: "Thou shalt not take the name of Yahweh, thy God, to deceive." His worship demands a Sabbath of rest, and six days of honest labor. The family must be united by ties of reverence for parents, and of unstained conjugal purity. The neighbor's home, his life, and property, are sanctified in the commands: "Do not kill; do not commit adultery; do not steal; do not bear false witness against your neighbor; do not covet that which belongs to him."

These were the principles of the religion which Moses taught the people of Israel. They formed the terms of a contract between God and Israel, a covenant based on a "reciprocity of obligations." God, the lover of righteousness, shall be Israel's protector, on conditions that Israel be faithful to His commands. Under the weight of this moral responsibility, the former slaves became spiritually free men.

In the spirit of this religion, Moses labored for many years among his people. At the advice of his father-in-law, he organized simple courts, and placed able assistants over them. The judgments which were thus passed by the courts, formed the basis of that remarkable system of legislation which we now find in the Torah. He also erected the first tabernacle, a movable sanctuary, which consisted of a spacious tent with an ark holding the tablets on which were inscribed the Ten Commandments.

On one occasion when Moses entered the tabernacle, two of the elders began to prophecy in the camp. When the report was brought to Moses, his servant, Joshua, exclaimed: "Forbid them!" But Moses showed the true spirit of leadership in saying: "Art thou envious for my sake? Would God, that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put His spirit upon them!" The corroding acid of jealousy, which has destroyed many a great man, was strange to his nature. Even when he was degraded by the people, and when he was insulted by the self-seekers, he remained magnanimous. He was indeed a "Ro'eh Neemon"—a faithful shepherd, who untiringly bore the burdens of his people. There is a story that, on one occasion when the sin of the people was very great, God wished to destroy it, and to build up a new nation out of Moses. But Moses, in his infinite pity, prayed that if God would not forgive the deluded people, his own name, too, should be wiped out of God's book. Self-sacrifice characterized his whole life. In the desert around Sinai, and at Kadesh Barnea, Moses worked quietly, instructing and guiding the people, and instilling his great soul into their religion. On more than one occasion, he learned what all true leaders of humanity later realized: that stones are often the reward of services rendered. Such is the strange psychology of the people: one day they extol, and the next day they damn their leaders. Hence, without depending upon the approval or disapproval of the masses, he toiled on, leading his people, against their own will, to the land of promise. Self-poised as a star—to paraphrase Matthew Arnold's words—he joyfully poured all his powers into his tasks, not demanding that all around him yield him love, amusement, sympathy. This sincere self-effacement and absorption in his work made him a unique figure in the world's history. Thus he earned the great tribute of the sacred historian: "And the man Moses was very meek—above all men which were upon the face of the earth." This meekness made him truly great. And when he died, advanced in years, a whisper ran through the camp, that God himself had taken away the breath of their beloved leader. "And no man knows the place of his burial." How fortunate for the higher interests of mankind! Thus his spirit and not his dead bones became the center of Israel's religion.

The genius of Israel has manifested itself clearly in the people's attitude towards their greatest national and religious leader. Founders of religions among other nations were raised to the rank of divinities. The Jews honored Moses, they loved him, and gloried in him, but they never spoke of him as anything but man. The highest title they gave him was "Ish ho-elohim"—a man of God, devoted to God, but a man withal. "There arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face." Thus wrote the author of Deuteronomy, some thousand of years later. Succeeding generations spoke of him not only as the Liberator and Lawgiver, but also as the Father of Prophecy. As the ages come and go, his gigantic figure rises ever higher in the esteem of mankind. We now see that there has been but one and only one Moses for a whole humanity. Heine well said of him that he dwarfed Sinai when he stood upon it. Out of a band of slaves, he created Israel, a great, eternal and holy people, destined to outlive the centuries, and to serve as the pattern to all other nations.

This great artist of life was concerned primarily with the upbuilding of Israel as a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. But he built better than he could have dreamed. In an age when the religious practices with their crassness, their sensuous orgies, and sacrifices of children, degraded the dignity of human nature, Moses raised the spirit of man by proclaiming that the visable God, the Giver of life, demands purity, justice and kindness. This revolutionary thought has been mankind's pole-star of spiritual freedom. Thus Moses became the founder not only of Israel, but also of the universal religion of truth.

JUSTICE TO THE ROUMANIAN JEWS

By EDWARD HERBERT

A committee of Roumanian Jews, headed by Dr. F. A. Siegelstein, Chairman of the American League of Roumanian Jews, met the Hon. Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, at the Hotel Astor, on June 23d, where they held a conference in regard to the deplorable condition of the Jews in Roumania.

Mr. Kraus came especially from Chicago on this mission. Important documents were sent to him from Roumania and these he turned over to Dr. Siegelstein. While the contents of these documents cannot be made public, their character, however, is such that requires action without delay. $30,000 is needed for immediate use, to be sent to Roumania. Unfortunately, neither Mr. Kraus nor the committee which met him was in a position to meet the demand on such short notice.

No true American can read of the conditions of the Jews in Roumania and the treatment they receive at the hands of that government without being touched to the innermost of his heart. While economically the country is at present in a better condition than it ever was, the oppression of the Jews, however, is going on as usual, but in a more cruel and heartless manner. To the average liberty loving American it is inconceivable that such a state with a medieval policy could exist today in this enlightened age. A country in the heart of civilized Europe and surrounded by enlightened nations; she, herself, only yesterday emerged from serfdom; a people, which for centuries felt keenly the iron hand of the oppressor; a nation, whose kin is still suffering in Transilvania and in Bessarabia from the plague called "inequality"; still this very same people, this barbaric race, is viciously persecuting and oppressing her helpless Jews. They ignore the fact that these Jews, whom they treat as strangers, have as much claim as, or more than, the Roumanians have to that soil.

Origin of Roumanians.

The Roumanians claim that they are Roman descendants, but they are not History tells us that they are a mixture of Bessian, Slav and Gypsy blood—mostly the latter. The nearest claim they can have to Roman ancestry is, that Rome, having made the conquered territory of Dacia a penal institution. Roumanian territory was to Rome what Siberia is to Russia. In order to repopulate the devastated territory she forced her criminals to settle there. Every convict was sent there and was not permitted to return, as is the case in Russia today. If there is any doubt as to that ancestry, the policy of the Roumanian government ought to be sufficient proof of the character of their noble antecedents. But if it could be proven that the Ziganii (Gypsies) are descendants of that great Latin race, I would then readily concede that the Roumanians are of Roman decent.

Ethnologically, the two are very similar to one another; their physiognomy, the color of their eyes, the shape of their nose, forehead, chin, lips, teeth even have a strong similarity. So also are their characters very strongly alike. The Roumanian has as little conception of honesty as his kin the Zigan; deception is as natural with the one as it is with the other. Cunning is the specialty of both. The two profess Christianity, but neither goes to church; the music of the one is the adaptation of the other. In every respect they are so close to each other in their savage nature that even the broadest or narrowest principle of human right is foreign to them. The two match one another so perfectly that by seeing the Gypsy vagabond one recognizes the noble descendants of Rome, and vice versa. The reason why they emancipated the Ziganii and not the Jews is obvious—blood is thicker than water.

Again, if any one can claim Roumanian citizenship by reason of Roman invasion, the Jews of Roumania by right certainly have such a claim. History will sustain them. They lived there before the Roumanians ever came into existence. When the Roman legions invaded the regions which are now called "Roumania," the Jews, in following the Roman flag (as they were wont to do), also came there. If the Romans stayed there but one day the Jews remained with them that long. But in addition to that we also know that the Jews enjoyed full citizenship under the Roman empire. The latter recognized the merits of their Jews and the emperor entrusted them with the highest offices. Everywhere the flag was planted, the Roman citizen, the Jew also settled. Every Jew who came with the Roman legions to Illyria, Moesia, Istria, Pannonia, or old Dacia, if you chose to call it so, came as a Roman citizen. The Roumanian Jews, therefore, were citizens in that territory ever since the Romans landed there. That the Jews continued to live in Roumania during the course of its troublesome history, and after the formation of the principalities, even the basest of the Roumanian historians who have prostituted science, by garbing their history with the cloth of libel and falsehood, have admitted.

Two hundred and eighty thousand Jewish souls are at present living in that enlightened country. As I have just stated, they have been living there for centuries, even before the world has ever heard of that savage race. They were certainly there before the present state was formed. They have shared in the suffering of their country, and have lavishly contributed to its development. The Jews, more than any other nationality in Roumania, bear willingly the burden of the government. In time of peace they serve in the army, though the possibility of any advancement is closed to them. In the war of independence they have shed their blood on the battlefield like true, loyal Roumanians. During the present European conflict, and while Roumania was about to draw the sword against one or the other of the belligerents, her Jews have more than once proclaimed their readiness to sacrifice all they have, even their lives, for the honor of their country. Yet, in the eyes of the law they are strangers.

They are classed as strangers because it suits the purpose of a small class of cunning politicians, who have at their disposal an army of unscrupulous officials, and these two live in oriental indolence in their villas or abroad, on the sweat of their ignorant peasants and the persecuted Jews. Most of the Roumanian nobility do not live in their country. They find it more attractive to spend their ill earned money in the palatial hotels in Paris, Italy, Venice or England. There they live the lives of debauchery, while peasant and Jew are made to foot the bills at home, the greater part of which for obvious reasons falls on the latter.

If the position of the two—the peasant and of the Jew—would be compared, it would be found that they both stand on almost an equal basis. Ignorance and superstition being the rock on which the Roumanian structure rests, the Boyars, assisted by the government with the aid of a corrupt clergy, see to it that the population be kept in ignorance.

They have an elementary compulsory law, but the educational budget is always so skimpy that as a direct result therefrom, over 70 per cent of the population is illiterate.

The Jews are not admitted to the public schools, except on pay. The private schools which the Jews are maintaining at their own cost and expense for the education of their children, are only permitted to exist under rigid restrictions and also under the strict supervision of corrupt public officials. Justice is a myth for the peasant as it is for the Jew—neither the one nor the other can find it.

Political rights the peasant cannot enjoy. The laws are so framed that the vote of the one of the privilege class counts 100 as against one of a peasant. By this fraudulent arrangement the peasant has as little to say regarding his government as the Jew who has no vote at all. Whatever the tyrant government fails to squeeze out, the cunning villain, clothed with official authority will, and where the latter fails, the corrupt clergy will succeed.

Thus, in this triangular iron cage of tyranny, fraud and superstition, the Roumanian peasant is held in bondage, like his neighbor the Jew, although their fictitious constitution says that all citizens are equal before the law. As a further expedient, so that the peasant may not see the villany of his oppressors, the Jew is held out as a leech, a usurer, an exploiter—the enemy of his country.

A systematic propaganda of persecution against the Jews has been conducted by the Roumanian anti-Semites in two ways, one by enacting oppressive laws and the other by poisoning the minds of the population through the press, the school and the church. This two-fold diabolical work they carried on with all the vigor and force they could command. The result of this noble campaign is, that not only Jewish property but Jewish life even is beyond the power of the law for protection.

They barred every avenue of advancement or opportunity to the Jew. Every branch of commerce or industry they cut off, the school door is closed to the Jewish child. Extermination is the full program of the tolerant Roumanian government. They tried to drive out the Jews from Roumania but the European countries protested. "You cannot unload the wretches you have created by your treatment of them on us," said the neighborly powers. "Why not place the Roumanian Jews on an equal basis, as they are in other countries?" asked the French ambassador at the congress of Berlin, in 1878. "Give us such Jews as you have in France, Germany and in England, and we will do it," replied Bratiano. "Treat them as we do," retorted Bismarck, "and you will have such Jews. The wretches you have are your own creation. The Jews reflect the character of the country in which they live."

In Roumania the Jews are not permitted to exist, nor can they leave the country. The police will not issue the necessary passport. The frontier is absolutely closed to the Jew. Nor will the neighbor governments permit Roumanian Jewish emigrants to pass. They have already served such notice on the Roumanian government.

Since the present European war broke out the situation of the Jews assumed a still more graver character, namely:

The Roumanians were always friendly inclined towards Russia. As soon as the Moscovite stepped on the battlefield, Roumania, as a sign of sympathy to her belligerent neighbor and kin, began to persecute more vigorously her Jews. Later, however, Roumania carried on a flirtation with Germany. In order that the pro-Russian anti-Semites may not take offense, the screws of persecution were more tightened on the Jews.

The Roumanian Jew lies now stretched on the wheel of torture. His bones are broken, his limbs forced out of joint by his tormentors, his muscles are strained, his heart flutters, he gasps hard for air; his life hangs in the balance; his eyes are turned westward—to the United States. Should he be released he may live yet. If the torture continues the last spark of life which is left in him yet will be extinguished, he will expire and pass away. What will the Jews of the world do? How about the Jews of the United States? What will the Roumanian Jews in the United States and in Canada say or do? Will they remain indifferent to the agonized cries of a persecuted people in its moment of despair? The opportunity is now at hand. The present European ebullition will be over some day. The nations of the world will meet in congress to again bring order out of the present chaos. The question of Roumanian Jews must not only be brought up, but forced, if necessary upon the calendar of the day. The enlightened diplomats will surely look upon the question from a human standpoint and treat it in the 20th century spirit.

But meanwhile there is another course open, which must be taken up at once. The Roumanian King must be appealed to. He is a broad minded and highly cultured man. As the monarch he has the power, the prestige, the influence, the prerogative to grant justice to his unfortunate smarting but loyal Jewish subjects. Why not present a petition to the King in behalf of his Jews? It must not necessarily come from the victims themselves. Any people, any nation, particularly humanitarian America, can do it with so much more grace.

There is still another course open, and that is publicity. Let the civilized world know the truth—the actual truth. The nations of the world should know the conditions of the Jews in Roumania as they are, and not as the Roumanian politicians explain them.

A propaganda should be started and vigorously conducted through the press of the United States and in Canada. Public sentiment, and the public conscience must be awakened to a wrong which is the crime of the age. Every right-thinking man and woman must be brought to realize that this scandalous outrage perpetrated by the Roumanian government against its Jews is an insult, an outrage, a crime against humanity. The Jews, especially Roumanian Jews, must unite and organize in the United States and in Canada, in their respective localities and prepare to send delegates to a world congress of and in behalf of Roumanian Jews, which will be held shortly. In France and in Switzerland associations have already been formed with that object in view. Roumanian-American Jewry must not remain behind their confreres abroad. It is for that scope and purpose that the American League of Roumanian Jews has been formed. "To Further Defend and Protect the Rights of the Jews in Roumania."

The mission of the Hon. Adolf Kraus in coming especially to New York from Chicago, the conference held at the Hotel Astor is the first step taken in that direction. $5,000 was cabled to Roumania the same day after the conference. The decision at the conference that a propaganda must be started and an appeal be issued to the American people for its moral support is a wise one. Every man or woman of prominence in the nation; whether in public or in private life; the judiciary of the United States and of every State in the Union; the professions and the clergy of every denomination will be appealed to help break the chain of tyranny which holds so tight the helpless Roumanian Jews. The appeal is not for funds. It is an appeal to every American pure heart, to every lover of liberty, to give the moral support to a movement to free the Roumanian Jewish slaves from bondage.

The North, with Lincoln at the head, fought to free the blacks from the bondage of the white man. America, all America—All mankind—must fight the black Roumanians and once for all break the chains of vicious bigotry and selfish savagery and place the long-suffering and bleeding Roumanian Jews on an equal footing with their fellow men.

There is every indication that the different factions of Roumanian Jews in the City of New York will unite in the common cause to help their unfortunate brethren. Let all Roumanian Jews get together, and now or never make this sacred cause their cause—the cause of liberty for humanity's sake and now or never secure Justice for the Roumanian Jews.

ANNUAL MEETING OF NATIONAL JEWISH HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTIVES, DENVER, COLO.

Sunday afternoon, June 18, was made memorable at the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives, at Denver, Colo., by the dedication of the William S. Friedman Building.

Officers and trustees of the hospital from many States were present, as well as Jewish citizens of Denver and representatives of other faiths.

President Samuel Grabfelder, in the name of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives, dedicated the original building of the hospital, to be known as the William S. Friedman Building in honor of the distinguished service of Rabbi Wm. S. Friedman during the past twenty-five years.

The annual meeting of the hospital was held Monday, June 19, in the Joseph E. Shoenberg Memorial Building of the hospital. There was a large attendance at the meeting, and among those present were Lucius L. Solomons, of San Francisco, first vice-president of the Executive Committee of the Order; Karl Vetsburg, of St. Louis, president of District No. 2; Sidney G. Kusworm, of Dayton, Ohio, and Alfred A. Benesch, of Cleveland, Ohio, representatives of District Grand Lodge No. 2.

Samuel Grabfelder, the honored president of the hospital, was given an ovation when he opened the meeting.

It was with the greatest regret that the resignation of Martin A. Marks, of Cleveland, O., from the Executive Committee, was accepted. Mr. Marks has been one of the most valued workers of the hospital, but was compelled, because of ill health, to sever his official connection with the institution.

Lucius L. Solomons, in addressing the meeting, spoke of the remarkable work the hospital had accomplished and of its far-reaching benefits. He emphasized the relationship existing between the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives and the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and stated that the hospital is "an inestimably valuable and indispensable philanthropy."

The officers of the institution are as follows:

Samuel Grabfelder, President, Philadelphia; J. Walter Frieberg, First Vice-President, Cincinnati; Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Friedman, Second Vice-President, Denver; David May, Third Vice-President, St. Louis; Harmon August, Fourth Vice-President, New York; Mrs. S. Pisko, Secretary, Denver; Ben Altheimer, Treasurer, St. Louis.

Executive Committee: Samuel Grabfelder, Philadelphia; J. Walter Frieberg, Cincinnati; Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Friedman, Denver; David May, St. Louis; Harmon August, New York; Ben Altheimer, St. Louis; Louis D. Shoenberg, New York; Nathan L. Dauby, Cleveland; Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy, Pittsburgh; Sol S. Kiser, Indianapolis, Adolf Kraus, Chicago.

Milton L. Anfenger, of Denver, was elected a member of the National Board of Trustees.

The annual report of President Grabfelder was of great interest and importance and dealt with matters of great moment.

B'NAI B'RITH OF AUSTRIA

Report on the Special Relief Activities Undertaken by the Lodges of District No. X on Behalf of the War Victims of Galicia and the Bukowina.

The conditions in Galicia and the Bukowina have required the most earnest attention and the hardest work from the members of this District. In regard to the care of the orphans a material improvement has been secured by the fact, that the Austrian government has assumed the obligation to contribute to the maintenance of such orphans at the rate of K. 1.— per day for each child placed into the care of a private family, and K. 1.50 per day for each child maintained in an orphan asylum. Thus, as tar as our financial liabilities are concerned, we shall only have to supply such amounts as might prove necessary over and above the government contribution. For this purpose we have decided to found a special society to be under the patronage of the Order, the Board of Directors of such society to be composed of members of the Order to the extent of at least two-thirds of the number of Directors. The Society is to be called: "Society for the Rescue and Preservation of Deserted and Orphaned Jewish Children of Galicia and the Bukowina"

Our Brothers feel that it is incumbent upon them not only to provide for the maintenance and physical care of these children, but also to furnish them the advantages of a Western cultural education. The Society will be organized within a few days and the general appeal to be published in our daily press on this account shall be forwarded in due time.

We hope to obtain liberal contributions toward this fund and we have no doubt that large sums will be obtained from parties not within the membership of our Order. We have learned from many sources that no other war relief measures enjoy the same amount of popular and general sympathy as does the work on behalf of the deserted and orphaned children. This is but natural! For we are not providing for aged people, having already one foot in the grave; neither are we aiming to sustain invalids, as it is the sole duty and privilege of the State to provide for these war victims. We are supporting children, young people who innocently and through no fault of their own have had to undergo want and misery, and whom we intend to raise and educate for the work and the welfare of the coming generation, for the benefit of the State and of our religious community! There can be no difference of opinion that it is our sacred duty to protect and provide for these unfortunates.

It affords the greatest satisfaction to learn how all religious differences are forgotten in this common distress, how all elements of the population, the government and private citizens, are united by a common bond in the efforts to care and protect the unfortunate children.

Brother Simachowitz, of the Austrian Lodge, has furnished a shining example of noble devotion to the cause. He donated his large landed estate in Ernsdorf near Bielitz for the purpose of there establishing an extensive agricultural Jewish Foster Home. The Austria Lodge has agreed to look after the maintenance of the institution.

The Silesia Lodge also has undertaken to provide for a number of war orphans by placing them in the care of respectable families, and for this purpose the lodge has immediately raised the sum of K. 10,000.—.

The District has devoted from the collections heretofore made: for the care of orphans, K. 100,000.—, for the relief of the war sufferers, K. 160,000.—.

We have before reported as to the progress of our institution for Jewish trained nurses. It might be of interest to add that some of the young women trained in that school have so distinguished themselves by their bravery in the field and tireless devotion to duty, as to gain the government decoration of merit.

The Foster Home, organized by the Eintracht Lodge, celebrated the tenth anniversary of its existence on April 16th. In keeping with the general solemnity of these days, the event was celebrated in private by a general meeting. The retrospect of the career and activity of this society gave general satisfaction. In comparison of the past and the present the society shows an immense and steady growth The war has more than doubled the number of children cared for in the Home. Many hundreds of Galician fugitives were cared for regularly were clothed, fed and received instruction. For those already beyond school age there were instituted three courses of instruction—in stenography, typewriting and bookkeeping—so that many of those attending these courses were placed into position to find well paid employment.

The war has also strengthened the ties uniting the Brothers in the entire District. The sorrows and joys of all individual members were shared by all the members of the Order. It hardly needs to be added, that there was more of sorrow than joy, for of course nothing different could be expected in these serious times. Within our entire Fatherland there is hardly a house, hardly a family, that does not have to mourn the death of a near relative or of a dear friend. But it would be ingratitude were we to make no mention of the joys we have been favored by in these great days. In particular we should here make mention of the bravery of our brothers in the war zones, of the devotion to public welfare and charitable work of those remaining at home and the noble deeds of our wives and daughters.

The annual reports of the several Lodges of our District furnish the best evidence of the foregoing statement. There is not a single Lodge in the entire District that has not furnished some of its members for army duty· not a Lodge that has not had to share the vicissitudes of the war. Neither is there a Lodge whereof some member or members have not distinguished themselves by meritorious deeds for which they have secured government approval and decorations.

In the lead of all others was our worthy Grand-President, who volutarily and without remuneration undertook the management of two military hospitals. For these extraordinary and most strenuous services he received the decoration of the Officers insignia of the Red Cross Society. Many of the Brothers were favored with the Medal for Bravery, a Brother of the Eintracht Lodge even received two such Medals, one the Large Silver Medal, the other the Large Gold Medal.

The number of sons of our members who have received decorations for bravery in the field is extremely large. But not the men alone have contributed to gain general esteem and approbation for our Order; the women have done their full share in their own special spheres of action. You will receive full details thereof in the by-monthly publication, so for the present it will suffice to mention a few special instances:

The Union Lodge of Pilsen, having but 91 members, has paid out for philanthropic and charitable work, the sum of K. 96,000.—, besides distributing clothing, underwear and food to the value of K. 144,000.—. Certainly a most exceptional and remarkable preformance, that was rendered possible only through the enthusiastic work of the entire membership under the direction and guidance of the worthy District Vice-President, Bro. Dr. Schanzer, who was most ably assisted by the entire organization. Brother Liebstein and the wife of Brother Eckstein deserve special mention in this connection for the help they furnished Brother Schanzer in organizing the several activities.

The two Prague Lodges, the Bohemia and the Praga, always in the lead in all philanthropic undertakings, have exceeded all their prior records and established for themselves a new high water mark of good deeds. Whoever is familiar with the conditions existing among the Prague Jewry, cannot help wondering how our Brothers in that city ever managed to raise within a short period the magnificent sum of K. 500,000.— for the relief of the war fugitives. The small number of members of those two Lodges, residing in Saaz, have expended the sum of K. 25,000.— for the purchase of clothing and underwear for the fugitives.

It goes without saying that the two Vienna Lodges have accomplished great deeds and are still continuing their meritorious actions. One of the members of these Lodges, Bro. Dr. Schwarz-Hiller, is at the head of the combined institutions for the care and maintenance of the war fugitives in Vienna, and it is universally admitted that he is directing the work in a masterful manner. His merits have been repeatedly acknowledged and recognized by the government and among all his fellow-citizens, regardless of their religious or political affiliations, there exists but one opinion of praise and approbation for his unselfish devotion to a most difficult task.

The number of members doing military duty differs materially among the several Lodges. The Lodge furnishing the largest number to the armies is the Allianz, which from a total membership of 68 has contributed 33 of them to the service of the Fatherland. It is to be regretted that one of these members has found his death upon the battle field.

Owing to the exceptional severity and the long duration of the war, it need not be wondered that some of our Brothers have fallen into the hands of the enemy as prisoners of war. Let us hope that they may all be permitted to return to their homes and to their friends and loving relatives in good health and spirits.

We are living under abnormal conditions and these are bound to produce abnormal results. Ever since the existence of our Order within the Austrian Empire, this is the first time that the membership, instead of showing a healthy growth, has actually declined in numbers. The same condition has been experienced by our neighboring District —Germany—with whom we are united in the closest amity. Even if our loss is but small—the net loss being but 16 members, hardly worth mentioning—we must still recognize the German saying, "that standing still means retrogression." The worthy Grand Master is considering measures to improve this condition. He is now trying to hasten the organization of a third Lodge in Vienna.

The annual meeting usually taking place in the beginning of May of every year, was not called for during last year on account of the war troubles. As the same conditions prevailed this year, the meeting was again postponed to some time in the fall. Should, by that time, the political situation be improved, the meeting will then be called. Should, however, the war continue and thereby prevent the possibility of successful cooperation, then the annual meeting will have to be dispensed with for this year, too.

For the present this short review of the doings in our District will present a fair picture of our activities, but the printed reports to follow at a more opportune moment will give more complete details.

Report of Commission on Superannuated Ministers Fund

The Special Commission on Superannuated Ministers' Fund, appointed in 1915 by the Central Conference of American Rabbis, submitted its report to the Conference at Wildwood, New Jersey, through Rev. Dr. Joseph Stolz, of Chicago, the Chairman. This Commission had been appointed to act in conjunction with a similar commission of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

The report starts out with the suggestion that the name "Commission on Superannuated Ministers' Fund" be changed to "Commission on Synagogue Pension Fund," and that "the scope of the Commission be so enlarged as to apply ultimately not only to members of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, or to rabbis serving Congregations belonging to the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, but to all rabbis serving congregations in the United States, who are graduates of theological seminaries, or have been otherwise ordained, as well as to the professors of the Jewish theological seminaries."

The Commission gives as a reason for the change of name that the pension contemplated is not to be construed "as a charity to be administered by the goodwill of some committee, but is the obligation which justice imposes upon every congregation and theological seminary to make adequate and dependable provision for the old age, or disability, of every rabbi and theological professor serving the cause of Judaism."

The report then continues:

There are about six hundred accredited rabbis serving congregations in the United States, and about twenty-five professors serving in theological seminaries and Yeshibahs. It is likely that, after the war, learned and worthy colleagues will come to this country whose congregations abroad have been completely wiped out by the devastations of war. And it is quite possible that the actuary will decide that an initial reserve fund of a million dollars will be necessary to cover the so-called "accrued liabilities" of the rabbis and teachers of this generation who otherwise could not become participants in the benefits of a plan which ought to insure every rabbi and theological professor a minimum pension for himself, or his widow, or his minor orphans. And what a great thing it would be for the Union of the Jews of this country for the dignity of our ministry, for the increase of the efficiency of our spiritual teachers, by the alleviation of their anxiety for old age, if all of our congregations and seminaries would unite in the collection of this initial reserve fund and in the adoption of some feasible plan of self-taxation to provide an annuity for old age, for disability at any age, and for the widow and minor orphans, not only of this generation, but also of all subsequent generations of rabbis and professors.

In spite of the extraordinary demands now made upon the Jews of our country for the relief of the war sufferers, this seems an appropriate time nevertheless to bring this obligation home to the conscience of our people, because just now the Protestant churches of America are setting themselves the task of raising an initial reserve fund of $50,000,000 for the pensioning of their clergy. They have already collected $20,000,000 towards this fund; and their respective pension commissions have just held a joint conference at Atlantic City to devise means for raising $30,000,000 more within a year.

The Presbyterians have over $4,000,000 in their treasury, the Methodists $6,000,000, and Bishop Lawrence, of the Episcopalian church, who is devoting a whole year of his time to the exclusive task of raising $5,000,000 within his denomination, reports that he has already collected $3,000,000 in sums ranging from $250,000 to ten cents. One party (Mrs. D. Willis James) has this year given the magnificent sum of $2,500,000 to the retired misisters' fund of the Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian churches. And in this connection it might not be superfluous to recall that another party (Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge) has recently given $200,000 in memory of her father and mother toward the fund for pensioning the members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, who number altogether less than 100.

Now, in the face of this growing consciousness of a social duty to provide for the old age, disability and misfortune of all classes of working people and public servants, shall we, the teachers and advocates of social justice towards all, make or countenance a distinction within our own profession and creed between reform and orthodox rabbis, between the graduates of one or the other seminary? Shall we presume that the Jews who so emphatically insisted upon the pursuit of justice Zedek, Zedek Tirdof, and who so beautifully taught reverence for the rabbi, Moro Rabboch K'moro Shomayim, will not respond to the same kind of call to which other denominations are now responding so generously, and so enthusiastically? Shall we presume that the Jew who in ancient times taught such tender care for the Levite and showed so much solicitude for old age will, in our day, give a deaf ear to the call for justice toward those who, with a great material sacrifice, are giving themselves to the service of their religion?

We feel assured that, when the test comes, American Israel will not be found wanting, although it may be necessary for a very able man to give up a whole year of his time exclusively to the one big task of stirring the conscience and loosening the purse strings of our people in the interest of this laudable cause.

However, before any appeal is made to the piety, conscience and generosity of our people, it will be necessary:

(1) To gather complete and accurate statistics.

(2) To get the most eminent of actuaries to devise a system of providing adequate annuities which will be scientifically sound and which can be absolutely guaranteed against disintegration.

(3) To put the whole enterprise upon a business basis approved by the most stringent insurance department in the country.

(4) To interest some people of means to defray the expenses of a preliminary study and investigation.

(5) To select at the very outset, as trustees of the fund, such rabbis and laymen in whose judgment and integrity American Israel will have the utmost confidence and the most implicit trust.

(6) To get the people to understand and agree that the pension is not a charity, but a deferred salary, to which the retired rabbi, or his widow, or his minor orphans, come automatically, as a matter of right, and not as a matter of sentiment, which they receive as an act of justice and not as alms.

Accordingly, we would recommend:

(1) That the name "Commission on Superannuated Ministers Fund" be changed to "Commission on Synago Pension Fund."

(2) That the Executive Board of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations be requested to appoint some one to present forcibly and enthusiastically to the next Council, American Israel's imperative duty to provide as soon as possible an adequate pension for its rabbis and theological teachers.

(3) That the Commission on Synagogue Pension Fund be continued and be instructed to submit a report to the next Biennial Conference of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, in the spirit of the above suggestions and, after due consultation with the Union's representatives on the Commission on Superannuated Ministers' Fund.

The 48th Annual Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 6 was held at Hotel Ottawa, Ottawa Beach, Mich., on July 3, 4, 5 and 6, 1916. The attendance was large, nearly 100 delegates and Past Presidents of the District Grand Lodge answering the roll call. The Convention was opened with prayer by Dr. Jacob Feuerlicht, and the delegates were welcomed by the President, Brother B. J. Samuels. After the Convention was organized President Samuels delivered his message, which was listened to with marked attention. Reports of the officers and chairman of standing committees were then presented, showing the District in a most flourishing condition, the membership of the District having passed the 6,000 mark, showing a gain during the past year of over 900.

The activities of the various philanthropic institutions maintained and supported by the Order, such as the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, Educational League of Cleveland, and B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau of Chicago, were commended, and the lodges of the District and their members were urged to continue to the full measure of their ability, their contributions towards these worthy causes.

The uniform observance of Memorial Day, in honor of the departed brothers on a date to be fixed by the General Committee, was approved.

The holding of lectures, debates and discussions in the lodges and the observance of B'nai B'rith Day was strongly recommended.

The work of the Anti-Defamation League was commended and the lodges of the District urged to present to their members at their meetings, all communications and bulletins issued by the League so that the members may become conversant with the results achieved.

The maintenance of employment bureaus in all the larger communities and employment committees in each lodge in the smaller cities, and the centralization of their work to establish an intercommunal relationship was recommended.

The work of the Social Service Committee of the District in co-operation with the Social Service Department of the Order was approved, and it was resolved that for the ensuing year the work of the District along social service lines should be limited to the Big Brother movement, to the establishment of Free Employment Bureaus and the securing of co-operation between various Free Employment Bureaus in the different cities of this District.

The Grand Lodge resolved to hold its annual conventions at a summer resort in the month of July.

The lodges were urged to devote more attention to the causes of Intellectual Advancement, to arrange a series of meetings for intellectual purposes, to which meetings other Jewish organizations and the general Jewish public shall be invited to participate; and to endeavor to develop debating teams.

The desirability of memorizing the ritual was emphasized to the end that the initiates shall be duly impressed with the significance of the obligations which they assume.

The lodges and their members were urged to continue their contributions in a liberal manner to the relief of war sufferers in Europe.

The Grand Lodge approved the proposition of rebuilding the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, but with special emphasis, however, that no money shall be expended for grounds or buildings until the full amount necessary for grounds and buildings in District No. 2 and also for the branch asylum in District No. 6 shall have been raised; and, furthermore, that one of the conditions of the approval by the Grand Lodge to the rebuilding plan shall be that at least $250,000 shall be spent upon the erection of the branch asylum in District No. 6.

The work of the Central B'nai B'rith Councils in the District was commended, and it was resolved that the General Committee of the District canvass the field with the object of encouraging the formation of other Councils where practicable.

The following appropriations were made:

For Propaganda and Intellectual Advancement purposes	$1,500
For B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau, Chicago	1,250
For Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital, Hot Springs	750
For Central B'nai B'rith Councils.	750
For Educational League, Cleveland	100
For Social Service purposes	1,500
For moving picture devices for propaganda purposes	300

Various amendments to existing laws of the District were enacted, among the important ones the following:

"Each lodge of the District shall require of each of its members the payment of uniform dues not less in amount than $8.00 per annum."

"The Grand Lodge will hereafter have a lien upon all the funds and property of the lodge for the purpose of securing the Grand Lodge in respect to the prompt and full payment of dues and assessments which may be owing by the lodge to the Grand Lodge."

On Monday evening, under the auspices of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the Grand Lodge, Rev. Dr. Leon Harrison of St. Louis addressed the Convention and its friends on the subject, "The Wandering Jew." His masterly address evoked much applause at its conclusion. Brother Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, presided at the gathering and introduced the speaker.

On Wednesday evening, July 4, a patriotic dinner was arranged, with Brother Edward Sonnenschein as Chairman. The following delivered addresses: Brothers Charles L. Aarons of Milwaukee, Albert F. Mecklenburger of Chicago, Henry Monsky of Omaha, and Rev. Dr. Leon Harrison of St. Louis.

During the session of the Convention, the President of the Order, Adolf Kraus, delivered an address reviewing the work of the Order since the convention held in San Francisco. Brothers Israel Cowen and Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Directors of Social Service Department of the Order, also addressed the Grand Lodge on the work of Social Service. Brother Otto G. Finkelstein, Superintendent of the B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau of Chicago, read a paper on the work of the Bureau. Short addresses were also made by Brothers Judge Samuel Alschuler and Sol Levitan.

The following were the officers elected to serve the District for the ensuing year:

President—Dr. Haim I. Davis, Chicago.

First Vice-President—Edward Sonnenschein, Chicago.

Second Vice-President — Hiram D. Frankel, St. Paul.

Secretary—A. B. Seelenfreund, Chicago.

Treasurer—Benjamin Braun, Milwaukee.

Sergeant-at-Arms—Sol Levitan, Madison.

Members of the General Committee—Philip Stein, Benjamin J. Samuels, Albert F. Mecklenburger, Julien J. Gusfield, and Dr. Harry Kraus, Chicago; Eugene Mannheimer, Des Moines; Charles D. Oreckovsky, Duluth; Lester Rice, Winnipeg, and Samuel Levin, Danville.

During the Convention a testimonial was presented to the retiring president, Brother Benjamin J. Samuels, by Brother Alphonse Lefkow, in the name and on behalf of the Chicago lodges, in appreciation of the valuable services rendered by him during his administration.

The Convention was brought to a close with prayer by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee.

SIGNOR LUZZATTI ON RENEGADE JEWS.

In an article on "Religions in Italy," by Signor Luzzatti, published in the "Courriere delle Sera," the following passage appears:

"The Protestants are increasing, the Jews are decreasing in numbers; for whereas in 1901 they numbered 35,617, ten years later they were only 34,324. Part have undoubtedly gone over to those who are of no religion; another part may not have described their religion; but there must be many more Jews in Italy. Why do they conceal their faith? There are Jews who are ashamed to acknowledge themselves as such. I hope I shall not be the only one who, estranged by deep conviction from the ancestral faith, again becomes a Jew when it is a question of fighting minor dangers or contempts, or of taking one's place by the side of the oppressed. This immortal people has saved itself through persecution; through it has been created the power of maintenance and eternal youth."

Biennial Convention of District -:- Grand Lodge No. 3 -:-

The fifteenth biennial gathering of District Grand Lodge No. 3 was held in the city of Erie, Pa., beginning July 22, 1916.

The convention was held in the ballroom of the Hotel Lawrence and was called to order by the President, Mr. Abraham Weil, who, in a few well chosen words presented his Honor, the Mayor of Erie, and Justice Emery A. Walling, of the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania to extend greetings of welcome to the delegates and visitors.

His Honor, the Mayor, in his remarks, bid the delegates to come again and often.

Honorable Jacob Singer, of Philadelphia, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, responded to the Mayor's welcome, expressing the pleasure of the convention at the reception accorded its members and friends.

Justice Walling, in his welcoming remarks, among other things said: "We are glad to have you here. Many of you have come from a great distance, but you have come for a good purpose. We welcome you because we know you stand for good things, the same good things we all want to stand for. You love the same country and the same flag we love. You are good Americans and as such we are glad to have you here."

Judge S. Straus, of Wilkesbarre responded in a very happy manner, expressing deep appreciation for the sentiment and hospitality expressed by Justice Walling.

The remainder of the forenoon was given over to the organization of the convention, appointment of standing committees, and the presentation of the president's message.

President Weil, in his message, called attention to the fact that during his administration twelve new lodges were instituted in the district and to the material increase in its membership. Regarding the work accomplished, he called attention to the district's participation in the work of the Western Educational League and the Prison Aid Committee. We emphasize the fact that during his administration one of the district's greatest accomplishments was brought to life, viz: the Orphanage at Erie.

Orphanage Day.

At 2 p.m. on Sunday, Orphanage Day was celebrated at the Home for Friendless and Orphan Children at Erie, Pa. Fully 1500 men and women crowded the grounds of the Home where the exercises were held. Dr. A. H. Silver, of Wheeling, made a plea for the support of the Home. The opening words were: "No light that you have kindled, no fire that you have brought into existence is so sacred and so holy and so nearly represents the divine fire as that life you have kindled in the souls of these little ones. No success we will ever achieve, in numbers, finance and buildings will equal the love you have engendered in the hearts of these children."

Dr. B. S. Pollack spoke of the credit that is due to the men and women of the Board of Governors who have given so generously of their time and attention to insure the success of the institution. His address was followed by that of Deputy Attorney General, Joseph Kun, of Philadelphia, who in closing his address, said: "Not the bricks, the granite, nor the building itself will constitute the future of this building, but it is the children themselves. Each should go out from here a messenger of love and fraternalism that should exist in every Jewish fireside."

Mr. Marcus Feuchwanger, of New Castle, spoke of the financial needs of the institution. He noted that at the present time there is a debt of $46,000 on the property. He urged that funds be given to pay off this indebtedness.

Besides the foregoing addresses, the following program was carried out:

Prayer: Rabbi M. C. Currick.

Address: "How We are Trained for Efficient Citizenship," by Mr. Harry Davidson.

Address: "Big Brothers and Big Sisters," by Mr. Jacob Feinstein.

Various musical numbers.

The program was brought to a close with the singing of "En Kelohenu" by the children.

Monday's Session.

Monday morning's session was the outstanding feature of the convention, when $30,000 was pledged and collected on the floor by individuals and lodges to help lift the debt on the buildings of the Home.

Honorable Isidor Sobel, President of the Orphans' Home Board, submitted an exhaustive report covering the period of the past two years. His appearance on the platform was the signal for vociferous outburst. He made an earnest plea, not only for the support and maintenance of the institution, but for a liberal response to eliminate the existing indebtedness on the Home and to provide for a sinking fund.

At the suggestion of Mr. Stein, of Wheeling, Dr. A. H. Silver made a forceful plea for contribution, pledging his home lodge to start the fund by the donation of $6,000.00. He was followed by Judge Straus, who made a personal contribution of $1,000.00. Mr. Chas. Kline, of Allentown, pledged $1,000.00. Following in quick succession were pledges from all the lodges of sums ranging from $200 to $3,000. Every person at the meeting contributed something. The ladies' auxiliaries pledged substantial sums. It was one of the most exciting and inspiring occurrences in the history of the District Grand Lodge.

Banquet in the Evening.

About 400 delegates and visitors to the convention and their ladies gathered in the ballroom of the Lawrence Hotel on Monday night for the banquet which featured the sessions of the second day. For nearly three hours the banqueters ate and made merry. American flags decorated the walls of the banquet hall, parodies on popular songs in which had been inserted the names of prominent members of the Order, were sung.

The banquet was opened by prayer by Rabbi Max C. Currick.

"B'nai B'rith" was the subject of the address by Brother Jacob Singer, the first speaker called upon by the Chairman, Brother Isidor Sobel, to address the gathering.

"I have visions of a greater order before me. This great Jewish union, now 73 years old, is undergoing a re-birth tonight. Who would think that is the age of the order when they see the youthful faces about this room tonight?

"It was the union formed by the B'nai B'rith 73 years ago that made gatherings such as this possible. When I think of the advances of the twentieth century, when I think of the task of the Jews to form this organization, I look back with affection on the band which taught us to look with the highest philosophy, affection and love on the flag of this country.

"The orphanage is but an incident in the future of the B'nai B'rith. We stand together today as we never stood before the flag of our country. We are striving to gain recognition in those countries across the sea where our co-religionists are still persecuted. This is the present mission and work of the Order."

Other speakers were Mr. Joseph W. Salus, whose subject was "District No. 3, the Present"; M. S. Meyerhoff, who spoke on "Reminiscences"; Judge S. J. Straus, whose theme was "Our Activities," and Samuel W. Salus, speaking on 'Pennsylvania."

The Chairman, Brother Isidor Sobel. brought the speaking to a close with happy remarks, expressing the gratitude on behalf of the Jewry of Erie that the District Grand Lodge accepted its invitation to convene in that city.

Tuesday's Session.

Various amendments to the constitution and by-laws were considered and acted upon. Reports of standing committees as well as reports of officers were presented and considered.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Frederick Jay, of Newark. N. J.

First Vice-President, Marcus Feuchtwanger, of Newcastle, Pa.

Second Vice-President, David Bortin. Philadelphia, Pa.

Treasurer, M. S. Meyerhoff, Philadelphia, Pa.

Secretary, Louis Sulzbacher, Braddock. Pa.

The general committee consists of the following:

Morris Schaffner, Erie, Pa.
H. S. Platowsky, Philadelphia, Pa.
Frank Kaplan, McKeesport, Pa.
David Phillips, Philadelphia, Pa.
Mark Alexander, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Dr. B. S. Pollack, Jersey City, N. J.
Leon B. Stein, Erie, Pa.
Adolf Edles, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Preceding the convention the delegates and friends were entertained on Saturday afternoon with an excursion to the "Four Mile Creek" for a fish dinner and general entertainment. Meetings of the general committee as well as some of the standing committees of the convention were likewise held.

The convention was brought to a close with the adoption of a resolution of thanks and appreciation to the Jewish citizens of Erie, as well as to the entire community for the magnanimous hospitality offered the delegates and their friends during the days of the convention.

NEWS FROM BERLIN

By Our Special Correspondent, DR. I. ELBOGEN

It is not necessary to emphasize the fact that the activity of the German lodges and of the Grand Lodge is being influenced by the war. In a country where general conscription is the rule, no other way can be thought of. A great many of the brethren find themselves in that age in which they must take up arms and serve the fatherland, many have offered their services voluntarily, even before they were summoned, and the older brethren have their sons, grandsons and other near relatives in the field. There is hardly a family that is not being forced by the war to share in the duties and hardships. It is pleasing to be able to state that in spite of all this the lodges keep up their activity and have also not neglected their spiritual interests. Quite a number of the lodges, although they are not being spared from cruel losses, have increased their membership by means of new initiations. And of still greater importance is the fact that they have also augmented their inner strength, their very achievements during the war time have exercised a strong recruiting power.

A catastrophe like this mightiest of all wars causes all social arrangements to face new problems. Our lodges never wait until they are called; they offer their help wherever they perceive urgent distress. So have they right in the first days of the war declared themselves ready to participate in the general duties, such as the care of those who are personally engaged in the war and of the needy soldier families.

Right in the beginning of the war the Grand Lodge placed all its nurses at the disposal of the fatherland. Up to date fifteen nurses have been distinguished with the Red Cross medal.

During the first months of the war it has also established the Hospital Train of the German B'nai B'rith lodges, for which the lodges raised the sum of 120,000 mark, and which they abundantly supplied with friendly gifts the value of which up to date has reached the sum total of 80,000 mark. The Hospital Train of the German B'nai B'rith lodges made twenty-five trips during the first year of its existence. The physicians, keeper of accounts and the nurses belong to the Order. The B'nai B'rith News has already reported about the Hospital Train in an article headed "First Trip of the Hospital Train of the German B'nai B'rith Lodges," which appeared in the October issue, No. 2, 1915, and also in an article entitled "Report of Brother Berthold Timendorfer," published in the February issue, No. 6, 1916.

The Berlin lodges have turned their magnificent building, which was only dedicated in 1912, into a hospital, and they themselves wandered into a modest exile. Management, physicians, nurses consist exclusively of voluntary forces furnished by the circles of the brethren and their families. The fact that our co-religionists participate prominently in the work for the care of the sick no doubt repeats itself in all Jewish communities in Germany. But in addition to these general duties the local needs too soon pointed out their special obligations to the individual lodges. In some places there are special garrisons in which many Jewish soldiers are serving. The lodges interested themselves in these soldiers and promoted their welfare; they placed the lodge rooms at their disposal for their free hours on Sunday, and there they offered them amusement, suggestions for spiritual thought and refreshment.

On Hannukkah and on the high Jewish Holidays they entertained them in a festive manner, and in the midst of the earnestness of their military service and the oppressive thought of living among strangers, they conjured up for them scenes of "home, sweet home," and prepared for them a real festive hour. By its excellent work the Jewish Soldiers' Home in Metz, which was fitted up by Lothringen Lodge already in time of peace, it set a high standard which served as a model and was the gathering center for Jewish soldiers. The number of Jewish warriors in this border fortress and its vicinity is now much higher, nearly all of them have at one time learned to know the care and hospitality of Lothringen Lodge and are without exception full of praise of the friendly unselfish treatment and the cordiality of the brethren of that place. The entire German district considers it a duty of honor to contribute to the enormous expenses of this blessed institution.

In other places again it was necessary to care for the great number of refugees from abroad, or mostly expelled Germans. Here a public kitchen had to be arranged, there a sheltering place, at another place a kindergarten. But before all it was necessary to procure work and a livelihood for many unemployed. Much could be accomplished in this department as the demand for laborers became constantly stronger. Also relatives who were foreigners from hostile countries, who were kept here securely interned, were, upon the request of the authorities, provided with employment.

It will especially surprise and give delight that about 2,000 Jews from Russian Poland could be placed as laborers in mines and in the industries where hard labor is required. The hope exists that other hosts will follow. The lodges not only assume the trouble to create the opportunity for work, but they also bear the cost of clothing, first shelter and Kosher board of the workmen. Greater demands were also made upon the lodges in their own midst.

Even if the conditions of commerce and industry in Germany have assumed a brilliant aspect, which was above all expectations, the war has nevertheless shifted things about with its mighty and violent hands. A world war is a bad opportunity for regular business. In many branches of industry conditions have suddenly changed for the worse, we only need to be reminded of the discontinuation of the German transatlantic trade, through the calling out of their head the source of support has been drained for many families, old people and widows who till now have been maintained by their children, were all at once robbed of this support. It therefore became necessary that besides the regular allowances for relief, special war funds should be held in readiness. The demands for aid were not nearly as great as it was feared in the beginning of the war, still until the end of 1915 the Berlin lodges, for instance, have expended $10,000 of their war fund.

For the time of peace, which we hope is near, beacon the obligations of the care of soldiers' widows and orphans, of the restoring of health, of the renewing of the ability to earn a living, and to re-establish an existence for the home-returning brethren, of whom we hope there will be many. Far reaching care has partly been effected already, but much more still remains to be done.

If the Grand Lodge is the heart that regulates the blood circulation of the individual lodges, then it cannot remain untouched when the organs are heavily burdened. All the sufferings and oppressions of the lodges impart painful sensations to it. But above this it has also its own cares. There are the lodges in the border towns which are hard hit by the war. Eger Lodge in Ostrow and Gabriel Riesser Lodge in Thorn, for instance, have many members from Russian Poland, and in consequence of the war they are all ruined. And what shall we say of the unfortunate east-Prussians? The cables of the entente powers were too busy spreading the lies about the German atrocities and forgot to inform the world about the "great deeds" of the Russians in East Prussia, about the devastation of the country, about its destroyed cities, its burned down villages and its annihilated prosperity. It is not the German nature to fill the world with complaints and lamenting reports, but rather to go to work energetically and rebuild what has been destroyed.

Also the lodges in East Prussia made an attempt to resume their activity, after they have suffered so very much, and in places like Allenstein, Tilsit, Insterburg, nearly all the brethren were forced to flee with their families in order to save their lives. There is much to rebuild here, the Grand Lodge is not only called upon to help with advice, but also with deeds. This is only one of the duties which make a direct intervention necessary, but there are many other duties next to it, and more are waiting in the background, the carrying out and the financing of which demand consideration. The necessity to create new means for the Grand Lodge is becoming imperative. The much debated suggestion of the President of the Order, Brother Kraus, to create an emergency fund has been extraordinarily strengthened through the war, the urgency of such a reserve to which one can take refuge in the moment of direct distress is being recognized on all sides.

Already today the Grand Lodge has only to thank the assistance which it received from the presidency of the Order for being able to satisfy the demands which are made upon it.

The many demands which came to the Grand Lodge from abroad caused it to overstep the limits of its resources: "Whoever has something, to him more is given; whoever gives, of him more is demanded." It is generally known that the Grand Lodge is always ready to help and never refuses, its assistance is therefore demanded by persons far beyond the circle of our brotherhood and our district.

The frightfully distressing condition in the countries visited by the war is well known, wide circles of our co-religionists are exposed to hunger and misery. This is not only the case in Russia, of which we will speak directly, but no less in Galicia and the Balkan lands. Since a long time Galicia belongs to the children who are in the care of our district. The conditions of that country, which were always unendurable, have become still worse through the war, help with money and clothing is urgently required. We have also always kept a watchful eye over the provinces of the Turkish empire, but nobody had expected to see such a misery as exists there at present. Until now very little has been said about it; since the arrival of Brother Morgenthau in America this has also become known that not only in Palestine but also in other parts of the Turkish empire unattainable prices of provisions prevail, while incomes have fearfully diminished.

It was to be expected that when commercial cities like Constantinople or Smyrna are suddenly cut off from the sea the source of livelihood is closed for tens of thousands of their inhabitants. But when we now learn from authentic reports that of 50,000 co-religionists who before the war lived in prosperity in Smyrna, 40,000 are unable to obtain even dry bread by their own means, the misery is one that cries to heaven and demands quick, direct action of relief

And conditions are not much better in other large cities of the Orient; the Grand Lodge has spent some of its means specially for the feeding of the starving school boys and girls. The distress in Servia is also frightful. The Grand Lodge has not denied its aid also to the co-religionists there.

But this is the fate of war; it hits the whole land in the same manner, our co-religionists as merchants and city dwellers it hits harder than the farming population, but cruel as war is, it spares nobody. How different is the case in Poland and in Russia, where the commanders of the army carried on a systematic Jew-baiting, where the vanquished generals proved their strategic art in battles against the defenseless Jewish population. Who could describe the Russian horrors more impressively than it was done in the memorable December meeting in Carnegie Hall, who could raise harder accusations against the Muscovite rulers than were hurled at them in the Duma in the "Discourse pronouces a la Douma et au Conseil d'Empire sur la situation du peuple juif en Russie" (Speeches delivered in the Duma and befor the Imperial Council on the condition of the Jewish people in Russia), which were also circulated in America?

Yet every day propagates a report of new cruelties, every mail brings information of new crimes! How could it be different when czarism has the mandate to fight for freedom and the scourge of God, its cossacks, to combat for the rights of man! Against this misery which is caused by the fury of the war in league with Russian rapacity and lust of murder, the strongest organization remains impotent and helpless.

In union with the Hilfsverein der deutschen Juden and the Frankfurter Kommittee fuer die Osteuropaeischen Juden the Grand Lodge has arranged a collection through which nearly two and a half million marks have until now been realized. To this were added relief amounts sent by the interconfessional Relief Committee for Poland. But before everything the enormous sums must be mentioned which the American Jewish Relief Committee was able to send over from the copious collections in the United States. Yet all these millions suffice to render the most urgent help only, for the distress of the Jews in the war zone is as boundless as the sea, who is able to offer a thorough remedy for it?

From here we naturally can only care for the Jews in the territory occupied by the German army, the care of the Jews in the Russian provinces must be left to our co-religionists in England, to whom the opportunity is now offered to best convince themselves of the humane principles of their allies. The Hilfsverein has the advantage over other Jewish institutions by building up its activity everywhere upon a personal knowledge of conditions which it studies in each respective locality before it finally acts. So has the directory of the Hilfsverein undertaken a journey nearly every month into the occupied territories, and with the advance of the German arms it has extended the journeys, which first only reached to Lodz, always farther over entire Poland, Lithuania and Courland, there it came in touch with all circles and parties of Jewry, and to not less an extent also with the newly installed civil and military authorities, thereby building up a wonderful relief work. The Jews cannot show enough gratitude to the presidency of the Hilfsverein, especially not to the indefatigable Brother Dr. Paul Nathan, and to the General Secretary, Brother Dr. Bernhard Kahn, for the sacrificing assiduity and the self-denying devotion to duty with which they came to the aid of the poor Russian co-religionists, for the ability and care with which they extended the relief work in all directions.

According to the report of the Hilfsverein issued in the beginning of April. 1915, one-fifth, about 340,000 of the 1,700,000 Jews of Poland went voluntarily to Russia or were forced to go there: of the remaining 136,000, one-third. about 455,000 souls are starving and freezing. Fifty thousand of these were "evacuated from the front"; they find themselves without a home in a deplorable condition. Of the 700,000 Jews of Lithuania, 175,000 were driven out, while 125,000 went away voluntarily with the Russians; of the remaining 400,000, at least 250,000 find themselves in the most pinching distress.

Out of the 50,000 Jews of Courland 40,000 were driven out and 10,000 remained, mostly in Libau. In the occupied territories there are in all 700,000 Jews in need of assistance, whose number is growing from day to day. Until now 2,000,000 marks have been expended in the relief work in Poland and Lithuania, but from April 500,000 marks will be needed monthly for the alleviation of the very greatest misery only. With these funds 225 places were assisted in which there are 90 public kitchens, 25 tea halls and numerous other public arrangements for the benefit of the starving people.

Another difficult task was also settled by the Hilfsverein and the Grand Lodge through the systematically organized exchange of information and transmission of money between the Jews who emigrated to America and other neutral countries from Poland, Lithuania, Courland, and their relatives who remained behind there.

From the beginning of October, 1915, up to April, 1916, more than 120,000 letters and single inquiries were transmitted to Russian Poland, Lithuania and Courland, and more than 100,000 from these territories to America and other countries.

On account of this the office of the Hilfsverein is looked upon as the central place for this work, also for letters to non-Jews. The American embassy, the other embassies and all the consulates make use of its interposition; this is often done also by the Polish Catholic societies, other non-Jewish institutions, as well as by the commandries and police officials in the occupied territories. On March 22 alone it received 2,300 letters, among them 900 registered ones. Through its activity the Hilfsverein has also become known as the one that can best attend to the sending of money, so that even the banks in Germany, in America, and in other places abroad turn to the Hilfsverein with the request to forward the money which they send to it to Russian Poland and to Lithuania.

The money which passes monthly in this manner in very small sums through its hands amounted during the last few months to about 400,000 marks, and it is constantly on the increase. It frequently receives and forwards in one day 100,000 marks in very small sums of 10 to 100 or 200 marks. No more detailed statement is needed to demonstrate the fact that the material help which one relative is in this way enabled to extend to other relatives, thereby rejoining the broken family ties, is of the highest value.

The emigration problem was also drawn into the circle of the relief work. On February 21, 1916, a conference took place in Kovno under the presidency of General von Ludendorff, which occupied itself with this question. The military authorities have declared themselves ready under certain conditions to permit at least those persons to go to America who receive prepaid ship's tickets from their relatives in America, a thing which has no equal in history.

In spite of the vast extent of the activity of the Hilfsverein, sundry matters still remained for the Grand Lodge to attend to. The Hilfsverein can only fulfill the general obligations, but it can by no means enter into all the local sufferings. But such things frequently become known to the Grand Lodge, where, like in Lodz and Warsaw, brethren live or where brethren come in the capacity of their military service. So, not to mention other deserving cases of distressed conditions, it became known that in must help conserve Jewish ideals and customs among every element of our people. When the Orthodox Jew loses his grip on his faith, Reform Judaism is not the gainer, for one of the purposes of our existence is seriously affected when religious indifference grows apace. Rarely do the pious Orthodox abandon their practices to become pious Reformers. Reform may have an unquestionable raison d'etre as the only type of Judaism that appeals to many of our brethren, but one will have to admit that it is the universality of Orthodox practices that makes for the unity of our faith and people.

Lack of understanding of the immigrant's ideas and ideals is not the only cause of the estrangement referred to above. There is that subtler and less eradicable cause in the feeling of social superiority on the part of the German or Reform element. By reason of their Western manners, their standing in the communities in which they live, and principally, their wealth they look down upon their Russian brethren and their peculiar ways. I shall not attempt to discuss here whether there is any justification for this feeling of superiority. Even if we accept the European test of aristocracy-birth, we may well wonder how one set of our co-religionists, irrespective of learning, achievement, or public service, should occupy a higher social rank than another set. That is perhaps a proper theme for a Woman's Club that is interested in heraldry and genealogy. To the American of democratic tastes it appears as the height of absurdity that Solomon Levy from Bavaria should assert himself superior to Isaac Goldstein from Kovno. Yet those who are anxious for social equality should remember that even with the extension of the principles of democracy snobbery has not been eradicated.

This much can be said, that if any real superiority rests with the Reform element, it must use for its motto "Noblesse oblige." Theirs is the duty, because of their larger opportunities, to assist their brethren in their spiritual as well as their economic struggles. What splendid opportunities they have to use their quiet business-like methods and skill in the problems of organization that beset Jewry! Mention must be made of only the proposed Jewish Congress, over which there has raged such bitter controversy. Is it not the course of sanity, as it becomes evident that the Congress will be held, that the opponents of this idea should accept the inevitable, and by taking a sympathetic part in the work of the Congress, thereby help to make this organization of genuine value to our people? And their leadership would be acceptable, if it were offered in the spirit of true co-operation. The desire to impose authority is unhealthy in a country such as ours. Even large-scale philanthropy is not all that is required, however essential that may be.

Now let us proceed to the consideration of the specific ills of our communities. The problem of the synagogue is of the utmost importance even though we may not accept religion as the only raison d'etre of the Jew. Synagogues and Temples will be built. Very often, however, a town is blessed with too many congregations, none at all, or one that is a poor excuse for a synagogue. The Reform congregations usually have less difficulty in preserving harmony and maintaining a respectable place of worship, although with the growth of Conservatism or modern Orthodoxy, there has appeared the possibility of disagreement over ritual and prayerbook even in more fashionable quarters. But the problem here is much simpler, particularly as regards the Rabbi, who can be secured if sufficient funds are available, and whose duties, such as holding Sabbath services and conducting religious classes, in the main, follow a normal course. Our Orthodox brethren's communal politics is far more complex. Their religious wants are greater. There must be, for instance, a Schochet, competent, according to Jewish law, to kill fowls and to slaughter and inspect cattle. Moreover, the character of the Orthodox ritual requires a cantor. Again, the children must be taught Hebrew and given religious instruction. To be able to do all this work, and at the same time, be all that is expected of a religious leader —these are indeed tremendous requirements. Yet the numerous advertisements for such men do indicate that our congregations do not accept the theory of the division of labor either from principle or because of its expensiveness. The result is some fundamentals are sadly neglected. Children are growing up in the densest ignorance of their religion and the history of their people. Even the knowledge of Hebrew, to the few who have studied it, is negligible, as it amounts to little more than the ability to sound words, the meaning of which, has not been learned. The Bible, the Talmud is out of the question, is merely a name seen in literature or heard in school. With the organization of modern Talmud Torahs and Sunday Schools, a beginning has been made in the struggle for educational light. It is evident, however, that the Sunday School cannot give the child Jewish culture. The far cry from the all-day Cheder to the one-hour Sabbath School cannot be answered to the satisfaction, least of all, of those who were saturated in the atmosphere of the old days. Certain it is that if we desire to develop a normal Jewish self-consciousness, and a devotion to our spiritual heritage, we must devote earnest consideration to this, the foremost of all problems—education.

Whether it be for the education of the children, in the religion and history of Israel, or of the adults in a consciousness of their obligations to their people, the crying need is for Rabbis who can handle this big task of pedagogy. To be called a teacher in Israel had always been a distinction, but one that the modern Rabbinate must seek to deserve if it be worthy of the precious traditions of the Sages. It is theirs to point the way to a catholic love of all that is truly Jewish, whether of a modern or ancient, Eastern or Western character. A way must be found whereby there can be greater co-operation between the Orthodox and Reform congregations. Even though they cannot unite for services, they can at least strive for union in this particular, that he who officiates at the Temple should superintend the religious education of all the children of all the Jewish people. And this co-operation is possible if the Rabbi is liberal enough to give Orthodox children a sympathetic view of the practices of their parents. The layman, ignorant of philosophical distinctions, but loving Judaism more than reformation, cannot conceive why a Reform Rabbi should not be able to interpret Orthodox conceptions and practices in a big-minded and sympathetic manner. Even though it may be unorthodox to eat trefah, it should not be heretical for the Reformer to eat Kosher. In view of the unfortunate narrowness too often displayed in the Temple, cannot we understand why the hearts of some of our intelligent Orthodox brethren should bleed when they must send their children, in the absence of proper Orthodox instruction, to the Temple, where the minister is at times over-zealous as a missionary of Reform Judaism?

In this as well as in other matters of general concern we must learn to work together. The striving toward co-operation that is so characteristic of modern social and economic life, should be in the program of all our leaders, for is it not true that the one deadly tendency among us is that toward division? Perhaps we are not the only people who suffer from the evils of disintegration, but so much of our trouble is due to this cause that every movement working for harmony, co-ordination, and centralization needs encouragement. How unpleasant to contemplate the quarrels into which the discussion over the proposed Congress has developed. Surely some of our leaders have displayed a woeful lack of statesman-like vision in their unwillingness to respond to the needs of a new day. No sooner do we have an American Jewish Relief Committee but there must be a Central Committee and a People's Committe. In local matters lack of harmony is of a more serious nature, for the differences arising in the larger movements are often due to natural and intelligible disagreements on principle and policy, whereas in our individual communities discord prevails over personalities and often over trifles. Only too often do we see how, where a handful of Jews can scarcely maintain one synagogue properly, a division occurs through some trivial cause, a new congregation is formed, another minister arrives, and ill-will and strife wax, with the direful result that the great purpose for which all had stood, although unknowingly, become confused in the petty bickerings of little men.

One would have the nature of a quack to prescribe a specific for this ill, deep-rooted as it is in the social organism of many a community. Perhaps the best that we can do at first is to attempt to understand the causes of this lack of political sense. Political it must be, because the organization of men for certain social ends by means of government, whether of church or of state, requires political capacity. Many of the immigrants come from communities in Russia where there is a strong congregational tradition and a powerful public opinion. There the leaders are those who through their learning and station in life, command the respect of the people. Removed to the American atmosphere of equality and of a weak Jewish public opinion that fails to back up the prestige of the congregation as of more value than personalities, some of our newcomers will use the slightest occasion of disagreement, as in the election of officers, as an opportunity to start a movement for secession. This point can be understood if we consider how much easier it is to start a revolution in a new state than in an old established country. Our communal life is too young to have the respect that authority deserves. Shul politicians are too often familiar with each other's pedigrees, as we discover from the sweet remarks made about President X, who is charged with the unpardonable crime of being a shoemaker or the son of some village tailor, who in the old country had to content himself with the permission to sit on a rear bench, and listen to the words of wisdom falling from the lips of the high and mighty; and here he sits in the East and lords it over his betters. Besides, the Rabbi's prestige is absent. That authority with which the town Rav was clad—the respect which was paid him for his learning and piety—the sanctity of his opinion—these are things of the past.

But not only is there no source of authority in our individual communities, but unfortunately there is none in America—no representative body or organization that can speak authoritatively for the American House of Israel because it commands the confidence and respect of our people as a whole. There have been individuals and societies which have been ambitious enough to act and speak for all of us. The American Jewish Committee is still anxious and is in fact struggling hard to be the official body of spokesmen for American Jewry. But leaders cannot be representatives if they have no constituents or unwilling constituents, and recent events have remonstrated very forcibly that a large section of our people does not care to be led by these gentlemen, however able and properly motivated they may be. Yet whether these or others shall be our leaders, the necessity still remains for concerted action on our part. What a pity it is that a practically-minded people as we should not be able to work out some plan whereby our common interests —and there are so many things that we can get together on—may be discussed and treated by united action.

Of course a united American Israel is a Frankenstein to some. A few always see the red of danger when everything about them is the blue of hope. They are afraid of being called un-American, of being charged with creating racial divisions in this country now when so much is being said about hyphenated citizens. The uneasiness of these men should be amusing, particularly to the young American Jew, who, like the rest of his countrymen, takes his Americanism for granted, and does not believe that in his patriotism he must out-Herod Herod by ignoring his blood and racial ideals. He is convinced, on the contrary, that the Jew who will make the best American is he who holds his traditions dear, and strives for the advancement of his co-religionists. No sane man has yet questioned the propriety of the powerful organizations which the various denominations have created.

It is the paramount duty of whatever statesmanship we can summon to help build the the structure of a united American Jewry. A central organization, without in the least being a despotical Ecclesiastical Court, would go far in introducing order in the chaos of our local affairs, aside from its tremendous powers for good in watching out for the interests of all Israel. Such a body could centralize our educational activities. The resources which would flow to its command would enable it to help the out-of-the-way communities and provincial families, by furnishing traveling Rabbis, lecturers and literature, and using all other methods of spreading Jewish culture.

In the meanwhile our communities must look into their own problems. For this social introspection there should be gatherings in every section and state for the discussion of our common needs. The spread of the gospel of harmony and a study of our communal problems should lie in the domain of activities of the Young Men's Hebrew Associations and the B'nai B'rith lodges which are composed of different elements and can approach these vexing questions practically and soberly, and free from the annoyances of partisan strife. Chiefly concerned in the past with matters of philanthropy, with the happiest results, it is true, these organizations must not be content with their former achievements, but must devote themselves with all the splendid spirit which is theirs to the constructive work of solidifying and Judaizing American Israel. If we are to preserve our reputation for good, hard common sense, we must apply the standards of efficiency and good management to our public business. And the examples of co-ordination are too numerous and too conspicuous in American life that we should be lacking in methods of procedure.

The task of straightening ourselves out is no easy one, but much can be done if we learn to take a broad view of Judaism. The Reform Jew is beginning to see that those who wish to observe the minutest rule of the Schulchan Aruch not only are entitled to respect but should be given the assistance of the entire community in getting their religious wants satisfied. On the other hand, the Orthodox Jew must learn that others may have an interest in him without any ulterior motive to reform him or to lord it over him. All have to learn the lesson of mutual understanding and co-operation for the common weal. And that can come about only when we shall approach our difficulties free from dogmatism and actuated by our love for Jews as well as Judaism.

ANNUAL MEETING OF EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE.

The annual meeting of the Officers and Board of Governors of The Educational League was held in Cleveland at the Montefiore Home, Sunday, July 9. at 1 p. m. The meeting was largely attended.

The President, Mr. Martin A. Marks, in his message read several letters and newspaper articles concerning beneficiaries who had made remarkable advancement.

Inasmuch as it has been a custom of the League never to use the names of those whom it has assisted, it is impossible to mention any of the names, but the facts brought forth at the annual meeting showed that one young man had made the highest average obtained in his university in the engineering course, and was offered a position in the engineering department of two of the leading railroads in the country. Another illustration was cited of a young man who had come to this country several years ago with a craving for an education, which he had been unable to obtain by reason of lack of funds. However, through the assistance offered him by The Educational League, he was able to attend one of the western universities, and a few months ago was made the purchasing agent of one of the largest cities in the west. Other illustrations of the excellent progress made by those assisted by the League were also presented to the meeting.

Acknowledgment of the excellent work of Miss Edna Goldsmith and her committee was made by the members of the Board, and a vote of thanks extended to them.

The report of the auditor showed that the receipts of the League for the past year had practically doubled in amount. Among the receipts for the past year was a contribution of $500 from the heirs of Kaufman Hays, which contribution it was resolved to record on a Memorial page of the League's record. Report of the auditor likewise showed that Life memberships of $100 each from Mr. Martin A. Marks, Mr. Fred Lazarus, Mr. Leon Bloch, Mr. Joseph Schonthal, Mr. Joseph Magnus, and Mr. Ben Altheimer were received during the past year.

The consideration of applicants for assistance was referred to the local committee with power to act.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Mr. Martin A. Marks, Cleveland, O.

Vice-President—Sidney E. Pritz, Cincinnati, O.

Treasurer—Dr. S. Wolfenstein, Cleveland, O.

Secretary—Eugene E. Wolf, Cleveland, O.

RUSSIAN PARLIAMENTARY CONCESSIONS TO JEWS.

The attempt in the Upper House to amend the Bill as passed by the Duma permitting Jews in certain districts to enter the State Elementary Schools without restriction, was defeated. The majority of the Upper House approved of the attitude of the Minister of Education who insisted upon the carrying out of the measures as it left the Duma. Count Ignatieff combated the efforts of the anti-Semites who fought to amend the Bill.

The Russian rationalists have forwarded a memorial, particularly against Count Ignatieff's pro-Jewish regime, demanding a vigorous policy against the Liberals.

Anti-Semitic circles are elated over the progress made in re-acquiring of the "Novoe Vremya," which recently fell into Jewish hands, since they may again utilize this important newspaper for their purposes.

CONGRESS OR NO CONGRESS.

It always was and still is the aim of the B'nai B'rith to prevent, as far as possible, discord among our people, and to present a united front on questions affecting their welfare. On June 17, 1906, after careful consideration of then existing conditions, and foreseeing, to some extent at least, some of the difficulties now confronting us, the Executive Committee adopted the following resolution:

> "Be it resolved that the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, while rigidly maintaining its separate identity in the fulfillment of the tasks it has undertaken, neverthless stands ready to co-operate temporarily in all critical emergencies with other recognized Jewish organizations for the achievement of immediate results in matters affecting the Jewish cause. At the same time this Executive Committee deems it antagonistic to the principles of the Order and subversive to its mission to enter into any permanent alliance or federation with other institutions limited in their scope and lacking the universality which has ever characterized the B'nai B'rith."

Shortly after the present war broke out the Executive Committee was of opinion that whenever the war should be over many important changes would take place among the European nations, and that the future of our people will necessarily be affected either for better or for worse, that it was then time, therefore, to adopt measures which might have the tendency to make the future better. Leaders in European lands were corresponded with, their views obtained, and preparatory steps taken by the Order to secure to the Jews, in the lands affected, such rights as were accorded to those of other faiths. Whether or not any other Jewish organization took any action we are not advised. But a new organization was started by leaders who believed that in a multitude is wisdom. They proposed that a Congress, to which Jews all over the land should elect delegates, be called, and that such a Congress should deliberate on what course should be adopted, and should be the authorized spokesman for American Jewry. On the other hand, leaders of certain recognized Jewish organizations believed that at such a Congress things would be said and published which might have a tendency to injure, if not destroy, the cause instead of benefiting it, that the way to achieve success is through diplomatic channels, and that diplomacy is not conducted in open town meetings, that a conference to be participated in by representatives of all organizations would be more advisable.

Advocates of both measures were sincere in their views, convinced that the measure they advocated was the only correct one, and therefore the other was [illegible] wrong. Considerable ill-feeling was shown, and even personalities indulged in. Then came the call on the one side for a Congress; on the other [illegible] Conference. Each requested the B'nai B'rith to join their respective movements. To have accepted either invitation would have resulted only in making the division in American Jewry so much greater and much more difficult to heal. For that reason neither invitation was accepted, but it was resolved that if both factions can agree, the Order will join; if not, then the Order would co-operate with either one or both in any feasible plan. The leaders on each side were informed of the plans of the B'nai B'rith and invited to co-operate. In order to harmonize the different elements the President of the Order issued an invitation to the presidents of twenty-four leading Jewish organizations equally representative of the Congress and Conference movements, to meet him at the Hotel Astor on October 3, 1915, to confer on a plan for united action. The Conference was held, the President of the Order presiding. Although no immediate results were achieved, yet it was the first step towards harmony, which was later on followed by the appointment of a sub-committee of five each by the Conference as well as the Congress Executive Committees. The sub-committees unanimously agreed to recommend the calling of a Congress, limiting its action to some extent, and invited the B'nai B'rith to unite with them. The Order promptly accepted the invitation, conditioned that the principals for whom the sub-committees acted would ratify the plan, and so insure united action. We hope that the agreement reached will be ratified by the voters, for if not, the split in American Jewry will not only be renewed, but widened. In such a case the Order will again have to occupy the middle of the road. To take sides with either would weaken, if not destroy, the Order's usefulness, and would surely bring about a split in its own ranks. It is principally for that reason that the lodges are warned not to take sides in such a controversy. The Order recognizes the rights of each member to be a Zionist or anti-Zionist, or believer in or opposer of any plan lately advocated, but the lodges as such must not take sides in the controversy which may soon start again, nor elect delegates for either camp should the plan for a union fail.

We repeat what we have said before, and what has always been the position of the Executive Committee: The Order is always ready to co-operate temporarily in all critical emergencies with other recognized Jewish organizations for the achievement of immediate results in matters affecting the Jewish cause, and invites the co-operation in its work of other Jewish organizations, but if such co-operation cannot be had, the Order is ready, in spite of the mouthing of unfriendly critics, to proceed alone, relying on the justice of the cause and on the aid of Him on high.

SERIOUS DAYS.

After the joys—and in our generations, the frivolities—of the summer with its freedom of movement in the open air come the chilly autumn days as a prelude to winter's restraint and darker, gloomier, more subdued and more serious aspects. It is this turn from summer to autumn that is hallowed with us by the two sombre, serious days when we are bidden to look upon the world in which we are placed and upon our own selves from the angle of vision of deep concern. When the leaves begin to fall and bareness besets us on all sides, we would pin our faith to an abiding point or principle. More than ever our shortcomings are borne in upon us, and we long for the perfect. Israel somehow unlearned rejoicing like the nations. Exile, wandering, persecutions, they seem predestined and a fit staging for Israel's career. They supply the serious note and make an artificial weltschmerz a needless luxury. Happy is the people that know the sound of alarm. They knew at one time the alarm that summoned the able-bodied manhood to battle. Israel has no battles of his own. He falls on the battlefields of others. But he still has an alarm of his own. It is not the sound of warfare, ignoble, cruel, inhuman. His is the vision of the day when war will cease and the mighty engines of destruction be broken. His own alarm betokens the call to the conscience. Awake! why sleepest thou? It is the re-awakening of all that is best in the human heart, the arousing of the impulses of love and pity. This world is neither bad nor good altogether. Over against the inclination to be selfish and brutal there is the sentiment of nobility and saintliness. It is there, submerged, and only requires being brought to the surface.

Israel is the heart of humanity. He is the world's conscience. Providence has placed him in the dispersion to quicken mankind's better impulses. He is muchly sinned against. But he does not lose his faith in God and goodness. Ease, prosperity, freedom from care make him forgetful of his higher destiny. The world supplies the spur of malicious persecution to recall him to his better self. No world event takes place without engulfing him in ruin. In ancient days, he would put on sackcloth and bend his soul in fasting. He would justify God's judgment and search for his sins. He would go into his inner self and purge his conscience. "Of a truth, we and our fathers have sinned." Today, there are some of us who contemptuously discard medieval notions. The Jew who in the past looked for help from Him who made heaven and earth, now thinks that he can work out his salvation with his own hands. God indeed works through the counsel of our wise men. We must be wise indeed, all of us, for we have a multitude of counsellors. Unfortunately each one believes his remedy to be the panacea for all ills. And our wise men are at cross-purposes, and there is the din of the clash of antagonistic interests. There is incrimination and recriminations and much abuse. Each one would be the healer of this people.

Our people have serious days ahead. The world conflagration is being fed with new flames. The little nations sell themselves to the highest bidder. Honor and faithfulness are vanished from the earth. The issue is in the hands of Providence. "Truly in the Lord is the salvation of Israel." We cling to our faith in our righteous cause. We have stood dutifully by the flags of our fatherlands. We have shed our blood in defense of our varied homes. We have a claim to the consideration of mankind. With the help of Israel's Guardian we shall lay our cause before the assembled representatives of Europe's battling nations. We want nothing that is not due us. We want an end made to our rightless existence in Russia and Rumania and wherever else our inalienable rights are withheld, sometimes in defiance of the mandate of the councils of nations. Let there be no ignoble sequel to the coming council as there was to the one held in Berlin. We should indeed prepare ahead. And our preparedness must take on the form of united counsel in our own ranks. May this serious season cause our leaders to change heart. Let all cavilling vanish. The cause of Israel is in jeopardy. Let there be co-operation in the room of division, and a united stand in the place of partisan or sectional interests. For thus only shall we be saved.

A TIMELY VOLUME.

The twenty-fourth number of the Publications of the American Jewish Historical Society is wholly devoted to an essay on "Jewish Disabilities in the Balkan States; American Contributions Toward their Removal, with Particular Reference to the Congress of Berlin." The study appears as conjoint labor of Mr. Max J. Kohler and the Hon. Simon Wolf, the former assuming sole responsibility for the presentation of the subject toward which Mr. Wolf contributed useful information chiefly in the form of unpublished correspondence. As we have reason to believe that the American Government will, at the conclusion of the world war willingly interest itself in the hapless plight of our brethren in the Southern scene of the conflict in Europe, the timely publication will conveniently serve as a memorial of precedents for our State Department to fall back upon. Benjamin F. Peixotto's mission to Rumania opens up the record. Its uniqueness is pointed out. Peixotto having been appointed United States Consul at the Rumanian capital expressly in order to secure an amelioration of the condition of the Jews of Rumania. The part which fell to the Order to play on this and other occasions mentioned in the publication we expect to have dealt with in a subsequent issue, in which connection the work of our Order in almost all these diplomatic negotiations shall be brought to recollection. Here we are solely concerned with pointing out the noble action of our Government, exemplified in the sympathetic attitude taken by President Grant, who not only made the consular appointment, but showed his keen interest in Mr. Peixotto's avowed mission. Our Government received the consul's detailed reports; in 1872 the Secretary of State, Hamilton Fish, authorized Peixotto to address a note to the Rumanian Minister of Foreign Affairs and to do anything toward preventing a recurrence or continuance of the persecution arising out of the Silberman affair. The Department of State approved the consul's participation in a joint note of remonstrance by the representatives of foreign governments at Bucharest1 and on the recommendation of Peixotto, Mr. Fish wrote letters to our Ministers at various European capitals to make known to the governments the sympathy of the United States with "the inhumanly persecuted Hebrews," and he spoke of the matter as "a grievance so enormous as to impart to it, as it were, a cosmopolitan character, in the redress of which all countries, governments, and creeds are alike interested." During the Russo-Turkish War in 1877, Mr. Wm. M. Evarts, the Secretary of State, pursuant to a petition presented on behalf of the Board of Delegates of American Israelites, instructed Minister Maynard at Constantinople, to "give instructions to our Consular representatives in the Provinces (of Turkey), as will be best adapted to secure to the Israelites the desired protection." John A. Kasson, United States Minister to Austria, suggested to Secretary Evarts that the United States Government should indicate its approval of having the Congress of Berlin decree equal rights to the Jews of Rumania. The dispatch antedated the convening of the Congress. Similar action was taken by the United States Ministers at Vienna, Rome, and Constantinople, and in the view of the State Department "the subject was one eminently deserving of consideration." Whatever action was taken at the famous Congress, the prototype of the one which will be convened at the conclusion of the present war, was therefore in a great measure due to the initiative of the accredited agents of our own Government. Secretary John Hay's famous Rumanian note of 1902, voiced the American Government's protest against the persecutions resulting from a disregard of the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin, "not alone because it has unimpeachable ground to remonstrate against the resultant injury to itself" in the form of enforced emigration to this country, "but in the name of humanity." President Roosevelt evinced great pleasure in the appreciation of leading American Jews, "as the note was prepared under his personal supervision." Congressman Chandler's plea before the House of Representatives is reported in full. The last intervention on the part of the American Government took place at the close of the Balkan Wars of 1912-1913, and at the Peace Conference of Bucharest a communication from the United ates Government was read, to the fect that a provision should be in-uded "according full civil and religious berty to the inhabitants of any territory ibject to the sovereignty of any of the ve powers, or which might be trans-rred from the jurisdiction of any one f them to that of another." This brings s down to the administrations of Presi-ents Taft and Wilson. It is certainly record worthy of the traditions of merican diplomacy; but another glor-ous chapter remains yet to be written, nd we are certain it will be written.

HON. JOSEPH B. DAVID.

Brother Joseph B. David, member of riental-Hillel Lodge, of Chicago, was n June 5, 1916, elected Judge of the uperior Court of Cook County, Illinois.

On June 14, Judge David took his oath f office in the presence of a large as-emblage, among which were prominent en of the bar, judges, the family and latives of the judge-elect.

Chief Justice McDonald, in introducing udge David, spoke of his career at the ar for over 31 years, and as a citizen, esiding more than 35 years in Chicago.

Judge David is an instructor of Crim-ial Law and Procedure in Loyola Uni-ersity. He is most active in communal nd Jewish affairs.

SIXTY YEARS A BEN B'RITH.

On July 20, 1916, Brother Solomon arx, of New Orleans, celebrated the xtieth anniversary of his membership n the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. r. Marx, who is now in his 82nd year, oined New York Lodge No. 1, of the rder, in 1856, afterwards affiliating with Vashington Lodge No. 19. In the year 359, Mr. Marx moved to New Orleans, here he continued his interest and ac-vity in the Order and was most active n the organization of many lodges in the ity and throughout the state.

The B'nai B'rith News congratulates rother Marx and expresses the hope hat he may be spared for many years o continue his worthy activities on be-alf of not only the Order but humanity self.

MEYER FRIEDMAN.

The Jewish community of Denver, the 'nai B'rith and American Israel has sus-ained an irreparable loss in the passing f Mr. Meyer Friedman, of Denver, Colo.

Mr. Friedman was well known as a ommunal worker and a leader among is co-religionists. He devoted much me and effort to alleviate the wants of he poor and the needy, and rendered val-able services to the creation and main-enance of the National Jewish Hospital or Consumptives in his own city. In 'nai B'rith circles his counsel and ad-ice were always sought. He served as resident of District Grand Lodge No. 2 nd as one of the principal officers of he National Jewish Hospital for Con-umptives. He served also as President f the Jewish Social Service Federation nd as Director of the Central Jewish ouncil.

Mr. Friedman led a useful, benevolent nd exemplary life and has enjoyed the espect and admiration of all those who new his fine qualities as a Jew and as a itizen.

MARTIN A. MARKS.

It is with great sorrow we record the eath of Martin A. Marks, of Cleveland, hio, a big hearted, courageous, able and oble man.

Much of his time and a large measure f his personal service was devoted to ovements and in channels beneficial to he general public as well as to individ-als. His career as a business man is an nstained record of honorable dealing. evoted to his family, he made them the ecipients of his unbounded love and ffection. His home was in every re-pect an ideal one.

In philanthropic activities he was a ecognized leader not only in his home ity, but nationally. He was for many ears a loyal member of the Order of 'nai B'rith, actively interested in its elfare. He devoted his talents to the rtherance of the Order's aims and ob-ects. He was honored with numerous ffices of trust within the Order, and his reat service was recognized by his elec-on as presiding officer of the memor-ble Convention of the Order held in Vashington in the year 1910.

Martin A. Marks' life was of great enefit to his fellowmen; his death is a istinct loss to humanity.

SIMON WOLF

On October 28, next, Simon Wolf will celebrate his 80th birthday. We deem it proper to set at the head of our new season's efforts, a portrayal of the achievements of "one chosen out of the people". In our own day and far beyond our circle, Simon Wolf's name and fame and record are an open book; the story of a life singularly rich in devotion to humanity, to his adopted country, and above all to the Jewish people, would require no rehearsing for those of us who have been privileged to work with him. But we mean to serve the needs of after generations. A harassed and dispersed people, driven hither and thither, we have only too often suffered the memorial of our great men to perish. A people that is ever making history, or rather for whom history is being constantly made afresh, is apt to forego indulging in reminiscences. "The latter events make the former forgotten." We lack repose for the historical retrospect. We possess the sentiment of gratitude, but we are not given to hero-worship. Throughout the ages of our restless career we have cherished the memory of leaders in multitudinous Megillot, scrolls, to which we would now link the newest "Megillat Simeon", the scroll of the record of Simon Wolf.

Born in 1836 in Rhenish Bavaria amid the cramped conditions of Jewish rightlessness and brought to this country when he had not yet reached the age of thirteen years, Simon Wolf has lived up fully, justly, unflinchingly to the threefold cord of his spiritual make-up. In these days when the hyphen is held up to scorn and looked upon with nervous suspicion, it is indeed refreshing to point to this man in whom associations so varied were blended in beautiful harmony. There are hundreds of thousands of American Jews whose cradle stood in Germany. All of them have become loyal Americans and the majority has clung faithfully to the synagogue. But the fewest have retained an interest in things German. Simon Wolf is an American patriot of the truest type. He has identified himself with the synagogue, with Jewish education, with the cause of his race the world over. But he has never forgotten his German origin. A Jewish Carl Schurz, he has shown how the thing now derided as German culture may be made to subserve Americanism of a high order. Then again we have seen many Jews in this country rise to positions of eminence and hold high public office. But their Judaism has been of a lukewarm character and at best found expression in racial, now going by the name of "national", interests, in semi-detachment from the community, from the synagogue. But this man, who for fifty-four years has moved in the circles of official Washington, who enjoyed personal relationship with President Grant and subsequently with every President of the United States, whom the Shamrock Club has enrolled on the list of its honorary members, this same man served the local congregation as President and took active part in the formation of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and in the fostering of the seat of learning to the care of which that organization is committed. Indeed, Simon Wolf's Jewish activities would have sufficed to occupy all his time; but it is fortunate that he never regarded this or similar work on behalf of the Jews as a business. What is amazing in this man of four score years of strength is his singular versatility and catholicity of interests. Eminent as a lawyer, he is known as a brilliant lecturer, persuasive, eloquent, scholarly, and a notable writer and biographer. He has held public position but twice: from 1869 to 1878 he was Recorder of Deeds in the District of Columbia, and from July 1881 to May 1882, consul general and agent diplomatique to Egypt. Each time he returned to the law which after a short business career in a small Ohio town he had made his avocation in 1861, when he graduated from the Cleveland Law School. The law was, however, but his private avocation; his real avocation was to serve his fellowmen.

We find him identified with civic associations like the Schuetzen Verein of which he was President for twelve years, and for five years he was President of the Board of Children's Guardians. He is honorary member of the Saengerbund, a leader in the National Red Cross, in kindergartening, in the Civic Federation. By Presidential appointment he has served on the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia; he has been chairman of the committee on badges of the Inaugural Committee at three Presidential inductions, and he presided over the Dewey Medal Committee. He has been President of the Christian and Eleanora Home for the Aged and Indigent since its inception; he aided in founding the German Orphan Asylum at Washington and has been from the beginning chairman of its committee on ways and means; while serving as minister to Egypt, he collected over $10,000 in aid of the Garfield Memorial Hospital then being erected in Washington; the Baltimore German Orphan Asylum acknowledges him as a staunch friend. He was President of the Washington Hebrew Congregation and of the Washington Literary Association; year in and year out he has lectured at the temple on the Day of Atonement and addressed the German orphans on Christmas. He is enthusiastically identified as a promoter and director of the Chautauqua, National Farm School, Jewish Publication Society, Jewish Historical Society, the National Hospital for Consumptives. He was initiated into Free Masonry in 1857 and is at present a Thirty-third Scottish Rite and President of the Masonic Veterans. For twelve years he was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Kesher Shel Barzel; the Montefiore Home for Aged in Cleveland, Ohio, was inaugurated during his regime. He raised ten thousand dollars for it. From the inception, Simon Wolf was an ardent and enthusiastic adherent and loyal supporter of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. He conceived that organization, to quote from an address of his own, "as a basis for developing the active forces of Judaism, founded to maintain a high standard of morality, to teach by example, unity, and endow a college that should teach its students all of the elementary principles underlying Judaism, without endangering individual opinion, and that this college should educate American Rabbis, who should preach the Word of God in an intelligent, cultured and elevated manner, appealing to, and stimulating, the younger generation for support, and perpetuating among the elders all principles endeared to the Jew". He knew himself in accord with Isaac M. Wise, and with him he realized that "a compact, united, harmonious body can achieve success, and render invaluable service not only to itself, but to the State", and that "what Dr. Wise worked for, was not only in the interest of the Jew and Judaism, but also in aid of civil and religious liberty, and to give to the Jew as an American citizen that status and recognition to which he is entitled by the logic of history, and by his humane and civilizing philanthropy and ethics".

In the present year of unhappy disunion among the forces of American Jewry, Simon Wolf stands out with vigor unabated by his weight of years and a vision clear and undimmed by the newer shibboleths as one of the foremost representatives of that form of Judaism which was the creation of the leaders of German-American Jewry. It was as natural for Mr. Wolf to fall in with the Reform wing as it was consonant with his lofty conception of Judaism on the one hand and of the place which the Jew was destined to occupy on this hemisphere on the other. As a means of safeguarding Judaism amidst the condition of American democracy the formula which meant an uprooting of the national hopes of the Jewish people must of necessity have appealed to men of the caliber and convictions and breadth of view of Simon Wolf. Yet, like so many illustrious laymen who are identified with the reform cause, his interests in Jew and Judaism were not confined to a mere theological fancy. The cause of the entire Jewish people, free and fettered. liberal and orthodox, Western and Eastern, claimed his attention. The Union of American Hebrew Congregations, aside from its local sphere of uniting divers elements and building up an institution of higher learning for the training of Rabbis in accord with the environment, wisely undertook the task of watching over the liberties of the Jew wherever denied or threatened, at home or abroad. One of its most important committees has been the Board of Delegates on Civil and Religious Rights, and Simon Wolf has been its Chairman all these years, nay, he was for all practical purposes the whole Board. A truly herculean task fell to his shoulders, and he has acquitted himself of the duties that went with that position most zealously and effectively. By his prompt and interested labors great results were achieved. He has succeeded in landing over 100,000 worthy men and women. He has won out against the Public School Board, in preventing sectarian teachings, has prevented inroads into personal liberty, has appeared before committees of Congress time and again in matters affecting the Jews.

By word of mouth, but just as effectively by his ready pen did Simon Wolf defend the Jewish cause. To vindicate the fair name of the Jew, to point out his readiness to make sacrifices for the country of his birth or adoption, to show how in times of war the Jew shed his blood as willingly as his Christian compatriot, Mr. Wolf spent four years of patient and loving work in compiling the material for his work entitled, "The American Jew as a Patriot, Soldier and Citizen". Considering the difficulty of identification, the lists may require rectification; but withal the book has been the standard work on the subject. It is safe to say that, had the author done nothing else in his long and busy life, his fame as a great defender of his race would rest on that work. In these very days, when hundreds of thousands of Jews are found battling in the terrible world war in Europe and Asia and Africa, it would seem as if it meant carrying coal to Newcastle to prove so self-evident a truth concerning the Jew as a soldier and patriot. But at the time of the writing it was the most opportune piece of literature. For while the truth may be known and appreciated by the few who know, the mass of mankind is only too prone to cherish preconceived notions and to condemn from ignorance a loyal body of citizens in our republic. All honor to the author who spared neither time nor energy nor even his private fortune in an undertaking for which Jewry all the world over are beholden to him.

But Simon Wolf's claim to serving the cause of the Jew does not rest here. Other great achievements must be placed to his credit, but as these are intimately interwoven with Simon Wolf's record as a distinguished member and officer of our Order, we take it for granted that our readers know of the valuable services he has rendered the Order. Before, however, we conclude this brief sketch, we cannot do better than quote from a lengthy editorial written ten years ago by the lamented Brother Voorsanger, from which we have culled many of our data, the finely penned words of tribute such as only indeed a life-long friend could have written. "He belongs to the salt of the earth, this man of Israel, this generous apostle of freedom, this proud interpreter of the high duties of citizenship, this champion of human rights, this devoted lover of his own stock, this ardent friend of the persecuted and the downtrodden. Such is Simon Wolf, American Jew par excellence, lawyer, statesman, philanthropist, publicist; a man in a million, whose record is one of duty nobly performed, whose life was spent in service, in self-surrender to ideals of citizenship and humanity; a theorist spurred by dreams of his people's eventual deliverance; an optimist who will never confess defeat; therefore an indomitable champion who gave his life. his time, his energies and all of his fortune to the ideals of his manhood, without ever being doubtful of the issues the historic cause of his people precipitates from time to time in order to bring the conquest of truth and right nearer our own time." And when the brilliant Rabbi and publicist claims that though his is a personal and affectionate relationship to the subject of his panegyric, he has nevertheless sought to record the facts in a remarkable record of good deeds in a manner beyond cavil and criticism, we ten years later can but say that while no man is perfect, we likewise plead guilty to love and veneration for the distinguished octogenarian, we have let the facts speak for themselves, and we fear no contradiction when we say that to the fewest of his contemporaries has it been given to do so much and so well on behalf of truth and humanity, for the cause of the persecuted and harrassed Jew, to the intent that a rightless people might at last be righted, win the inalienable rights of citizenship and equality before the law where they are still denied him, win in particular the good esteem of his fellow-citizens in this land of freedom. "No better American lives on this continent," said President Roosevelt, of this great Jew. Yes, Simon Wolf has shown how the great American and the great Jew may be interwoven in one and the same personality, how the two may indeed form one harmonious and indissoluble unit, a pattern of noble conduct to all of us who cherish the same ambition, to be accounted American in the highest sense the term connotes, and faithful sons of the community of Israel at one and the same time, both in the open, both without reservation.

SCHOLARSHIP PRIZES TO JEWS.

Out of 79 scholarship prizes, including gold and several medals, awarded by the College of the City of New York at its commencement last July, 71 were awarded the Jewish graduates, mostly Russian Jewish boys.

THE KEHILLAH, XXV

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

Mordecai Benet. II.

The weight of personality—I must repeat—is not to be measured by literary activity. Of Mordecai Benet, we possess nothing of lasting value in rabbinic literature. Typical, perhaps, is the fact that among the few publications of his, extant, are "Notes on Mordecai." By the latter title goes a compilation of rabbinic practices from thirteenth century, a book quite commonplace in its day, though of considerable value because of its occasional, one might say unconscious, historic notes. The author, Mordecai Ben Hillel, who lived at Nuremberg, and was martyred in the Rindfleisch persecution, the first caused by a host desecration charge, is the type of the rabbinic author of these days, common in Germany and France. Their highest ambition was to compile reports of ritualistic practices. What kind of notes one could write on such a book, I do not know, not having seen Mordecai Benet's work. In all probability the rabbi was attracted by the fact that the older author was his namesake.

The only literary monument, by which one could to some degree learn something of the author's individuality, is a collection of rabbinical decision. (Responsa). Mordecai Benet did not publish this himself, and it was not until 1862, when the Dayan, Moses Loeb Kohn, of Nikolsburg, published a few of the decisions of the famous rabbi, which he found among the papers of his own father, and to which he added some from the pen of Rabbi Solomon Quetsch, rabbi in Nikolsburg in 1855, and some of his own. Moses Loeb Kohn, the "Rebbe Reb Mosha Loeb," who died May 9, 1890, at the age of sixty-four, was quite well known to me, and as the representative of the old school, surviving into our own day, I expect to devote more space to him later.

Trying to make history intelligible by analogy, I would compare my recollections of Mordecai Benet to those which a student entering the Breslau Seminary now would learn about Zechariah Frankel, the first head of this institution, opened in 1854. Their collection now would, to a reading public forty years hence, undoubtedly furnish valuable information about a distant age. It is certainly significant, that when I came to Nikolsburg, in 1868, the rabbis of the eighteenth century were barely known by name to the general public. Nor was Mordecai Benet's successor, Nahum, or as he was officially called, Nehemias Trebitsch, much spoken of. The memory of the great saint, who had died more than forty years previously, was still very vivid. It must have been in the fall of 1872 that a fire broke out in a stable just outside of the ghetto. It was late on Friday afternoon, and the cry, "Fire!" upset the "Gass." From all sides you could see men running, who had just begun to make themselves ready for the Shabbes, some perhaps with the "Aurum" not washed off their face; women, their skirts rolled up to their knees, just as they were found scrubbing the floors, all in terrible excitement.

It occurs to me that when I use the word "Aurum," I have to explain it. In those days the liberals, who would use a razor for shaving were a rare exception. The majority still used a salve, chiefly composed of lime, with an admixture of a yellow arsenic powder, which turned the lime into a blue salve, that was smeared over their faces, and after being kept a few minutes, was scraped off, taking the hair with it, a sort of tanning process. It must further be added, that in our section of the country the majority of the men were smooth shaven. It was a claim on high standing, especially on learning, when men grew beards. It is perhaps safe to say that this practice was confined to the rabbis. The excitement in a town, where water supply was scarce and the fire extinguishing apparatus limited to an engine that was worked by hand, was only natural, and the approaching Sabbath made it greater. The man whose house was next to the burning stable was a Christian. His house was the first adjoining the ghetto. Neighbors advised him to remove his furniture, but he calmly shook his head. "My house will not burn." he said "it has been blessed by the rabbi." The story was current that Rabbi Mordecai Benet had promised to the owner of this house in his days, that in recognition of a service that he rendered to the Jewish community, his house would never be destroyed by fire. The service consisted in the permission given to erect an Erub pole in front of his house.

This again requires an explanation. According to the rabbinic law, it is prohibited to carry an object on Sabbath from private premises to the street and vice versa. In order to obviate the inconvenience of being unable to carry the "Shalet" from the bakery to the home, the prayerbook from the home to the synagogue, and the like, rabbinic law invented an evasive measure. The owners of all houses made an agreement that they would consider themselves one family, all the members of which had mutual access to each other's homes. A symbol of the agreement, an article of food, was placed in the synagogue, representing what might be called the congregational pantry. It was in our country usually a Matzah, because the Matzos bakery was a congregational monopoly, and its products belong to all members in common. This Matzah solemnly blessed on Passover Eve, renewed every year visibly the contract, that all households of the Kehillah were one. This, however, is not sufficient. It is also necessary that the Jewish quarter be visibly divided from the rest of the city, which ought to be done by a wall. This wall, again, need only be symbolic by placing gates at all the entrances of the ghetto. The gate, again, also needs only be symbolic, consisting of two poles and a wire connecting them on top, so representing the embryo of a telegraph line. Owing to the peculiar location of the houses on one end of the ghetto, it was necessary to place one pole in front of the Christian house, to which the owner objected. The rabbi sent for him, and urged him to give the required permission, promising that this fact would protect his house against fire. Whether this was so or not, cannot be ascertained, but it is an absolute fact, to which I can bear witness, that the owner of that house in 1872, believed it. It is unnecessary to state that the blessing of the rabbi proved effective. The fire was soon under control. The men went home to wash the "Aurum" off their faces, and the women finished their scrubbing. Sabbath was celebrated without any disturbance, and Reb Moshe Loeb reported this miraculous event in the Hebrew paper, "Hamagid," to which he was a frequent contributor. Closely connected with this miracle is another one, which says that the fire engine bought in his time, was also blessed by him with the power that wherever it would appear, the fire would be under control. Whether this was so or not, I am unable to ascertain.

The miraculous powers of the rabbi, however, did not always manifest themselves in benevolent effects. Two neighbors had a dispute over the dividing line of their lots. One, a woman, erected an addition to her home, and her neighbor claimed that she was encroaching upon his property. The courts decided against the claim, but the rabbi insisted that the case be submitted to him. The woman, who had gained her point in court, refused, and the rabbi said: "I am confident she will never see her new home finished." Unconcerned, she left the city to go to Karlsbad, and returned blind. Another punishment, whose exact nature I have forgotten, was visited on a man who called the rabbi a "Hergeloffener" (vagabond), and the son of a divorced woman. Both are very serious insults. In order to understand these terms, one must enter into the psychology of Jews living under the disabilities as they existed up to 1848. The right of residence was such a coveted privilege, that there was little shifting in the population. The oldest son of a family had the right to marry, and he would avail himself of it at the earliest opportunity. As there were always more claimants for that privilege than vacancies, outsiders had little chance of obtaining such a privilege. A native of a city like Nikolsburg, considered himself a patrician. An outsider like Mordecai Benet, who had come from Hungary, was a "Hergeloffener." Similarly, I remember that people in Prague spoke of one who had not the privilege of being a native of Prague, with a feeling of contempt, softened by pity, as a "Draussiger." The other term referred to the fact, or the report, that Mordecai Benet's father, a poor butcher, had deserted his wife. How true this is I do not know, but I remember the following story, which my father told me as he had heard it from our local rabbi, Mordecai Trieschet, 1794-1866, of whom I have made mention previously: Mordecai Trieschet was the son of Abraham Trieschet, rabbi in Weisskirchen, who was a friend of Mordecai Benet and is mentioned in his works as Abraham Reinitz (the Yiddish for Hranice, the Slavic name of the city). As a Bahur, Trieschet lived in Rabbi Benet's house, and was quite close to him. The story that he told was this: One day the rabbi's attendant, Peretz, came in and announced a visitor. The rabbi was busy and declined to receive him. Peretz, who must have been embarrassed, then timidly added, the "Yid" claims he is the rabbi's "Tatte." The rabbi, without interrupting his studies, said, "Take him to the Rebbezin, she will take care of him." I have a certain suspicion about the whole story. It occurs too often. Of Rabbi Meir of Rothenburg (died 1293), the martyr of royal blackmail, who would rather die in prison than allow his friends to claim the ransom demanded by Emperor Rudolf, it is reported that from the day that he became recognized as an illustrious rabbi, he never visited his father. The reason given, is, that according to the law the father had to rise before the son, when the latter was a great scholar, and in the conflict of duties between his filial obligation and his respect for the law, which demanded that the father should show him reverence, he preferred to escape from the dilemma by not calling on his father. Of Moses Sofer, Mordecai Benet's younger contemporary, his own grandson reports the fact that he left his native Frankfort for Mayence, because his father had spoken disrespectfully of his teacher, Nathan Adler (1741-1800), and again in order to avoid the conflict of duties between the respect due to his father and that due to his teacher, he left his father's house. In a highly interesting little book recently published at New York, Isaac Ewen tells us that Baruch Halberstamm, a Hasidic rabbi of Galicia, would not see his father, the famous Wunderrabbi, Hayyim Halberstamm of Sandec (1792-1876), because the latter had put the rival Hasidic family of Sadagora under ban. Might not the whole story be based on the same psychology, which is underlying the report of the gospel (Matthew 12, 47-50), which says that Jesus refused to speak to his mother and brethern because "Whosoever shall do the will of my father, which is in heaven, he is my brother, and sister, and mother"? The latter story again may be merely an exemplification of the doctrine that "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me" (Matthew 10, 37). It is needless to say that the man who insulted the rabbi received condign punishment in accordance to the rabbinic statement that one who insults a rabbi will never find forgiveness (Sabbath 119, b). Similarly Jacob Emden (1796-1876) tells us in his autobiography, that the people who antagonized his father, Zebi Ashkenazi, when he was rabbi of Amsterdam (1710-1714), all ended in misery, for God will forgive an insult offered to him, but never one offered to the expounders of his law.

The historic signficance of Mordecai Benet lies in the fact that he represents the age which fought the desperate battle against the inroads made by secularism into traditional Jewish life. We can see this principle in the stand he took against the proposed establishment of a rabbinical seminary. Austria was then under the rule of the benevolent, but bigoted, Philistine, Francis II. Widely different in character from his uncle, Joseph II, he still pursued the latter's principle of raising the Jews to a higher level of culture in order to make them worthy of better legal treatment. Part of this policy was the desire to give them rabbis possessing secular education. This was to be done by the establishment of a rabbinical seminary. The only rabbis and communities willing to meet the Emperor in this scheme, were those of Italy, especially Isaac Samuel Reggio (1784-1855) of Goerz, now so prominently mentiodned, whose father, Abraham Vita, also rabbi of Goerz, was in correspondence with Mordecai Benet. The rabbis of the two largest communities, Prague and Nikolsburg, opposed it as a step leading to heresy. Naturally Mordecai Benet did not oppose the government directly. He claimed that the preparation in Talmudic studies required so much time that it would be impossible for a candidate to attend a university. Furthermore, it was a sacred tradition, not to ordain an unmarried man, which again would render it impossible to graduate a candidate when he left the university. The result of the movement was indeed that for the Italian possessions of Austria such a seminary was established in Padua in 1829, while Austria had to wait until 1894.

The timid political attitude of the Jews of that period is also seen in Mordecai Benet's action, with regard to the protective policy of the government. Orthodoxy and high tariff seem, indeed, a peculiar combination. Yet such is history. The protectionists in the government offices noticed that Jews spent a large amount of money on importing Hebrew books from abroad. For this purpose a Christian, Anton von Schmid was given the privilege of establishing a Hebrew publishing house in Vienna. This, however, would not be sufficient. In 1803, Wolf Heidenheim, of Roedelheim, a most remarkable scholar, had begun to publish the liturgical books (Siddur and Mahzor) in correct editions with excellent commentaries, and a correct German translation. These books gained quickly great popularity and superseded all other editions. They were copyrighted according to rabbinical law, which the state, however, did not recognize. Anton von Schmid reprinted them, which was not only a case of literary piracy, but also contrary to rabbinical law, as these books were under Herem. The government obtained, however, from Mordecai Benet a declaration that, inasmuch as the publisher was a Christian, and the law of the state not only did not recognize the Herem, but put it under penalty, the books could be used. Moses Sofer took a higher view of the case, stating correctly that while the government does not recognize the rabbinic injunction, it cannot compel us to use books published in defiance of it. Rabbi Benet, however, yielded to political reasons. There was in connection with this publishing firm another difficulty of religious nature. The Pentateuch with Mendelssohn's translation had become very popular. Enterprising publishers in various cities had republished it time and again, completing the work by having all books of the Bible translated and commented upon in Mendelssohn's style. Anton v. Schmid also published such a Bible. For Mordecai Benet this was a heretical enterprise, but the government wanted him to indorse it. So he saved his conscience by omitting in his indorsement every reference to the translation, and merely speaking of the text and its Hebrew commentaries.

A similar attitude of making concessions to the spirit of the time, is found in one of his rabbinic decisions in a case which through centuries shows how easily the most rigidly orthodox compromised with existing conditions. According to Talmudic law, no woman, be she widow, divorced, or single, is permitted to marry unless her youngest child is two years old. The motive of the law is that the mother, on account of her new duties, might neglect the child. All through the later literature we find some decision which compromise with the rigid rabbinic law. Especially is this the case with mothers of illegitimate children. Such a case came before Mordecai Benet. A rabbi, evidently a man of unquestioned orthodoxy and learning, had allowed the mother of an illegitimate child to marry before that child had reached the age of two years. The matter created considerable excitement, and Rabbi Mordecai Benet was appealed to to render a decision. This decision is the exact type of the method satirized in the Purim custom of Pohrlitz, which I reported in these sketches some time ago. It says, if we put it in plain language, the decision was wrong, but since it has been done, we shall let it pass. In technical language, Mordecai Benet says, a decision by a rabbinic authority allows people to act accordingly, and their action, although wrong, is excusable under the plea of ignorance. Furthermore, the marriage once having taken place, divorce is always objectionable, and as climax, he adds, that the laws of the state would consider this marriage as valid, and would not grant a divorce.

PROMINENT JEWS IN AUSTRALIA.

Jews have occupied prominent positions in civic life in Australia. There have been Jewish mayors in nearly all the capital cities, as well as in many of the smaller towns. The late V. L. Solomon was Premier of South Australia and a member of the National Parliament. Sir John Vogel was also Premier, Sir Benjamin Benjamin is Lord Mayor of Melbourne, and there has also been a Jewish mayor at Sydney. One of the most prominent Jews in recent years was the late Joseph Kronheimer, whose charitable work was universally noted. Hon. Justice Isaacs, of the High Court of Australia, formerly Attorney General will one day be Chief Justice. Isaac Jacobs is well known as a scholar and philanthropist. Rev. Dr. Abrahams, senior Rabbi of Melbourne, is one of the leading citizens of the commonwealth. General Monash has command of a portion of the Australian expeditionary force at the front. Justice Cohen, of the New South Wales Supreme Court, is an active worker in communal affairs. Others are Dan Levy, Member of Parliament of New South Wales; Rabbi Jacob Danglow, Rev. Dr. Boas, of Adelaide, and a great number of Jewish instructors in the universities of Australia.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, August 16, 1916.

The great question of the day, so far as Anglo-Jewry is concerned, is the treatment of the Russian Jews in England at the present juncture. To begin with, it should be clearly understood that Jews are affected not specifically as Jews, but as non-British citizens residing in this country. They are part of a larger problem, which in outline is simple enough to understand. There are in this country a large number of aliens, that is, citizens of other states, now as always. In normal times no distinction whatever is drawn betwen them. But these are not normal times, and the war conditions have brought about a three-fold division of aliens in England. There are, first, the subjects of neutral countries. Virtually they are in the same position as before the war. Secondly, there are the subjects of countries at war with England. These are specially treated. Finally, there are the subjects of England's allies, which for practical purposes include Belgians, Italians, French and Russians.

The first three categories have all been summoned to join the colors in their respective lands. The Russians, for many reasons, have not; and a suggestion was made recently that Russian subjects should serve in one or other of the allied armies. That suggestion involved a large number of Jews living in France and England, and a situation was created that required great consideration. In France, so precious is the right of asylum held to be, that, in view of the fact that practically all, certainly a preponderating proportion, of the Russian Jews resident there were political refugees, it was decided by the Government to take no action in the matter, and Russians of all classes, and therefore Russian Jews in particular, are not subject to military service in France. The French are always logical.

But the English are practical, and the different type of mind sees things from a different angle. In England it was decided to enlist in the British army Russian subjects (which meant Jews to the extent of at least 90 per cent of the whole number of Russian citizens in England, if not more). At first it was by voluntary enlistment. But though special machinery was set up in the Jewish Recruiting Committee, of which Major Lionel de Rothschild was the moving spirit, the results of voluntary enlistment were not large. So all Russian aliens of military age were given the option of joining the British army or being sent back to Russia. The irony of it all was that the Cabinet Minister, to whose lot it fell to make this pronouncement, is himself a Jew.

At once a critical situation was created among Russian Jews in England, and the mere thought of deportation to Russia brought up feelings that are better left to the imagination. But calmer counsel prevailed before long, and the discussions in the House of Commons brought out the fact that there was no intention of wholesale repatriation, that every case would receive sympathetic treatment, and that there was every desire to be reasonable. A tribunal was to be set up, of which Jews would be members, to hear applications from Russian Jews for exemption from military service. Of course, the basic pronouncement still held good: there would have to be service in the army for those of military age. But the Russian subjects would be given precisely the same treatment as English subjects were receiving.

The problem that was thus created was looked upon from two points of vision. The authorities held that like the nationals of other allies, the Russian subjects should serve in some army, and the option of enrolment in the British army was given to them as a convenient way out of the difficulty. Again, it was argued, if Englishmen had been compelled to leave their ordinary avocations in order to help the country in its need, it was only fair to mete out similar treatment to the citizens of an allied power, who if they had remained in their own land would have had to serve there. Besides, these people shared in the financial burden of the war, why should they not also share in its personal burden? Finally, it was feared that popular discontent might be engendered if Englishmen went to the front and aliens stepped into their shoes at home.

But there was another side to all this. In the first place, the Russians were not British subjects, and some people questioned whether non-British subjects could be taken into the British army. To this objection an answer was at once forthcoming. It was stated that those who enlisted should automatically become British subjects when the war is over. Thereupon the claim was set up that they should be made British subjects on their joining the colors, and this request has been very sympathetically received by the authorities. As for the suggestion that Russian Jews would step into the positions of Englishmen gone to the front, it is pointed out that Russian Jews are engaged largely in industries of their own creation, such as tailoring, cap-making, joinering, and so forth, and a moment's thought will show that they would be hardly likely to leave these occupations for those of others. But even so, several important newspapers took up the attitude that the Government's intention was contrary to the established principle of giving hospitality in this country to the oppressed.

The pity of it is that the scheme for compulsory enlistment in the army was accompanied by a threat of deportation. No doubt it was an error of judgment. But there can be no doubt also that the threat will not be carried out without giving each individual concerned a proper hearing and fair consideration. It may be regarded as a bark, not as a bite, deplorable though it be. It is still more deplorable, however, that the responsible leaders of a Jewish body should have given the threat their blessing. We refer to the Jewish Board of Deputies, the executive of which placed a resolution before the Board (a) that it was right for Russian Jews to be compelled to serve in the British army, and (b) that it is right to deport them if they refused. It is a little difficult to understand the mentality of any Jew who knows what Jews suffer in Russia who would subscribe to (b). Yet the President of the Board of Deputies and his advisers thought fit to insult the Board by placing such a resolution before the members. Even a worm will turn. Even the Board of Deputies made it quite clear that section (b) of the resolution was too much for it. Did we say the Board? No, not the Board, but a good, influential majority. The discussion of the resolution showed pretty plainly that the President and his officers had made a mistake. This they quickly realized, and a hasty conference of the leaders resulted in the withdrawal of section (b) of the resolution. But that they should have put forward such a proposal is proof positive that they are essentially unfitted to act as leaders of thought and action in Anglo-Jewry.

If the double-edged resolution of the Board of Deputies tended to make people disgusted with the Board, the debates on the subject in the British Parliament were eminently cheering. Our readers will by this time have been informed of the magnificent expression of feeling about the Jews of the Earl of Loreburn, a former Lord Chancellor of England, in the House of Lords. But in the Commons, too, speeches are on record in Hansard which will be read by every Jew with feelings of gratitude. The important thing to remember, however, is that it was in the British Legislature that such sentiments could be made and listened to with sympathy. In these troubled times it is well to ponder on the significance of this fact. In no other Parliament in the world, that of the United States alone excepted, would it have been possible for the Jews to have been spoken about as they were in the upper and lower houses of the British Parliament. All the world knows that Jews have been treated inexcusably badly in Russia. All the world hopes that when the war is over and political life is re-arranged on sounder principles of social justice. the lot of the Jews in Russia will improve.

At the present time there are two Jewish Cabinet Ministers in England. Mr. Herbert Samuel's appointment as Home Secretary has already been noted in this column; Mr. Edwin Montagu's as Minister of Munitions was gazetted only recently. The Ministry of Munitions is not the least important of the Government departments just now, and if the choice of the Prime Minister has fallen upon Mr. Montagu, it was only because in his judgment Mr. Montagu was an English citizen who could serve the country's cause best. That that English citizen happened also to be a Jew was of no consequence in this particular question.

Of general news in the community there is little to tell. At present we are marking time as a community. No new movements rise up in our midst, and even the old movements are just kept going. How should it be otherwise? No doubt when peace returns there will come a change. The only matter of interest worth noting is that no less than two volumes of essays setting forth the aims and ideals of Zionist aspiration have appeared in this country, and have been received sympathetically in the world of thought. Among others no less an authority than Earl Cromer treated the problems as serious. Books of this sort tend in the long run to give the world a better appreciation of the Jew, and any result in that direction is all to the good.

Slowly and surely the Lodge in London is increasing its membership, and getting ready for the time when peace returns, when there will be so much to do. At present, preparedness is needful above all else, and the Lodge is preparing to contribute its share to the work of rebuilding after the war A careful consideration of problems, a survey of possible solutions, the gathering of useful information that bears on the problem—the Lodge is not unmindful of all these things. And for one other matter we are grateful. At its last meeting before the recess, the Lodge listened to an address by Mr. Jabotinsky, in which he elaborated his view of forming the Russian Jews into a special unit for fighting in Egypt. It was a view wholly unacceptable to a number of brethren. But Mr. Jabotinsky was given an opportunity of expressing his views before a Jewish body. As he himself put it, it was the only opportunity of the kind that he had had. That is. all to the good. The Lodge should provide a platform for all views on Jewish questions, and all Jews in London, whether English born or visitors, should realize that if they have to say anything of interest about Jews, they will find a platform in the Lodge. The Lodge may disagree, it may condemn, it may criticize. But it will always listen with respect. The occasion of Mr. Jabotinsky's address was therefore of historic interest in the history of the Lodge. Brother Rowson, our President, deserves the thanks of the brethren for this policy.

READING MADE VISCOUNT.

Highest Rank Ever Attained by an English Jew.

The conferment of viscounty on Lord Reading raises him to the highest rank ever attained by an English Jew. Previously none had ever risen above a barony. The first English Jew to be raised to the peerage was the late Lord Rothschild, whose father, Baron Lionel de Rothschild, was the first Jew to gain election to the House of Commons.

Lord Reading advances yet another step on his brilliant career by the dignity of a viscounty bestowed on him by his majesty. The rapidity of his promotion and the uniformity of his success form one of the romances of the English bar. Prior to 1910 he was known as a successful barrister, with a seat in parliament, but in March of that year he was appointed solicitor-general, and a few months later succeeded to the senior office of attorney-general. In 1912 he joined the cabinet, and the following year, on the retirement of the late Lord Alverstone, became lord chief justice of England. Honors followed rapidly on each other. He has rendered valuable service to the government at the treasury since the outbreak of the war, and was largely responsible for the successful placing of the English loan in America last year.

Quite a number of other Jews figure in the birthday honors list. Among them is the knighthood conferred upon Alexander W. Prince, the dignity of privy councillor granted to Sir Harry S. Samuel, M. P. In addition note must be taken of the military honors conferred in the birthday list. Colonel Leverson became a companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George; Captain E. H. S. Beddington becomes brevet-major. One Jew receives the military cross; two Jews receive the D. C. M., and three the military medal, and another, Major Jacob Waley Cohen, the D. S. O.

CHRISTIAN ACTION AGAINST A RUSSIAN-JEWISH BOYCOTT.

As a result of a boycott undertaken by the anti-Semite Press of Rostov-on-Don against the Jewish lawyers, the local leading Christian advocates approached the police, requesting them to suppress the agitation, which might lead to deplorable results.

B'NAI B'RITH ACTIVITY IN BEHALF OF JEWISH PRISONERS.

A special committee of the Philadelphia B'nai B'rith lodges having in charge the matter of Jewish prisoners has issued its first annual report.

About two years ago, at the suggestion of Joshua Lodge No. 23, and the Y. M. H. A., the question of what was being done for Jewish prisoners in the various penal institutions in and about Philadelphia was taken up for consideration. Mr. William Morris, prominent member of the lodge also of the Pennsylvania Prisoners' Societies' Visiting Committee, clearly set forth what the situation actually was. A committee was appointed to take steps to remedy conditions. This committee was later augmented by three members of Har Sinai Lodge and more recently by three members of Lincoln Lodge.

Upon investigation, the committee found that many of the families of the men in prison were destitute and required help. The men themselves were, upon their release, in need of assistance. A further pressing need was a spiritual adviser for the Jewish prisoners. As a result of the efforts of the committee, the services of Rabbi W. P. Kotkov were secured to conduct services on Saturday mornings for the Jewish prisoners at the Eastern penitentiary.

Speaking of the work done Mr. Levinson says: "What we have aimed for is to make the lot of the prisoners easier, while in the institution, and to reclaim them after they are set at liberty. Since two of the members of our committee are on the Pennsylvania Prison Society's Visiting Committee, we are able to keep in touch with the men, to discover their wants and desires, and to satisfy these whenever feasible.

"Members of this committee have secured the release of Jewish prisoners, when they were deemed worthy of help, and work has been obtained for them. Care has been taken that the men (and one woman) should be located in places where their past records were unknown. Given a fair chance, the usual result has been that the ex-convict has made good, and is now leading a steady, sober and moral life.

"One great difficulty has been encountered. Money is needed to carry on the work. When the Kehillah declared itself incapable of further continuing to pay the salary of the Rabbi, our committee secured the funds necessary from the B'nai B'rith.

"While I think that the B'nai B'rith should contribute liberally to establish the work on a firm foundation in this city, I feel that the matter is one for the whole community. I see no reason why the various other Jewish fraternal orders and the congregations of this city should not do as the Mikveh Israel Congregation already has done, to-wit: contribute financial support and co-operation. The time cannot be far off when the Jews of our community will recognize the value of the prison aid work that can and should be accomplished with their aid among our brethren; and the sooner they do so the better."

RUSSIA TO ABOLISH PALE.

The correspondent of the United Press at Petrograd reports that a bill to abolish the Pale and accord to the Jews the same rights as other inhabitants of Russia will be introduced in the Duma at its session November next. Prof. Paul Miliukop is quoted as the authority for this announcement. The bill will contain three important parts. The first will deal with the removal of the Pale; the second will have for its object the abolishing of the restrictions and limitations with reference to the educational institutions, and the third will remove all limitations in existence with reference to Jews choosing certain professions or embarking in certain trades.

We are told that no tool can be greater than its inventor. Certainly no song is greater than its composer, no poem greater than its author, nor any law greater than its promulgator. If the Ten Commandments are still the greatest code of laws, they show Moses—their inspirer, even if not their actual author—the master mind who passed laws that not only held mankind to the restraints of morality, but also bind it, with chains of love, to the Spirit of all life, to our God and Father.

To keep their remembrance fresh in the mind of the coming generations, the Pharaohs erected colossal pyramids. But, when these will crumble into dust, and their place will no longer be recognizable in the desert sands. the work of the Master-builder, Moses, will endure as the greatest monument of the aspiring spirit of man.

Anti-Defamation League

During the summer months the Anti-Defamation League has concentrated its attention upon the practice of certain summer resorts in including in their printed prospectuses, statements like the following:

"We do not seek Hebrew patronage."
"No consumptives or dogs."
"Jews not desired."
"Exclusive patronage—no Jews."
"No Hebrew or tubercular guests received."
"We positively do not solicit the patronage of Hebrews."
"Hebrews, consumptives and dogs not solicited."
"Adverse to association with Hebrews."
"We do not cater to Hebrews. Spoiled children not wanted. Dogs not desired."

To those not familiar with summer resort literature, the above may seem to be exaggerations, but the League is prepared to submit to anyone sufficiently interested, advertising pamphlets from which the above statements have been quoted verbatim. It seems strange that in this country of fairness and freedom, such bitter and unjust insinuations are permitted to be spread broadcast throughout the country. In every railroad station, hotel lobby, tourists agency office and travel bureau, the League Committees found dozens of circulars advertising summer resorts containing slanders of the Jew and Jewish character as insidious as may be found in the most bigoted journals of Russia.

The League has not attempted to force any hotel to receive Jews, but it has made a strenuous protest against the custom of certain hotels in printing statements such as appear above. And why, it may be asked, does the League object so strenuously? Is not a statement of this kind a reflection upon the intelligence of the owner of the hotel and will not the non-Jewish reader duly consider the narrow bigotry which inspires such a policy? If this were indeed the case, there would be no need for the League to concern itself. But the trouble is, that most non-Jews do not understand the motives inspiring the management of the hotel.

Nearly a year ago the League drafted an amendment to the United States Postal Laws which would effectively stop sending through the mails advertising material containing statements such as those set forth above. Pending action by Congress on this amendment, the League early in the summer sent out the following letter to all the members of its Executive Committee throughout the country:

"Chicago, July 8, 1916.

Dear Sir and Brother:

At this season of the year we are receiving numerous circulars issued by hotels, which contain the statement that the hotel in question does not accommodate Jewish guests. The League has never attempted to force any such hotel to take Jews. We have, however, consistently fought the advertisement by the hotel of such a policy, because the non-Jewish public is apt to get the impression from such advertising, that the Jew must be a most undesirable citizen. We know, of course, that this policy is due very largely to the bigotry of a certain class of people and the desire of the hotel management to cater to that class.

These hotel circulars are usually placed on display in hotels, railroad stations, ticket offices, tourist agencies, etc., and are always to be found in places patronized by tourists. There are undoubtedly many places in your city where hotel circulars are on display. May we request that you make an investigation, and if you find any circular or advertisement containing objectionable language, that you advise us at once, enclosing copies of the circular? May we suggest also that you take the matter up with the persons directly responsible for their local distribution and persuade them not to permit these circulars to be distributed from their offices? We believe that if you could also persuade these persons to write to the hotel in question, explaining why they must refuse to display these circulars and stating that if the objectionable language is deleted, distribution will be resumed, that a big step forward will be taken in ultimately driving out this form of malicious defamation.

As this is a matter that should be acted on promptly, we hope that we may have an early response from you.

Fraternally yours,
MANAGING BOARD,
Secretary."

Replies to this communication were [illegible] both discouraging and encouraging — discouraging, because they brought forth numerous circulars which had not previously been referred to the League — encouraging, because they showed the almost universal spirit of co-operation among our members and indicated the powerful influence which the League can exercise in shaping public opinion. Letters were sent to the Jewish newspapers, which inspired strong editorials supporting the League's campaign. In each instance where an obnoxious statement was brought to the notice of the League, a letter was mailed to the manager of the hotel, calling his attention to the injustice committed against two million law-abiding citizens of this country by his thoughtless act. The following is a typical letter and reply:

"July 19, 1916.

Dear Sir:

Our attention has been called to an advertising folder issued by you, which contains the following statement:

'Hebrews and consumptives not admitted.'

While the Anti-Defamation League may agree that there may be business reasons that prompt hotel owners not to welcome Jewish patrons, due to the bigotry of certain of their non-Jewish guests, the League must strenuously protest against the manner in which that policy is advertised to the world. The League has reason to believe that hotel owners personally entertain no such prejudice; that as a class, they are among the most liberal-minded men in the country and that they realize that the percentage of undesirable Jews is no greater than that of undesirable non-Jews.

We have no inclination to attempt to influence any hotel to accept Jews as guests. We have, however, consistently opposed advertisements which publicly advertise the fact that the hotel in question does not desire Jewish guests. We believe, that after thinking this matter over, you will agree that we are justified in such an attitude.

The great harm in advertising of this sort lies in the false conception it spreads concerning Jews as a class of citizens. You can readily appreciate what effect your statement may have upon those who have never come in contact with Jews and have little knowledge of them. You must also admit that such a statement falling into the hands of one who is already antipathetic, can only deepen his prejudice against the Jews. Others, who are easily influenced by the printed word, must come to the conclusion that if hotels class Jews with consumptives and dogs as undesirables, that there must indeed be a good reason for such discrimination. The notice which your folder contains, simply adds fuel to a fire which may endanger unjustly the much larger number who are wholly innocent of wrong-doing. It is because of this harmful effect upon those who are already prejudiced, or who may be easily prejudiced, that the League appeals to you and other fair-minded hotel owners to desist from including such statements in their folders—statements which, when judged from the point of view of their reaction, are extremely injurious and defamatory. It is wholly wrong to circulate an impression that all Jews are unworthy of association with non-Jews. We are sure that you do not think so, and in the spirit of that broad Americanism which teaches men to judge their fellow-men upon their merits, irrespective of their creed, we appeal to your sense of justice and fairness and ask that you refrain hereafter from printing and circulating such a statement.

Hoping that you will give this matter your serious and careful consideration and that we may be favored with an early response, we are,

Respectfully yours,
MANAGING BOARD,
Secretary."

"July 25, 1916."

Dear Sir:

Your letter of July 19th at hand. Will say in reply that I have never given this matter any serious thought. I entertain no prejudice against the Jew, for there are good and bad among all classes. I wish to assure you and the League that from now on my advertising folders will be entirely free from any such statements such as you mention.

Very respectfully,"

The above letters indicate what can be done in a small way in this manner. A much wider program has however been mapped out, including a legislative campaign throughout the country. During the coming winter, the League will attempt to secure the passage of a law in every State Legislature modeled upon the statute now in force in the State of New York, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person or corporation to issue any circular or advertising matter which is likely to arouse prejudice against any class of people because of their race or religion. It is hoped that the League will be successful in its efforts along this line and that before another summer has come an effective means will have been secured to fight this most insidious evil.

SALONIKI OF THE JEWS.

By GEORGE RENWICK.

After six months Saloniki remains, to those whom the war has brought here, a city of mystery and fascination. Most war visitors know the European quarter, where are the cafes, hotels and restaurants. They have explored the lower end of the chief street—Venizelos street—with its shops offering everything at exorbitant prices. But it is beyond those places that the real undiscovered Saloniki lies, a city the extraordinary history of which has few equals in the world.

The story of Saloniki is a tale of tragedy. Since the middle of the sixteenth century there have been eighteen serious visitations of plague and cholera; thirteen times in the same period the city has been wholly or partially burned down; on seven occasions earthquakes have laid Saloniki more less waste. Down the ages of her history she has known masters from nearly every Old World clime; from nearly every sea corsairs have come hither to pillage. She has drunk to the very lees of the cup of bitterness; she has been the apple of discord among many races. Hellenic, Roman, Byzantine, Norman, Frank, Lombard, Venetian and Turkish has Saloniki been, and now is under Greek sway—with a Turkish Mayor! Are the storms of history over?

Saloniki is a city of sharp contrasts and curious contradictions. The capital of Macedonia, she is not Macedonian. Her hinterland is populated by Vlaks, Albanians, Slavs, Bulgars, Greeks and Turks. She herself harbors Jews, Greeks, Neunmehs (Jews converted to Islamism, speaking, mostly, Turkish). Turks, Bulgars, gypsies, Italians, French, Germans, Albanians, Armenians, Hungarians. So here is an extraordinary museum not only of languages, but of races and religions.

About half the population—consisting of Spanish Jews—speak the Spanish of the time of Columbus, with, of course, many borrowed words, mainly from Turkish and Greek; that Spanish is written mostly in Hebrew characters. The Jewish aristocracy uses Italian. French is the language of the larger shops, the cafes and restaurants, as well as of the upper business world. The petty trader speaks Bulgarian, Turkish and Greek. In the port one mostly hears English and Italian. The cab drivers prefer Turkish or Spanish. And the Esperanto used by this mixture of peoples is Castilian—used by the Turkish carrier, the Greek waiter and the gypsy bootblack when in doubt as to the nationality of a customer.

Saloniki is, more than anything else, a Jewish town. The Jews inhabit the center and part of the suburbs. At the last census they formed 56 per cent of the population, while the other races have planted themselves in "quartiers" round about. The city was Greek in reality, as well as in language, until the fifteenth century, when the inrush of Jews from the Spain of Ferdinand and Isabella took place. In 1431 it passed under Turkish rule, and then gradually became Latin in thought and Jewish in culture. The Jews certainly brought prosperity with them, making the place a little bit of Spain and an outpost of Judaism. Still, everywhere one hears the Spanish of the time of Columbus, and, indeed, did the great explorer come to life again, he would find in Saloniki a city bearing not a little resemblance, in population and language, to the Toledo of his day.

The Spanish refugees were rich and cultured; they had relationships with all the most important parts of Europe, and that was the reason for the great development of trade once the Jewish colony became fixed and numerous.

ITALIAN JEWS PETITION DUMA DEPUTIES.

On the occasion of the visit of many of the most prominent Duma deputies to Italy, the representatives of the Italian Jewish community handed to them a petition in which they implore them to intercede in behalf of the Jews in Russia and to carry out in the Duma laws for equal rights of the Jews in the Russian empire. M. Protopopov, the vice-president of the Duma and the head of the delegation, replied in a courteous note expressing the sympathy of the Russian people for the suffering Jews. He did not, however, give any hope for a change in the status of the Jews in Russia.

WORDS SPOKEN AT THE FUNERAL OF MARTIN A. MARKS, SEPT. 3, 1916, BY BRO. S. WOLFENSTEIN.

Since I received the sad news of the demise of our friend and brother, I have been living like in a dream. It appears to me impossible to realize, that Martin A. Marks should not be any more among the living. I do not know of another man in our community whose presence in our midst has been as essential as was the life of Bro. Marks.

Called upon to officiate at this so extremely sad occasion and wanting to eulogize my departed brother, I do not know where to begin and where to end.

He was a very young man when I first met him, some forty years ago, in a B'nai B'rith convention. The impression which he then made upon me remained with me during all these years of our friendship and co-operation in the various fields of our [illegible]

Here was a young man, born and reared in a small town of the state of Indiana—a state which he loved dearly—a young American, an American through and through—and to my surprise—a Jew, a thoroughbred Jew—a Jew to the core.

Martin Marks was a great Jew! A Jew of the type of whom the Scriptures said: "Seeking the good of his people and speaking peace to all mankind." (Esther 10:3). He was one of the sons of our people, whose names are recorded among our heroes or among the martyrs of our faith. Do I need to tell Cleveland Jews what Martin Marks had been to our Jewish community during these last 25 or 30 years?

In the congregations, in the fraternities, in the charities, in anything and everything of Jewish affairs, he was the moving spirit, our leader, our guide, whom we followed willingly, relying upon his forethought, his wisdom, his sincerity, his endurance, and above all, his pure motives.

Martin Marks was thoroughly imbued with the spirit and the words of the great mission with which the first Jew, our Patriarch Abraham, went forth upon the pilgrimage of his life. He was told: "Be thou a blessing!" This was the motto, the watchword of his life. "Be thou a blessing!" In pursuance of this motto our departed friend became a great Jew, a great man, a great citizen. When he made Cleveland his home. he devoted his gifts, his faculties, his genius as for his business and as for coreligionists, equally so for all his fellow citizens. He became a blessing, indeed, for our entire community. Rightly said yesterday one of our daily papers in a leader devoted to his memory:

"Martin A. Marks was a highly useful citizen whom Cleveland could ill afford to lose, whose counsel was often sought and never denied. His activities will ever remain a civic asset for many years to come."

He never held a public office with which was connected a salary. He preferred to remain a private citizen, devoting his faculties, his time and means to the common welfare of all his fellow citizens.

The greatest pride of the Jew has been always and still is his family life. His family was the sanctuary, the holy of holies of our departed friend and brother.

I would not dare to offer a word of comfort to the heartbroken widow, to the grief-stricken children. It would be a sacrilege to do so. Time alone can heal their wound, their sorrow and grief.

Let me say to you, my dear friends. but one word. The man whose loss you bewail and with you, we all, was a good. faithful and in God abiding Jew. He left to you a costly and most precious heritage. A grand name! A name which we extolled in praises all through the length and the breadth of this, our wide land. Let us be grateful to our Heavenly Father for this life with which He has blessed you and all of us. Adonoy noson. God has given to you and preserved for you and all mankind such a rare life, distinguished by greatness and goodness, "w'adonoy lokakh" and God has taken this life from its earthly surroundings to plant it into the life of the immortal spirits, "yehi shem adonoy m'worokh."

Praised be the name of the Most High into all eternity. Amen.

JEWISH GENERAL HONORED.

Brigadier General Camille Levy, of the French army, who was a colonel at the beginning of the war and had since been placed at the head of a division, has been mentioned for the fifth time in Army Orders. He thus holds the War Cross with five bars.

FIRST JEW IN QUEBEC PARLIAMENT.

Peter Bercovitch, K. C., a prominent attorney in Montreal and an active Ben B'rith, has been elected by a large majority, as member of the St. Louis Division to the Quebec Legislature. He is the first Jew to be elected to that body.

B'NAI B'RITH OF GERMANY

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 8 met in Berlin, on April 11, 1916, at the residence of Brother Timendorfer, President of the District.

Brother Timendorfer, in opening the meeting, explained why the conference which the officers of the Grand Lodge for Germany had expected to hold with the American ambassador to Constantinople, Brother Morgenthau, did not take place. He read a letter from Brother Morgenthau in which he informed the Grand Lodge that on account of a great pressure of business he would not be able to attend the conference while passing through Berlin on his way to the United States.

Brother Timendorfer emphasized the fact with special satisfaction that the last meeting of the General Committee was well prepared. All those brethren who had been entrusted with reporting subjects for deliberation, had sent in complete reports. Several resolutions passed at that meeting, however, did not prove satisfactory, and this fact induced him to suggest that a general meeting of the Grand Lodge should be called during the war. The resolutions were the following:

The resolution to abandon the stripe on the nurses' cap bearing the B'nai B'rith insignia; the resolution concerning the war tax and the accentuation that the Grand Lodge is only an administrative organization.

Concerning the first resolution it must be understood that it was passed by the small majority of 12 against 10 votes. In a matter of such great importance it is customary in the Order not to rely on such a small majority. The very fact that the minority was so strong in numbers should have caused the brethren to postpone action on the question.

Regarding the war tax, Brother Timendorfer was inclined to favor the standpoint of those brethren who were of the opinion that the General Committee was not the proper body to adopt such a resolution. But the funds of the Grand Lodge must be strengthened in some way, because the extraordinary times result also in extraordinary demands upon the Grand Lodge. The brethren of the General Committee and also the lodges wish that the Grand Lodge shall be represented in all aid organizations. These organizations expect of the Grand Lodge not only to fill the official positions as it is generally asserted, but they also ask for pecuniary participation.

Touching the third point, the President expressed his astonishment that in spite of the previous deliberations of the subject, attempts are still being made to greatly restrict the functions of the Grand Lodge. If the Grand Lodge is only an administrative organization then it is also not entitled to participate in the work of the aid organizations, especially not in such a prominent position. The necessity of leaving the decision in important questions to the General Committee, has been repeatedly emphasized.

In spite of these three important points, the President is willing not to insist upon the carrying out of his suggestion to call a general meeting of the Grand Lodge, because he cannot assume the responsibility for such a vast undertaking, but he requested the meeting to offer propositions in regard to the first point.

After a lengthy debate it was decided that the question of the B'nai B'rith insignia upon the nurses' caps shall be reconsidered on account of the great minority of the General Committee, which favored their retention, and especially in consideration of the fact that the resolution to abandon the insignia caused much dissatisfaction among the members of the committee on nurses, as manifested by letters which reached Brother Timendorfer.

The carrying out of the resolution of the General Committee regarding the costume of the nurses was deferred.

Brother Timendorfer called the attention of the Executive Committee to a number of letters and reports which Brother Dr. Stern of Bucharest had sent to him and to Brother Dr. Nathan about his work concerning the Jewish question in Roumania, and the Executive Committee decided not to take up this matter, as it is of a political character, and for that reason cannot be considered according to the laws of the District Grand Lodge.

Stuttgart Lodge of Stuttgart manifested its opposition to a war tax, even before the General Committee deliberated upon this question; it not only sent a resolution against it to the Grand Lodge but it also communicated it to the rest of the lodges. The question was raised whether a lodge has the right to agitate a question in sister lodges before the General Committee has taken a positive stand on such a question. Brother Kuznitzky, to whom the legal side of the question was referred for decision, pointed out paragraph 7 of the "General Laws of the Lodges," in which it is plainly stated:

> "The lodges have the right to approach each other in direct communication concerning lodge affairs."

But Brother Kuznitzky stated that whether a lodge can exercise this right in an agitating manner against the wish of the Grand Lodge is a different question. The Executive Committee resolved to demand of Stuttgart Lodge a copy of the letter to the lodges which had accompanied its resolution.

It was resolved to continue to watch the eastern Jewish question and to publish articles on this subject written by members who have made a special study of it.

Extra copies of the supplement for Women, printed in connection with the Monthly Reports of the Grand Lodge, will be sent to the wives and widows of members for which each lodge will pay according to the number of copies it orders of the extra supplements.

The appeal of the Grand Lodge for contributions to cover the deficit of 2,000 Marks of the Soldiers' Home in Metz, brought not only the needed sum, but also a surplus of 1500 Marks.

On April 27, 1916, another meeting of the Executive Committee was held in Berlin.

The presiding officer, Brother President Timendorfer, opened the meeting and paid a warm tribute to the memory of Brother Dr. Frank, Ex-President of Henry Jones Lodge, who died suddenly.

Brother Timendorfer reported that Professor Count Bandissin has already retired from the Prize Commission of the Moritz Manheimer foundation and that Privy Counsellor Foerster has taken his place, with the consent of the Rector Magnificus of the Berlin University.

The theme for this year's prize of the Moritz Manheimer foundation reads:

> "What rules of conduct will the individual have to follow, after peace, for which we hope, will be concluded, in order to contribute by his own share in the international intercourse, to the manifestation of the value of the principles of justice, humanity and toleration?"

In compliance with a resolution adopted at a previous meeting of the Executive Committee, Brother Dr. Elbogen was intrusted with the work of reporting regularly to the "B'nai B'rith News." The cost of preparing English translations of articles and of making manifold copies of the same will for the present be born by the Grand Lodge.

Stuttgart Lodge complied with the resolution passed at the previous meeting of the General Committe and sent a copy of its letter to the lodges which had accompanied its resolution against the war tax. The Executive Committee could find nothing objectionable in it.

One hundred marks were appropriated for the Central Organization for the Care of Youths.

The sum of 3,581.50 marks was ordered to be paid, as a contribution of the Grand Lodge, to the General Archive of the German Jews.

The question of establishing some lodges, or societies similar to lodges in Russian Poland, called forth long deliberation, but no action was taken.

Brothers ex-Presidents Dr. Abraham Emil and Dr. Joseph Hirsch have donated, on account of the death of their mother, 500 marks to the Grand Lodge for general welfare purposes, 500 marks to the sister organization and 500 marks to the Hospital Train.

On the occasion of the 26th trip of the Hospital Train, when Brother ex-President Dr. Zimmerman entered upon his duties as leading physician of the train, Fraternitas Lodge of Dresden donated in his honor 300 marks for friendly gifts.

In response to the appeal of the Grand Lodge in favor of the suffering Jews in the district of Lodz and in West Galicia, the Grand Lodge received until the middle of April, 98 boxes, 85 of which were from lodges and sister societies, 92 sacks and packages, 89 of which came from lodges and sister societies. A total of 9000 marks in cash was also received. 260 marks were donated besides, especially for West Galicia. Denmark Lodge of Copenhagen, participated in these donations with 9 boxes of clothing and linens and a sum of 1,296.60 Marks in cash.

The Lodge rooms of Julius Plotke Lodge of Kaiserslautern have been arranged as a soldiers' home in which the Jewish soldiers of the local garrison as well as the convalescent soldiers of the hospitals gather in large numbers at stated periods.

HOLY DAY SERVICES AT THE BORDER.

By arrangement of the War Office, Rabbi Isaac Landman, Secretary of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, has left for Fort Bliss, Texas, to organize religious services for the soldiers of the Jewish Faith, both in the regular army and militia, now encamped on the border, for Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur and Succoth. Secretary Baker of the War Office is heartily in accord with the work undertaken by the Conference and has given letters and credentials to Rabbi Landman instructing the commanding officers to afford him every facility necessary for this work.

The negotiations with Secretary Baker were conducted by the President of the Conference, Dr. William Rosenau, of Baltimore, with the co-operation of Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, of Chicago, and Dr. Abram Simon and Mr. Gus Karger, of Washington, D. C. By vote of the Executive Committee of the Conference, the Administration Committee had been instructed to publish a special ritual to be used at these services.

Included in the instructions of Secretary Baker to the commanding officers on the border is that permission and facilities be furnished the soldiers at outlying points to travel to the nearest centre where services may be arranged.

Although Rabbi Landman had planned for a complete rest of one year, beginning with September 1, he was, nevertheless, prevailed upon by Drs. Rosenau and Hirsch to undertake this important task.

POGROMS IN RUSSIA.

The Rotterdamshe "Courant" prints a long article about the pogrom agitations in Russia. It says among other things: "Not less than 2,000 official documents inciting the people to pogroms upon the Jews, have been issued during the war. Only a small, unimportant number of these documents have reached the outside press. All the other bloody documents have not yet been disclosed because the censor does not allow them to get through. Through this, one gets the impression that the Russian Government is waging the war more against the Jews than against the Germans."

The Rotterdam paper concludes this long article with the remark that the only hope of the Russian Jews is that their brethren in America will do all in their power not to allow them to be murdered and their property to be plundered.

THE QUEEN OF RUMANIA AND THE JEWS.

The Queen of Rumania recently gave a substantial donation for the benefit of Jews at Jassy. Her Majesty also visited the Jewish educational and philanthropic institutions in that city. Subsequently the Queen was photographed together with the members of the Jewish Charitable Committee. The Queen, it may be recalled, is a daughter of the late Duke of Edinburgh.

News from Berlin

Wilna, in consequence of hunger, the rate of mortality among children was increasing in a devastating manner, and the Grand Lodge furnished the means for the establishment of a free milk station under the management of an experienced children's physician from Berlin, who was there as a soldier. But of greater importance are the attempts to re-establish existences by obtaining opportunities for work in Germany or by granting credits to tradesmen. So a loan fund was established in Warsaw, as well as in other places, which is being managed by local brethren, led by ex-President Brother Dr. Ludwig Haas, a member of Parliament, who is attached to the civil government of Poland as a referee for Jewish affairs. But not a week passes where no new cases of distress are made known and new motions for help are being made, all of which can naturally not be complied with.

The pen refuses to serve when it is called upon to write about the misery of the Jews in Russia. At present there are two instances which awaken in us the hope for certain improvements of conditions. First of all is the approach of summer and the prospect of an abundant harvest; nature will grant that ease of sustenance which the English government in its "generosity" refused to grant. Then comes the declaration of the Chancellor of the Empire, who said in his last great speech before parliament that the Russian territory which is occupied by Germany shall never fall back to Russia, no difference what the form of the state of these countries may become. For two and a half million Jews the prospect is herewith opened of being freed from slavery. May the time not be far removed in which this prospect will be realized.

THE BIG BROTHER MOVEMENT IN WINNIPEG.

An organization is BIG, not when it has a large membership, nor when it undertakes BIG things, but when it has big enough men who see to it that the undertakings are being carried out. Even then a duty can be discharged in more than one way: If you feel that you have been unduly saddled with it, you will simply try to unburden yourself in the easiest manner you can; if, however, you realize the importance of the task assigned to and assumed by you, if you are endowed with sufficient imagination to foresee that the organization which has assigned to you the task will gain additional prestige, weight and influence by the proper and fuller discharge of your duty—you will seek to amplify, to enlarge the scope of your work.

Seldom have these truisms been better illustrated than in the case of the "Social Service Committee" of the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Winnipeg. The Social Service work is not a new work undertaken by the Order or the Lodge, only more intensified during the last year.

And the social service work of the Winnipeg Lodge could have been, and under ordinary circumstances would have remained just one of the many activities the B'nai B'rith Lodge has been and still is engaged in—carried on, that is, within a well-defined, circumscribed area, narrowed down within as short a space as decency would allow it.

Happily, however, the "Social Service" work was entrusted by the Lodge to one who had both breadth of vision to realize the possibilities of such work and sufficient innate energy to expand, not restrict, its sphere.

Hence the Chairman of the Social Service Committee entered whole-heartedly into the game. After devoting a certain time to experimenting, he discovered that he was on the right path, and concluded that the "Big Brother Movement" was a field of activity which, if properly expanded, would not only prove beneficial to a wider circle, but redound to the credit of the B'nai B'rith, as an institution of broad international sympathies and influence.

Thus he conceived the plan of a "Big Brother Movement," to embrace all denominations and sections of the city. Having had dealings, as Chairman of the Social Service Committee, with the Superintendent of Neglected Children, Mr. Billiarde—and having demonstrated to the latter, by the results obtained, the efficiency of the Big Brother system, he soon enough found in Mr. Billiarde an enthusiastic adherent to the plan. He went further; he persuaded Mr. Billiarde to take the initiative of organizing an interdenominational Big Brother Movement. With his characteristic impetuosity, he accelerated the work. Time was not lost. A meeting of representatives of various institutions and denominations in the city was called in the Industrial Bureau last Friday night. It was natural that Mr. Billiarde should outline the object of the meeting, just as it was inevitable that the originator of the Big Brother Movement in the city should be the directive spirit. And Mr. L. Rice rose to the occasion. He required no oratorical flowers to drive home his points. He had the force of conviction and the impressiveness of a sincere sympathetic devotee, and he met with the unanimous approval of those present.

The meeting resolved that a city-wide Big Brother Movement be initiated in the city, and a committee was appointed to carry out the plan. As was natural, Mr. Rice was the first one to be nominated on the committee, the other members being: F. I. Billiarde, W. H. Moore, W. J. Sisler, Mr. Weston, Miss McDermott, Miss Calder, Mr. Lang, Mrs. Copeland, Mrs. Moses Finkelstein, Mrs. Frank Russel, Miss Tomkins, Staff-Captain Peacock (Salvation Army), Rev. H. Atkinson, Secretary, and Rev. W. B. Heeney, Chairman.

Thus the Big Brother Movement will become a real factor in the city, and this, thanks to the labors of one who ignores personal limitations and personal reward, and emphasizes right along the fact that he is working as a Ben B'rith and for the B'nai B'rith, making everybody conceive of the B'nai B'rith as a BIG organization, capable of doing BIG things—"The Israelite Press," Winnipeg.

The B'nai B'rith is a strong order because it has endeavored to live up to the ideals of its founders and the many public spirited and active Jewish workers who have been identified with it during its long and honorable history. Within its sphere it is capable of doing much good, not only in the great centers of population, but in the scattered communities throughout the length and breadth of the land, where wholesome Jewish influences are at all times greatly needed.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

DENVER LODGE, DENVER, COLO.

The special meeting held on the evening of June 21st, in honor of Carl Vetsburg, of St. Louis, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, Alfred A. Benesch, of Cleveland, and Sidney Kusworm, of Dayton, members of the General Committee of the District, was largely attended. A creditable initiation of candidates was conducted by the degree team of the lodge. The visiting guests addressed the lodge on the constructive work the Order is doing, tending to the moral uplift and social improvement of the Jew. Brother Rabbi Wm. S. Friedman also addressed the lodge, emphasizing the necessity for co-operation.

The Anti-Defamation Committee of the Lodge has been active during the past month in the investigation of a number of cases.

Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, director of the Social Service Department of the Order, was in Denver July 27th. During the day he met a number of the active members and discussed the Social Service and Big Brotherhood movement with them. He visited the Reform School in Golden and found six boys there who, he made clear, should receive greater attention and encouragement. He also discussed other local problems. In the evening he spoke at Temple Emanuel, under the auspices of the Lodge, on "Judaism and Social Service." He traced back to the Bible the social service idea and explained the principles of this work as carried on by the Order. It was a busy day for the Doctor. His visit proved a stimulus to the workers, and, as a result, more active work in that direction is already being planned.

The Lodge suffered a distinct loss by the death of one of its leading members, Brother Meyer Friedman. Special memorial services were held in his honor on Sunday, August 13, 1916. Brother Rabbi Kauber spoke on "The Lesson of His Life"; Brother Sig. Strauss emphasized Brother Friedman's work in charitable and philanthropic societies; Brother Friedenthal discussed his work in the Lodge and the Order, and Brother Lieberman, the President of the Lodge, delivered an address on "The inspiration to be drawn from the life of Brother Friedman."

INSTITUTION OF ISRAEL LODGE, PORTLAND, MAINE.

Israel Lodge No. 796 was instituted in Portland, Maine, on July 16, 1916. This is the first lodge of the Order in the State of Maine. The institution ceremonies were witnessed by a large number of visiting members and officers of the Grand Lodge, among them Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston, President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Silverman, P. P. of the District and Rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, Charles Hartman, of New York, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, Joseph H. Ullman, of New Haven, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, of New York, Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 1, and a number of prominent co-religionists of Montreal were also guests.

Following introductory remarks by Dr. Elias Kaplan, president of the new lodge, the institution and installation of officers were conducted by President Cohen. Dr. Silverman gave an able address on the principles of the Order.

An elaborate luncheon was served after the lodge had been organized, Dr. Kaplan acting as toastmaster. Addresses were made by Brother Charles Hartman on "Our Order," Joseph H. Ullman on "Our New England Lodges," Max L. Pinansky on "Our New Lodge." The speakers emphasized patriotism as one of the ideals of the Order, and called upon the members present to be loyal to Judaism and to the American flag, both of which stand for universal justice and humanity. At the close of the luncheon the members of the lodge responded liberally to the appeal for the war sufferers.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

At a meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, held on Sunday evening, July 9, 1916, the officers for the ensuing term were elected and installed. At the close of the ceremonies a large class of candidates were initiated.

Under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge [illegible] was held at Euclid Beach Park [illegible], August 10th. It consisted [illegible] ball game and other field events [illegible] and dancing in the Log [illegible] the evening.

STEVENS POINT, WIS.

Menorah Lodge No. 769, of Stevens Point, Wis., held a well attended meeting on June 11, 1916. Members from Wausau Lodge, of Wausau, Wis., and Chippewa Valley Lodge, of Eau Claire, Wis., were present in large numbers. Many of the visiting brethren addressed the lodge on the work of the Order.

In the evening of the same day a dance was given by the lodge for the benefit of the Jewish war sufferers. Nearly 200 were present, a large number of whom were guests from Wausau, Eau Claire, Marshfield, Medford, Prentice, Amhurst, Milwaukee and Minneapolis. Preceding the dance a musical program of various numbers was rendered.

The event was a success not only from a social but a financial standpoint, as a large sum was realized for the benefit of the war sufferers.

HAR SINAI LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

The work of the Membership Committee during the past three months has resulted in the initiation of a class of 35 candidates at a recent meeting of the lodge.

A special meeting of the lodge was held during the month of June for the purpose of initiating those then on the waiting list. The meeting was well attended and proved to be very enjoyable. Brother Joseph Salus at Atlantic City, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, conducted the initiatory ceremonies. The meeting was brought to a close with a collation, at which President Oscar G. Bender acted as toastmaster, and a number of interesting and enjoyable talks were given by members of the lodge.

KANSAS CITY LODGE.

Kansas City Lodge No. 184, of Kansas City, Mo., had a successful Cultural meeting during the month of June, which was the last one of the season. The program started with musical numbers and was followed by initiation of candidates.

The speaker of the evening was Mr. Floyd Jacobs, Prosecuting Attorney of Jackson County. He held his audience in rapt attention with his forcible address, lasting nearly an hour.

The Cultural Committee of the lodge expects to arrange similar attractive programs for the coming fall season.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE.

Successful beyond all expectation was the picnic given on Sunday, July 23, 1916, by Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503, assisted by the Emma Lazarus Auxiliary, at Fortuna Park. Two thousand five hundred people attended and the weather was ideal for the outing. The entire party was conveyed by boat to the picnic grounds. The program was started off with the annual baseball game between Hildesheimer and Rainier lodges. Dancing occupied the afternoon hours, and this was followed by interesting exhibitions of fancy diving, swimming and life saving, on the lake. Races of all characters then followed, after which dancing was again in order. The picnic was a great success socially as well as financially. The committees of the lodge and its auxiliary are deserving of much appreciation for their hard work, and Rainier Lodge is deserving of thanks for its hearty co-operation.

Emma Lazarus Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, installed its newly elected officers at a well attended meeting on July 6th. After the installation ceremonies an enjoyable program was given. An informal supper in the dining room completed the evening. Toasts were responded to by several of the officers of Hildesheimer and Emma Lazarus lodges. Mrs. Samuelson, the retiring president, was presented with a gold pin, symbolic of the Order, in recognition of services rendered by her to the Auxiliary.

INDIANAPOLIS LODGE NO. 58, INDIANAPOLIS.

A large crowd attended the "Get Together Meeting" of Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., held on June 27, 1916, at the Indianapolis Club. The following short talks were given: "The Jewish Business Man," by G. A. Efroymson; "The B'nai B'rith and the Jewish Youth," by Jacob Mueller; "The B'nai B'rith and Social Service," by Samuel Kaufman; "The Jew and Scientific Agriculture," by A. E. Kalter, and "Zionism and Judaism," by Louis Hurwich.

SOLOMON MARX HONORED BY NEW ORLEANS B'NAI B'RITH LODGES.

A highly enjoyable and interesting meeting of the B'nai B'rith lodges of New Orleans was held on Thursday evening, August 3rd, in the vestry rooms of the Touro Synagogue under the auspices of Gulf Lodge No. 221. Bro. N. S. Steeg, the retiring President of Gulf Lodge, presided. The meeting was largely attended and the program was most interesting and instructive.

The presentation to Bro. Solomon Marx was made the first order of business, and after a prayer had been offered by Rabbi M. Sessler, Bro. David Sessler, the chairman of the committee that had the matter in charge, presented a set of resolutions to Brother Marx in honor of the sixtieth anniversary of his affiliation with the Order. After a fitting and felicitious acknowledgment by Brother Marx for the honors shown him, the officers of Gulf Lodge were then installed by Bro. Archibald A. Marx, member of the Executive Committee of the Order for District No. 7.

The newly elected President, Brother Mayer, then announced that at the request of the Social Service Committee of the joint lodges of the city, a part of the evening had been set aside for the discussion on "Social Service and the Big Brother Movement." Bro. Julius Goldman led the discussion. Those who participated in the discussion were: A. Steeg, Dr. J. W. Newman, Solomon Marx, Dr. N. Eiseman, S. Davis, A. Ullman, S. Blum, J. Bodinger.

BARNETT LODGE OF FORREST CITY OBSERVES THIRD ANNIVERSARY.

On Sunday, July 2, Barnett Lodge No. 754, of Forrest City, Ark., held an outing in celebration of the third anniversary of its institution. Delegates and visitors from a number of nearby cities attended the occasion.

Interesting and patriotic addresses were made by members of the lodge and some of the distinguished visitors. Dinner was served by the ladies of the lodge and during the day there were games of all kinds for the benefit of the younger people and various prizes were distributed. The attendance numbered more than 175, and all those who participated, expressed themselves most pleased with the genuineness of the hospitality extended to them by the lodge.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Worcester Lodge No. 600 held a well attended meeting on June 27, 1916, at which a class of 35 candidates was initiated. This was the result of a month's campaign for members, which netted the lodge an increase of 55 new members. At the meeting the members of the lodge contributed in the name of the lodge, the sum of $253.00 to an Emergency Fund being raised in the State of Massachusetts for the benefit of dependent families of the soldiers who have gone to the front.

B'NAI B'RITH HEADQUARTERS, NEW YORK.

The new B'nai B'rith headquarters are a busy hive. There is always something going on every night in the week excepting Friday night, when the headquarters are closed.

The meetings of the various Lodges are much better attended. The lodge room is an attraction in itself. The meetings themselves have been made interesting by special lectures on various subjects of Jewish, patriotic and literary interest.

Several clubs have been formed at the headquarters, in which members are invited to join. Membership is free to every Ben B'rith.

Among the clubs, we mention the Chess and Checkers Club, in charge of Brother I. B. Scheiber; the Tennis Club, supervised by Brother Sidney L. Fibel, and a Bowling Club, with Brother Myer L. Victorius as its leading guide.

A number of New York clubs have responded to the appeal of Brother Herman Asher, through whose efforts the establishments of the B'nai B'rith quarters is mainly due, for contributions towards the furnishing of the Headquarters. Brother Asher, as Chairman of the Committee in charge of the Headquarters, formed a House Committee, consisting of a number of earnest workers, each of whom obligated himself to take at least one night in the month, on which he will have general supervision of the building and play host to the visiting brothers.

FLAG DAY CELEBRATION BY AKIBA AND HEBRON LODGES OF NEW YORK.

In conformity with President Wilson's proclamation, Akiba Lodge, in conjunction with Hebron Lodge, devoted its meeting to a patriotic celebration.

Judging from the enthusiasm it was quite evident that there was no place for diluted or hyphenated Americans, or even pussyfooters, in this Lodge.

One of the older members, who was in a position to know, complimented the Lodge on the most interesting and best meeting Akiba Lodge in all its years of existence has ever had.

Brother Reiss, of Akiba Lodge, delivered the address of the evening. He said that "Centuries of persecution of our race added a greater significance to the flag for us. We assemble not as modified Americans of any kind, or even Jewish Americans, but Jews and Americans with undivided loyalty to our country and her institutions, and in our allegiance second to none." Bro. Reiss said that while the flag stood for religious liberty, it also implied an obligation that we remain loyal to our ideals as Jews.

Bro. Bauer, a veteran of the Spanish regulars in their campaign in Cuba, spoke of the Jew as a patriot and under fire.

Bro. Geist, Secretary of the Lodge, one of the pioneers in the early days of the West, and one of the first members of our race to locate west of the Mississippi, spoke of the opportunities offered members of our race in this undeveloped country. Bro. Geist explained rather interestingly why the early Jewish pioneers failed as agriculturists.

An interesting feature of the meeting was a drill and salute to the flag by the Montefiore contingent of the Junior American League under the direction of Capt. Schmrl of Akiba. This was followed by the brethren assembled in a circle around the flag reciting the oath of allegiance, after which the husky voice of V. P. S. Landau, together with the brethren, fairly thundered the "Star Spangled Banner." The meeting closed with a benediction and the singing of "America."

SAMUEL LODGE, VANCOUVER, B. C.

On Tuesday, July 25th, the lodge hall was the scene of a most successful smoker, held by Samuel Lodge No. 668, Vancouver, B. C., to celebrate its sixth birthday.

The hall was elaborately decorated for the occasion, and the large attendance enjoyed the excellent program to the utmost.

The special feature of the evening was the initiation of two candidates, the initiation team excelling itself by presenting one of the most impressive initiations yet witnessed by the lodge.

During the evening two interesting addresses were delivered. One by Past Pres. Bro. Max M. Grossman on "The War and the Jew," the other by Brother Pres. A. H. Fleishman on "The Aims and Ideals of the Order."

The members took advantage of this meeting to present a silver tea service to Brother Pres. A. H. Fleishman as a mark of esteem, the occasion being the Brother's recent marriage.

An excellent musical program was also enjoyed during the evening.

Clay pipes, cigars, cigarettes and tobaccos were served and the balance of the evening was given over to card playing.

Thus Samuel Lodge entered its sixth year with renewed avowal to further the interests of "Benevolence, Brotherly-Love and Harmony."

VICTORIA, B. C.

Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Nodek entertained the members of Victoria Lodge No. 758, the Sabbath School children and their teachers at their summer home at Cordova Bay on Sunday, July 9, 1916. The affair was the finest of its kind ever held in that city. More than a hundred were present to enjoy the hospitality of Brother Nodek. Various racing contests were carried out and valuable prizes were distributed. During the afternoon refreshments of various kinds were served. Brother Nodek is President of Victoria Lodge No. 758 and also of Tempel Emanuel. His efforts on behalf of Judaism are untiring and he enjoys the esteem and confidence not only of his co-religionists, but of the general public as well.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

As a result of the untiring efforts of the San Francisco Committee of the Social Service Bureau of District Grand Lodge No. 4, a Sunday School has been organized for the Hebrew Congregation at Daly City, a suburb of San Francisco. Regular classes are being held under competent teachers. While the school had an enrollment of forty pupils when it opened, the attendance has increased to sixty and two new teachers have been added to the staff.

At a meeting of Montefiore Lodge No. 51, held on June 19, 1916, I. H. Kahn, of Oakland, delivered an address on the subject, "California Interests in National Defense."

Ophir Auxiliary No. 4, Daughters of the Covenant, gave a dance on Wednesday evening, June 28, 1916, in B'nai B'rith Hall, to raise funds for the Social Service work being carried on by the District Grand Lodge. A large attendance was present and the affair proved a success from a financial as well as social standpoint.

Many members and their guests attended an indoor picnic given by the Modin Auxiliary No. 3, Daughters of the Covenant, on Monday evening, July 3, 1916, in B'nai B'rith Hall. Many novel features were introduced and the affair was brought to a close with a dance.

At a meeting of Columbia Lodge No. 127, held on July 27, 1916, Mr. John Golden, one of the leading Shakespearean readers of America, gave an impersonation of the various characters in "The Merchant of Venice." His appearance was an intellectual treat which scores of members of the San Francisco lodges enjoyed.

Under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty of the San Francisco lodges, a picnic was held at the East Shore Park, of San Francisco, August 13, 1916, for which an elaborate program of attractive features was made. Music and dancing were enjoyed, as well as games of various kinds. Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary presided over a dainty booth of refreshments. The proceeds of the affair are to be used to improve the B'nai B'rith gymnasium.

At a well attended meeting of Golden Gate Lodge No. 129, held on August 2, 1916, Bro. I. Stein addressed the members of the lodge on the subject of "Travelers."

Ophir Auxiliary No. 4, Daughters of the Covenant, announces its fourth annual dance to be given on Sunday evening, September 17, 1916. The Committee in charge is planning to introduce many new features and a pleasant time for all is assured.

The annual picnic of the Committee of Fifty representing the B'nai B'rith lodges of San Francisco was held on Sunday, August 13, 1916, at East Shore Park, and proved a big success socially as well as financially. The Jewish community of the Bay cities was well represented. The purpose of the affair was to raise funds to improve the gymnasium in the B'nai B'rith building and a neat sum was secured.

The extensive activities of the San Francisco branch of the B'nai B'rith Social Service Bureau in District No. 4 and its success in helping the needy are detailed in a report of much interest prepared by Dr. Alvin F. Cerf, Chairman of the Committee. Although the local branch has been organized for three months, assistance has been given in 122 cases, besides helping in other directions—the opening of a Sabbath School and kindred achievements.

During the presence in San Francisco of Brother Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, various conferences were held by him with officials of the Social Service Committees of the San Francisco lodges.

Ophir Lodge No. 21, the oldest B'nai B'rith lodge of the District, celebrated its sixty-first anniversary with an elaborate program on Wednesday evening, August 30, 1916.

Rabbi Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, National Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, delivered a lecture on "Judaism and Social Service" on Wednesday evening, August 30, 1916, at B'nai B'rith Hall. The public, both ladies and gentlemen, was invited to the lecture and availed themselves in large numbers of this privilege. Dr. Coffee in his lecture explained the scope of work as distinguished from charity. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty of the San Francisco lodges. Dr. A. F. Cerf presided.

THE CINCINNATI LODGE.

The Cincinnati Lodge, No. 4, held a most interesting meeting on June 26, at which election of officers and a highly interesting report on Social Service were features.

Dr. Boris D. Bogen, Superintendent of the United Jewish Charities, as chairman of the Social Service Committee, delivered a preliminary report which was of exceptional interest, not only in the information which it contained, but in that it outlined the projected work of the committee as follows: First, to ascertain the field of local Jewish Social Service; second, to obtain definite data as to the present participation of the members of the B'nai B'rith in local charities; third, to study the actual status of the Jewish philanthropic agencies; fourth, to initiate activities found wanting; fifth, to promote the interest of Jewish Social Service, making it the business of everybody, instead of a few. The very interesting information was also given that members of the local lodge contribute annually $74,598 to the support of seven charitable and philanthropic organizations.

The retiring president of the lodge, Isidor Wise, reported that during his term of six months, there were 36 initiations, and that notwithstanding the unusually large number of deaths, and withdrawals on account of members going elsewhere, there still remains a satisfactory net gain of membership. The work of the lodge has been systematized to an appreciable extent, much of the useless and time consuming discussion eliminated and the foundation laid for effective constructive effort on the part of the Cincinnati Lodge, which now has a membership of 1,060.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

At a meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314, held on June 27, 1916, it was unanimously decided to remit dues to all members of the lodge who belong to the National Guard or who are in any way connected with the Army or Navy, also to remit the dues to any member who will enlist during the war.

The Daughters of the Covenant, auxiliary to the Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314, gave a shirt waist party in the B'nai B'rith Building on Tuesday, June 27, 1916, after their regular meeting, which was the last of the season. The members of Theo. Herzl Lodge joined in the festivities of the evening.

On August 3, 1916, a luncheon was given at the Chamber of Commerce by the members of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of Portland in honor of Judge George Samuels of Oakland, Cal., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 4. Mr. Isaac Swett, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, acted as toastmaster, and numerous toasts were given.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Although in only the fourth year of its existence, Asheville Lodge, No. 714, is now, in point of numbers, the largest lodge of the Order in the State. The recent growth in membership is due to the enthusiastic efforts of its newly-elected President, Mr. Sender Argintar, who has been rendering the lodge continuous effective service since he became a member.

Along with its normal duties the lodge has its peculiar functions for the reason that the city is the center of a large health and recreation resort, and the community is frequently called upon to act in behalf of the sick and distressed. In addition to this work of benevolence the lodge has labored steadily and successfully toward communal harmony, its membership now embracing men active in the three congregations and the local Y. M. H. A.

July 19, the recently elected officers were installed by Mr. R. C. Goldstein, a former President of the Lodge, before an assembly of the Jews of the town. Addresses were made by these officers, and refreshments were then served.

TACOMA LODGE, TACOMA, WASH.

The work in store for Tacoma Lodge was of such magnitude that no effort was made to create a vacation period. At a well attended meeting of the lodge, held on Aug. 10, 1916, a large class of candidates was initiated. The degree team of the lodge is now being equipped with new robes.

The Sabbath School conducted by the lodge last season will be resumed again early this fall and extensive preparations are being made by the lodge to make this one of the principal activities of the lodge during the coming season.

REPORT OF MAGIC CITY LODGE, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Beginning with Sunday, July 2, 1916. Magic City Lodge No. 725, I. O. B. B., began its activities under the supervision of the newly elected officers.

In spite of the hot weather the meetings of the lodge have been well attended. The B'nai B'rith atmosphere of unselfish interest in the welfare of the Jewish people is predominating at the lodge meetings and gaining the co-operation of the membership.

The lodge has inaugurated a Social Service Committee composed of the following brethren: Isadore Shapiro, chairman; Chas. A. Lass, secretary; D. T. Feidelson, Swedlow and Kartus. The action of this committee so far has been in co-operation with the local Federation of Jewish Charities, in co-operation with the City Sanitary and Food inspectors in having the local Jewish groceries and meat markets up to the standard of sanitation and hygiene.

Thanks to the untiring effort of Brother F. A. Abelson and his assistants, two small children, Naomi and Lena Cantor, were recently admitted into the New Orleans Orphan Home, one of the many good B'nai B'rith institutions.

The lodge passed a resoluution to keep in good standing without payment of dues all members who have joined the National Guard as long as same will be with the "Colors" away from home. They are Sol Berman and Eugene Rappaport.

EDWARD EVERETT LODGE LADIES' AUXILIARY, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Edward Everett Lodge Ladies' Auxiliary, through its energetic President, Mrs. Henry Duschnes, gave an entertainment during the summer at the headquarters, which was largely attended. There was a professional concert accompanied by a dance. The artists were Mrs. Franfenthal, contralto; Miss Sadie Jansel, humorist; Mr. A. Goldfuss, violinist, and Mr. Telephore Longtin, tenor. The guests of honor were Mrs. Samuel Elkeles, President of Federation of Sisterhoods; Mrs. Wm. Singer, Miss Sara Schottenfels, Mr. Leavitt, President of Manhattan Lodge, and Mrs. I. H. Kempner, President of Temple Israel Ladies' Auxiliary. Miss Frieda Danziger was Chairman of the evening. President S. Hyman made the address of welcome, and Mrs. Henry Duschnes told of the aims of the new Auxiliary, Immigrant Aid Work being its special plan of activity.

DAN LODGE NO. 593, CHARLESTON, S. C.

June 28 was Flag Day in Charleston, and as one of the leading patriotic societies in Charleston, Dan Lodge participated, making one of the most impressive showings in the spectacular parade of five thousand marchers. Responding to letters sent out by President Fromberg, about one hundred twenty-five Jewish men assembled in Dan Lodge's division, most of them being members of the Lodge, whose entire membership now is about one hundred thirty.

Dan Lodge's showing during the patriotic occasion was gratifying, especially in view of the fact that the majority of members are also members and officers of numerous other orders, all of whom anxiously bid for support in the parade. But, desiring to demonstrate to the world the intense patriotism of the American Jew, and his loyalty to the flag, practically all of the Jewish men in the parade aligned themselves with the B'nai B'rith. Young and old, the men marched along proudly, each carrying an American Flag, and the banner of Dan Lodge waved alongside of Old Glory.

LINCOLN LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A special meeting of Lincoln Lodge No. 780 was held on June 27 at Hotel Walton. A class of thirty candidates was initiated and the degree work was under the direction of Brothers Abe Weil, President of District Grand Lodge No. 3; Jacob Singer, member of the Executive Committee of the Order; Joseph W. Salus, of Atlantic City, Past President of the Grand Lodge, and several members of the General Committee of the city. After the initiatory ceremonies, the lodge gave a smoker for which splendid talent had been provided. An exceedingly large number of members were present.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

At the B'nai B'rith Hall on Monday evening, August 28, a large gathering of members under the auspices of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, including their ladies and friends, listened to a discourse on the aims and objects of the Order by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of Social Service Department of the Order.

After a few introductory remarks by the President of the Lodge, Brother Harry Hollzer, Dr. Coffee began his lecture by stating that although under the present economic system there is need for benevolent societies to look after the temporary cases of distress, the object of the Order is to do constructive work. He mentioned particularly the movement inaugurated, known as the Big Brother Movement, as one of the present activities of the Social Service Department.

Dr. Coffee also elaborated on the work of the Anti-Defamation League.

During his brief stay in Los Angeles, Dr. Coffee's time was very much taken up. In the morning he visited the Sanitarium of the Jewish Consumptive Relief Association. At noon a gathering was held of the social workers and officers of the philanthropic organizations, which was attended by almost 100. In the afternoon he visited the Reform School, and in the early part of the evening he held a social service conference with the active members of the lodge.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

Samuel Lodge No. 668, of Vancouver, held a special social evening and smoker on Tuesday evening, July 25, in celebration of the sixth anniversary of the institution of the lodge.

Under the auspices of the Samuel Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, a picnic was held on Sunday, July 30. During the afternoon, sports and games were arranged. The attendance was large and an enjoyable time was had.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Max L. Pinansky, vice-president of Israel Lodge No. 796, was elected president of Temple Beth Israel, the newly organized congregation in Portland. The other officers of the Congregation are charter members of the new lodge. They are, Vice-President Mark Levine, Treasurer David Schwartz, Secretary Jacob Sapiro, Trustees, Dr. Elias Caplan, Joseph Brenner and Louis Silverman.

Washington Lodge No. 19 and B'er Schebba Lodge No. 11, two of the oldest and most prominent lodges in the District, contemplate amalgamating some time during the fall season.

New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 published a most attractive little booklet, explaining the aims and ideals of the Order, giving also pictures of some of the institutions supported by the Order, also pictures of the various departments of the New York Headquarters. The booklet, which is a work of art, had been gotten up by Bro. Myer L. Victorius, President of the lodge, who was helped by a number of enthusiastic and devoted brothers.

Bro. Isidor Enselman, President of Maccabee Lodge No. 71, has arranged a series of interesting meetings to take place next winter, which will attract not only members of Maccabee Lodge, but also brothers of sister lodges.

Past-President Herman Asher, of District No. 1, Second Vice-President, Bro. Maurice P. Davidson, Bro. H. J. Wolf, Vice-President of Zerubbabel Lodge, of Rochester, and a number of other well known B'nai B'rith members, have been training at Camp Whitman, Plattsburgh, N. Y. Lieut. Manuel F. Behar, of Washington Lodge, and a number of other brothers of various lodges all through the District, are at the Mexican border. Several of the lodges have voted to remit the dues of brothers who volunteered their services in the army.

The officers of Israel Lodge, of Portland, Me., who at the same time are the officers of the new Congregational Temple Israel, made a special request of the General Committee of District No. 1 for the services of Secretary Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan during the coming holidays, assuring them that his services there during the high holidays would be of great benefit to the entire Jewish community. The General Committee has granted the request of our brothers in Portland.

The bowling alleys at the Headquarters have been completely renovated and refurnished, through the efforts of the President of New York Isaiah Lodge, Bro. Myer L. Victorius, and Bro. Alfred Baum of Washington. The bowling alleys are very comfortable and commodious and will no doubt attract a great many members of the District, especially the younger men. While the alleys are rented by special clubs of different lodges, Bro. Victorius, who is the Chairman of the Alley Clubs, will have the alleys open for the use of all brothers on Sunday afternoons and Sunday evenings, beginning Sunday, Sept. 17th. A nominal charge will be made for each game. Preparations are being made for a tournament, of which Bro. Alfred Baum of Washington Lodge will be in charge, and with whom brothers desiring to enter the tournament are requested to register. There is no charge for entry and the prize will be either a silver cup or a Mineralite bowling board.

Bro. Rabbi Ludwig Roeder delivered an interesting address on the Books of the Prophets at Maccabee Lodge before adjourning for the summer.

Chananiah Lodge mourns the demise of Samuel Kahn, ex-President and charter member, who was a worthy and devoted brother. Chananiah Lodge will celebrate this month its forty-fifth anniversary. A very interesting program has been prepared for the occasion.

Horeb Lodge continues to increase its membership and expects to have 700 at the end of the year.

Bro. Rabbi Samuel Price, of Springfield Lodge, is devoting considerable time to the affairs of the lodge, notwithstanding his multifarious duties in other communal matters.

Massachusetts Lodge, which is the President's lodge, has doubled its membership and expects by the end of the year to be three fold strong. Its sister lodge, Amos, is equally showing great activity and is attracting the most intelligent Jewish young men in Boston.

Ex-Ambassador Henry M. Morgenthau, who is a member of Jordan Lodge, will have the extreme honor of receiving a medal from the Order for services rendered in behalf of the Jewish cause. He was also elected as a member-at-large on the Executive Committee.

Through the efforts of Bros. President Bartow, Financial Secretary Goodman and several other active workers, an effort is being made by Hebron Lodge to organize a ladies' auxiliary. The ladies' auxiliary of Maccabee, Jordan and Edward Everett lodges have set a good example to all the other lodges to follow.

At a meeting of Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., Mr. Samuel Campner, President of the Board of Aldermen of New Haven, delivered an address on the subject, "The Case Against the Congress."

At the meeting of Zion Lodge No. 2, of New York City, held in the month of June, Rev. Dr. Gustave H. Houseman delivered an address on the subject, "Sons of the Covenant."

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Cincinnati Lodge No. 4 has taken up the Social Service work by the appointment of a special committee consisting of Brothers L. H. Freiberg, L. Weland, S. Rosin, J. Rollman and B. D. Bogen. The committee held a meeting during the month of June and outlined plans for a preliminary social service survey of Jewish activities. It is intended to thoroughly cover the entire field of local Jewish activities of all characters.

Mr. Alfred A. Benesch, former Director of the Public Safety of the City of Cleveland, has been appointed a director on the National Board of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, Colo.

Mr. Sigmund Livingston, of Bloomington, Ill., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 6 and Chairman of the Anti-Defamation League, will address the B'nai B'rith lodges of St. Louis on the subject of Anti-Defamation on Sunday, October 1, 1916.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

On Sunday evening, May 28, 1916, Rodef Sholem Lodge No. 139, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., held memorial services at the Temple in honor of J. Pincus, who founded that congregation, many of the members of which were the founders of the lodge. Judge Strauss and Rev. Marcus Salzman addressed the large audience who attended the services.

Brother M. J. Lewis, Secretary of Rodef Sholem Lodge No. 139 of Wilkesbarre, an ardent worker in the B'nai B'rith ranks, received 6,626 votes in his county while running for Congressman at large. He received the highest vote among twelve candidates.

Brother Gilbert G. Jacobosky, member of Rodef Sholem Lodge No. 139, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., Captain of Battery F of Third Artillery, left Wilkesbarre on August 17, 1916, for Mt. Gretna, and from there he, with his battery, will entrain for the Mexican border.

At a meeting of Jericho Lodge No. 44, of Pittsburgh, Pa., held on Sunday, June 25, 1916, in the Century Building, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, delivered an address on "Social Service and the Order."

The annual picnic and outing for the pupils of the Hebrew School and Hebrew Sabbath School of McKeesport, Pa., was held at Olympia Park on Tuesday, June 27. The children were the guests of McKeesport Lodge No. 573. Some of the features were a baseball game and other athletic sports and dancing in the pavilion, all under the auspices of the lodge.

The annual picnic of Newcastle Lodge No. 609, Newcastle, Pa., was held on Sunday, July 16, 1916, at Dewey Park.

Through the efforts of Brother Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, Pa., a B'nai B'rith lodge was instituted at Charleston, W. Va., on June 4, 1916.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Brother Morris Schneider, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, addressed the members of Oakland Lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Cal., at a well-attended meeting on June 27, 1916, at Covenant Hall. Mr. Schneider spoke upon his eastern travels, relating the various observations made during his extended trip in the east.

Prominent business men and men of affairs will address the members of Oakland Lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Cal., during the fall season. These lectures will be held twice per month and will be given in the Covenant Hall.

President Henry Newburgh, of District Grand Lodge No. 4, is making a tour through the northern part of the jurisdiction to visit the lodges located there. He had with him in the city of Portland, Dr. Rudolph Coffee, the Director of the Social Service Bureau of the Order. After Portland a member of the General Committee accompanies him and the following lodges are on the list:

Portland, Ore., Monday evening, Sept. 4.
Aberdeen, Wash., Wednesday, Sept. 6.
Tacoma, Wash., Thursday, Sept. 7.
Vancouver, B. C., Sunday, Sept. 10.
Victoria, B. C., Tuesday, Sept. 12.
Seattle, Wash., Thursday, Sept. 14.
Everett, Wash., Sunday forenoon, Sept. 17.
Bellingham, Wash., Sunday afternoon, Sept. 17.
Spokane, Wash., Monday, Sept. 18.
Boise, Idaho, Thursday, Sept. 21.
Helena, Mont., Sunday forenoon, Sept. 24.
Butte, Mont., Sunday evening, Sept. 24.
Salt Lake, Utah, Tuesday evening, Sept. 26.

On Tuesday evening, September 5, 1916, Rabbi J. O. Goldstein addressed members of Oakland lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Cal., on the subject, "Fraternalism in Its Relation to Religion."

An interesting meeting of Victoria Lodge No. 758, of Victoria, B. C., was held on Tuesday evening, August 15, 1916. A debate was held on the question of "Orthodoxy vs. Reform," and participated in by Brothers A. L. Singer and I. Lancaster. At the close of the evening a smoker was held and refreshments were served.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

Dr. George Solomon, of Savannah, Ga., Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 5, visited Baltimore on June 30, together with Brother Julius I. Peyser, of Washington, D. C., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 5, to confer with the officers of Menorah Lodge, of Baltimore, Md. A luncheon was served in honor of the visiting Grand Lodge officers.

Gate City Lodge No. 144, of Atlanta, Ga., played host to the Big Brothers as well as the little boys at the annual Orphan's Home picnic held on August 23. Special arrangements were made for the transportation of the guests and the lodge looked after their comfort and pleasure.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Rabbi Jacob Singer, of Lincoln, Neb., a prominent B'nai B'rith worker in his community, has been appointed Professor of History and Theory of Music in the newly instituted department of music of the University of Nebraska.

Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, while on his way to the Pacific Coast, stopped over at Omaha and conferred with the leading members of the Order belonging to Nebraska and McKinley Lodges of that city. Dr. Coffee visited the Juvenile Court and at noon was entertained at a luncheon by the local lodges.

On Sept. 10, 1916, Dacotah Lodge No. 731, of Grand Forks, N. D., held its first meeting of the season, which was without doubt the most interesting meeting of the lodge ever held. At no time since the existence of the lodge have the members individually shown as much interest and solicitude for the welfare of the Order as they did at this meeting. A few more meetings of that kind will insure a capacity attendance at the future meetings of the lodge.

Dr. I. L. Rypins, of St. Paul, prominent worker of Minnesota Lodge, who was recently named by Governor Burnquist to serve on a commission to revise and codify the laws of the state in reference to children, has been appointed on a committee of three to devise ways and means of financing the work of the commission.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Brother E. R. Bernstein, of Shreveport, La., President of District No. 7, has issued a circular letter to the lodges and members of the District, containing copy of the resolution adopted by his home lodge, Louisiana Lodge No. 107, with reference to putting into execution some of the activities advocated and recommended at the recent session of the District Grand Lodge.

The annual smoker of Edar Lodge No. 211, of San Antonio, Texas, was held on June 4, 1916, at the Hebrew Institute. Previous to the smoker, a class of candidates was initiated. Talks were made by prominent members of the lodge and a report of the delegates to the Convention of the Grand Lodge was also read.

A unique B'nai B'rith meeting was held at Anniston, Ala., on June 4, 1916. Lodges of the three cities of Gadsden, Talladega and Anniston met together and held an all-day session. Addresses were delivered by the Lieutenant Governor of Alabama, and by Brother A. Leo Oberdorfer, of Birmingham.

At a meeting of Gulf Lodge No. 221, of New Orleans, La., held on July 12, 1916, the election of officers was held.

The Agricultural Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7 held a meeting at Waco, Texas, at which a definite plan was adopted for the formation of a community of Jewish farmers. The plan in substance is to raise not less than $1,000,000 by the sale of stock, to place families of proper physical and mental make-up upon farms of not less than fifty acres, and that each of such families is to invest at least $500 in farm implements. The plan further contemplates farm villages on the continental European plan.

Rabbi I. Warsaw and L. Migel were elected the accredited representatives of the organization for the soliciting of subscriptions. The headquarters of the Committee will be in Dallas, Texas, where all further meetings will be held.

The joint B'nai B'rith Lodges of Montgomery, Ala., held a meeting on June 25, and were addressed by Capt. Leon Schwarz, of Mobile, Past President of District No. 7, I. O. B. B., who is at the mobilization camp with his regiment. Other soldiers, members of the B'nai B'rith, were present. There are a number of Jewish soldiers in the Alabama National Guard, now mobilized for active service.

Houston Lodge No. 434, of Houston, Tex., has appointed a committee to organize a Big Brother and Big Sister Club. Brother Sol. Schoenman as Chairman of the Committee, is working on a program of organization which will soon be completed and installed in Houston.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

Under the auspices of Amicita Lodge, of Posen, Germany, entertainments are given each Sunday afternoon for the Jewish soldiers garrisoned there. A short scientific lecture is given, after which artistic and declamatory lectures are given.

RUSSIAN JEWISH REFUGEES IN ITALY.

As a result of a recent agreement between the Italian government with the Russian government, all Russian Jews who deserted from the army or failed to appear at military centers for enrollment in the army and now residing in Italy, are to be deported by the Italian authorities. The decision of the government of Italy has caused the Jews there a great deal of concern. A protest was prepared by them which was sent to the senators and deputies, in which Russia's treatment of its political offenders is described, and also the legality of the alien Jews in Italy is emphasized. It is expected that as a result of this memorandum, which made a favorable impression in the higher circles in Italy, the alien Jews there will not be molested.

MINISTER GIVES $100,000 FOR RELIEF.

According to a cable received by the New York "Jewish Morning Journal," a minister of Scotland, whose name could not be ascertained, has sent Baron Guinzburg, in Petrograd, the sum of £19,000 ($100,000) for the Jewish war sufferers.

THE JEWISH CHAUTAUQUA SOCIETY.

The Jewish Chautauqua Society inaugurated work in the summer schools in the universities throughout the country during the summer of 1909 at the Summer School of the South in Knoxville, Tenn. This work was undertaken following an urgent appeal from the United States Commissioner of Education, Hon. P. P. Claxton, who realized that the prevailing misconceptions of the Jew are traceable to an appalling lack of knowledge of the Jew—what he is and what Judaism stands for.

The seventh annual report of this noteworthy activity of the Jewish Chautauqua Society has just been received. Rabbi Abram Simon, of Washington, D. C., delivered six lectures on the subject of Bible Interpretations at the University of Virginia. On the opening day the attendance was three hundred. At the close there were present nine hundred. The "Summer School News" in commenting upon Dr. Simon's work says, "He is one of the most forceful lecturers who visited the summer school."

Rabbi George Solomon, of Savannah, Ga., delivered six lectures at the University of North Carolina on "Prominent Jews in the Christian Era." There was an attendance of three hundred students at these lectures.

Rabbi Eli Mayer, of Philadelphia, delivered a lecture at the State College of Pennsylvania, "The Jew of the Past and Present," which was attended by one thousand students. Rabbi Mayer suggested that the Jewish past is of most vital interest to Christianity; that courses in Jewish history should be given in all colleges, especially as it means more to the dominant religion than Greek and Roman history, which are so universally required.

Rabbi David Lefkowitz, of Dayton, Ohio, delivered three lectures on "Jewish Literature of the Post-Biblical Era," which were attended by more than six hundred students and professors. Following each lecture there was a conference with questions and general discussion.

Rabbi Henry Berkowitz, Chancellor of the Society, delivered two lectures at Dartmouth College on the Survey of History of the Jews and the Survey of the Literature of the Jews, which were attended by 150 students. This was most encouraging, as there is but an enrollment of 350 students in this Summer School. Keen interest was manifested in these lectures. Following each one there was a questionairre which was participated in by many who were eager for more knowledge and information. This was the first time in the history of this venerable institution that a Jewish teacher has ever presented the Jewish viewpoint.

The University authorities of the Summer Schools have been highly gratified with the results of the work undertaken by the Society and are hopeful of a continuation of the work next season. There can be no work of greater importance undertaken by the Society than to serve as an eye-opener to those who have been blinded to an appreciation of the very highest and best in Jewish teaching and stimulation of thought.

RESTRICTION ORDERS SHOW GOVERNMENT VIEWS.

The attitude of the central government toward the liberal tendency in Russian parliamentary circles and toward the optimism of its Allies of Western Europe can be seen by a few very recent orders and declarations on Jewish disabilities which were issued after the return of the deputation from Europe.

On July 18 the Russian Cabinet again published a statement about the necessity for the Trade-Ministry to keep a strict guard that all Jewish restrictions in the stock companies be enforced, and the Minister of Education again issued a circular in which additional restrictions are imposed governing the admission of Jews into the universities. More than this, this circular practically nullifies all privileges which were granted last year to all Jewish young men who sought entrance into Russian universities.

JEWISH PROFESSORS AT WARSAW UNIVERSITY.

M. S. Dickstein and M. Handelsman have been appointed Professors of Mathematics and History respectively at the University of Warsaw.

The demand of the Polish antisemites for the introduction of a percentage norm for Jews into the Warsaw higher schools has found no favor in German official circles.

All true science begins in love, not the dissection of your fellow-creatures; and it ends in love, not the analysis of God.

But whose actions a different story tell.

JEWISH LEADERS

A Series of Historical Portraits

By RABBI SAMUEL COHON, Chicago

2. DAVID, THE LEADER, AS KING.

Carlyle speaks of kingship as "the last form of heroism." The king is "practically the summary for us, of all the various figures of heroism; priest, teacher, whatsoever of earthly or spiritual dignity we can fancy to reside in a man, embodies itself here." The true king is the incarnation of the people's will, its honor, and its ambitions. His shoulders bear the people's burdens; his shield defends them in war, and shelters them in peace. He is the first soldier in the land, and the first citizen, the pattern for his countrymen. As the Hebrew word "Melek" connotes, the king in Israel was, in the first place, the advisor, the counsellor of the people, their guide in things material and in matters religious, the champion of their rights and liberties. He was, at once, the chief justice, the general, and the prince of peace. This Jewish ideal of kingship was crystallized in the character of David, the son of Jesse of the tribe of Judah.

History seldom moves in the direction of a straight line of progress; it is full of lapses as well as of advances. The victorious Israelites in the Promised Land themselves faced the danger of a double defeat. While they conquered the Canaanites, they were gradually being conquered by the culture of the Canaanites. No sooner had they exchanged their nomadic life for the settled life of agriculturists than they adopted the superstitions and licentious customs connected with the Canaanitish agricultural deities, the Baalim. Thus the simple religion which they had brought from the desert of Sinai was in danger of losing its moral tone and purity. Their religious laxity resulted in the weakening of their national unity. The tribes separated as they were geographically,, ranged themselves under different leaders or "judges." The spirit of rivalry between them led to civil wars. The tribe of Benjamin was almost exterminated by the other tribes. The warriors of Ephraim were massacred by the Israelites of the East Jordan. A scism arose also between the tribe of Judah of the south land—a tribe which had arisen out of a mixture of Hebrew, Kenite and Edomite blood—and the tribes of the North. The house of Israel, divided against itself, could not withstand the attacks of its enemies. The life of the young and weak nation was especially threatened by its neighbors to the southwest, the Philistines, who with the aid "of their kinsfolk from Crete and the Islands of the Greek seas" extended their dominion throughout the west—Jordan territory, and began to turn Canaan into Palestine, "the land of the Philistines." (Sayce, Israel and the Surrounding Nations, pp. 50 ff.)

To prevent the loss of Israel's independence and religion, became the object of the Prophet Samuel's solicitude. With a band of religious enthusiasts, he set out to fan the flames of national self-consciousness in the hearts of the people. What is more, he recognized the need of the hour: the uniting of the scattered tribes under the rule of one centralized authority. Thus, after a long line of judges and tribal chieftains, the institution of kingship was established in Israel, in imitation of the surrounding nations. Monarchy was the only alternative to national extinction.

As the first king of united Israel, Samuel chose Saul of the tribe of Benjamin. Hard and thorny was his road. The people had not been accustomed to discipline. They did not fully realize what a monarchy implied and what it had a right to demand of them. Indeed, great authority was vested in Saul. He was the "Moshiah Adonoi," God's annointed, God's vicegerent in Israel, through whom God ruled and guided the people. But he was unequal to the heavy task of the pioneer, of bending the intractable will of the young nation, and of creating new institutions. Though he was brave and fearless, he broke down under the strain. After years of endeavor, he left the country in almost the same precarious condition in which he had found it. And it was left to his successor, David, to establish the monarchy on a firm foundation, to crush the power of the Philistines as well as of the other enemies, and to complete the work that was begun by the founder of Israel, Moses.

This gifted man was the eighth son of Jesse of Bethlehem, a small town five miles south of Jerusalem. As a child he was trained to endure hardship as shepherd of his father's flock in the desert and in the hill country of Judah. There he developed a strong and agile physique that fitted him for his life of incessant struggle. His strength was so great that, as a youth, he had, unarmed, slain a lion and a bear that had attacked his fold. The shepherd lad was also a lover of nature and of music. He filled the mountains with his sweet piping.

Fortune began to smile early upon David. His reputation for his remarkable beauty, prowess and minstrelsy reached the court of Saul. The king, suffering from grave attacks of distemper and melancholy, was in need of a musician to cheer him. To this end David was invited to the court. His magic touch upon the harp evoked sweet melodies that soothed the heart of the sick king. Prince Jonathan became passionately attached to David, and Princess Michal fell in love with him. The courtiers and the high men of state were captivated by his wonderful personality. Saul, too, was fond of him, and made him his armor-bearer. David's skill as archer won for him great distinction. His acts of heroism—and especially his defeat of the Philistine giant, Goliath, whom he slew with a stone from his sling—soon became celebrated in popular song and story.

A ditty which the daughters of Israel sang about David worried King Saul. It ran: "Saul hath killed thousands; David, tens of thousands." This ranking of David above him who was supposed to be the first soldier of the realm aroused the jealousy and suspicion of the sick king. However, while wishing to put his possible rival out of the way, Saul feared to hurt the people's favorite. He, therefore, under the cloak of generosity, offered David the hand of his daughter Michal on condition that he undertake a perilous expedition against the Philistines. The king's plan miscarried. David acquitted himself of the difficult task, and thus became the king's unwelcome son-in-law.

The king now resolved upon a more direct course of action. Once, when David was playing the harp before him, Saul threw his spear at him. David dodged it and fled from the king's presence. At the advice of his wife, Michal, and of Prince Jonathan, his loyal friend, David hastily left the country. On the way he stopped at the priestly settlement of Nob to secure a sword and provisons, then turned to the mountain fastnesses of Judah, where he was joined by a valiant band of desperate warriors. Saul, disgusted with his children's attachment for David, personally set out at the head of an army to overtake the refugee. Suspecting the priests of Nob of having entered a conspiracy with David against him, he slew them all. Only one son of Ahimelech, the high priest (named Abiathar) escaped the massacre and fled to David into the wilderness. Samuel, the prophet, who is said to have quarreled with the king long before, must have completely withdrawn his moral support from Saul, now that he had murdered the priests in cold blood. The captain of Israel's frail ship of state turned mad. Attacked by perilous waves on all sides, he further endangered the safety of his ship by trying to kill the faithful first mate, the country's bravest and most devoted servant.

"Thanks to the nature of the country in which he had taken refuge," David slipped out of Saul's hands time after time. His demeanor toward his enemy remains one of the grandest examples in history of returning good for evil. Several times during his flight the opportunity offered itself to David to take Saul's life, but, in his magnanimity and in his spirit of touching reverence, he refused to permit his men to lay their hands upon "God's annointed." As a true statesman he felt that the safety of the country from anarchy depended on the inviolability of the king's person.

As the "brigand-chief," David undertook marauding expeditions against the Bedouin tribes of the Judean wilds, the Amalekites and the other inveterate enemies of Israel. To the Israelites who lived on the outskirts of the desert, David was a wall of defense. For his services he from time to time exacted tribute from the richer land owners. At last he grew weary of leading the life of an outlaw, and, despite his grief at leaving his fatherland—a step equivalent in those days to apostasy—removed, with his men, to the land of his former enemies, the Philistines, and offered his services to Achish, the king of Gath. The Philistine king welcomed David. David himself felt uneasy in the capitol, under the scrutinizing eyes of the king. He therefore obtained permission to settle with his army in the open town of Ziklag, equivocally offering to guard the frontier. There, in the freedom of the wilds, he lived for a year and four months, continuing his raids on the Bedouins, but very carefully giving the king the impression that he had been fighting the Judean clans. The king's confidence in David was so strong that, on starting a decisive campaign against Israel, he invited him to join, and promised to appoint him as his body-guard. But the Philistine generals had no such confidence in their former enemy, and insisted on his return to Ziklag. In spite of his protestations of fidelity, David had to leave the battle field. This child of fortune probably never had better cause to thank God than when spared from the horns of the dilemma of fighting his own brethren or of betraying the trust of his allies.

During his short absence from Ziklag the Amalekites, in revenge for his attacks on them, set the town on fire and carried off all the women and children. In a dashing pursuit he overtook them and recovered all that belonged to him and took a large booty, which he divided among his soldiers. His own share of the spoil he wisely used as presents to the elders of Judah and the allied tribes on whose good will he felt he soon would have to rely.

In the ill-fated war with the Philistines, Israel was defeated. Saul, disheartened by the death of his sons, and hard pressed by the enemy, ended his own life on Mount Gilboa. This tragedy was the subject of David's stirring elegy, in which he sounded the genuine sadness of his heart at the death of Saul and Jonathan, and thus again displayed his truly noble spirit toward his erstwhile enemy:

Saul and Jonathan, the beloved and lovely!
In their lives and in their death they were not divided.
They were swifter than eagles;
They were stronger than lions.
I am distressed for thee, Jonathan, my brother!
Very pleasant hast thou been unto me;
Thy love to me was wonderful.
Surpassing the love of women.
How are the mighty fallen,
How perished, the weapons of war!

Now that Saul was dead, David, with his trusty and valiant men, removed from Ziklag to the city of Hebron in central Judah, where the elders of his tribe annointed him king. For seven and a half years he ruled the tribe of Judah in the south of Palestine, probably as a vassal of the king of the Philistines. The North country was held partly by the Philistines, and partly by Ishbaal (or Ishboshet), the only surviving son of Saul, whose mainstay was the brave general, Abner. The sacred historian informs us that "there was long war between the house of Saul and the house of David; but David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker." Dissentions arose in the Northern capitol. Abner wished to marry Saul's concubine, Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, a step calculated to promote his influence in the land, perhaps even to obtain the kingship. When he was checked by his puppet-master he began negotiations to deliver the Northern kingdom to David on condition that he would retain the generalship of the army. Joab, David's nephew, who had already distinguished himself as warrior in David's services, scented the danger that threatened his position in the state. With the cunning of a fox he overtook Abner and, under the pretext of a blood feud which he was in duty bound to avenge, cut down his rival. Ishbaal, too, was murdered shortly afterwards in his own palace by malcontents.

With the pillars of their state destroyed, the leaders of the North submitted themselves to the rule of David, whose power was rapidly growing. Thus the shepherd-minstrel became king. The wise leader of the flock became the great leader of men. His cheerful and sunny disposition, his tactful and winning manners, and his all-compelling personality won for him the heart of the nation. Wherein Saul with his choleric temper had failed, this sweet singer succeeded. He at last consolidated the tribes of the fertile North and of the hilly South that had lived in perpetual strife into one nation.

The man who more than anyone else had contributed to David's success was the famous general, Joab. He rightly deserves a place with the foremost soldiers of history. Through his labors, "the Hebrew army became what the Assyrian army was in later days, the most highly disciplined and irresistible force in Western Asia." (Sayce, Ibid.) His one passion was dog-like fidelity to his master. When it served David's interests, Joab was ready to commit outrageous crimes and to take the blame upon himself. He led his army from victory to victory, and contrived to have the credit go to David. On more than one occasion he terrorized David, and forced him to discharge the duties that his position required. It was largely due to him that "the kingdom of Israel was passing into an empire."

The rising power of David brought terror to the heart of the Philistines. In several successful encounters David broke their power, and thus at last established the independence of Israel Without undertaking any offensive wars, he was compelled, in self-defense, to crush Moab, Zobah, Damascus, Edom, and Ammon. The ancient seer exalted his ascendency on the political horizon in these words: "A star hath come out of Jacob, and a scepter hath arisen out of Israel. He hath smitten the princes of Moab, and hath destroyed the children of Sheth. And Edom hath become his possession; Seir, also, the possession of its enemy. And Israel doeth valiantly." (Numbers XXIV: 17-18.) At a time when Assyria-Babylonia and Egypt were weakened by inner dissentions, David was enabled to establish the strongest monarchy of his day in the Orient.

David was a born leader of men. He knew how to impress them and how to win their confidence. When Saul became king, he continued to reside in his native village in the simplicity of former days. David, however, felt that the king's power rests in a great measure on prestige. The very first act of his reign over Israel was, therefore, the selection of a new capital that, by its central loca-

n and splendor, would command the respect of all the people. It was a stroke of true statesmanship and of military foresight that he chose the city of Jerusalem. The city still belonged to the Jebusites. He therefore proceeded to capture the fortress of Zion, and to make it his capitol. As the territory on which this city was located belonged to no tribe, much jealousy and ill-feeling were avoided for the time being. From a military standpoint, also, his selection was ideal. Standing on a rocky plateau, and surrounded on three sides by deep ravines, Jerusalem formed a natural fortress which, almost without further help of man, was impregnable. Thus the city which has grown inseparable from the poetry and religion of the world may be considered the creation of King David. He beautified it, and, with the help of Phoenician architects and builders, erected a royal palace and fortifications. David also organized his court on a large scale. He himself acted as chief justice before whom the weighty matters were brought. A scribe acted as his private secretary. A council of "friends of the king" advised him in important matters of state, whereas the business affairs of the country were in charge of a special official. The citizen army of about thirty thousand men was headed by Joab. A bodyguard of mercenaries and a band of picked soldiers were conspicuous for their services to the king.

But what is most important, David appreciated the genius of Israel. To create an ideal of common interest that would bind the hearts of all Israel to Jerusalem, David brought there the Ark of God, which, after its return from Philistine captivity, had been kept in obscurity all during the reign of Saul. In military pomp, and in great popular celebration, in which David took the leading part, the Ark was carried to Jerusalem, which henceforth became the City of God. The stirring rhythm of the twenty-fourth Psalm re-echoes for us the solemn strain of that occasion. Thousands of voices, to the accompaniment of harps, cymbals, timbrels, and cornets, joined David in his song:

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors;
And the King of glory shall enter.
Who is this King of glory?
The Lord strong and mighty,
The Lord mighty in battle."

(cf Cornill: His. of Israel, chapters 2-3.)

Two priests, Abiathar and Zadok, assisted by a retinue of Levites, were placed in charge of the sacred shrine, though David himself exercised priestly functions. Tradition is right in looking upon him as the founder of the Temple service. Though the building of the famous Temple of Jerusalem was left to his son, Solomon, he instituted the first solemn musical services in the holy city. And his poems, fragments of which are incorporated in our book of Psalms, were among the first songs of praise sung in the holy city.

"Music of stringed instruments," says Ben Sirach. "he ordained before the altar,
And set the singing of psalms to the harp.
He gave comeliness to the feasts,
And set in order the seasons throughout the year,
For that he gave praise to His Holy Name.
Before morning, the sanctuary resounded therewith."

The life of David would have been as brilliant as a bright summer morning had he not drawn one dark cloud upon himself which steadily grew until the storm of rebellion broke out. Smitten with a guilty passion for the beautiful Bath-Sheba, he caused the death of her husband, Uriah—a Hittite soldier in his service—and then took her into his harem. Such events are quite common in the lives of crowned heads. The morality of the kings and emperors of present day Europe is not above this course of action. However, few kings have had David's moral courage to confess their sin and repent of their evil. It has been well said that the great sin of David would—despite its dire consequences—have long been forgotten had it not been for his heartfelt repentance and for the contrite spirit in which he received Prophet Nathan's rebuke.

His repentance did not, however, remove the consequences of his sin. It left a trail of sorrow and of anguish that embittered his life as well as the life of the whole nation. One of his sons, Amnon, followed his example and disgraced a half-sister, Tamar. In consequence, Amnon was killed by the heir-apparent, Absalom. Fearing his father's wrath, Absalom fled from the land of Israel. After years of banishment, he—with the help of Joab—returned home; [illegible] a deep estrangement remained between him and David. When Absalom saw that he had forfeited his chance to [illegible] his father as king he raised the [illegible] of rebellion against David. Through sweet words of flattery he seduced the discontented among the masses, and, with their help, proclaimed himself king in the old Judean capitol of Hebron.

The account of this conflict between father and son, in the second book of Samuel (chapters 15-19) is one of the most remarkable in the history of the world's best literature. Like King Lear, in Shakespeare's drama, David experienced the ingratitude of his child; but, unlike King Lear, he retained his reason and his affection for his prodigal son. Taking up his abode in the East Jordan territory, he mustered his well-tried forces and marshalled them against the rebels, giving strict orders to his generals to spare his son's life. Joab was not so overscrupulous about the king's command; and, acting in the higher interests of David and of the country, murdered the rebel prince, and brought the revolution to a hasty end. The king was shocked by the news. "The fondness which had shown itself in early indulgence" broke out in uncontrolled grief: "O, my son Absalom, my son; my son Absalom, would that I had died in thy place, Absalom, my son, my son!" The victory was turned into mourning that day, because the people heard the king grieving for his son. "They stole away to the city, as people steal away who are ashamed of having fled the battle." Thereupon, Joab appeared with words of rebuke before the king: "Thou hast shamed today the face of all thy servants who saved thy life and the life of thy sons and daughters, and the life of thy wives and concubines, by loving thine enemy, and hating them that love thee. Thy conduct declares that princes and officers are nothing to thee, for I know that if Absalom were alive and all of us were dead this day, then thou wouldst be pleased. Rise, go forth and speak to the heart of thy servants; for, by the life of God, I swear that if thou dost not go, not a man will tarry with thee this night; and this will be worse unto thee than all the evil that has come upon thee, from thy youth until now." (2 Sam. 19:1ff.) These stern words of truth aroused David from his grief to resume the leadership of his country. The unconquerable rivalry of the tribes again threatened to break the unity of the land; but Joab again slew the rebel leaders, and enforced peace. (See H. P. Smith's Commentary on Samuel.)

David returned to Jerusalem in triumph, but he was not destined to enjoy his last years in peace. The famine—the frequent scourge of Palestine—afflicted the land; and a plague broke out among the people. This last visitation was interpreted by the people as God's punishment for David's sinful conduct in taking a census of the people. The notion was "common to primitive religions that man should not inquire into these secrets which the gods prefer to keep to themselves. The number of inhabitants of a country is such a secret; hence the wrath of Yahweh, at the census" (H. P. Smith: Old Testament History, page 151.)

The noble and self-sacrificing bearing of David, the faithful shepherd, at this time of the people's distress, reminds us of the self-effacement of Moses. "When David saw the angel that smote the people," writes the author of 2 Samuel (our chief historic source of the period), "David spake unto the Lord, and said: 'Lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly; but these sheep, what have they done? Let Thine hand, I pray Thee, be against me and against my father's house.'"

On other occasions, too, David showed his genuine concern for the life of his people. Once, when he was in his fortress and the Philistines held Bethlehem, he expressed his desire for a drink of water from his favorite well of his native city. Three heroic soldiers broke through the enemy's lines and brought the water to David. But he refused to drink it; and, pouring it out as an offering to God, said: "Far be it from me, O Lord, that I should do this. Is not this the blood of the men that went at the risk of their lives?"

His high regard for the lives of other men was but one expression of his deep religious feeling. Josephus speaks of him as "endowed with all the virtues that were desirable in a king. He was prudent and moderate, and kind to such as were under any calamities; he was righteous and humane." (Antiquities, Bk. VII, chap. 15.) He was, indeed, the child of his day. He shared many of its superstitions and cruelties. But he also rose in spiritual outlook above the vast majority of his contemporaries. In an age of barbarism he was a man of remarkable refinement of feeling.

David, in the forty years of his reign, united Israel, created the Jewish state, and raised the city of Jerusalem to world prominence. His political creations have long since disappeared; but his spiritual qualities live on. Greater than his achievements was his charming personality. In the tradition of the people, he is lovingly treasured as a king according to God's own heart. (Psalm LXXXIX: 20-37.) The world remembers him as the morning-star of sacred song.

Of all the heroes of antiquity that live in the affection of the ever-changing generations, none can equal the brave, wise, spiritual-minded David, the great king of the small people of Israel, the greatest personage since Moses, a man not without faults, but with great virtues, a true leader of men and a prince of God.

He is Israel's true national hero, whose name runs through all Israel's history and Israel's dreams. The popular mind loved to linger on him. Like Barbarossa of the German legend, he is not dead; he only sleeps. "David melek Yisroel hai vekayom!"—"David, the King of Israel, still lives!" calls the Jew in one of his prayers. And at the proper time, says the legend, this great liberator will wake from his slumber of the ages, and will reappear to establish the much hoped for Messianic kingdom, and to restore the ancient grandeur of his beloved people, Israel. And one of his descendants, endowed like him with the genius of leadership, will extend the kingdom over all mankind, and inaugurate the era of peace and good will on earth.

RUSSIAN MINISTERS AND THE JEWS.

The Minister of the Interior, M. Chvostov, received a Jewish deputation, headed by Rabbi Katzenelbogen, of Petrograd, with regard to the extension of the exemption of rabbis from military service to the rabbis who are refugees from the territories invaded by the enemy. The Minister of the Interior adopted a favorable attitude towards the petition.

The Minister of Justice, M. Makaroff, has announced that there are no prospects for any increase of the percentage norm of Jewish lawyers now in force.

In well informed circles it is stated that the reconstructed Russian cabinet shelved the entire Jewish question, and all discussions on it which took place before the retirement of M. Sazonoff have been postponed until the restoration of peace in Europe. The new Minister of the Interior, M. Chvostov, and his colleagues decline to recognize the urgency of the Jewish problem, and although they admit that some of the anti-Jewish laws may be very antiquated, they do not think it desirable at present to introduce any change even in the domicile restrictions.

The Relations of the Jews to the War

In the series of lectures on the war, which was arranged by the B'nai B'rith lodges of Berlin, Judicial Counsellor Horwitz spoke before a large audience on the subject of "The Relation of the Jews to the War." After some introductory remarks about the general sentiment, the change of all standards of values and the alteration of views in general, the speaker continued:

"There was a time, and it is not long ago, when malevolent people asserted that the Jews are exclusively a commercial people, and they lack all martial propensity and capability. A short retrospect in the history of the Jews convinces one that this is one of the unjustified reproaches. At the time when the Jews had their own kingdom, their history was a chain of wars, a chain of victories. The Jews participated in the Persian wars, in the battles of the Maccabees, in the Barkokba revolt. They were in the ranks of the Arabs in their war against Spain; later they were fighters in the Spanish army. The Jews were successful as defenders of Prague. In Prussia it was made obligatory upon the Jews to join the army by the edict of March 11, 1812. In the war of liberation the Jews rushed in multitudes to take up arms. In the then small Prussian army there were more than 1,000 Jewish soldiers, two-thirds of whom were volunteers. Hardenberg has publicly acknowledged the good fighting qualities of the Jews of that time, and the Jew edict of 1847 also described how the Jews did their duty in those wars. Fontane, who was no special friend of the Jews, also reports in the same sense of the war of 1866. When in 1870 all eyes were turned towards the south of Germany, Levy, a Jewish member of Parliament from the Palatinate, which, according to all expectations was bound to become the theater of the war, said: 'Among us all parties are united; we want to be Germans and go with our German brothers.' Five thousand Jews took part in the war of 1870, 10 per cent were killed or wounded, 8 per cent received the iron cross.

"And now we come to the present war! Up to the time of the war enough elements were at work which would have made it comprehensible if the Jews should have gone to the war without any enthusiasm. But great strength of character and love of the fatherland made them forget what happened before. The mobilization was ordered on the first of August, and already on the third of August appeared a proclamation of the Union of German Jews and the Central Association of the Citizens of the German States of the Jewish faith which demanded of every Jew that he should not only do his duty, but that he should do more and voluntarily devote his service to the utmost limit to the fatherland. We all know the wonderful way in which these words were heeded.

"Malevolent people wanted to dispute the Germanism of the Jews. What is the general meaning of Germanism? Only after the wars in the beginning of the 19th century the nations became conscious of what it meant to be a nation. This was developed from the self-conscious national feeling. The self-consciousness continued to increase and became nationalism, the feeling of nationality turned into intolerent national pride. The heroism of loud words strutted along; it reached the idea of the noble race and the Jews were designated as inferiors (Chamberlain). It is interesting how the war has overthrown nationalism while the feeling of nationality rose to unlimited heights. In reality the German Jews are nationally Germans. The Jews belong to the state in which they live. The will of the individual decides to which nation he is to belong. This will to select the nation can give to the individual that attachment to and love for the nation which are necessary for the awakening of the national feeling and the readiness to sacrifice everything for the fatherland. How splendidly this has now shown itself among us Jews; thousands rushed voluntarily to take up arms. There is hardly a family which has not some relatives in the field; women and children offer whatever they can. But we also see the recognition; about 1,000 Jews have already received the iron cross. With satisfaction we can positively affirm that among convicted spies not one Jew was found. It is generally acknowledged that we have made good. The anti-Semitic papers have been suppressed, wherever they did not change their policy for business reasons. The administrative principles which were antagonistic to the Jews have disappeared, Jews have become officers. Before the war we would not have believed that a Jewish teacher of Berlin would become a Lieutenant and Knight of the Iron Cross, first and second class. The rabbis, called by the authorities to act as field chaplains, are doing a work full of extraordinary blessings. They are pioneers of our cause.

"We ask wherefor do we bring our sacrifices which cannot be expressed in words? In the first place we fight for the general German cause, for the existence of the fatherland, so that we can develop. In his words, 'I no longer know any parties, I only know Germans,' the kaiser has expressed all that which comprises everything that is great in this war. There are no longer Jews who have less rights, there are no longer parties who have the preference, now there are Germans only. This principle is of the highest significance for us, especially the thought which is to be found therein of the accentuation of the common tie that we all are citizens of the state.

"The Jews have been reproached for unwillingness to follow agricultural pursuits. This is positively unjustified and unsubstantiated, because there is nothing more valueless to the community than the possession of manors attained by inheritance and not by personal effort. Farming would be unable to exist without commerce. The war shows how groundless are the claims made by some classes that they are superior to others. The war has further brought before us the value of personality. Courage, disregard of death, a feeling of responsibility and a strong consciousness of duty have been awakened. Only one who is true to himself can accomplish something. The best Jew, who adheres faithfully to Judaism, will also be the best German. After all this we can hope that the Jews will obtain by their great efforts their position within the German nation. But we must also be watchful that it should never be forgotten that the unity of all has made Germany great. We were not liked in Germany, and Germans were not liked in the world. The same faults with which we are reproached, the world also finds in the Germans. Let us work for it that the mistakes with which we are justly taxed shall cease to exist. But if at any time our position should be attacked, then we will defend ourselves and stand up for our right, for this is German and this is Jewish. The war is still raging and we still must vow to risk everything for the dear fatherland. Let each one see to it that everything is done to make our fatherland great and to preserve the unity of which it is in need. Let us place our fatherland above everything and let us strive to retain for all time the significance of the words: 'Deutschland, Deutschland ueber alles, ueber alles in der Welt.'"—Israelitisches Familienblatt.

SPINOZA, THE JEW

DR. S. M. MELAMED

Baruch Spinoza, a descendant of a fugitive Jew from Portugal, was a maker of lenses, wrote philosophical books in Latin, and was buried in the cemetery of a church. This Portuguese Jew of Amsterdam, a pupil of Rabbi Saul Mortara, became the revered teacher of Goethe and Herder, the trusted guide of Bismark and Jacobi. Baruch Spinoza, who was a disciple of Rabbi Chasadai Crescas, has had a greater influence on the development of Christian theology than any other philosopher. This maker of lenses, whose ancestors were driven from Portugal, who lived in Holland, but had no home of his own, a man without a country, without a fatherland, became the creator of a new and far-reaching philosophy of the State.

Although he himself was the personification of the highest and strongest optimism, he inspired and influenced the writings of Lenau, a most pessimistic poet, who sees only visions of darkness and despair. The dry and matter-of-fact philosopher who reasons in terms of geometry became the teacher and guide of the highly romantic theologian Schleiermacher. In fact, Baruch Spinoza was claimed as an ally by all parties engaged in intellectual contests. The Classicists in Germany put him up as their standard bearer, and so did their Romanticist opponents. Wherever we turn we find Spinoza in the thick of the battle, Spinoza in statecraft (Bismarck), Spinoza in natural philosophy (Binteare, Virchow, Heckel), Spinoza in theology, poetry, history, philology, and in almost everything pertaining to modern culture and civilization.

This statement may sound like an exaggeration, but there is abundant evidence to show that it is impossible to overestimate Spinoza's influence.

Max Gruenwald, in a rather voluminous and dry book, shows how Spinoza influenced German philosophy and poetry. From Leibnitz down to Niezsche and Hartman, every German philosopher and poet, Gruenwald proves, was in some way, either positively or negatively, influenced by Spinoza. There has not been a single question discussed in Germany which does not introduce Spinoza. He is exalted to the skies by some, and dragged in the dust by others, but none can afford to ignore him.

Ruelius, Tuluck and Linde have written large volumes on Spinoza's influence on Belgium and Holland. His influence on modern Italy is described in a book by Trinius. French writers like Sane and Boulier have discussed Spinoza's influence on French thought in large volumes. At this very moment hundreds of philosophical and historical writers are sitting in their libraries and poring over the books of Spinoza and the results of their studies and investigations are published in numerous books which are bought and read by tens of thousands of people with profit and delight.

The outstanding fact is this: Here is the Jew, Spinoza, a lens grinder in Amsterdam, who lived a short and unhappy life, and who died as he had lived, alone, excommunicated by his own people and alienated from the world at large, and this Jew turns out to be a creative and fructifying force in European civilization, a leavening power, the light and sun of a new era. Many a great man who flourished during the past two centuries may be passed over in silence. We can describe the history of modern European culture without even mentioning some of the men who in their time were considered great and influential. But it is impossible to give an account of modern European civilization without mentioning Spinoza. Could anybody write the history of Christianity with the Apostle Paul being left out? Or the history of socialism without Karl Marx? Or the history of modern Germany without Bismarck?

What sort of a man was this Spinoza? What was the secret of his power and influence?

A few years ago a German philosopher said: "There are two classes of men, Kantists and Spinozaists. The cold and dry rationalists hold fast to Kant—knowingly and unknowingly. But men of living souls and eager for life, poetry and true philosophy cling to the teachings of the Amsterdam Jew." This would make Spinoza a Romanticist.

The Jewish philosopher, Herman Kohn. who follows in Kant's footsteps, opposes his great fellow-Jew, accuses him of being only a theologian, and tries to show the errors into which Spinoza has fallen in his "Ethics." According to Kohn, Spinoza is merely a theologian, and nothing more.

Chamberlain, the hater of Judaism, sees in Spinoza a dry rationalist, because he applied in his philosophy "the geometrical method," and blames the modern philosophers for accepting Spinoza as their guide. This view puts Spinoza down as a dry rationalist.

In going over the history of modern philosophy we find that each writer has a Spinoza of his own, formed and shaped by individual taste and predeliction. It is, therefore, not so easy to give a satisfactory answer to the question: What was Spinoza, this man of power and influence unparalleled in the history of the human mind?

Frederick Nietzsche, endowed with a sort of prophetic insight, has a little poem entitled "To Spinoza," in which he expresses the opinion that beneath the outward calm and "Love of God" there was glimmering in Spinoza's soul the fire of resentment against Judaism.

Niezsche, as usual, overstates the matter. But he hit upon the truth. Spinoza is a psychological problem, which Nietzsche, the great psychologist, came nearest in solving. He recognized the true character of Spinoza, as no other philosopher had done before. The extremes met. Nietzsche, the poet overflowing with sentiment, and the artist with superabounding fancy looked upon Spinoza and recognized in him his opposite. Nietzsche's keen perception discerned the Jewish soul in Spinoza. For Spinoza was neither a rationalist nor a mystic, neither a theological philosopher nor a statesman. He was simply a Jew. For all that is typically Jewish is to be found in Spinoza. The essence of Judaism is in the peculiar habit of thought. The contents of Judaism are subject to change and development, but the Jewish manner of thought stands unchangeable in the midst of general changes, and forms an inner unity in the diversified phenomena of life. The contents of Judaism are not strictly defined and of a uniform character. They rather undergo changes in every generation. But the Jewish type of thought is fixed and unalterable. And this Jewish type unmistakably reveals itself in Spinoza.

This seemingly paradoxical statement can be verified by indisputable proofs.

Spinoza called his large work wherein his system of philosophy is laid down, "Ethics," although in the same book he treats of metaphysics, sociology, etc. In giving to his book the title of "Ethics," Spinoza undoubtedly intended to intimate that the prime purpose of his philosophy was morality. And indeed, when we go through his work we find that the ethical element is predominant and that subjects that have apparently no direct ethical bearing are nevertheless treated and discussed with reference to ethical principles. The same thing may be observed in his lesser works. Philosophers of other nations occupy themselves mostly with metaphysics and with the constitution of the State, and to ethics they pay comparatively little attention. Even Kant, whose philosophy was impelled by ethical motives, devoted most of his writings to the discussion of problems in metaphysics and the laws of cognition. In Descartes' system, ethics occupy a very small place. And the same holds good in all the German, French and English philosophers, with the exception of Hobbes, the philosopher of the power of the State. Nor is this the case with modern philosophers alone. Of the twenty-one volumes of Plato, the father of philosophy, only two are devoted to ethics, namely, the "Laws" and "The State." Aristotle, his disciple and opponent, pays still less attention to ethical questions.

Why did Spinoza differ in this from all other philosophers? The answer is not far to seek. Spinoza was a Jew, and the ethical sense is highly developed in the Jew. It is a peculiarity of the Jewish type, which no Jew is able to shake off. It is in the blood of the Jew to turn his thoughts to ethics. Our sacred Scriptures contain plenty of metaphysical and philosophical ideas, but the permanent feature in them is the ethical part. Most of the renowned Jewish philosophers of our modern times have dealt principally with ethics. Steinthal, Lazarus, Herman Kohn, Stamler, Ludwig, Stein, Worms, Levy Brill, and a number of others all have made ethics their life-study.

But the prominence given by Spinoza to ethics is not the only thing which marks Spinoza as a Jew. It is also in his method and manner of constructing his system of philosophy that he shows the traits of the Jew.

At the very beginning of his inquiry into the foundation of our knowledge he shows the Jewish spirit. Unlike his teacher, Descartes, he does not stop to consider the question whether or no it was possible to know, but starts at once to lay down definitions and propositions in which it is taken for granted that knowledge is possible. Descartes took great pains and vainly tried all kind of reasoning to establish the truth that knowledge is possible, until he suddenly remembered that he had the best proof right at hand. He was thinking! And he joyfully exclaimed, 'cognito ergo sum (I think, hence I am). Spinoza, on the other hand, proceeds in a different manner. He begins his "Ethics" with this plain and simple definition. "A cause in itself I understand to be a thing with essence which involves existence, or a thing the nature of which could not be conceived without existence."

Again, instead of discussing the question of the possibility or the necessity of the existence of the substance, its nature, its attributes, he simply lays down this definition. "By substance I understand that which is by itself and can be conceived by itself."

Are we not reminded here of the style of the Scripture which starts: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth?" The Jewish mind points at direct cognition, and does not recognize any indirect cognition the source of which is reasoning analysis. Every true cognition, so the Jewish mind reasons, has its basis in the direct intuition, by which we are enabled to see the existence of the changing world and the present appearances which pass away. However, so Spinoza taught in the true Jewish way, it is impossible to know the Deity in any indirect way, or by means of anything outside of the Deity, because God himself is the substance and source of all perceptible things. Can the creature go beyond its creator?

Briefly expressed, the distinguishing characteristic of Spinoza's system of philosophy is that it is synthetic and intuitive, a characteristic which is typical of the Jewish mind. It is this characteristic which caused some students of philosophy to call Spinoza a dogmatic. For while it is customary for every constructor of a new philosophic system to give a critical analysis of the older systems, Spinoza did not do so and started instead in true Scripture style.

And this brings us to point out a peculiar similarity between the sacred Scriptures and Spinoza's works. For the last two thousand years our Bible has been the oracle which was consulted by every new religious movement, and there is at present hardly any religious sect or denomination that does not cite the Bible in support of its claims. Something similar happened to Spinoza's system of philosophy. As already intimated above, for every new philosophic system a relationship is claimed with Spinoza's system, and its merits are examined in the light of that system.

Judaism and Spinozaism, we are safe in asserting, have this one thing in common, that they are both founded upon the thought of eternity. Spinoza, like the prophets of Israel, looked at the word sub specie eternitatis (from the viewpoint of eternity). This synthetic-intuitive thought, combined with the eternal idea—that is, the ideas which are drawn from the original sources of life and spirit—have made it possible for Judaism to find room for every new intellectual phenomenon (and such is the case also with Spinozaism) provided, however, that it does not destroy the Jewish type. If there is this danger, then Judaism pushes it away with all its might and power. This happened when Christianity made its appearance. For as long as there is no danger to the Jewish type of thought, any intellectual movement may find a place in Judaism. There are within the Jewish field, the Hassidim, the Misnagdim, the Idealists and Positivists, Aristoteleans (Maimonides) and Platonists (The Jewish popular metaphysics is in the main Platonic), and they dwell under one roof, because of the typical Jewish conception which is based upon the idea of eternity and the synthetic-intuitive thought. The Jewish type, however, must be safeguarded.

There remains one other important point which shows Spinoza's Jewish way of thinking. Greek philosophy generally starts with the cognition of the world and nature; later philosophy with cognition itself. Spinoza, however, starts with the cognition of God. He begins where others end. The dictum of Descartes: "I think, therefore I am," was adopted by modern philosophy as a program in the sense that henceforth the start is to be made with the critical investigation of cognition. This order of procedure is followed by all modern philosophers. But Spinoza, in true Jewish style, begins with the Deity.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the presence of the Jewish spirit in Spinoza's philosophy is manifested by the following four things: (1) Its ethical tendency and purpose. (2) Its synthetic-intuitive reasoning. (3) The thought of eternity. (4) It commences with the Deity.

Nor is this all. There are two more points which I will merely mention, although they deserve fuller treatment. The one is Spinoza's strenuous emphasis upon the absolute unity of the universe, while most of other systems of philosophy show a tendency towards dualism, even that of the transcendental Kant. The other is his "amor dei intellectualis" (the intellectual love of God), a phrase which is pre-eminently Jewish, since the Jew has always insisted that Knowledge of God is the prerequisite for loving Him. 'And thou shalt love God with all thy heart" (the heart being considered the seat of intelligence).

To sum up: An examination of Spinoza's works reveals him to have been a typical Jew inspired by the true Jewish spirit.

And yet, Judaism and Spinozaism do not coincide, and Spinoza's God is not the God of Israel. The God of Israel is the sovereign of the law; He stands above the law, and His actions are not the result of necessity, for He is a personal God and independent, while Spinoza's God has no personality and is not free, being subject to law. Spinoza's God is the spiritual extension of Nature, while according to the Jewish conception the physical creation is the extension of the Deity. The throne of Israel's God is in "heaven" while that of Spinoza's is on earth. In a word: The God of Spinoza is a "compound substance," while the God of Israel is a "single substance."

But Spinoza's God-conception was not the only cause for his being excommunicated. There was another and perhaps the chief cause—and that was his attempt to introduce a foreign element into the Jewish mode of thought. A Deity in the role of an extension of Nature was intolerable to the Jewish mind. The offensiveness of this attempt was aggravated by the fact that he published his books in Latin and thereby deserted the Jewish fold. Many other Jewish thinkers went in their negative criticism even further than Spinoza, but they remained within the Jewish camp; that is, they wrote in Hebrew and raised a fuss, so to speak, in their own homes. But to criticise Judaism in a Latin book, that was quite a different thing. The Jews of Amsterdam who had to flee from the papal Rome saw in the Latin tongue a menace to the preservation of the Jewish type, this tongue being the official language of papal Christianity and the vehicle of expression for a foreign and hostile culture. Hence, Spinoza was cast out.

In looking back upon Spinoza from the standpoint of universal history, we are impressed with the fact that here we have the most gigantic experiment that was ever made to harmonize Jewish and European thought, and the experiment failed because of the difference in type. Spinoza's philosophy as well as his life is of a tragic character. Unable to get away from the Jewish type, he was thwarted in his supreme effort to transplant the European type upon Jewish soil. Judaism, that is, the Jewish type, rejects and casts out any foreign element that would endanger its existence. It had repudiated Christianity and it repudiated Spinoza. His attempt to intermix the Jewish type with the European proved an utter failure, and he himself remained essentially a Jew, somewhat spoiled by European modes of thought.

Spinoza the Jew—herein lies the secret of his influence, his power and his greatness.—The American Jewish Chronicle.

POLISH LEADERS AND THE JEWS.

The Polish deputy, M. Harusevitch, has made a statement at Moscow on the future of the Jewish rights in an autonomous Poland. He stated that not only he, but all his Polish colleagues in the Duma, were of the opinion that in the new Poland there would be no religious or national restriction in force for any citizens.

Professor Yavorsky, President of the Polish Corseil National Supreme, has published, in the Lausanne periodical "La Pologne aux Polonaises," a gratifying statement on the Jewish question. Poland, he asserted, must deal with the Jews in accordance with the methods of Western Europe. It must endeavor to strengthen their ties to the country by giving them political equality. Poland must also demand of the Jews wholehearted devotion to the country, but that will only become possible when Poland opens to them the road to culture and their welfare. Only in such a manner have the Jews in Western Europe become good Frenchmen, Englishmen, Italians, etc.

Rumania, the Jews, and the War

Interview for the Jewish Chronicle (London) with the Haham, Dr. Moses Gaster

There are few men in Jewry, certainly none outside the country itself, who know Rumania and its problems—particularly the Jewish question there—better than the learned Haham, Dr. Gaster. Dr. Gaster is not only a native of Rumania, but his family have been resident there for generations. His father who, by the by, will in the course of a few days be celebrating his eightieth birthday, and is happily in a state of health and strength usually associated with vigorous middle-age, held a high position in the Diplomatic Service at Bucharest. Dr. Gaster, although he was compelled to leave Rumania many years ago for political reasons, has long since been an intimate friend of the Rumanian Court, and only a short time ago received from Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, a charming letter, not in the least of a formal nature, in reference to his book on Rumanian Folklore, which was noticed at some length in our columns a few months ago. The learned Haham was good enough to place himself at the disposal of the Jewish Chronicle in order to give his views on the position of affairs from the Jewish standpoint, consequent on Rumania's decision to join the Allies in the present struggle.

"The situation has changed completely," said Dr. Gaster, "now that Rumania has come into the war, now that she has taken her place side by side with the Allies, who have inscribed upon their banners the hope of freedom for Europe and the emancipation of nationalities. The Jewish question in Rumania is no longer localized to that country. The declaration of war by Rumania eliminated the Rumanian Jewish question absolutely and completely. The question is not now today what is going to happen to the comparative handful of Jews who reside in Rumania and are Russian subjects. The question is what is going to happen to the Jews in Europe, and the Rumanian Jewish question takes its place as a section of the general problem side by side with the question of the future of the Jews in Russia and the question of what is going to become of the Jews in Poland. There may be other Jewish questions that will emerge from the terrible combat which is now ensuing. That is to say, there may be other centers where the position of Jews before the war was favorable or, at least, tolerable, and which may be very different now that war and all the forces and passions that it has let loose are sweeping over them. The din of battle has drowned many a voice that could be heard once upon a time. The smoke of war has obliterated and clouded much which we regarded once as important. Here, in regard to Rumania, is a case in point. The position of the Jews there was prescribed by the Treaty of Berlin. Today, the Treaty of Berlin is of no importance; to all intents and purposes it is nonexistent. The vast problems and questions which it was supposed to settle must be now re-cast in the light of new events, and it is useless to look at merely this or that single point. It does not help us much to discuss, for instance, what is going to be the position of Jews in, say, Transylvania, which it is generally supposed will go over to Rumania. We know that the position and the condition of the Jews there has been admirable from every point of view. But our Transylvanian co-religionists comprise, after all, only few souls comparatively, and it would merely be diverting our gaze, which ought to be fixed upon the Jewish problem as a whole, for us to turn our eyes to the fate of this small section of our people. It is not a question of Jews here or there in any local center. It is a question now of the Jews in Europe."

A Difficult Position.

And how do you regard the prospects?

"Well, the whole position is extremely difficult and complex and it differs in regard to various countries, although the question in each country is necessarily interdependent one upon another. The Jewish problem qua Jewish must become a problem of international importance. This war is a war of nationalities and not of States. Take the case of Poland. There, the question of Nationality is coming to its own, as it were. It is not the desire of this or that Power to have a new State created, which is bound up with the Polish question for Prussia and the Polish question for Austria. There is no question of a State problem there in either case. You have the same elimination of State problems and the setting up of national problems elsewhere; in the justification set up by Italy for its fighting for the Trentino, just as you have the justification of Rumania for endeavoring to conquer Transylvania. It is a re-uniting of the scattered elements of various nationalities each into its respective nationality. It is no question of conquest or occupying territories of an alien race. It is the cry of nation to nation, striving to be reunited. Now this spirit of nationalism deepened, as it must be, by the experiences, the sufferings, the privations, and the horrors of the ghastliest war in history, will mean that the boundaries of States will be drawn more narrowly. The cosmopolitan character of the modern State will practically disappear. The problem in future, therefore, for the Jew is involved in just this enormous revolution which the war is going to effect. Where will the Jew, alien in nationality everywhere, find his niche and his place? There must be a difficult situation created for the Jew, and the alternative that events are bound to place before him will be alternative of assimilation or annihilation. The difficulty of assimilation, on the one hand, and the unthinkableness of annihilation on the other create a terrible dilemma for the Jew after the war. You see how enormous and far-reaching is the Jew's problem. Where in Europe—I am not quite sure that the range will not be much wider—is the Jew to find his place, with this spirit of national conscientiousness sharpened and accentuated among the various nations as it will be as a result of this war?"

United Jewry Impossible.

How, then, is the Jew to set about solving his problem?

"That cannot be done hurriedly or in an empiric manner. For fixing upon the right and true course which Jews must adopt, they must depend upon the sagacity of themselves, foresee events, and not accordingly. Here, again, the Jew meets with a great and enormous difficulty everywhere. Jewish men of light and of leading who have found no backing, no encouragement among their own people, have turned elsewhere and found it among other peoples, and they have everywhere among those peoples become prominent, spiritual forces. But then, everywhere, has been elsewhere than within the Jewish fold. If there have been forces attracting Jews from devoting their minds, their spirits, their energies to Jewry, so there have been forces within Jewry repelling those men and inducing them to devote themselves to the services of peoples outside Jewry. If you start killing your prophets in the Temple, it ought not to be astonishing that those who are able to prophesy do so elsewhere than in the Temple. It seems to me, however, that one of the essential things for Jews to understand and appreciate, to recognize and face, is the impossibility of absolute unity in Jewry. We constantly prate of Jewish unity. We constantly urge unthinkingly that the voice of Jewry should be one. The thing is impossible. Let us realize facts. There are two separate camps in Jewry, two separate cultures, two diverse aspirations, one to the East and one meandering along the shallows in the West. Each has its part to play. Each has its duty to perform. Each has a territory, so to speak, which needs Jewish irrigation. Each has its distinct path. Let us, then, recognize the fact of these separate streams and try to harmonize the service both can perform to Jewry as a whole. In other words, the two sections of Jewry (of which I have indicated the main division) that exist among us may, and ought to be, coordinated, may, and ought to, assist one and the other for the general benefit. If we try to get them to agree on all things, we shall meet with dismal and disastrous failure. I am convinced that these differing ideas and ideals are based on certain essential differences in point of conception. They are radical and basic. Both of the divisions into which I have broadly separated these ideas and ideals have a great work to do for Judaism and Jewry. Let them do their work each in its own way, consistently with the ideas and ideals of that section. Let them cooperate and co-ordinate their work, if you like. But unless you wish for failure, do not expect them to coalesce."

From the Temporary to the Permanent.

But there are, it is agreed in the main, two definite demands which Jews have to make in regard to their position in the future?

"Yes, but as they are currently detailed they are by no means clear. For instace, there is the demand for equal civic and political rights. But equal to whom? The Moujik in Russia, for example, has certain rights which Jews do not possess. Are the equal rights of the Jew going to be equal to those of the Moujik? I give that only as an instance, to show how loose in fact is this phrase of 'equal rights.' I think we all know what we mean, but so long as you have a phrase that does not adequately express what you mean you must beware of the pitfalls into which you may be led when you come to test the practical application of your demand. You have an excellent instance in this in the Berlin Treaty in regard to the Jews of Rumania. The fact is very much the same in regard to the other section which works for national rights for our people as Jews. That, too, may mean anything. But it is safe to say that the Jewish demand today is divided between that of those who on the one hand claim what is necessary for the temporary temporal position of the Jew, and on the other that of those who look from today to tomorrow for a permanent solution of the Jewish question.

"There is no need for me to tell your readers in which section I range myself," said Dr. Gaster, in conclusion. "I think, to put it succinctly, I am, as the lawyers say, 'on record on the point.' But I look earnestly, wistfully forward from the temporary to the permanent, from today to tomorrow, from the temporal to the spiritual, and am working—as I have always worked—heart and soul for a definite solution of Jewish troubles that shall have in it the elements of permanence. Do not think I look indifferently upon the efforts of those who are engaged in compassing the more immediate necessities of our people, whose whole attention is directed to the countries of our dispersion and not to the land of our redemption. They also play their part in the ultimate redemption of Israel—and the peace for which we pray for all our people."

ISRAEL AND PEACE.

We publish herewith an outline of a lecture on the subject, "Israel and Peace," delivered by Brother Dr. B. M. Kaplan of New York, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, before several lodges of the District:

Judaism as a religion is based upon the ideal of peace. When we compare Judaism with the other ancient religious systems we find peace to be a principle peculiar to the religion of Israel.

In Egypt Osiris is the sworn enemy of Typhon.

In Persia Zoroasterism is based on the idea of eternal conflict between Ormuzd and Ahriman.

In Greece there is the war of the Titans.

In India Brahma and Siva are implacable enemies.

In Judaism one of the appellation of God is "Sholem," meaning peace. The priestly blessing, the most sacred of all blessings, is one of peace.

The Talmud says the reason why the Bible forbids us to "raise iron on the altar" is because destructive instruments are made of it.

The Prophet Isaiah foretold universal disarmament. (See Isaiah 4.) He also said: "And the wolf shall dwell with the lamb," etc., thus pointing to perfect peace in the future.

King David was denied the privilege of building the Temple because as a warrior he shed human blood.

In ancient times when the people of Israel were obliged to go to war on several occasions, the following rules had to be observed: (a) No place was to be besieged without first proposing peace. (b) Trees and water supplies were not to be destroyed. (c) The enemy was not to be put to sword except he be a menace to the morals of Israel as were the Canaanites who were guilty of the grossest immoralities.

The Jews through the teachings of the Bible carried ideals of peace to all the four corners of the world.

The way thousands of thoughtful and humane men and women in this country and other humane lands denounce the present war as murder is in itself proof of Jewish influence through Biblical teachings which are read in all churches, remembering that the Pagan idea of war was that of an honorable and glorious pursuit.

The Hague conference was called by the Czar fifteen years ago as a result of a work against war by a Jew, Jean de Bloch, of Warsaw. The Hague conference with its insistence on arbitration undoubtedly prevented many a clash of arms during these fifteen years.

The famous Jewish international lawyer, Staatsminister Asser, of Holland, was a potent factor at the Peace Conference.

A few years ago Luzzatti resigned his portfolio in the Italian Cabinet because he was against war with Turkey.

Shedding of human blood was repugnant to the true Jewish heart. Even the use of the blood of animals is forbidden by Jewish law.

THE INCREASE OF MIXED MARRIAGES.

The "Israelitisches Wochenblatt" received the following statistical note from Frankfort-on-theMain:

The marriage statistic in the German Empire presents a phenomenon which is increasing in strangeness from year to year. The quota of mixed marriages is constantly growing larger, and this is true of all confessions. In the last number of the "Zeitschrift fuer Demographic und Statistic der Juden" (Journal for the Science of Races and Statistic of the Jews) is given the development of mixed marriages in the first thirteen years of the twentieth century. According to these statistics the proportion of mixed marriages to each 100 of unmixed marriages among the different confessions is as follows: Among the Protestants in the year 1901, 14.65, in the year 1913, 17.48 per cent; among Catholics in the year 1901, 27.18, in the year 1913, 32.54 per cent; among the Jews in 1901, 16.97 in 1913, 30.98 per cent. Several things become conspicuous in the general rising tendency which these figures demonstrate. There is first of all the unusual difference between the percentage of mixed marriages among the Protestants and Catholics. The reason for this different development may probably be found in the fact that the Catholics in Germany form a minority, so that for one marrying Catholic in all the confessionally mixed districts there is a greater opportunity for a mixed marriage than there is for a Protestant. If this explanation should be correct, then properly speaking the percentage among the Jews must still be much greater, for the Jews form only one hundreth part of the population in Germany. Instead of this the percentage of the Jewish mixed marriages is even somewhat smaller than among the Catholics. But this seeming contradiction is easily explained: up to a comparatively short time ago, for religious and social reasons, the Jews lived in an extraordinary exclusive manner, so that that tendency which has influence with the Catholics could have very little effect with the Jews. As a matter of fact in former decades a Christian-Jewish marriage was a great rarity. Only in circles in which the spiritual assimilation had early gained a hold we find a correspondingly premature appearance of the mixed marriage. The best and most known example for this is the polite scholarly Berlin in the beginning of the nineteenth century that grouped itself around the names of Mendelssohn, Devrient, Humboldt, Schlegel, Rahel Varnhagen, Lewald and Herz. It is remarkable with what impetuositv that technically natural tendency of population is gaining ground more and more among the Jews since the beginning of the century. While in 1901 only 17 mixed marriages can be fixed per hundred others, the statistic for 1913 counts already 31 per 100.

HOW RUSSIA TREATS THE HELPLESS JEWS.

A Russian Jew has managed to transmit to co-religionists in this country the circular order sent by General Alexeyev to all chiefs of police. Part of the order follows:

"Since the Jews agitate among the soldiers, urging them to desert, you must keep strict watch over all the Jews of your government, as well as over every single one of them.

"You must very carefully observe what the Jews talk and how they behave in railroad carriages, and especially at the large railroad stations, which are always full of passengers from all ends of Russia.

"The police and the local administration must investigate and keep track of how the Jews live, and what they do and what they say to each other.

"In case of the least suspicion, a Jew should be tried by courtmartial.

"In case that it turns out at the trial that there is no incriminating evidence whatsoever against him, the defendant shall be exiled to Siberia."

The sender of the circular sorrowfully adds this comment:

"From now on every police captain, every police inspector and every policeman has the right to detain every Jew. The slighest suspicion, the least displeasure—and the Jew may be exiled to Siberia. A Jew can no longer feel safe, neither in a railroad train nor at home. He can never know in whose hands lies his fate. He may perish through an accident, through a mistake, through somebody's ill-will."

The strange thing is that there are Americans—and intelligent Americans, too—who are able to persuade themselves that the tyrannical and wicked government which thus abuses these Jewish people is waging a war for the maintenance of liberty and civilization in Europe!—New York "American."

The Jews of Rumania

By LEON FERARU, LL.M.

Prior to the treaty of Berlin the Jews who were under a foreign protection were officially considered in all documents as natives (pamanteni: "of the soil"). Thus they enjoyed in Moldavia and Wallachia many privileges. The Law of the Urban and Rural Communes of March 13, 1874, in its Article XXIV, which was a vestige of Article XXVI of the Communal Law of March 31, 1864, speaks about the native Jews. On August 31, 1879, Vasile Boeresou, at that time Minister of Foreign Affairs, in a circular dispatch sent to the European Powers, replied in reference to the question as to whether Jews who do not immediately obtain naturalization would remain foreigners. "No, they will continue to be what they have always been—Rumanian subjects," was his reply.

After the Treaty of Berlin, immediately after Boersou's statement, the constitution made all the Jews "aliens." And the word "Jew" has not since been found in the Rumanian laws and regulations. There are only Rumanians and aliens in that country. To be more accurate, Article VII of the Constitution mentions a category of aliens "who have been born in Rumania of parents domiciled in the country, and have, neither in their own case, nor in that of their parents, at any time been in the enjoyment of any foreign protection." The restrictive laws and regulations which make life impossible for the Jews in the realm of the Blue Danube, mention merely the word aliens, or use paraphrases with the intention of avoiding the expression, "native Jews." The law for the control of the alien, "who is born in Rumania of parents not subjected to any foreign country."

Thus in response to Article XLIV ot the Treaty of Berlin, which granted her independence on condition that she emancipate her Jews, Rumania not only ignored the stipulations of the treaty, but even changed the legal status of the Jews for the purpose of further estranging them.

Consequently, as long as a native Jew lives in Rumania he is an alien. His status is that of an alien. He does not enjoy political rights and is restricted in his civil rights. Nevertheless, as an alien he enjoys religious rights. He is free to build synagogues and worship his God in the manner of his forefathers. Rumanian officials have never compelled or persuaded the Jew to give up his faith, and never has a Christianized Jew gained any particular rights to Rumanian citizenship. A few cases of an altogether different significance had spread fallacious beliefs concerning the matter. The fact remains, however, that the Jewish question in Rumania has not a religious, but a racial aspect.

When a Jew leaves the country, voluntarily or involuntarily, he ceases to be an alien. His passport delivered by the proper authorities, makes him a Rumanian subject. An alien at home and a Rumanian abroad; this legal monstrosity is the Jew of Rumania.

How should the Jews legally be considered in Rumania? As natives, as Rumanian subjects, as a category of Rumanians who do not enjoy political and civil rights, just as the Rumanian peasants are regarded as natives, as Rumanian subjects, as a category of Rumanians who enjoy only a few rights, political and civil. When the Rumanian Constitution will be revised—and the day is not far off—the article which will enfranchise the peasants from their slavery should also emancipate the other slaves of Rumania, the Jews. The Union of Native Jews demands this reform and not the modification of Article VII of the Constitution, which does not concern the Jews, but the aliens.

How long have the Jews been in Rumania? Have they the right to be considered as natives? We will not go back to the ancient epoch of Decebalus, the King of the Daciens. There are documents to prove the existence of Jews in Dacia. Rumanians, as a people, had not yet been born at that time. It is sufficient to read the Rumanian historians to learn that Jews were established in Wallachia in 1317, very soon after the settlement of the principality itself, and that they were in Moldavia before 1391, the year Roman I ascended the throne. Sheaves of dusty parchments still lay on the shelves of the Bucharest Academy to prove the existence of Jews in both principalities through all the following centures, the Middle Age persecutions not sparing them, as a matter of course, in the small realm of the Woewodes of Daco-Roman extraction.

Today there are approximately 300,000 Jews in Rumania, in a general population of 7,500,000. The great majority of them are merchants and handicraftsmen. The only liberal profession which they are free to embrace is that of medicine. And even as physicians they are hampered by the fact that the medical schools at Bucharest and Jassy are anti-Semitic official institutions. There are sporadic cases of Jews being lawyers, architects, professors, but these are exceptions. There is, among the officials of the royal palace at Bucharest one colonel of Jewish ancestry, and there is also one professor of mathematics of Jewish parentage at the Bucharest University.

To be a poet or a playwright in Rumania is not prohibited to the Jew by any special law, but should an author of didactical treatises quote or mention a Jewish poet or playwright, you may be sure that the Ministry of Public Instructions will not approve his treatises. In case a National Theater commits the error of producing a play by a Jew, the students of the universities and their professors start a riot to stop the production of that play. The same treatment is accorded to Rumanian actors of Jewish birth. This state of affairs did not deprive the Rumanian culture of authors like Bonetti Roman and G. Debrogeanu-Charea. Instances may be multiplied ad infinitum.

Jewish life in Rumania is that of slaves, morally as materially. A synopsis of the persecuting legislation would give a slight idea of the handicaps which face the "alien" in Rumania.

The decree of December 4, 1864, limits the profession of law to Rumanians, born or naturalized. The same restriction is made in the case of secretaries to lawyers.

The decree of October 25, 1869, reserves the trade of pharmacy to Rumanians born or naturalized.

The law of February 3, 1872, limits the manufacture and sale of tobacco to Rumanian citizens.

The law of February 3, 1866, requires that the contractors of public works should be only persons possessing civil rights.

The law of February 13, 1873, limits the retail sale of spirituous liquors to Rumanian citizens. This law is enforced only in the rural communes.

In 1881 and 1887, the law of 1868 was enforced, forbidding the settlement of "aliens" in rural communes.

The law of May 12, 1896, imposes a heavy fee upon the "aliens" who attend primary schools, and restricts their number proportionately to the Rumanians.

The laws of February 23, 1893, and March 23, 1898, restrict and in some cases forbid the attendance of "aliens" in the secondary, superior, technical, agricultural and normal schools. The government and local authorities even hinder the maintenance of the private Jewish schools.

The laws of June 8, 1884; June 24, 1886; February 28, 1887; June 22, 1893; January 26, 1894; February 18, 1899, prevent the "aliens" from holding public employments and engaging in the liberal professions; make the "aliens" incapable of acting as stock or trade brokers; exclude them from the Chambers of Commerce and the Artisans' Corporations.

The law of March 15, 1884, prevents the "aliens" from being peddlers.

The law of May 4, 1887, permits "alien" workmen to be admitted in factories in the proportion of one-third "aliens" to two-thirds Rumanians.

The law of March 17, 1907, does not permit an "alien" to exercise a handicraft in Rumania unless he proves reciprocity for Rumanians in his country. This law is not strictly enforced; it serves only as a means to extort hush money from Jewish workmen.

The military law of November 21, 1882, compels "all the inhabitants of the country" to fulfill the duty of military service, exempting only the "subjects of foreign states." This is another skillful evasion of the Rumanian legislation with regard to the Jews. As for the advancement of the Jews in the army, "Service in the army is a duty, while the rank of officer is a public function reserved for Rumanian citizens."

As "aliens," the Jews are liable to expulsion from rural communes, as well as from the country itself. As "aliens," also, they cannot agitate publicly of their emancipation, use the press of the same aim, or petition to the king or parliament. They have no right of entry in the public hospitals, although they pay taxes for the maintenance of those hospitals. Add to this lot of disabilities the long procession of upholders of local authorities, who are always after the backsheesh in a country putrid with graft and administrative dishonesty, and you have the picture of the Jew of Rumania. A victim in the hands of corrupt officials, upon the background of a slumbering nation of millions of peasants.

To get a glimpse of the attitude of the Rumanian Jews facing their situation we quote from Dr. Adolf Stern's reminiscences, published in 1915, under the title "From the Life of a Rumanian Jew" (Din Vieatza unui Evreu Roman). Dr. Stern is the president of the Union of Native Jews, and the foremost exponent of the Jewish emancipation movement in Rumania.

"The country is good" he writes, "but its management is bad. The Rumanian people, in its deep strata, is not responsible for the deeds of the mass of politicians who have started the persecution of the Jews and exploit an atavistic prejudice for the purpose of making their power secure and ridding themselves of unpleasant competition. And when the social powers of the nation, today enchained, will be liberated, this frivolous game will cease: this odious civil war will end; this fratricidal fight must stop. Heraclitus' words apply in the moral world also: all is movement, all evolves toward progress. The phenomenon of convergence toward culture is a social law, and in our country it will sooner or later overcome all artificial obstacles which stand in its way. Let us not hate, let us not despair; Neither must we be indifferent or passive, but let us struggle for the triumph of liberty! This advice I bequeath to my brothers in distress."

The bitterness of these words can be felt only by those who once breathed the Rumanian atmosphere. The war has made impossible the continuation of the Jewish emancipation movement in Rumania. The Premier exercises dictatorship there. The new law for the control of the aliens has been enforced for the sole purpose of expelling the Jews from the frontier towns into the interior of the country. The local authorities have driven away even Jews who enjoy Rumanian citizenship, who fought for Rumanian independence in 1877-78, who took part in the military occupation of Bulgaria in 1913, and who are now serving in the army.

The ministerial order provided for the expulsion of "alient". Faithful to their usual interpretation, the local authorities struck the Jews without discrimination, and the real aliens were not troubled at all.

THE JEWS AT VERDUN.

The capital of the Meuse, for the capture and defense of which one of the most sanguinary contests throughout the war, or perhaps of any war in history, is being fought, contains a small Jewish community of some fifty families, or rather did before the present struggle in which so much of Europe is engaged, began. But it has an ancient Jewish history, for Jews lived there in the twelfth century, and Verdun produced three scholars of note, R. Samuel ben Hayyim and two brothers Rabbis Samuel and Jacob benay Joseph. After that period Jews were not allowed to reside in the town or even to pass through it, and this restriction was not removed by the Council of Basel when a petition was presented to that body asking that Jews might be permitted to return to Verdun so as to relieve the then financial situation. Henri IV, Louis XIII, XIV and XV, however, all granted letters patent permitting Jews to visit Verdun for short business sojourns, but so short that a Jew who in 1774 remained in the city for three days was expelled. In 1748 the Jews of Metz had endeavored to obtain permission for their brethren to reside in Verdun, but the merchants, goldsmiths, tailors, second-hand dealers, and particularly the "echevins"—the guild wardens—of the city raised furious opposition and the permission was refused. It was not till the Revolution of 1789 that Jews could live in Verdun, and the present community was founded in 1792.

ENGLISH TRADE UNION CONGRESS DEMANDS EQUAL RIGHTS FOR JEWS.

The Trades Union Congress, which was held in Birmingham, England, at the beginning of this month, adopted two resolutions that deal with Jewish rights in various lands. The first calls upon the English Government "to urge upon our allies and the governments of neutral nations" to cease all discriminations against Jews. It further requests that "the British representatives shall endeavor to include in the peace treaty whenever the terms and peace conditions for the conclusion of the present war will be discussed, a guarantee for political and civil rights of the Jews and other nationalities who are subjected to such disabilities."

Social Service Dept. I. O. B. B.

Last May the Social Service Department of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith was asked to provide a Big Brother for a Jewish lad named Thomas Shapiro, who was running around in the neighborhood, apparently beyond parental control. The facts were investigated and found to be correct. A member of the Order was appointed as Big Brother and he took steps at once to influence the future conduct of Thomas. Very little was accomplished, because soon after, Thomas ran away from Chicago with two other boys, and could not be located.

Early in September, Doctor Coffee returned from his vacation and found a note from the Big Brother of Thomas, stating that the dead body of Thomas Shapiro had been found outside the city of Toledo, Ohio, alongside the railroad tracks on August 29th. Two boys, one of them Samuel Edelson, Jewish, were imprisoned in Toledo, suspected of having murdered Thomas. The following week, on September 12th, Doctor Coffee visited Toledo Lodge to speak at the fall meeting. In company with Brothers Harry Levison and Rabbi David Alexander, members of the Toledo Social Service Committee, Doctor Coffee visited the District Attorney and also the two boys in prison. According to their story, the three boys were stealing a ride on a freight train from Toledo to Chicago. Shapiro undoubtedly fell off and was killed by the fall. Brother Levison promised to look after the legal rights of the boys. A careful investigation was made, which showed that there was very little evidence, if any, on which the boys were being detained in prison. When the cases were presented to the Grand Jury, the evidence presented by the detective was attacked as being insufficient to hold these boys for trial on the charge of murder. The following day they were released.

On returning to Chicago, Samuel Edelson visited the Office of the Social Service Department and was referred to the B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau, which will find him a position.

Incidentally, it may be remarked, the families of these two boys had paid a Chicago attorney $200.00 as a retainer, but the boys were released without any aid whatsoever from this lawyer. Without the aid of the Toledo Service Committee, both boys would have undoubtedly been held for murder. They and their families were spared the expense, the shame and mental strain connected with a trial on so serious a charge, by the artive co-operation of this Department.

RUSSIA AND THE JEWS.

How changed the world will be after the war none may say. But it is certain to be a very different world. The announcement that a bill is to be introduced into the Russian Duma giving Jews equal rights is one very significant indication of the transformation that is coming over the great empire which is now fighting side by side with England, France and Italy for human liberty. The old oppression of a race will plainly be impossible under the new dispensation. That Jews offered a peculiar problem to the Russian Government must be admitted. But there never was any valid reason for the unjust discrimination against them, still less for the cruelties practiced upon them by an ignorant and hostile population. How the United States regarded the attitude of Russia on this question was shown when it made a firm stand for the rights of its own Jewish citizens on Russian soil. Public sentiment in the nations that are now Russia's allies is at one with us in this matter. Russia cannot do justice to herself without doing justice to every class of people within her borders. Her recognition of this fact means much.—Philadelphia "Public Ledger."

THE RIGHT OF DOMICILE OF RUSSIAN JEWS.

The Jewish community which was last year transported from Zbriek (Podolia) has been permitted to return to the townlet.

An urgent petition has reached the Central Authorities requesting them to cancel the recent order for the transportation of all the Jews from Rozistche (Volhynia).

All Jews, except residents of the province, have been prohibited from entering the Izmailoff district.

Fresh oblavas have taken place at the Moscow Stock Exchange, and arrests of Jews not possessing the right of domicile in the city were made.

IMMIGRANTS NOT TO BE DEPORTED.

The Department of Labor has informed the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society that it will not send back immigrants awaiting deportation to Greece until the war is over.

The Duties of the Order

Extract from an Address Delivered at the Installation of the Officers of Wien Lodge, Vienna, by Grand President Professor Dr. S. Ehrmann

It is customary on the day the new Board of Officers of a lodge is installed by the representative of the Grand Lodge, for him to say a few words about what has happened and what shall take place. If this is right in times that are flowing peacefully onward, how much more proper is it in those times in which the life of every individual of every community and of the great collective body is stirred in the deepest depths. The new Brother President will surely submit to you his program and his views for the management of the Lodge. I would like to do it for the Grand Lodge.

The duties of the Grand Lodge, and of the entire Order, are of three kinds. They are ethical, cultural and material.

The connection of all the Lodges of a district with the Grand Lodge, their relations to the Order should form a warning sign which is visible in the distance, showing that in the sea of selfishness a rising rock juts on high that causes self-interest, superabundance inflated by successes, blind worship of the outward, material good fortune and servility, to bound back and to lose their power.

In the second line stand the cultural duties. Let us tarry for a few moments and examine what man up till now mostly understood by the word "culture," and what we should understand by it. Full of pride we heard not long ago proclaimed emphatically by the heads of the governments, by the rulers of the great international undertakings, and by all kinds of great men of science and corporations, by the news-writer and general philistine, how gloriously humanity has progressed. How the iron-band of the rail road track encircles the globe a thousand fold, through ingenious planning the human voice can reach forth thousands of miles, how the electric waves carry their signs through the immeasurable expanse of the atmosphere to the destined aim, man lifts himself up in the air and flies away according to his will; how thousands of arms move in the great works of the industry of the whole world to produce enormous quantities of goods, meeting every wish, every need of man, to beautify his existence and to make it pleasant. Enterprising men united in their hands powerful material means, such as formerly the richest and mightiest kings and rulers of the world did not have; they forged international ties of material force which should place in the shade every spiritual and ideal comprehension of the human mind.

Indeed, there was then already deviating opinions about the permanence and the inner human value of these things. At many a festivity, like the one of today, I have repeatedly elucidated that all these acquisitions are only signs of outward culture, which may have also existed in a modified way in the great states of antiquity, and their colossal works, which rested upon slavery.

It was purely an exterior culture. The ruler of entire world industries who, sitting at his desk, could speak from one end of America to the other, who could at all times rush on frantically in his luxurious train or steamer from continent to continent, and at whose wink the market of the whole globe began to move had no other culture but an outward one, even if he established foundations with a few rags from his booty, here for a university and there for a scientifical prize. The inner man remained empty. In spite of phrase and nice jingle of words, the inner relations of the nations, and individuals, and the ethical culture remained untouched by progress.

The same persons, who at scientific congresses assured all mankind of their well-wishes, could through a few hired writers, who worked for pay, and through sums which were a thousand times greater than those ever expended for ideal purposes, put human beings in bloody fury, hire falsehood and murder in order to plunge into the abyss others who were also striving with honest effort to attain some standing value.

Where are now the international relations of cosmopolitan nature, the political and ethical communal intercourses among the nations? Torn in the whirlwind as though they had never been. Where are the great fellowships which promised peace and happiness to mankind? With pride we can say it that the only spiritual fellowship, which has proven itself as permanent in the storms of this world war, is the fellowship of Judaism, is before everything the solidarity of the B'nai B'rith. In spite of the malicious attacks, in spite of all intrigues which are practiced across the ocean, the American Jewry, our brethren at the head, has assisted with word and deed the co-religionists in all belligerent countries. The two lodges in England have in the warmest way improved the condition of the interned German and Austrian Jews. America has collected millions of dollars for the war sufferers in Russia, in Turkey, in the Balkan peninsula, in Austria, and in Germany. The American Jewry has not neglected for one moment to protest, though it was in vain, against the cruelties of the Russian Government, and it has always proclaimed its protest whenever we appealed to it. The B'nai B'rith lodges in Switzerland and in Denmark have always helped us most readily to maintain the intercouse with America, and procured for us information from captive brethren and other relatives of our co-religionists, also those in Saloniki and Sofia, from whom we even received contributions for the refugees. This is the sign of the genuine ancient culture, "Ra,hmonim b'nay ra'hmonim," merciful, sons of the merciful."

Luxuriousness, which is the finish of every culture, could not prevail over the Jews, the intellectual and the insipid leaders of those peoples among whom they lived already took care of that from time to time. The sign of this over-culture which Ovid already recognized in the Roman Empire: Evasit ferrum, feroque nocentius aurum, "Iron appeared and gold, which is still more pernicious than iron," is surely applicable to our iron age, but we wish to coin the gold into true, genuine love for the oppressed and persecuted of our people.

And here, my dear brethren, I come to the third point, to the material duties of our Order.

I mention them lastly although they are not the least ones. An Order that does not weigh its members according to their contents of gold metal only, but before everything according to moral and human worth, cannot set up material performances as the most prominent. But as in this matter-of-fact world, even ethical acquisitions must have a material and secure foundation, it is our duty to do as the Brother Vice-President recites after every session, to request every noble minded Israelite to participate in our strivings, so that the number of our brethren, and with it the power of the whole may grow. Taken in an absolute sense, our material performance in itself cannot be such that we could renounce the co-operation of those who stand outside. But, taken relatively per capita, the performances of all the lodges in all districts are so prominent that they rightly claim to have the privilege to point the direction for the fostering of the general welfare. In the course of the years it becomes the custom, when any outsider and corporation wish to carry out any undertaking of a humane nature, to presuppose that the B'nai B'rith lodges and their members are in duty bound to foster it without examination. So it came to pass that in the lack of system which exists in the work of Jewish welfare, a dissipation of the means and forces has often taken place which has to be avoided in the future. The B'nai B'rith, as the only organization which extends to all cultured countries where Jews live, with the exception of France and Italy, is alone in the position to have the necessary survey, or to receive the proper information wherever something is needed. The Order B'nai B'rith, the only one that stands far removed from every political aspiration, and from which it must stand removed, has also the necessary objectiveness to be able to do justice to this obligation.

In the very near future the question of the destitute and orphaned children in Galicia will have to be regulated, to do which all the brethren will probably be summoned. The ample donations which were collected from the brethren for the preservation work in Galicia arouse the best hopes for the future.

You, worthy Brother President, whose life has always been dedicated to pure science, to philosophical research, will have to occupy yourself not alone with the ideal, but also with matter, with the common elementary substance. Your heart, which is filled with enthusiasm for Judaism and its significance for humanity, will also find the right way for it. You will find in the Grand Lodge every furtherance and support, and the Grand Lodge addresses the request to you and to all presidents and brethren to proceed in no important question without an understanding with the Grand Lodge.

So will our beloved Order, in this sad time, the saddest since the destruction of the Jewish state, when, like then, new life sprouts from the ruins and the chaos, become the bearer of a historical mission.

Out of the Ghetto

By Gustavus Loevinger

Modern civilization is civic. Society is what the city makes it. Art, literature, science, philosophy, music, the drama, live in, from, for and by the city. Industrial and economic conditions are adapted to the modus vivendi of the city. The balance of power in politics lies in the city. Like a great river widening and deepening as it flows sea-ward, so the stream of humanity flows city-ward with an ever greater volume. Soon it may be said: The State, it is the City. Municipalism is becoming as potent as nationalism.

A vast human laboratory for working out experiments on an enormous scale in social betterment; a volcanic heap of mountainous proportions, menacing with a consuming fire; a huge Frankenstein, benevolent or malevolent as whim or fancied interest may dictate; a monster leviathan, scarcely conscious of its power, poorly co-ordinating its actions—such is the modern city, the latest form of human empire.

Like a rapid within rapids, there are cities within a city. In one or more of these intra-civic centers, the Jews concentrate. Ghettos are created. Its iron doors may be no more. Its walls may be invisible and imaginary. But there is the city of the Jews within the city of the Gentiles, a living fact.

Next only to the miracle of the persistence of the Jewish people is the miracle of the persistence of the ghetto. Physically the ghetto is medieval. Invariably it is congested, unsanitary, neglected. Whatever ills of bad administration affect a city, the ghetto has them in their most acute and aggravated form. If you are looking for the dirtiest spot in all Europe, see the ghetto of Amsterdam. City dirt seems here to be deeper, darker, denser and dirtier than anywhere else. Or pay a visit to White-chapel, London. Every street seems to be a back street and you fear to breathe freely lest you exhaust the supply of air. Centuries of smoke, soot, dust and fog have painted the long rows of low, dark houses a mournful black! Dirty lunch counters are sardonically called "coffee places"! Pickles and herring persist everywhere. In little, narrow vestibules, several partnerships transact business on a capital of pennies. Long, loud, acrimonious bargaining in fractions of a fish, in slices of a vegetable!

Go to any other European ghetto—Paris, Berlin, Frankfort, Vienna, Prague, Rome, Naples—each retell the tale with slight variations for local coloring. Come to America. Visit the ghetto in New York. You might be in White-chapel or in the Amsterdam Juden strasse. Visit the ghetto of any other large city and on a large or small scale, with more or less intensive squalor, the scene is re-enacted.

No ghetto is a thing of beauty. But all is not trash that does not glitter. The ghetto is not to be unqualifiedly condemned because of its shabby clothes. It is to be condemned, if at all, because of its moral and spiritual effects. Like a sky-rocket sending forth a continuous shower of sparks but never exhausting itself, the ghetto emits a steady stream of human beings and human influences. These and these only are the final measure of ghetto values.

It is no longer true, if it ever was, that out of the same rock there cannot issue both salt water and fresh. Certainly out of the ghetto there can come both good and bad. Every year there is graduated from the ghettos a large class, educated in better standards of living, demanding a more hygienic environment and adopting more American manners and modes. Generally the graduate has supported himself while surmounting his "green-horn-ism" by industry and frugality. Often his diploma is his citizenship papers. And where the immigrant never emigrates from the ghetto his children, educated in American schools, high schools and colleges are sure to do so. A magnificent army this, doing credit to Jewry, making a good citizenry, the marvelous out-pouring of the ghetto.

But there is another out-crop of the ghetto, less pleasant to contemplate. A short time ago Jewry was free from criminals of the grosser class. Today it is no longer so uncommon among Jews to find ruffians having no respect for life, conscience or property. "Gunmen" have come out of the ghetto jungle. Yea, and panderers, vice-traffickers and robbers. The traditional purity of the Jewish maiden has been besmirched by the painted product of the ghetto. The sanctity of the Jewish home has been invaded. On the holy days the young ghetto Jew mocks his father with lighted cigarettes and ham-sandwiches. The police-court, the juvenile court, the court of domestic relations and the divorce courts are all too familiar to him.

If the human product of the ghetto is both good and evil, its by-products are no less so. There is a spirituality to be found in the ghetto remarkably pure. There is an idealism pervading its mental atmosphere that is exalted. The great movements of present times on behalf of Jewry find their most ardent support in the ghetto. The loftiest conceptions of social uplift find in the ghetto a sympathetic and ready response. Cults of social reform or revolutions make converts easily here. Out of the ghetto there come spiritual influences permeating entire Jewry, fanning into a brighter and higher flame the embers of Judaism.

But less auspicious influences emanate from the same source. Many of the problems of modern Jewry have their source in the ghetto. The struggle against discrimination in city administration is generally centered around neglect of the ghetto. The vicious and un-American practice of organizing Jewish political clubs exists almost exclusively in the ghetto centers. Out of the ghetto comes much if not most of the shame and humiliation, of the Jewis people incident to the lowering of ideals of cleanliness the loosening of morals, the cheapening of Judaism with petty squabbles and sharp practices, the increasing lawlessness, the decreasing respect for their own culture and religion in a large section of the younger element.

The chief indictment of the American ghetto is that it is un-American in its essence. The segregation that it encourages is undemocratic. The prolongation of alien customs and mannerisms is detrimental in its effects. Problems are created that result in civic investigations in which the Jew generally fares badly. Poor housing conditions, congestion, lack of sanitation, inadequate school facilities—these and other consequences seem to accompany invariably the ghetto. The Jews are accused of being untidy as a "nation" and of having a depressive influence on any community which they inhabit extensively. Undoubtedly many of the ills that afflict modern Jewry internally flow from the unfavorable conditions in which the ghetto child and adult must live, move and grow. The spirituality that exists there exists not because, but in spite, of the ghetto. The hardy, annealed, primitive Jew who comes to the ghetto from a foreign country brings with him somewhat of the fire that burned in the ancient temples of Judea. He has not had his Judaism chilled by cold blasts of American commercialism, by the downward draughts of an over-crowded, high-rent, ill-lighted American tenement. The evil influences of American civilization seem to find least resistance in the backward portions of our large cities. The ghetto like other parts of the slums seems to furnish a soil for nurture of all sorts of destructive social parasites. The marvel is ability of the Jew to survive in such a handicap.

A little reflection must convince one that the tendency of the modern American ghetto is not only un-American but also un-Jewish. The lawlessness which it breeds reacts upon Judaism very promptly. In his efforts to break with the ghetto the young Jew breaks with his people. Too often the parents for sentiment or supposedly religious reasons refuse to leave the ghetto. Often unbridgeable chasms arise between the ghetto-loving parents and the ghetto-loathing children. The Americanized child will leave the ghetto, with its parents and its Judaism if intelligently handled, without them if stubbornly and narrow-mindedly opposed. Even though some individuals in the ghetto maintain the idealism of Judaism its practice sooner or later must be suffocated in the stress and strain of ghetto life.

The back-to-the-farm movement in modern Israel must be suplemented by an out-of-the-ghetto movement. Such an undertaking is manifestly difficult. It is not a matter of quick consummation. But a start must be made. Indeed as already pointed out there is a natural tendency away from the ghetto already. Unfortunately the inflowing undercurrent is stronger than the out-flowing surface waters. Strong and resolute efforts should be made to stem this sweep of the immigrant Jew into the ghettos of our big cities. Strong and resolute oppositions will have to be made if the tide of anti-Judaism which seems to rise from the ghetto shall not prove a tidal wave.

There are already many out-of-the-ghetto agencies. When the importance of this movement is once realized, when

The Institutional Synagogue

"Traditional Judaism Today."

"I shall dip my pen in the blackest ink" and unhesitatingly face the facts as the slogan of the day puts it. We must not be like the ostrich, who, when he has his head buried in the ground thinks no one sees him. We must not close our eyes and fail to perceive the current of Jewish life as it is. Our older men and women, especially those of foreign birth, still possess a Jewish consciousness which was implanted in them either by their very Jewish progenitors or through the environment in which they lived. Our young men and women are already either entirely indifferent to things Jewish or quickly becoming so. Our boys and girls are given a morsel of Jewish religious education and are expected to be sated with Jewish practices and ideals by means of this morsel of the Divine Culture. Such is the position of Traditional Judaism today. It is growing steadily weaker and weaker. However, it is not sufficient for us merely to sit down and deplore this fact. We must look into the causes which brought about these conditions and search for a remedy if possible. I speak from the point of view of one who is fully imbued with the tenets of our faith as handed down in the Bible in its completeness, namely, the Talmud, and codified in the Schulchan Aruch, and therefore what I have to say, I want viewed from an uncompromisingly Orthodox point of view.

"Immigrant Congregations."

When the Jewish immigrants from Russia, Poland, Austria and Hungary first began to come to this country, they were interested in erecting houses of worship, not only wherein they might pray, but wherein they might also meet their country-men, their "Landsleute." Thus congregations sprang up styling themselves after the name of the province or of the town from which the members of the congregtaion came, as for instance, The Chechanova, the Suvalker, and the Byalostocker Chevras.

The members of these congregations would come together not merely for Sabbath prayers, but would attend the three daily services during the week as well. After "Schacharies" (morning prayers), they would listen to the exposition of a chapter of the Mishna (a Parek Mishnayis). They would spend the interval between Mincha (afternoon prayers), and Ma-ariv (evening prayers), hearing someone give a course in the Schulchan Aruch. After Ma-ariv they would stay an hour longer poring over the Talmud, until it was time for them to return to their respective homes. The religious services on all occasions represented the chaos, the lack of decorum, and the peculiarities of the European communities from which these people came. These provincial synagogues as a rule merely represented the transplanting of the Russian, Polish or Galician synagogues to American soil.

"Decline of the Immigrant Synagogue and Lack of a Substitute."

As soon as these men were able to save money and open businesses for themselves, they became so absorbed in their enterprises, that they went beyond the pale of the Ghetto, took up their habitations among non-Jews, adopted the customs of their neighbors and ceased to attend the Synagogue three times a day, nay, many of them came not more than once a week, namely, on the Sabbath. Moreover, as these men began to have families of their own, their interest in their country-people (Landsleute), waned, and the social and friendly spirit which had been a direct product of these provincial Synagogues, began to disappear. These provincial synagogues were proper only so long as these men lived the Russian, Polish or Galician Ghetto life in America.

Yet this is the type of religious gathering which has been handed down for the American Orthodox Jew to emulate. Is it not apparent that these provincial synagogues which express local European mannerisms and represent a meeting place for Landsleute are un-American, antiquated and largely responsible for the great chasm which now exists between the sons of the founders of the synagogues and the founders? The best proof of this is that during the week days we hardly see any young men in these synagogues, except those who come to say Kaddish for their dear departed ones, and on the Sabbaths, a few who come not from conviction, but out of respect for their parents' wishes.

"Improper Educational Facilities of the Past."

Let us now examine other phases of Jewish activity, for example, Jewish Education and social work. In certain sections of New York City and of other large cities, the synagogues never had a school connected with it and so the children were left at the caprice of the "Melamed," who would teach, not because he was particularly qualified to do so, but because he had no other means of earning a livelihood. He would go from home to home and give the children just a smattering of Hebrew. He taught them in Yiddish, a language in which they did not think and thus could not give over to his pupils the true meaning of the Jewish religion nor inspire in them the proper love of their faith. This is evidenced by the Jewish religious conditions as they exist today.

"The Failure of the Basement School."

In certain Orthodox Synagogues, the vestry school was introduced where presumably the chilrren of the members of the congregation were to attend. After a few years trial it was found that both the parent and the child were against this type of school because of the lack of light and proper sanitary conditions. The vestry or basement school thus became a school for the poor, only.

"Lack of Efficiency in Talmud Torah and Y. M. H. A. Movements."

It might here be said that special buildings, called Talmud Torahs, have recently been erected for the purpose of Jewish education. However, we have but few of these buildings. Only 15 per cent of Jewish children are taught in regular organizations for Jewish education. Furthermore, all these institutions are built only for the poor and nothing has been done, nor as far as I know, has anything been successfully attempted to give the children coming from parents, not necessarily wealthy, but from those who can afford to pay for instruction, an opportunity to receive a thorough knowledge of the prayer book, the Bible, Jewish codes and Jewish Rabbinic Law.

I do not think that the Talmud Torah Institution is an ideal one because it is fractional in its work and divorces the child from the synagogue. I have similar objection to the Y. M. H. A. movement, the expression of social work, as I have to the Talmud Torah movement, the expression of Jewish Education.

The popular word for maximum work is efficiency. I feel that Jewish life should not be subdivided. We are wasting effort and money in surplus institutions, which ought not to occupy quarters by themselves. For that reason, I am indeed opposed to the building of future Y. M. H. A.'s, because a Y. M. H. A. makes its effort merely to take boys off the street. No one can deny that such work is necessary but one institution ought not to devote all its efforts for that purpose. First of all, the work is negative, and secondly, it is partial. It is negative because it fails to impart positive religion in the minds of the youth. It does not stand for positive religious conviction. It is neither Orthodox nor Reform. It is partial because it only takes the boy off the street and does not give him the education of a Jewish religious environment.

"A Solution of the Religious and Financial Problems—The Institutional Synagogue."

My plea for the future is the Institutional Synagogue which would embrace the Synagogue, the Talmud Torah, and the Y. M. H. A. movements.

The institution that is to live and that is to contribute a most potent force in the future will be an Institutional Synagogue. I am unutterably opposed to the getting away from the synagogue. I feel that if we get away from the synagogue idea, we are geting away from the root, the sentiment and the practice of Judaism. Interest in the synagogue implies a love for religion; interest in the Talmud Torah, does not always imply love for religion, but perhaps a love for education. These two must walk hand in hand. They are separate as much as the branch is separate from its root. The Institutional Synagogue must first of all, be as Orthodox a House of Worship, as is prescribed in Jewish Codes. It should then be a place of study for the elders in the evenings, and for the children in the afternoons (in large, light, and well ventilated class-rooms). It should be a place where men and women may come after plying their daily cares and spend a social hour in an Orthodox environment and in a truly Jewish atmosphere. In short if we desire to perpetuate the real Judaism of the past, we must so shape Jewish spiritual activity, that it will all find expression in one institution.

This institution would be a revival of the historic synagogue. The synagogue of old was the center of prayer, study, and the social life of the community all in one. The restoration of this type of synagogue would spell the salvation of Judaism. Aside from all this, it would serve the practical purpose of helping to solve the problem of support of Religious Institutions. Let me show you concretely how this can be accomplished. Suppose a synagogue has a mortgage of $50,000, a Y. M. H. A. a mortgage of $50,000 and a Talmud Torah a mortgage of $50,000, together making a total mortgage of $150,000, and perhaps an equity in each institution of $25,000, making a total cost of three such institutions $225,000, and a total cost for maintenance about $60,000. A building similar in structure to that of the Central Jewish Institute of New York City, which has all the facilities for a high-class synagogue, a well equipped Talmud Torah, and a model Y. M. H. A. could be built for $150,000 and maintained for $30,000 per annum.

Now, instead of a man belonging to three separate institutions, he could pay a little higher membership fee in the Institutional Synagogue which would include all the activities and advantages of the three separate institutions. This organization would, by reason of the greater income, be able to do superior work to any of the three institutins, individually, and an added advantage to Judaism would be that the father and mother, the son and the daughter, the young boy and young girl, would all come to the same institution for Jewish pursuits. The father and mother would go to the synagogue with their children; the young man and woman would go to the building for social work; the children would go to the Talmud Torah, and thus there would be brought back to the family life that religious unity and enthusiasm which is so sorely lacking today. It is my firm belief that the Institutional Synagogue would mean a rejuvenation of the American Jewish life. It would mean the preservation of Traditional Orthodox Judaism; because, as has been my experience already, when you give the young man or young woman opportunity to express their social instincts in good American style, under the auspices of the synagogue, their respect for the synagogue and its authority increases; but when the synagogue stands up as a barrier between the young folks and social life, they rebel and lose interest in the synagogue altogether.

As I see it there are two problems that American Jewry must solve at the present time. First and foremost, is the economic problem, a solution of which is beginning to appear faintly on the distant horizon, and with God's aid, I think that we may be able to tackle that phase. Already efforts are being made to interest manufacturers and the laborers in a five day week, so that the Sabbath may not be transgressed by working thereon. The second problem is one of environment. If the home is typically Jewish the child will unconsciously absorb some Judaism, but it has been the unfortunate experience of American Israel that young men and young women have come from good Orthodox Traditional homes and yet are not Orthodox Jews.

What is the reason? The chief reason is that when the young men and young women left their homes, entered into companionship with their friends, and spent social hours in institutions, they were divorced from the influence of the home and the force of social life overpowered and over-mastered the force of the home. If, however, the social life of the young man and young woman would have the opportunity to express itself in an Institutional Synagogue where the young folks might run a dance, attend the gymnasium, do social service work, or study, in a thoroughly Jewish atmosphere, then the outer social environment would aid and assist the home environment and keep the boy and girl thoroughly Jewish. We would then have men and women who would be loyal to their faith and a pride to their people.

At present some Rabbis are attempting to introduce a little social and educational work in their synagogues, but they are merely wasting their time and duplicating work that is already being done. It is impossible to accomplish good results with poor material, and no synagogue as the average synagogue is constructed today, can possibly compete with any Talmud Torah or any Y. M. H. A.

"Difference Between the Free Synagogue and the Proposed Institutional Synagogue."

The difference between the Free Synagogue headed by the Rev. Dr. Stephen Wise, and the Institutional Synagogue which I am advocating in this article is that the former socializes religion and the latter will religionize the whole of social life. Nay, it will go farther than that, it will tend to keep intact the Jewish ceremonials of our people. It will bear a generation of knowing Jews and Jewesses, who will be imbued with the ideals and practices of their people and who will ever strive to make the future of Israel as glorious as its past.

Meeting of Sub-Committees of Congress and Conference Organizations

The sub-committees of the Conference of National Jewish Organizations and the Jewish Congress Organization Committee met on Monday evening, Oct. 2nd, in New York City. There were presen, representing the Conference of National Jewish Organizations, Mr. Harry Cutler, who acted as chairman of the meeting; Mr. Louis Marshall, Mr. Jacob Massel, Dr. Frank Rosenblatt, and Dr. Samuel Schulman; representing the Congress Organization Committee, Mr. Joseph Barondess, Mr. Jacob Carlinger, Mr. Abraham Goldberg, Judge Aaron J. Levy, Mr. Louis Lipsky, Dr. Louis S. Rubinsohn, Mr. Abraham Schomer and Mr. Leo Wolfsohn.

The conferees reconsidered the terms of the arrangement heretofore made between the Executive Committees of the respective organizations, and unanimously adopted the following agreement:

(1) The clause in the Call heretofore formulated which referred to "group rights," was amended so as to read as follows:

"Wherever the various peoples of any land are, or may be, recognized as having rights as such, the conferring upon the Jewish people of the land affected of like rights, if desired by them, as determined and ascertained by the Congress."

(2) The clause relating to the representation in the Congress to be apportioned to National Jewish Organizations, was amended so as to accord to the national organizations 25 per cent of the total number of the delegates of whom the Congress is to be composed, the remaining 75 per cent of the delegates to be elected in accordance with the provisions of the Philadelphia Conference as set forth in the Call

(3)) It was agreed that the subject of the "economic reconstruction of the Jewish communities in the war zones" be referred to the Committee of 140 that is to call the Congress, for the purpose of determining whether it shall be placed on the agenda of the Congress.

(4) It was agreed that all questions relating to the permanence of the Congress and to migration be excluded from the program of the Congress.

In all other respects the agreement heretofore entered into by the Executive Committees of the respective organizations, as embodied in the Call adopted, remains unchanged. .

The sub-committees are to report to their respective Executive Committees the results of their deliberations.

HELP FOR GALICIAN JEWS.

The problem of the Galician Jews who are transported into Russia is again engaging the attention of Jewish organizations. Permission has been obtained at Kieff for the establishment for the exiles of a second shelter house for the provisions of kosher food, under the supervision of the Jews, the first house no longer being able to satisfy the present need for accommodation.

The American Consul General at Moscow has issued an appeal for the organization of a medical and feeding center for the Galician Jews in Central Russia.

the consciousness of the stifling effects of the ghetto are understood more clearly, when the anti-Jewishness of the ghetto is fully grasped, these organizations will be strengthened and multiplied. To point out ways and means for taking the Jew out of the ghetto is supererogatory. Ways and means will be found when the policy is once undertaken.

It is not expected that the dispersion of the Jew shall be carried to the bitter extreme of total unneighborliness. On the contrary, like every other social group, Jews will and should live in congenial clusters. It is the unnatural and unhealthy concentration in a neglected slum or near-slum district that constitutes the vice of the ghetto. Judaism is a fresh-air religion. It needs sunshine, health, joy and happiness. It needs aspiration. It needs men and women in whom the sweetness of life has not been soured by sordidness. Judaism is a conduct of life or it is hypocrisy. Judaism is a habit of freedom and fraternity. The ghetto dwarfs and blights.

In the new era, conscious of the nobility of his religion, justly proud of the genius of his people, animated anew to redeem his covenant with the Eternal, the Jew will be emancipated from the ghetto. Perhaps then, too, a breach will have been made in the walls of the ghetto created by unreasoning prejudice, bigoted supersition, social snobbery, and ignorant race hatred.—The American Jewish World.

SIMON WOLF OCTOGENARIAN.

On the twenty-eigth of this month Brother Simon Wolf will be eighty years old. His notable career from the day he took his degree at a law school has been sketched by a competent pen both in this and the last issue; but we in the office to whom Brother Wolf's achievements are an open book, gladly join the chorus of admirers and cheerfully associate ourselves with a host of friends here and abroad to proclaim him as our own, one whom the Order has repeatedly honored in the past and will continue to hold in veneration as the years roll by. Brother Wolf is one among the many eminent men which the Order has produced. The best that Simon Wolf accomplished he did in and through the Order. The organization was there to follow him; the men were there both in the individual lodges and in the Executive Committee ready to succor his efforts. But he knew how to lead and he knew how to serve. He served the Order as a Ben B'rith ought to; he had initiative, unremitting zeal; he gave of his time and energy freely. And with the Order he stood out as the organizer of great philanthropic institutions, with the Order he labored steadfastly and zealously as the champion of our less fortunate co-religionists abroad. Whether in the seventies on behalf of the Jews in Rumania, persecuted and deprived of their natural rights, or at the beginning of the twentieth century when the cry of the blood of Kishineff Jewry startled the world, or latterly when our Government abrogated a commercial treaty with Russia because the Muscovite Empire would not recognize the rights of American citizens of our race and faith, Simon Wolf worked assiduously, self-sacrificingly to promote the cause of the Jews. There are many individual Jews who know themselves beholden to his timely intervention; but what he did for the Jewish people at large will remain written in the chronicles of American Jewry, even as it forms a record of the Order's achievements. Simon Wolf is a synagogue and lodge Jew in the best sense of the term. He saw no virtue in segregating himself from his brethren: their institutions he cherished, their faith he shared, in their tribulations he acted resolutely and in their triumphs he rejoiced. Simon Wolf belongs to the American nation as a loyal patriot; he belongs to the Order as a faithful son of the covenant. At eighty we see him hale and hearty and as vigorous as at early. Some, nay most, men are recognized after they are gone; Simon Wolf has had it granted to him to witness in person the affection in which he is held by many Jews and non-Jews alike. That ought to be a source of great joy to him, a modicum of reward for labors so many and so varied. We send him our sincerest congratulations. We wish him many, many more years of health and strength. The days are ominous and troublous; the tasks much like those that it fell to him to perform are awaiting us all. We hope and trust that Brother Wolf will be spared for many years to come, that he may live to see the Jew in America still more honored than he is today and the Jew abroad wheresoever he is still an object of persecution and contumely and disability come to his own. May it come to our Brother to see the fruition of a chain of endeavors for the liberation of the harrassed Jew all over the world. Ten and twenty years from now may we still have him with us; may he enjoy all his faculties to the end of his days upon this earth and in this land, and may it be his and our privilege jointly to celebrate the triumph of a people free and regenerated, esteemed by mankind and faithful to the religion of the fathers.

JEWISH ACADEMICIANS.

Men unite for all sorts of purposes. Like dwells with like. In union there is strength. The two are better than one and the many that are like-minded will accomplish notable results when jointed to one another. The gregarious animal Man loves to associate with kindred spirits. The man of wealth repairs to his club. The laboring man frequents public places of amusement. College men in and out of the institutions of learning form many societies, and be their object only social. University clubs abound in this land; they are found in every city. Blinded by prejudice they frequently shut their doors to the Jewish collegian. So of late there has been a movement for Jewish University Clubs where graduates of the Jewish persuasion may meet each other and be benefited by each other's society. Whether such segregation is desirable is another question. But New York which harbors a million or more Jews is a fertile field for any vagary along the iines of associations. The Catholics have their club; who not also a Jewish club? Not the kind that is Jewish only because forsooth no one else will go there. Then again there are the various learned societies, Academies as they are called, Academy, lyceum, gymnasium, all of ancient Greek antecedents, are used promiscuously among the modern nations. An academy with us is largely a preparatory school for boys and girls desiring to enter a college or university. In Europe, an Academy is a learned society, usually endowed by the state. Still universities are known unofficially as academies, and university men call themselves "Akademiker." But in the English tongue an Academician denotes a member of a learned society, usually well advanced in years, a recognized authority in some specialty. With the influx of so many young students from abroad and with the Babel ideas in the metropolis, things are a bit confused, and a yeshibah is often mistaken for a college, a yeshibah hahur for a collegiate student, and lately we have witnessed a formation of a society of Jewish Academicians, a mixture of the Jewish University Club and the Jewish Academy. It is, of course, nobody's business if a few young or old gentlemen, though mostly young, boasting the possession of a college sheepskin, choose to meet and organize for social or any other purposes. But the name is a bit too grave. And it does not bespeak modesty on the part of the organizers that men older in years, richer in experience, of recognized name and fame, have not been consulted. But the worst feature is of a different kind. If college men, Jewish college men, must unite, then the only standard of admission ought to be collegiate standing. Of course, not every graduate of a college need be admitted. Some are not clubable, some lack the habits and manners of gentlemen. And if again an Academy, that is a learned society, be in the making, then the criterion ought to be scholarly achievements, great promise of original research, the service of truth for truth's sake. But these young New York academicians have decreed that Cincinnati is trefah, the New York Seminary not quite kosher. These academicians would admit none but those of their own caliber. Now they may be right or wrong in their notions that the Seminary graduate is not an adept in pronouncing upon the intricacies of kashruth. But that proficiency in ritual questions for men and women and the ability to superintend a slaughter-house for adequate remuneration constitute the measure of fitness to be known as a Jewish scholar would still have to be proved. Jewish science must be free, or it is no science. Pre-conceived opinions have no place therein. Villifying Geiger and Frankel and Schechter—the lion is dead, and so the foxes have a merry time—and anathematizing Kohler is not the mark of Jewish culture or of Jewish science. Sausages may be stamped kosher, but no scientific opinions, nor scientific men. Both the Jewish University Club and the Jewish Academy may lie dormant for awhile. There is no urgent call for either. We have managed pretty well without them. The truly scientific Jew needs not their stimulus. Least of all will a hybrid society do, and certainly not one in which outside questions are the determining factor. We have all respect for orthodoxy. But in matters of scientific moment no partisan view should assert itself. This is not a time to divide, but to unite. Serious minded men have had at heart the problem of unifying Jewish educational efforts in this country. We wish them success, and hope that out of their wise counsels something valuable will mature. But until then we would bid the immature geniuses keep their hands off.

THE WAR'S INFLUENCE UPON MORALS.

By HON. CHARLES NAGEL.

When the conviction that civilization had to face a world war first broke upon us, the brutality of such a struggle formed the key note of every comment. The hope had been indulged that controversies between civilized peoples could and would henceforth be adjusted by understanding or by arbitration. So keen was the disappointment, so impressed were we with the needless and deplorable destruction of life and property, that the horror of it all monopolized our attention. Added to this there was the manifest desire to fasten all responsibility for the war upon one nation and to magnify her guilt in the public mind by picturing, in the most extravagant colors, the enormity of her offense.

By degrees we have come to modify our first impressions, and to submit the case to calmer judgment. Particularly in our country a never failing desire for fair play has prompted us, in spite of many obstacles and embarrassments, to suspect, and in some respects, to conclude, that it is still impossible to indict a whole people. After reading the true story of secret diplomacy—especially as is was practiced in the cases of Morocco and Persia—we have yielded to the belief that even international conflicts generally have two sides, and that it is well to give them both thoughtful hearing before assuming to pass judgment.

Perhaps we have gone further and have accepted that there may be differences between nations that should not be characterized as immoral. There may be forces at work that cannot be ascribed to cupidity or sordid selfishness, but that in reality represent, or have their source in, the best patriotism of which a particudar people for the time is capable; different trends of culture or religion traceable in the last analysis to deep-seated racial tendencies, may be incapable of adjustment but need not, for that reason, furnish proof of brutal or corrupt inclination. If, for illustration (to make the test more obvious), the very questionable methods that have, of late years, been employed in the competition for commercial supremacy, were to be accepted as proof of immorality, the loudest advocates of international morals would at this time cut a sorry figure indeed. In private life, and even more in the life of a nation, it is so difficult to draw the line between selfishness and self-preservation, that the charge of immorality is not easily established. Besides, the practices of diplomats upon this border line have been such as to leave no nation with a record so clear that it may point the finger of scorn or denunciation at its neighbors.

Profound as the popular remonstrance against the war was, and as it will no doubt continue to be to the end of the war, nevertheless, there is a gradual realization that the causes for the struggle are not to be ascribed solely to sordid motives. We may indeed derive some consolation from the thought that profounder sentiments and forces help to shape the fate of nations and that, however terrible and agonizing the cost, the ultimate outcome may be greater freedom for nations as for individuals, coupled with a legitimate hope for self-respecting international peace.

It is too much, therefore, to say that in this war also we have to do with individual manifesation of brutality rather than with common brutal motive. It goes without saying that war provides opportunity without end for the expression of innate brutal inclination. It will not be denied that one inevitable influence of war is to brutalize, both by example and by opportunity. Of all this the story of this war has given unmistakable and heartrending proof.

But is this all? Shall we refuse to see the ennobling influences? Many a heart has been softened and purified. Many a man and woman has been turned from the pursuit of self-indulgence to the sacrifice of self for the common cause; many a soul has been refined in the crucible of supreme suffering or dutiful performance. Whole nations will rise from this terrible ordeal with more devotion and greater capacity for sacrifice; and above all, with better understanding and deeper respect prevailing among the people themselves. Legalized bureaucracy and accustomed class snobbery will suffer the same fate. They will fall before this proof furnished in the hour of stress that capacity, fitness and patriotism are not to be determined by accidental station, and are not to be denied by the power of fortune. Not only will this finding of themselves by a people constitute the impetus for a tremendous uplift in particular countries, but with all the hoarse accusations of diplomats among themselves, with all the appeals to passion and prejudice in press, rostrum and pulpit, the men and women who have borne the brunt for the several countries, will emerge with a truer estimate of the courage, moral fibre and real standards of their several opponents.

If statesmen are wise these are the forces to be dealt with. If enduring peace is the aim, these are the forces to depend upon. For they have been awakened, and they will be strengthened ready and glad to sustain our hope for better understanding in the future.

If we ask ourselves what has been the effect of the war upon us—a neutral nation—the answer is not so clear. We have indulged in much denunciation—we have formed conclusions to fit preconceived opinions. Our sacrifices are few. We have availed of every technical privilege under superannuated law to fill our coffers. Witnessing the accumulation of vast individual fortunes with misgiving at first, we have, by degrees, learned to boast of the commercial fortunes which war's necessity has thrown into our lap; and finally we have come to defend our national fiscal status upon the basis of a world tragedy. We have much to learn, and the dictate of common wisdom should tell us that the experience of others may be enlightening as our own. We admit that preparedness is the need of the hour. We do not yet see that to achieve it must offer the same devotion and sacrifice, in peace as well as in war, that we now see so splendidly exhibited on the other side of the Atlantic. Offer them in time and contained peace may be our blessing. Delay them too long, and disaster in some form must be our lot. The war's influence upon the morals of a neutral people should not be lost.—American Leader.

JEW MADE BRIGADIER-GENERAL.

President Wilson has conferred a signal honor upon Colonel Charles H. Lauchheimer, of Baltimore, by nominating him for the post of brigadier-general of the United States Army Marine Corps, which nomination the Senate has confirmed. Colonel Lauchheimer is regarded as a brilliant officer and has done much to bring the Marine Corps to its present state of efficiency.

Charles Henry Lauchheimer was born in this city in 1859, and received his early education in the public schools and the Baltimore City College. In 1881 he was graduated with honors from the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, having secured his appointment through a competitive examination; in 1884 he took the degree of bachelor of laws at Columbia University. He attained the rank of first lieutenant in 1890, that of captain in 1898, and since 1911 has been adjutant. In 1914 he was elected president of the Army and Navy Club. Colonel Lauchheimer is the author of several important treatises on naval law and procedure.

RECEPTION IN HONOR OF DR. H. I. DAVIS, PRESIDENT OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO 6, BY ORIENTAL-HILLEL LODGE NO. 72.

On Tuesday evening, September 26, an sually well attended meeting of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 of Chicago was held at Hotel Morrison, several hundred members being present, all evidencing much interest in the proceedings of the lodge. A class of six members was initiated bv the new degree team of the lodge, whose work was very favorably commented upon. A large number of applications for membership were presented.

The meeting was attended by a number of visiting brethren from the sister lodges of Chicago and many past presidents of the Grand Lodge.

A special feature of the evening was the reception tendered Dr. H. I. Davis, President of the District Grand Lodge, which was held after the close of the lodge.

All the members present assembled in the adjoining banquet hall, where an elaborate lunch was served. Brother A. D. Weiner was introduced by the President of the lodge as chairman of the evening, and he called upon Brother Charles L. Aarons of Milwaukee, Past President of District Grand Lodge, who was specially invited for the occasion; Brother William Wilhartz, Past President of the Grand Lodge; Brother Adolph Kraus, President of the Order; Brother Philip Stein, Member of the Exectuive Committee of the Order; Brother B. J. Samuels, Past President of the Grand Lodge, to address the gathering. The addresses were mostly directed to the guest of honor, pledging hearty co-operation so as to assure the success of his administration. President Kraus in his remarks dwelt particularly upon the newer work of the Order, especially emphasizing the importance of the Anti-Defamation League. He appealed to the members present to take an active part in this work and also to assist the officers in charge of Social Service and Immigration work inaugurated by the Order.

Dr. Davis was the last to be called upon to speak, and in well chosen words he expressed his deep appreciation for the honor conferred upon him and for the expressions of friendship and esteem directed to him. He plead for loyal support on the part of those present and pledged his undivided attention to the affairs of the District.

The meeting was brought to a close at a late hour and all those present expressed great satisfaction for the instructive and entertaining evening spent.

MEMORIAL SERVICE IN HONOR OF MEYER FRIEDMAN.

Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver, Colo., held memorial services in honor of late Brother Meyer Friedman on Sunday August 13, 1916.

The services were presided over by J. Alcovich, and the speakers were Rabbi Kauver, who spoke on "The Lesson the Life of Meyer Friedman Teaches," Brother Sig Strauss on "Brother Friedan's Activities in Jewish Relief Society and Social Service Federation"; S. Friedenthal on "Activities of the Departed in the B'nai B'rith." Messrs. A. L. Fribourg, Dr. Spivak and Henry Frankel passed eloquent tributes to the deceased. The services were concluded by recital of "Kaddish" by Zwetow.

Letters of sympathy and condolence were received from the Executive Committee of the Order emphasizing the loss the B'nai B'rith and American Israel sustained in the death of Brother Friedman; from Brother Jacob Furth, Treasurer of the Order, analyzing the achievements of the departed; from Brother Karl L. Vetsburg, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, attesting to the great loss the District has sustained by Brother Friedman's demise, and from a number of societies and organizations with which Brother Friedman was connected during his life.

PRESIDENT WILSON LAUDS JEWS

The "American Hebrew" of New York publishes a letter from President Wilson wherein he pays a high tribute to the Jews of America and speaks of his interest in his fellow citizens of Hebrew extraction. In his letter the President says:

"No man who knows the history of America, or, indeed, of the world, could fail to appreciate their (the Jews) notable contributions to industry, philanthropic, intellectual development and political liberty."

MERCHANT OF VENICE ELIMINATED.

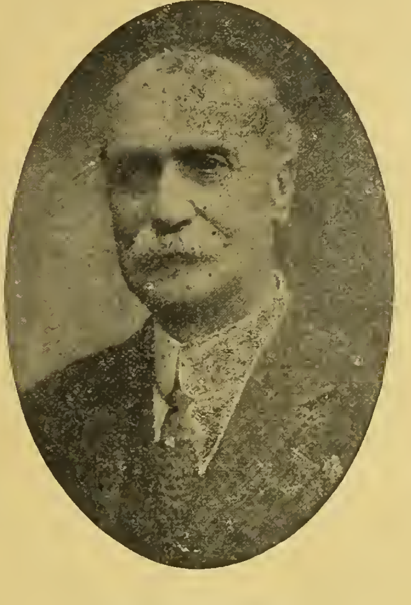
Through the efforts of Rabbi F. K. Hirsch, of Athens, Ga., the "Merchant of Venice" has been eliminated from the High School curriculum and another Shakesperean play substituted.

SIMON WOLF AS A BEN B'RITH

In a former article we have endeavored to sketch Mr. Wolf's achievements as an orator, lecturer, writer, how creditably he filled various offices, how seriously he took his Amcrican citizenship; we have seen him mindful of his German origin; we have followed him through his long career of unselffish and zealous service to the cause of the Jew. Simon Wolf has been connected with many Jewish organizations, and in each his activities will be gratefully remembered. He helped in the building up of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and in the fostering of its nursling, the Cincinnati College. He represented the Union at Washington in his capacity as Chairman of the Board of Delegates. Initiated in 1866 in Elijah Lodge No. 50, Washington, D. C., he has these fifty years been identified with the Order in many of its best activities here and abroad. Naturally the honors of the Order came to him ungrudgingly. For two terms he was President of the local lodge at Washington, and twice he presided over District Grand Lodge No. 5. He has taken part since in every meeting of the Grand Lodge as a Representative. He was a Delegate to the first Convention held in New York in 1868, and to every Convention since: Chicago, 1874; Philadelphia, 1879; New York, 1885; Richmond, 1890; Cincinnati, 1895; Chicago, 1900; New Orleans, 1905; Washington, D. C., 1910; San Francisco, 1915. He presided over the Conventions in 1874 and 1879, and in the former he helped to bring new life into the Order by his parliamentary skill and his fervid appeals. At the same Convention he was the author of the Resolution which pledged the Order to erect the "Statue to Religious Liberty," now adorning Fairmont Park in Philadelphia; indeed, when some of the lodges failed to respond, he raised the money from the proceeds of a lecturing tour wherewith to pay the services of the eminent sculptor, Ezekiel. He has lectured repeatedly in various lodges through the length and breadth of this country, and he was the chosen orator at the Memorial Exercises for Brother Bien and Brother Levi in New York, Chicago, Washington, San Francisco and Philadelphia. He filled the highest office in the gift of the Order, after the untimely demise of Leo N. Levi, from February, 1904, to March, 1905. He has all these years served on the Executive Committee of the Order and has represented the Order at Washington.

Simon Wolf identified himself early with the philanthropic work of the Order. In 1875 he became founder of the B. B. Orphan Asylum Fund of District No. 5. The Home at Atlanta knows him as its President for twenty-five years. In aid thereof he raised $150,000 and a Simon Wolf Endowment Fund of $75,000. He dedicated to the Home the profits of his book, "The American Jew as Patriot, Soldier and Citizen." He was likewise one of the founders of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum and is the only living one of the speakers at the Dedication, the other two being Dr. Wise and Mr. Peixotto. He secured from Baroness de Hirsch the sum of $75,000 for a Contagious Hospital for the Atlanta Home. He lectured in German and Austrian lodges and was the founder of the Egyptian lodges.

From 1870 to this day Simon Wolf has associated himself with the diplomatic activities of the Order which have become historic records. In these days when new organizations and new men are glorifying their achievements along these very same lines, it is but meet to refresh the memory of a younger generation concerning the record which the Order, and among its spokesmen the subject of this sketch, have made for themselves. Peixotto's far-famed mission to Rumania on behalf of our unfortunate co-religionists, when the United States Government accredited him as consul to that country with the avowed object of calling a halt to the persecutions and disabilities under which the Jews in Rumania groaned, that mission was made possible through the Order, which, in conjunction with other organizations but to a greater extent than any, undertook to raise the funds requisite for the maintenance of the agencies organized by the "Consul Missionary" during his five years' services. Mr. Wolf was the recipient of Cremieux's stirring appeals; he conducted the negotiations with Brother Peixotto; his influence with President Grant and Secretary Fish and his Congressional friends secured the appointment supported by a Congressional appropriation; by two lecture tours, the one started in Gideon Lodge at Albany and the other in Elijah Lodge at Washington, the necessary funds for that important undertaking were raised. The accrediting letter which President Grant handed to Peixotto was written with his own hand in the presence of the Consul and Mr. Wolf. Mr. Wolf has in his possession private letters exchanged between the Consul and himself which narrate the story of great difficulties, but also notable achievements, and Chief Rabbi Hermann Adler informed Mr. Wolf in 1881 that Lord Beaconsfield had told the former that what Peixotto had done was of material aid in securing the adoption of the Jewish rights provision of the Berlin Treaty of 1878; a recent writer adds that "a close study of the history of this period confirms this view."



When in April, 1903, the world was startled by the Kishineff massacre, it was the Executive Committee of the Order, presided over by the lamented Brother Leo N. Levi, that presented on June 15 to Secretary Hay and President Roosevelt the draft of a petition which a month later was cabled by the Department of State to our representative at St. Petersburg. The Russian Government declined, it is true, to receive the petition. The original with the signatures secured through the Order rests now in the archives of the State Department at Washington. It certainly had a tremendous effect on the world's public opinion. Brother Levi fittingly acknowledged Mr. Wolf's untiring work in bringing about the meeting which formulated the petition. He wrote to him: "From start to finish you did the right thing at the right time, and the Order, Jewry, and humanity owe you an eternal debt of gratitude." President Roosevelt likewise told Mr. Wolf in writing: "It was your good sense and judgment that made it possible." Mr. Wolf had also taken part in 1902 in securing from Secretary Hay the equally famous note to Rumania.

Mr. Wolf has further to his credit the arrangements at the Washington Convention of 1910; the speakers at the banquet included President Taft, Ambassador Bryce, Speaker Cannon and others. He brought about the luncheon and conference beteen President Taft and nine Jewish representatives to discuss the abrogation of the Russian Treaty, and he managed the presentation of the Executive Committee of the Order when presenting the medal to President Taft. He is still young enough to attend all the meetings of the Executive Committee, whether held in the East or West.

LIBELING NATIONS ON THE STAGE

A popular American comedian has gone on record this week as expressing the conviction that the stage Frenchman will pass with the war. It is particularly refreshing to find an American comedian who has brought himself to believe this, because the American low comedian is the worst offender of all in the libelling of nationalities upon the stage.

These travesties of caricatures have for some unknown reason been very popular throughout the United States for a good many years. Why, it would be hard to say. The fact remains that the Irishman, the "dude" Englishman, the Scotchman, the Hebrew, and the Scandinavian have all been the object of the attentions of the alleged humorists, who have found both pleasure and financial profit in holding them up to ridicule.

Now, there is no objection to legitimate caricature,—particularly if it has some definite end in view and is directed by good nature. But too many of these caricatures of national traits have been informed by maliciousness and a bitterness that revealed all too plainly the feeling behind them.

On the other side of the Atlantic, occasionally, an American is introduced as a character in some comedy or some musical show. The caricature is usually harmless, certainly never offensive in tone. Yet these caricatures invariably call forth violent protests from Americans.

It is the old story. The American public has manifested a keen appetite for years for the low comedian who pretends to "take off" what are incorrectly represented to be the national foibles and failings of various types, but it dislikes very much to see the mildest form of caricature of itself.

I have never been able to understand what people saw in these caricatures. Many of them are cruel; some of them are vicious; nearly all of them are vulgar; hardly any of them is good-natured. Then why should they appeal to the public and why should they be tolerated by any self-respecting people?

The Irish resent them keenly. The Americans know this, and they are less keen on making enemies of the Irish than they are careless about offending any other nationality. But the Hebrew, the Englishman, and the Scotchman also resent them, whenever they give the subject a moment's thought.

Such deliberate attempts to hold a nationality up to ridicule can never serve any good purpose, can never make any theatrical show any better or more amusing. They may amuse a certain section which elects to find its pleasure in what offends other people, but they surely have no attraction for the great majority of decent theater-goers.

It will indeed be one good thing come out of the war if, as a result of the increased respect which the American people are likely to entertain for the nations who have been battling for truth and justice and freedom, the elimination of this offensive feature of many forms of theatrical entertainment is brought about on this continent.

It is certain that any move towards such elimination would be met more than half-way across the Atlantic, and that mutual agreement to avoid national caricatures of the offensive type with which I am dealing could be brought about with the greatest ease and would be entered into with the greatest willingness.

For good-natured skits every broad-minded person has a keen appreciation. They are legitimate, amusing and often exceedingly clever. But the savage, brutal, cruel ridicule brought to bear in the portrayal of the type of caricature which can do nothing but wound those whose nationality it pretends to illustrate is useless, wanton and intolerable.

The French will not tolerate it today among their own people. A comedy by one of the most famous of French playwrights some few years ago contained a savage caricature of Max Nordau. Though it was otherwise a brilliant work, it was literally hissed off the Parisian stage. The people of Paris realized that it was unfair, cruel and calculated to inflame race hatred and to fan slumbering passions.

If the American people would take a leaf out of the Parisians' book and emulate the example set them in this respect, we should soon find these caricatures a thing of the past. They are born of ignorance and they can never do anything but keep alive feelings that ought never to be allowed to exist in any self-respecting nation.

Let us have good natured raillery, caricatures that exploit harmless foibles and make fun in a genial way of national peculiarities that are legitimate game for the comedian as they are for the caricaturist in the comic papers. But let there be an end of the vulgar efforts to hold a people or a race up to ridicule by representing some characteristic in an unpleasant light as the dominant national feature, when it is in reality nothing of the kind.

The stage is a cosmopolitan institution. It ought to be above this sort of cheap exploitation. It will be—just as soon as managers and producers resolve that they will not allow theatrical entertainments for which they are responsible to include any vulgar travesties deliberately designed to hurt the many for the gratification of the few.—S. THE KEHILLAH, XXVI

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

Loyalty was indeed a virtue, even from the strictly Jewish point of view. The relations between prominent rabbis and monarchs are a regular feature of Jewish legend. They begin in the Bible, with edicts, ascribed to King Darius, who bestows privileges on the Temple of Jerusalem, sends rich gifts to it, and declares in the end "That whosoever shall alter this word, let a beam be pulled out from his house, and let him be lifted up and fastened thereon." He adds the wish that the God that has caused his name to dwell there shall overthrow all kings and peoples who shall destroy this house of God, which is at Jerusalem (Ezra 6, 11-12). Talmud and Josephus tell us stories of the favors which Alexander the Great bestowed on the Jews. In medieval time we hear similar stories about Charlemagne. Hasidic legends furnish us analogies in the relation between Czar Paul and Rabbi Schneor Zalman of Liadi, which find their counterpart even in the rationalistic environment of Berlin, where Frederick the Great, and Mendelssohn, who, as we know now, never exchanged a word, are reported as intimate friends, and here in Cincinnati there is an old man living who sincerely believes that Frederick William IV, the "Rosha" par excellence, never missed calling on Rabbi Tiktin of Breslau, to receive his blessing, when he was in the city. I, therefore, have my doubts about the report that Emperor Ferdinand (1835-1848), when crown prince, called on the rabbi to receive his blessing, and was told he would reach the highest age of any ruler of the Austrian dynasty. The trouble with this blessing is that it will have to be revised, for Emperor Ferdinand died at the age of eighty-two, while his nephew, Francis Joseph, completed an August 18th his eighty-sixth "bis hundert Jahr."

It, therefore, may be permitted to be skeptical with regard to another story that I heard while in Nikolsburg. The crown prince is said to have arrived on Rosh Hashanah, the whole congregation waiting to receive him in the usual style, with the Torah carried under a canopy. The imperial party, however, was late, and the rabbi decided that they would have to repair to the synagogue for Minhah services, which have to be recited before dark. As ill luck would have it, the prince arrived just when the congregation was in the midst of their devotion. He came to the synagogue while the rabbi was standing in prayer (Shemonah Esreh), not taking notice of the arrival, and not all in any hurry to finish his prayer. The prince waited patiently until the rabbi had finished his devotion, when he turned around, pronounced with loud voice the customary benediction, which the prince received with great respect. The chances are, that if I had the time and the opportunity to make investigations, I would find that the visit of the prince did not take place on Rosh Hashanah.

The anecdote, which has its historic value, as evidence of the veneration, which the rabbi enjoyed, and of his reputation as strict observer of the law, is in this regard supported by his religious attitude. Rabbi Mordecai experienced the grief that in his declining years the first attempt was made to deviate from the traditional form of services. In 1818 the first reform temple was opened in Hamburg. Its most generous patron was the financier and philanthropist, Israel Jacobson (1768-1828), then living in Berlin. He furnished the means for the publication of rabbinic opinions, which declared instrumental music, prayer in the vernacular, and a ritual modified in accordance with reform ideas, permissible. The man entrusted with the task was a Polish Schnorrer—I have endeavored in vain for years to refute the statement made by Graetz, that he was an Austrian and afterwards a convert to Christianity, the first of which is not true, and the latter was never proven—named Eliezer Liebermann, who, through the advantages of his profession was personally acquainted with numerous rabbis. He did not succeed, however, in obtaining an indorsement from more than one rabbi, while the others were men of no significance, and not holders of a rabbinic office. This one heretic was Aaron Chorin, rabbi of Arad, in Hungary, 1766-1844, who with really sound scholarly arguments, justified the reform movement. Benedict was provoked. He had [illegible] had any confidence in this man. [illegible] fifteen years previously Chorin had published a book, in which he advocated a change of the educational system, and in addition expressed some rationalistic ideas. Benedict condemned him, and it seems that this condemnation was injurious to the rabbi in a distant community. He implores Benedict to revise his opinion. At any rate he wishes that the passages, considered objectionable, be pointed out to him, and he be given a chance to justify himself. Benedict refuses to entertain the proposition. In very dignified language, and in excellent Hebrew—a rare attainment in those days when literary beauty was believed to consist in punning on rabbinic quotations—Benedict says, "I shall not enter into any argument with you, but if you are really in earnest, and wish to be shown the error of your ways, come to Nikolsburg, where we shall discuss your views, and you will have a chance 'to repent and perhaps you may be healed.' With this I extend to you my greetings as it is written, 'Peace unto him who is far and unto him who is near.'"

One of Chorin's heresies was a decision declaring a certain kind of sturgeon, which is found in Hungarian rivers, as permitted, although the practice of this section of the country was not to eat it. Chorin took his stand on a strictly rabbinic ground, and quoted in his support a decision by his teacher, Rabbi Ezekiel Landau, of Prague. Mordecai Benet rejects this decision without naming Landau, with whom he was not on good terms. It seems that Landau never forgave him for not attending his lectures while, as a young man, he lived for a time in Prague. Other rabbis, prominent among them Isaac Grieshaber of Paks, Hungary, and Meshulam Zalman Kohen (1740-1819), of Feurth, declared the signature of Landau under the statement a forgery. Even today the orthodox party takes this stand, although a man of unquestioned authority, Eleazar Fleckeles (1755-1826), acting chief rabbi of Prague, and a disciple of Landau, vouches for the genuineness. The whole question turned on the point, whether the scales of a sturgeon, not being detachable, are to be considered scales in the eyes of the law. This, however, is merely an external feature. The philosophy of the controversy is that a rabbi in those days of declining piety and learning, should, under no condition, declare something as permitted, which being contrary to traditional custom, might lead to laxity in observance. It is probably on this ground that Benet opposed the very tame reforms introduced in the "Temple" of Vienna, when it was opened in 1826.

This dedication of a temple was indeed quite a historic event for the Austrian capital. In 1670 the Jews were expelled. The expulsion was actually a nominal one, for some of them returned in 1684, and ever since there was a Jewish community in Vienna. The fiction of the law, however, had to be maintained, and the Jews were not permitted to form a corporation nor to own a house of worship. The law considered them not as Jews of Vienna, but as Jews sojourning at Vienna. When the representatives of the Jews—"Vertreter" not "Vorstand"—planned the building of a synagogue, it had to be done in the usual hatchway method, with the aid of bribes, and finally with the understanding that the house in which the synagogue was situated should show no outside sign of its being devoted to religious worship. The form of services, however, was modernized. The Hazan, the famous Solomon Sulzer (1804-1890), wore a gown, and had a choir of trained voices, and the preacher, Isaac Noah Mannheimer (1793-1865), spoke a correct German. The real leader of the movement, the jeweler, M. L. Biedermann, whose descendants today are amongst the English nobles, was an advanced reformer, but Mannheimer and the majority of the congregation advocated this moderation, which Graetz considers the solution of the whole problem. Mordecai Benet, however, would not enter this synagogue, although he was urged to do so by those who wished the indorsement of an orthodox authority. Moses Sofer was more lenient. He advised his disciple, Lazar Horwitz (1804-1868), who as the rabbi in the ritualistic sense, had an official position which required his attendance at the synagogue, to go there. There is no objection in entering such a place, Moses Sofer says, but when that fellow preaches his blasphemous sermons, don't listen to him—take a book and read. There are, as we see, and always have been, various degrees of orthodoxy. Ezekiel Landau declares sturgeon as permitted; Mordecai Benet says it is prohibited. If they would live in New York now, the various delicatessen stores under their supervision might fight each other in the courts.

It is again a significant fact that when no principle is involved, the rabbis of the type of Mordecai Benet were rather inclined to be lenient. A typical instance is the following: A woman had promised to her husband on his deathbed that she would never marry again. But as it happens, and Jewish folklore has preserved a number of stories on either side, she later on regretted having given the promise. Mordecai Benet decides that the pledge is not absolutely binding, and like other pledges, subject to a rabbinical decision, which shall declare whether it was not obtained under duress or mental disturbance. Similar is another decision: In a time of epidemic a case of sickness occurred in a Jewish house on Friday night. A Christian was called to light a lamp, but he refused to enter it. Rabbi Mordecai Benet declares that even in cases of danger, one shall not perform a prohibited work if it can be helped, and therefore, the Christian should be induced to light the lamp outside of the house and a Jew might carry it in. Of more significance with regard to the deviation from tradition, is one of the numerous cases arising from the spelling of names in a document of divorce. The man who was to grant the divorce was named Anshel, but he had adopted the name of Anton. His wife's name was Resel, which, though an abbreviated German name, is considered Jewish, but she calls herself Theresia. To cap the climax, her father, whose name among the Jews is Zelke, calls himself Simon. Mordecai Benet declares that the bill of divorcement shall be written in duplicate, one shall decree the divorce of Amshel from his wife Resel, the daughter of Zelke, and the other shall state that the divorce has been granted to Anton, also called Amshell, from his wife Theresia, also called Resel, the daughter of Zelke, also called Simon. It may be interesting to quote the criticism of Abraham Geiger, on the examination questions submitted to the first graduates of the Breslau Seminary in 1863, on a similar problem. Significant also is that Mordecai Benet does not find any fault with the Amschel who calls himself Anton, while Moses Sofer in a similar case speaks of the folly of our generation, which is bent on aping the custom of the Gentiles.

As already stated, Mordecai Benet died at Karlsbad, August 12, 1829, at the age of seventy-six, deeply mourned by his congregation and his numerous disciples. My father, then a child of ten years, remembered the impression which this death made, and the deep sensation caused by our local rabbi, Joseph Spiro, at the memorial services, when the rabbi preached a sermon on the text, Ezekiel 21, 12, "When they say unto thee, wherefore sighest thou, thou shalt say, because of the tiding that came, and every heart melted, and all hands became feeble, and every spirit was faint, and all knees weak as water." I have also referred to the exceptional permission given to disinter the body and to bring it to Nikolsburg.

Yet the veneration was not so great that the aspiration of his oldest son, Isaiah, to become his father's successor was realized. Isaiah, who was then rabbi of Misslitz, a small town in Moravia, seems to have desired to invoke the aid of the authorities on the ground that rabbinic law gives the son preference over every other competitor in the case of such a vacancy. Moses Sofer, whom he wished to interest, answers evasively. The law is not so clear on this point, because it says that the son has preference over every competitor, if none is his superior in learning. In the case of a Landrabbiner, it would therefore have to be stated that the candidate is not only the equal but the superior of every other, and such a statement would cause ill feeling. In addition, Moses Sofer says it is against my policy to issue such a statement unless requested to do so by the authorities. Finally, from a practical point of view it is better policy not to urge such a matter, and wait for the opportune time.

Isaiah Benedict, who is said to have been a man of mediocre attainment, did not become his father's successor, but was later on called to Nagy Kallo in Hungary, where he died in advanced years, December 7, 1865. He was succeeded by his son Abraham, who died in January, 1902, at the age of eighty-two. In Hungary this succession of a son or a son-in-law in the case of a vacancy of a rabbinate by death, is quite the rule. Moses Sofer, who from the point of view of general theory does not consider the law of heredity as always applicable, directed in his will, written a few days before his death, his congregation to elect his own son, a young man of twenty-four, as his successor in the rabbinate of the large congregation of Pressburg. This son, Samuel Wolf, was, upon his death, in 1871, again succeeded by a son, Simhah Bunem, who died in 1906, having spent the last years of his life in a sanitarium, a mental wreck. During his sickness he was substituted, and after his death, succeeded by his son, Akiba, the present incumbent of the historic position.

Whether lineal descendants of Mordecai Benet, after the death of his grandson, Abraham, are still in the rabbinate, I do not know. Another son of his, Naphtali, was rabbi of Schaffa, Moravia, and died December 21, 1857. He was to some extent a modernist, for we find him as a contributor to the Hebrew magazine, "Kerem Hemed," a modernism which his father would surely have condemned and by which he placed himself on one level with some of the leading reformers. He also wrote, with the approval of his father, a catechism. This, however, had to be condoned, because the government demanded systematic instruction in Jewish religion. Mordecai Benet had even—of course, upon the insistence of the government—indorsed the catechism, "Bene Zion," by Herz Homberg (1759-1841), one of Mendelssohn's proteges, a bitter opponent of rabbinism, and a contemptible character who tried to make capital out of the prejudice against rabbinic literature. Mordecai Benet, however, indorsed this catechism, which became the officially recognized textbook of examination in Jewish religion for candidates who wished to obtain a license to marry. Naphtali's sons, as far as I know, were observant Jews and Talmudic scholars, but not one of them was a rabbi. Personally, I knew his son, Johanan, who was in business in Bruenn, and whose store was the only one there closed on Sabbath, although gossip had it that customers were occasionally served when entering through the back door. After his retirement from the business his son transacted business openly on Sabbath. Another son, Kopel, conducted a large wholesale business under the firm of Kopel Benedict und Soehne, in Vienna. He died in 1879, and the business was, when I knew it, open on Sabbath. Nor did I find any members of his family among the observant Jews, while Johanan conducted with great dignity and genuine devotion the early part of the morning services every Sabbath in the orthodox Schiff Schul. He was an impressive type of the survivor of an age long past. Another brother, Samuel, living in Auspitz, Moravia, who died about 1875, was proud of his descent and his learning, but rather unscrupulous in business. Once he narrowly escaped assassination at the hands of a farmer whom he had ruined, the mortal stroke being received by a friend of his, who was killed on the spot. His son, Heinrich, was my classmate in gymnasium during my last year in 1876. His Hebrew education and his general spiritual attainments were of a very mediocre order. Rooming with a very observant Jewish family, whose head, Reb Yainkef Frankenstein, was a man of solid Hebrew learning, he offended the good old soul by smoking on Sabbath, and more than once, Reb Yainkef would come into the room, where I coached Benedict, and stay there, simply to prevent the disgrace that a lineal descendant of the great rabbi should desecrate the Sabbath. There are, undoubtedly, great grandsons of Rabbi Mordecai Benet's grandsons living today, and it might be interesting to follow their careers. One, Julius Maria Loewe, wrote a book entitled "Memoirs of a Hypocrite, the True Mirror of Christianity and Judaism in the Nineteenth Century," Berlin, 1839. According to Steinschneider he was a grandson of the famous rabbi. Steinschneider, born in Moravia in 1816, and a student at the Yeshibah of Nikolsburg in the thirties, otherwise known as painstaking scholar, might be considered reliable. I dimly remember that a son of Naphtali Benedict, named Moshe, was reported as having married out of the faith. Shortly before I arrived in Nikolsburg there died R. Mordecai's son, Abraham, called Reb Aber, who had a job in the congregation, given to him out of respect for the memory of his father. Thus the son of a butcher rising to prominence, will sooner or later have descendants that again sink into obscurity.

JEWISH HOSTAGES FREED.

The Jewish hostages from Lemberg, the president of the Lemberg University, Dr. Beck, and the vice-president, Dr. Schleicher, who were taken by the Russians upon their withdrawal from Lemberg, have recently been set free and have returned to Austria. On the 14th of August they visited the Austrian Governor General to thank him for their liberation. They were received very cordially. They begged the official to intercede for the many thousand Austrian Jews who were sent all the way to Siberia and whose condition was a very miserable one. He answered that the government was doing all in its power to ameliorate the condition of those unfortunates and that millions of crowns were being spent for the support of the Austrian citizens who were interned in Russia.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, September 17, 1916.

The holiday season is gradually coming to an end here, to be followed by the Season of the Holy Days. In normal times, the Anglo-Jewish community begins its work after Tabernacles, when the communal year may be said to commence. The various societies, institutes, organizations begin to be active. Jewish and other questions of the day are discussed and politics are delineated and carried through. Nor is London alone in this hum. The provincial centers are equally busy, with a zest and a go-aheadness that merits all praise. Manchester in particular is a town that counts. Leeds and Birmingham and Liverpool follow suit, and then a goodly number of lesser communities may be placed on the list. Whether it was synagogue politics or Zionist problems, whether only literary and debating society speeches and addresses, the observer would in the olden days have been constrained to admit that there was life and vigor in Communal doings.

All this is changed now. The moving spirits of these activities have been called away on national work. Some will return no more; they have given their lives for their country. Others are still "doing their bit" in England's mighty endeavor. And just as many problems have been left unsolved in the larger commonwealth, so in the smaller one of Anglo-Jewry a great many tasks remain undone; their completion must wait until the war is ended. In the meantime it is becoming more and more clear to thinking men that just as the world will not be the same as before when the new period of peace sets in, just as every nation's life will of necessity have to be re-moulded and re-fashioned, so the life Anglo-Jewry will not be able to continue as before. We were almost on the verge of decay when the war broke out; some people even said that the process had already commenced, that we were beginning to crumble like a wall. However that may be, the new time will force new problems upon us, both external and internal. The question only is, have we the men to direct and lead?

It is at any rate a sign of grace that some at least among us are waking up to the need of looking ahead. We cannot wait until the peace time is here; we must prepare in advance to receive it and all that it brings. What has been done so far? The chief Rabbi has called on the Ministers' Conference to deal with the new problems. But thoughtful people may well ask whether that is sufficient. Does it not seem that the old shams are being continued? The post-bellum problems of Anglo-Jewry are likely to be too extensive for this shadow to deal with. In older days a soothing sort of feeling was produced when it was announced that a committee had been appointed to sit on a problem. Often enough they did literally sit on it, and we heard nothing more.

Today we must shed our shams, and it is as well to confess that as a community we have a good many. Probably we are no worse in this respect than other religious bodies. In all of them there is an abundant growth of shams and pettinesses. But we must sweep them away. We must realize among other things that despite the great gifts of mind and heart possessed by individual ministers, the Conference of Jewish Ministers neither has the capacity nor enjoys public confidence sufficiently to solve our post-bellum problems. A larger and more representative body is required. We need laymen as well as ministers, women as well as men, the East as well as the West End. Above all, we need new forces. Hitherto some of the best Jews and Jewesses were kept away from communal work by reason of the unsympathetic attitude of the powers that be. Here is the opportunity to draw in every possible worker, representing every school of thought, every interest, every policy.

The problems calling for solution will be many and varied. Of those affecting the internal affairs of the community the most important will probably be admitted to be that of Education; of those affecting the Jewish position in the state, that which will receive most attention will doubtless be the influence of Jewish thought on the commonwealth. Too long has the specifically Jewish ideal of justice been confined to recognition in books. The time has surely arrived for the Jew to come forward and plead for its adoption as a principle of the state. And such a step in the work of general reconstruction after the war will be beneficial to the world no less than to the Jew. All the best thought in the world at present is concentrating on the highest principles and the noblest tenets, in order to infuse them into the New Order; and the Jewish standpoint and the Jewish outlook, acclaimed as great through the ages and given lip-worship in many lands, will surely be welcomed now in the building-up work that is about to commence everywhere.

Certainly so far as Western Europe is concerned there is just ground for high hopes for the Jews. In Prussia the horizon is promising. Only this month Wolfgang Heine, the well-known member of the Reichstag, writing in one of the foremost German papers on the new Germany, looks forward to the dying out of that racial and religious prejudice which has hampered the German Jew for the last generation. The opinion in regard to Russia appears to be divided. The pessimists, and with them those who have themselves suffered in the land of the Czar, believe that all will be as before. But fortunately there are also optimists. Is it not probable, nay, is it not almost certain they argue, that the war will change many things in Russia? Will not the association with liberal countries like England, France and Italy be productive of a more liberal treatments of the Jews? It is difficult for the ordinary man without special knowledge to come to a decision on this important subject. But at least it is certain that the optimistic view does exist, and the men who put it forward deserve every whit as much credence as those who see black. The same argument must surely apply to that other pain-center of Jewry—Rumania. She, too, is with the Allies; in the re-arrangements after the war, Rumanian conditions must likewise be altered, and it does not follow that because Rumania was admittedly heedless of her obligations under the Treaty of Berlin that she will be a backslider forever. Look at it how we will, the new Europe is full of promise for the Jew; even in Russia and Rumania his position could not be worsened. In both countries the nadir will have passed when the war is over.

The position of the Russian Jews in regard to military service in this country has undergone an improvement to the extent that the unfortunate wording of the original order has been considerably softened. The Russian Jews are to have facilities for enlisting freely on conditions similar to those governing the enlistment of Englishmen. A recruiting movement has been set on foot and it is hoped that it will obtain good results. If not, the whole question will be dealt with anew. Anyhow there is an opportunity now for that sweet reasonableness which can achieve marvels, and a number of prominent Russian Jews, like Mr. Sokoloff and Dr. Weitzmann, may be trusted to smooth matters as far as possible.

Many American Jews will have heard of Sir Sigismund Neumann, the South African mining magnate and friend of the late King Edward. He originally came from Bavaria, and the story is told that King Edward once asked Sir Sigismund whether he was a seller (on the Stock Exchange). "No, your Majesty," replied Neumann, "I am a buyer (Baier)". Sir Sigismund died last week, and the rather unexpected announcement was made in the advertisement columns of the press that he would be buried in a non-Jewish cemetery after a service in a church. Until two years ago the deceased millionaire was a member of the Congregation of British Jews, and this news, therefore, has come as a surprise to most people. So far the reasons for this disavowal of his race have, of course, not been vouchsafed. But it does bespeak a peculiar psychology on the part of a man of humble origin so to discard his kith and kin. Several people in London, themselves hailing from Furth, Sir Sigismund's native town, knew the baronet quite well. He was just an ordinary man who had money. Perhaps it is Nemesis. There is a school of young writers in this country who constantly declaimed against the Boer War, saying, that it was fought for the advantage of a number of South African Jewish financiers, among whom Sir Sigismund Neumann was included. Thus pointed at for his Jewish origin in his lifetime, he will have nothing to do with Jews in his death. But it should be noted that of such stuff are some of the so-called Jewish international financiers made. The Jews often have to bear the odium directed against these members of the race, and in the end these men, as it were the sticks with which their people are beaten, indicate unmistakably that they do not desire to be regarded as Jews. It is perhaps best so.

BARON SONNINO AND THE JEWS IN RUMANIA.

It is reported from Zurich that in the course of a conversation which Baron Sonnino, Italian Minister for Foreign Affairs, had with the Rumanian Minister in Rome, prior to Rumania joining the Allies, the former urged the desirability of his Government granting equal rights to the Jews.

According to the latest statistics there are 115,308 Jews and 124,659 Jewesses in Rumania. This number constitutes about three per cent of the general population. In the opinion of the Jewish statistician, the late M. Isidore Loeb, the number of Jews in Rumania was much larger in 1876, but owing to persecution the Jews have suffered, there has been a diminution in the Jewish population of about 41 per cent in the course of the last forty years.

Anti-Defamation League

Misuse of the word "Jew" has furnished a very broad field for the activities of the League. Publicists, newspaper reporters, writers and editors fail in many instances to realize that it is improper to use the word "Jew" in an article or a story unless the context makes it necessary to refer to the person's religious faith, and that unless the facts have some relation to his being a Jew there is no occasion for referring to that fact.

It is strange that this misuse of the word is most prevalent in those newspaper articles which describe some scandalous or discreditable incident. In similar instances allusion is never made to a Roman Catholic or a Protestant as a "Roman Catholic" or as a "Protestant". It is easy to imagine the storm of criticism that would arise in the event such an indiscretion should occur.

This peculiar situation, due in most instances to thoughtlessness or ignorance, has made necessary a long and slow campaign of public education. As a first step, the League sent bulletins to every important newspaper and magazine in the country, in the form of printed cards which contained a brief set of rules for guidance of the reporters and editors. Office managers were requested to have these cards placed near the copy desks, so that they might be available for ready reference. As a direct result of this step the League noticed a marked diminution in the number of cases reported to the Managing Board. In all instances where mistakes were made and report came to the attention of the League a courteous letter was sent to the editor, calling attention to the perniciousness of the practice and the injustice to the great mass of law-abiding Jewish citizens of the country.

The League has assumed in all cases that the misuse of the word was unintentional and not inspired by malice or bigotry. In fact, the replies received to these letters indicate that in practically all instances carelessness or lack of consideration was the real reason and in nearly every case as soon as the injustice perpetrated was made clear, an apology was forthcoming and steps were taken to prevent a recurrence.

As a typical example of this large class of cases the League has sent to the office of the News copies of two letters with reference to a story appearing in the October issue of McClure's Magazine. We are reprinting these letters because they indicate the fair and open method which is responsible for so much of the success of the League and because, in justice to the magazine, the editor's explanation should be made known to the Jewish reading public. The letters are as follows:

"September 23, 1916.

"Editor, McClure's Magazine,
"4th Ave and 20th St.,
"New York, N. Y.

"Dear Sir: In your October issue is an article entitled "The Diamond Mine" written by Willa Sibert Cather. We direct your attention to a character in the story named 'Miletus Poppas, a Greek-Jew'. In the description of this character the author says:

"'All, except, perhaps, Miletus Poppas. He was a vulture of the vulture race and he had the beak of one.' (Page 8.)

"We are keenly disappointed that such a story so full of ignorance and want of regard for others should have escaped the attention of the edtior and that you published a story so full of reckless abuse.

"The author, we presume, by the 'vulture race' intended the Jewish people. If she had studied this people and its history she would have learned that this 'race' has been conserved through centuries of bitter struggle and persecution because of its high ideals. That this people is the dreamer of the world. That this people has been the victim of the most despicable antagonism for centuries. To describe such a people as 'vultures' shows such ignorance and lack of appreciation of history that it is surprising that the editor consented to publish same.

"We are attempting by educational means to stop the current defamation of the Jew. The libels from the literature of the past which principally were prompted by fanaticism and bigotry are often accepted by the general public as truth and so popular writers who make no pretense of individual investigation, repeat these libels and defamatory descriptions. We seek to eradicate the antagonism and, of course, our work would be futile unless we were assisted by those who have in their power the formation of public opinion. We have met with gratifying success and the publishers of magazines and current literature have almost universally proffered to us their assistance.

"We do not oppose any just and careful criticism of the Jew or Jewry. We do, however, resent the careless and reckless abuse such as is contained in the article above referred to.

"We appreciate that matters of this kind are apt to pass the attention of the editor merely because he happens to be unmindful that scurrilous descriptions of this character may injure a large and respected part of the American public who are zealous in safeguarding their good name.

"We believe that when, for any reason, an injustice of this character has been done, it should be corrected and that the best means of doing so is a corrective statement which will reach the same reading public.

"Your early reply will be appreciated.

"Very sincerely yours,
"MANAGING BOARD,
"Sig. Livingston,
"Chairman."

"September 27th, 1916.

"Sigmund Livingston, Esq.,
"Anti-Defamation League,
"1228 Tribune Building,
"Chicago, Illinois.

"Dear Mr. Livingston: I have your letter of the 23rd, and no one regrets more than I the insertion of that paragraph in Miss Cather's story. How it got by us, I don't know. If we should print a retraction now, it would only call attention again to the objectionable observation, and I think that would be too bad. I hope you will accept our personal apology, and believe me when I tell you that I have no sympathy at all with that sort of statement. It was kind of you to write us. Faithfully yours,

ANTI-JEWISH RIOTS IN RUMANIA

A report coming from Stockholm by way of Berlin relates of wholesale massacres of Jews in various parts of Rumania. In Jassy and Botushan, where all the Jewish men joined the army, all Jewish houses were plundered by the mob. In Botushan the police assisted the mob in its work of robbing and plundering Jewish houses. Twenty women whose husbands are in the army were arrested in Jassy and two synagogues were destroyed. In Galaz, Ismaila and other towns the mob, with the help of the Russian soldiery robbed and plundered Jewish houses. It is reported that many Jews were murdered during these riots, although no definite details were given.

The Aims and Problems of the B'nai B'rith

By Rabbi M. Friedlander

My purpose is to present the aims and problems of the B'nai B'rith to the Jewish intelligence. While the general conscience of enlightened humanity of the God-given right of the liberty and security of man has grown out of that divine proclamation, while every struggle and every triumph in the cause of liberty in the past three thousand years has drawn inspiration from Israel's struggle and triumph, which Passover commemorates, Israel today is still groaning under the burden of oppression and intolerance; one-half of our people are still suffering from the wicked denial of liberty and security in unenlightened lands, and the other half are often made to feel the smart of indignities and incivilities laid upon them by the hand of prejudice, even in enlightened lands. This is the problem of the B'nai B'rith and this must be the problem of every Jew.

Then again, while in the more enlightened lands where liberty rules and freedom is guaranteed, and here we specifically refer to this blessed United States, where every honorable career is open to us, where the pursuance of our own conscience is not hindered us, where the conservation and promulgation of our high religious and ethical ideals are free to us, many among us fail to appreciate this blessing of equality and freedom of opportunity. Many among us are lax in their civic and ethical obligations as citizens, and negligent in their moral and spiritual responsibilities as Jews. This is the problem of the B'nai B'rith, and this must be the problem of every Jew, especially of every American Jew.

The aims of the B'nai B'rith are to awaken in humanity a conscience of justice and fairness towards the Jew and thus bring alleviation of suffering to our co-religionists in other lands and raise the respect for our people in this country, and to awaken in the Jew, especially the recent immigrant to the shores of this free land, a high sense of duty he owes to this government which, in return for liberty and security, it requires industrial uprightness, moral rectitude, personal dignity, and loyalty to American institutions. These are the aims of the B'nai B'rith and these must be the aims of every Jew.

Every Jew and every Jewess, whatever his or her position in the community may be, must feel the burden of these problems, and must aid in the attainments of these aims. For a Jew is not one who only admits as being of the "Jewish persuasion" and has his name on the roster of financial supporters of the synagogue or the temple, but one who feels, and thinks, and lives with his people, with all his people.

We need never fear a decline of Judaism because of a departure from orthodox forms and ceremonies. The lessening or change of external practices is no symptom of spiritual weakness. It is the lack of Jewish sympathy which gives warning of serious disorder in the union of Israel. It is the aloofness of one Jew from the other Jew because the other is less aesthetic, or less successful, or because he hails from a different part of God's stool, which threatens the oncoming of anemia in the blood-course of the Jewish spiritual body. Judaism, like Americanism, does not recognize an aristocracy of privileges. Judaism, like Americanism, recognizes only one guiding principle—RIGHT. We, like all other people, have our great men, and our leading men, whom we must regard as the flower of our racial tree. But, we, like our fathers, must recognize only one Source from which the flower, the branches, and the roots draw life, the help of the root and the strength of the branches being indispensable to the beauty and fragrance of the flower. It is time that we learn the lesson of history that our racial and spiritual safety is anchored in the people, or to use the happy American phrase, the common people. The B'nai B'rith is the institution of and for the people, and it should have the support of every leading man in the community.

Some of our brethren in this or in other communities may have had some excuse for their aloofness from the B'nai B'rith years ago, when the institution was in its formative state, and to make its existence and growth possible it was compelled to hold out material inducements in one way or another. Today all inducements of a material character have been eliminated, and the heretofore grounds for any excuse for staying out of the B'nai B'rith no longer exists. The B'nai B'rith today stands for the sole [illegible] aim and object of bettering [illegible] conditions of fostering Jewish [illegible] of preserving Jewish individuality, of forestalling and providing a vindication [illegible] defense in united influence and concentrated action against any malicious attack on the fair name of the Jew and Judaism.

But the scope of the B'nai B'rith of today is broader than that; the B'nai B'rith is the missionary and propagandist of the synagogue and the temple missionary, not to win recruits from without, but to preserve the forces within. It aids the temple in keeping God, Judaism, uprightness, continually alive among the fevershily busy and pleasure-seeking generation of the present. In the B'nai B'rith our youth unconsciously imbibe and refresh that power of fervor which strengthens in them our historic trait, our hereditary and ineradicable tenacity to the ideal of indissoluble Jewish unity.

And I take occasion here to say that we must not be misled by the so-called new prophets and proletarian seers who, in hysteria of newness, preach chaotic religion and fantastic liberalism. According to them, Judaism is obsolete and the distinctiveness of the Jew is unserviceable. Three thousand years of wandering and vicissitude, of threats and persuasion, of revolutions and evolutions left Judaism unscathed and the Jew unmaimed, and the revolutions and evolutions of as many, and more, cycles will not displace the Jew nor supersede Judaism. We admit the world can easily dispense with the Jew who is only a Jew in name, but it can not spare the Jew who lives and believes in the religion of Israel's prophets, psalmists and sages, for he stands to the world for what is holiest in the human soul and noblest in the human heart—Godhood and manhood. Winston Churchhill, one of the keenest thinkers, and the most popular novelists of today, recently said in a Jewish pulpit: "'It is as a spiritual people that the Jews have impressed themselves upon the world. And as such they have done more than any other people in raising the world to the moral height it has attained."

Houston Stewart Chamberlain, the most refined and the bittest anti-Semite, who deplores the preservation of the Jewish individuality and sees danger to civilization in Jewish influence, devotes the longest chapter in his book, "The Foundation of the Nineteenth Century," to the question, "Who Is the Jew?" and the question remains unanswered. Chamberlin does not understand, or refuses to acknowledge the core, the vital point of the problem. Ethnology and archaeology will never answer that ages-old question. To answer the question, "Who Is the Jew?" we must go to the Torah, Israel's heritage, we must go to all the wisdom of the past, to the fiercest battles of the ages, to the most thrilling martyrdom in history. The Jew is he who taught the world the conception of One Fatherhood and one brotherhood. The Jew is he who stimulated in humanity a zeal and capacity of self-sacrifice for an ideal. The Jew is he who believes that God's covenant with Israel shall not be removed even though "the mountains shall depart and the hills shall be removed." The Jew, the helping Jew, the true Jew, is he who shares in the Jewish burdens, who feels for the Jewish shortcomings, who rejoices in the attainment of the Jewish hopes and who helps every movement, every institution, which aims at raising his people to a higher and happier plane spiritually, morally and economically; and one of the great and world-wide institutions of such noble aims is the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, in behalf of which we appeal to every family of every position in this country.—"Texas Jewish Herald."

The B'nai B'rith News, the monthly published in behalf of and under the auspices of the great fraternity which, as the name implies, aims at embracing all the sons of the covenant of Israel, is always sprightly and always readable. The contents and the tone and temper of every number since the first have been marked by dignity and resoluteness, a happy combination not excessively prevalent in these overheated times of passionately conducted controversies in the discussion of exaggerated differences in our ranks. But the number just laid on my library table ranks high even among the many excellent issues which preceded its coming. I take great pleasure in calling the attention of my friends more especially to the letter from Berlin. Apparently it was long in reaching its destination, but even so, it is exceedingly instructive and full of welcome information. But for this very reason the apprehension is justified that for publishing this communication the News will be put into the "Herem."—Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, in the Reform Advocate.

The Care of the Jewish Orphan

By A. Lincoln Krohn, Superintendent of B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children, Erie, Pa.

Extract from Report to the Convention of D. G L. No. 3

There are certain definite and fundamental criteria of modern child-caring work by which the education or training of any group of children can be judged, namely, To what extent does the Institution make adequate provision for the general education (secular) of the children? To what extent does the Institution provide opportunity for the religious development of the children? To what extent does the Institution interpret life in a civic and social sense? To what extent does the Institution provide for the all around physical development of the children? To what extent does the Institution provide for the recreational life of the children?

1. To what extent does the Institution make adequate provision for the general education (secular) of the children?

Before going on to discuss what we are doing for the general education of the children I must necessarily note the fact that no schooling of a definite character was provided for a period of about ten months while the question of the children's right to admission to the Fairview school was being fought in the courts. Immediately after assuming my duties, I worked out a tentative course of study, and with the help of a teacher the task of rehabilitating the education of the children was begun. I was tempted to make some radical changes in the curriculum because of the special problems involving the education of dependent children. What are these problems? In the first place, the majortiy of our children will have very few opportunities for a continuation of their schooling after their discharge, which means that their education must be as complete as possible before they leave us. In the second place, most of our children will be obliged to make their own way in life, at a very tender age, which means that they must be prepared for more than blind alley jobs, that they must be prepared not to enter the army of unskilled laborers, but for some definite vocation which will not only be remunerative in the immediate, but which will be a stepping-stone for something better in the future. Our present school system provides for no such preparation, and in that respect it is lacking in its usefulness to our children. I have refrained, however, from making the necessary changes while the school question was hanging fire, and I now believe that inasmuch as the Supreme Court has finally decided that our children are not entitled to admission to the Fairview school that this Board, as the policy determining body of the Orphanage, make ample provision for an adequate general and vocational education of the children.

But what have we done in the meanwhile? We divided the school year into three terms of four months each, so as to enable our children not only to catch up with their studies which were lost, but also to prepare them to enter higher grades on account of their advanced age. The school day was divided into seven periods of forty minutes each, and the subjects and number of periods assigned to each are as follows: English, 8; Mathematics, 6; Hebrew, 4; Geography, 3; History, 2; Music, 1; Art, 1; Sewing, 2; Cooking, 2; Hygiene, 1. During the past month the number of periods given to each subject has been reduced wherever possible and feasible, in order to give the children ample time to help with the farm work.

It is too short a period to judge of results. What we have done as regards the general education of the children can only be determined by the provision we have made. I can say, however, that very rapid progress is being made.

2. To what extent does the Institution provide opportunities for the religious development of the children?

You will, no doubt, have noted that in the course of study, Hebrew, which includes the study of Hebrew as a language, the study of the tenets of the Jewish Faith, and the study of Jewish History, is one of the subjects. You can readily see how this subject has gained in dignity by placing it on the equal footing with the other subjects in the curriculum in contradistinction to the old method of separating the religious and secular in education. In addition to this formal instruction, religious consciousness is stimulated by the attendance at synagogue services on Friday night, Saturday morning, the Festivals and Holy Days; the celebration of the Festivals; and the observance of such Jewish customs as the kindling of the lights on Friday evening, the chanting of the Kiddush, etcetera. Right living and right thinking is the outgrowth of the standards set by the sermons which are delivered every Saturday, and the civic and social activities.

3 To what extent does the Institution interpret life in a civic and social sense?

The interpretation of life in a civic and social sense has too often been made, if made at all, from the adult plane of experience, but childhood has its way of seeing, thinking, feeling, peculiar to itself; nothing is more absurd than to wish to substitute ours in their place. Out of the child's own self-active life must come that which makes knowledge power; or better, which transmutes mere instruction or information into personal efficiency. It was with this educational ideal in mind, that a system of self-government consisting of a Republic, a Court of Honor, and a Big Brother and Big Sister Movement was instituted so that the children might have an opportunity to actively express themselves on those matters which affect their daily life and of which they were in a large measure the best judges. In this way the point of contact in this element of their education was made at their plane of experience.

In those matters pertaining to the home life of the children, their relation to the older persons, and the other children, to the school, to the world outside, the various problems connected with the management of the household, all these, representing as they do the child's plane of experience, are administered by them as they comprehend it; and in so doing there is developed not only an active interest in the daily tasks and problems confronting them, but also those qualities of initiative, responsibility, leadership, executive ability and cheerful co-operation, which make for complete living in the future.

4. To what extent does the Institution provide for the all around physical development of the children?

It is not uncommon for the majority of children to be subnormal when admitted to child-caring Institutions, but with exercise and wholesome diet the number can be greatly reduced. In the past five months twenty-five per cent of our subnormal children have been brought to normal, and this is largely due to the provision that has been made for vigorous exercise and wholesome diet.

By exercise we do not mean manual labor alone, but an all around physical development which can only come from vigorous play as well as work. Our children enjoy baseball, basketball, tennis, skating, croquet, folk dancing and dumb bell practice, and with coming of the cooler weather, football and soccer will be added. Our playground equipment, however, is still very meagre. I am hoping that additional playground apparatus, including swings, giant strides, see-saws, teeter ladders, horizontal and parallel bars will soon be added to what we have.

That the human diet cannot be left to chance has long been an established fact. We now have a carefully planned. well-balanced diet, which we expect will be one of the great factors in overcoming the tendency to subnormal weight in the children.

5. To what extent does the Institution provide for the recreational life of the children?

As distinct from vigorous play which calls for physical activity, are those activities which tend to develop the aesthetic, the intellectual and the moral. We are very fortunate in the abundance of these activities. Daily contact with God's great out-of-doors, the drawing of objects of interest to the child, singing, dancing, develop the aesthetic; a library containing books of a wide scope, magazines, newspapers, develop the intellectual; games, toys and dolls develop the moral. Our children derive much pleasure from the regular weekly entertainments, the celebration of Jewish and National holidays, tournaments and contests. Although supervised, all these recreational features are in the hands of the Republic's Committee on Sociables and Entertainments.

Evaluating our work on the basis of these five criteria of modern child-caring work, I can say that we are fast approaching the standards set for the best child-caring institutions, and with a more sympathetic understanding and appreciation of the problems confronting us, and with more adequate provision for more intensive work, we will gradually attain the goal sought.

Have We as B'nai B'rith the Right to Help Along in the Palestine Relief Work?

Remarks to the Report of Brother Victor Koenig of Bohemia Lodge, by Brother Dr. Samuel Rappaport of Jeruschalayim Lodge

(Translated for the B'nai B'rith News from the Bi-Monthly Report of District No. 10)

In the last number of the Bi-Monthly Reports a report of Brother Victor Koenig was published which he submitted to Bohemia Lodge, of which he is a member, and in which the following question is presented for discussion: Can we as Austrians and as Jews find a justification for sending fellow citizens and money to Palestine?

The question was actually taken up for discussion on the occasion when an appeal was sent out by the "Central Relief Committee for Palestine," asking aid for Austrian co-religionists in the Holy Land who are suffering on account of the war.

As this question is now open for discussion I, as a member of the B'nai B'rith Lodge in Jerusalem, consider it my duty to make clear my standpoint in regard to this question.

Brother Koenig explains that the reason we extend our lasting care to that country on the other side of our monarchy is "the sentimental interest in the historical events and the colonization endeavors." But these reasons, Brother Koenig thinks, do not justify us to follow sentimental interests, for: (1) our statutes prohibit us to foster such efforts; (2) our patriotism forbids us to promote the interests of a foreign land which does not lead to the strengthening of our fatherland. "The historical episode," Brother Koenig thinks, "that thousands of years ago Palestine was subservient to a Jewish state, cannot impose the duty upon us to take a greater interest in the Turkish province of today . . . than in our own home land."

These are more or less the leading thoughts of the report. Brother Koenig will pardon me when I take the liberty to remark that he has not given sufficient attention to this not so very simple question. The reason why just Palestine possessed at all times and still possesses the interest of the entire cultural world, and especially our interest as Jews, lies mainly in this, because it once "was subservient to a Jewish state," and because it is the "Holy Land," and is so called Holy, not only to the Jews, but to all moral mankind as the birthplace of pure monotheism, as the source of that eternal light of the pure knowledge of God, in the rays of which all who lay claim to higher culture and ethics still bask and refresh themselves today. And for us Jews especially, without distinction of religious or political shading, Palestine, or, to state it more correctly, Erez Israel, means something more than a "sentimental interest for historical events and colonization endeavors." Palestine is the spiritual basis of our moral being. It is the living source of that ethico-religious force which endowed us with the marvelous power to ascend the scaffold and the funeral pile for the sake of higher ideals, for the pure God-idea and the belief in the moral force of humanity, for the doctrines of the Torah and the Prophets, and to rise again like a phoenix full of strength and rejuvenated. At no time and in no period has the sacred interest in this venerable cradle of our people as well as of our great culture become extinguished in our hearts, or even grown pale. I call upon all the works of our great and glorious literature, beginning with the Pentateuch down to our days, as eloquent witnesses, and preferably upon our daily prayers, which as they did edify our ancestors in all times, also edify and comfort us in these sad days. I will also not leave unmentioned the excellent poems of "To Jerusalem," the work of our Austrian patriotic poet, Ludwig August Frankl, which sparkle with sacred love for the land of our ancestors.

The messianic thought, the leading moral motive (Leitmotiv) of the Judaism of the exile and its world contemplation cannot be thought of without Erez Israel. One may form for himself the conception of the Messiah in any way he likes, either as a real physical personality or as a mythical-cabalistic vision that will lead the Jewish people back into its original home by a supernatural emanation of heavenly mercy, or that finally, according to the Prophets, all humanity in the messianic time after attaining the pure knowledge of God will as one people of brothers, give adoration in Zion to the common father in heaven.

One can shape the Messiah in his mind just as one likes—religious, national, or only symbolical, the conception cannot be separated form Erez Israel. Both these inseparable jewels, "Messiah" and "Erez Israel," are not to be removed from Israel's spiritual treasury if we do not wish to rob Judaism of its inner nature and its moral being. Whoever knows Judaism, its history and literature, its evolution and its nature, must confirm this assertion. In spite of the many schisms, factions and manifold shadings within our religious fellowship, there is no Jewish community upon the face of the globe of whatever point of view it may be that has no warm interest in the relief work of Palestine.

Everything in Judaism that has written true humanity upon its banner, takes a lively part in the noble fight for the general love of mankind in Palestine. Is it a wonder when many brethren of our Order, that has chosen as its aim the highest moral ideals of Judaism, are participating in the work for humanity in Palestine?

Yes, it is the B'nai B'rith Grand Lodge in Berlin which is aiding with a munificent subvention the Jewish Central Library, which was established by the B'nai B'rith Lodge in Jerusalem at a great material sacrifice. Thereby the Grand Lodge helps to foster knowledge and to elevate the cultural level of our Palestinian co-religonists. Thus Palestine has more moral significance for us than a mere "sentimental interest."

And now the question: Are our lodges justified to aid in the undertaking of social and humanity works in Palestine, and is such aid consistent with the spirit of our laws? Whoever is acquainted with our statutes and the human aims which are expressed in them must answer decidedly in the affirmative. Palestine is at all times the spiritual focal point of the entire Jewish people, from which the dispersed children of Israel drew their moral power. "From Zion will go forth the law and the word of God from Jerusalem," is already stated in the Holy Writ, which words we constantly repeat in the synagogue at the beginning of the reading of the Torah.

In the Palestine work—may it be purely humane, social, religious or national—vie all vital forces of the Jewish people, which are inspired by high and noble aims. We may call the direction, aim and title by any name we please, but this can be most positively asserted that not one of them does, even in the remotest sense, contradict the patriotic duties to the home land.

All these works are supported by higher moral forces and are common to all in spite of their manifold differences. Among the ideals and duties which speak to us out of the program of our Order are also the following: "To promote the highest and noblest interests of humanity," "to develop the mental and moral character of our race," "to inculcate the purest principles of philanthropy and patriotism," "to attend to the sick," and "to come to the rescue of the victims of persecution."

Do not these noble demands admonish us of our obligation to help along in the great noble works for Palestine? Can we as B'nai B'rith, as sons of the eternal covenant, look on quietly how our brethren in the Holy Land go to ruin socially and die in masses of hunger in the streets? Shall we perchance in the misunderstood interpretation of our statutes lay our hands in the lap and refuse to participate in this noble work of humanity because some organizations which are also active in Palestine attach to their work of colonization political hopes which lie in the very remote future? Are not the German Hilfsverein, the Ica, who are surely far from entertaining Jewish national political tendencies, and finally the American and German B'nai B'rith lodges, as well as the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Jerusalem (which, besides the Central Library has also established "Mozah," a colonists' farm of its own near Jerusalem), the one who at the side of the Zionistic Action Committee have gained the greatest merits on account of their work in the interest of colonization and their endeavors to elevate Palestine socially and culturally?

Are we perhaps not proud of it as Austrians that the first modern school in Palestine was founded by no less a man than L. A. Frankl, with the means furnished by an Austrian Jew, the noble von Laemel, and with the ready consent and under the protectorate of the Austrian Government? Has not our Austrian Government yet in the 18th century undertaken the administration of legacies of Austrian Jews, the annual incomes of which it applied to the aid of our brethren in Palestine? All this was done yet before Turkey was our faithful ally.

But now Brother Koenig opines that of the 100.000 Jewish souls in Palestine, about 60,000 are entirely or partly supported by the Halukkah, which the contributions which flowed in for decades from all parts of the world were not able to place the existence of these Jews upon a healthy economic basis." Quite right! Only it is necessary to state correctly that this stream of contributions did not flow in for decades, but for centuries, or, to state it better, for nearly 2,000 years, with few interruptions from the time of Constantine the Great and the Crusaders, when the stay in Palestine was forbidden to the Jews under pain of death.

But does the blame for this misery rest with the unfortunate Palestinian Jews, or is it not rather our own fault because we did not conduct it in the right way, that we, instead of training our brethren to do productive work and helping them to become useful and independent members of human society, we have moreover suffered the existence of the Halukkah for so long that we have really forced them to become professional beggars or, as Brother Koenig says, "to lamentable parasitism."

Is it not our sacred duty as "B'nai B'rith to foster also in Palestine "the mental and moral character of our race," just as well as other humane organizations are doing, by offering our hand too, "according to the purest principles of humanity" to bring those poor Palestinian co-religionists out of the "lamentable parasitism" by training them to handicraft and to agriculture, which enables the character and spirit and to make them happy, independent citizens.

"Yes," Brother Koenig will say, "this is colonization, and smells after politics." Sure! If noble work which is sustained by pure and lofty love of mankind which does not conflict in any way with our duties as citizens of the state, is called politics, then such politics—which is totally different from that which is usually understood under "politics"—is not only strongly founded in our program, but it is even the duty of us all to follow and to practice.

And now the last question, whether the carrying away of capital and human material from the fatherland into a foreign country is not an unpatriotic act?

This question, too, becomes deciduous and can not hold out through the facts that the modern socio-humane Palestine work is since a long time proceeding under the eyes of the government, and not only did it not, as usual, call forth polite displeasure, but on the contrary is being fostered and supported on every occasion with a kind disposition on the part of our state representation. The German Government, which is surely not indifferent to capital and human material, fosters and protects the newly founded German colonies in Palestine; it fosters and protects also with apparent favor the Palestine work of the Hilfsverein der deutschen Juden," which has attained considerable success under the leadership of the indefatigable and well deserving Dr. Paul Nathan. And if the Palestine work stood until now in no contradiction of our patriotism, the less it must contradict our patriotism today, when Turkey is our faithful ally, at a time when the blood spilled in common by Austria, Germany and Turkey has forged a lasting union for incalculable time.

Brother Koenig supposes: "Every state is friend and foe just as it happens to be to its interests at certain times, and these are changeable." Under certain circumstances this is probably true. But whoever casts even a superficial glance upon our economic and political relation with Turkey will soon be forced to conceive that the alliance relations of our fatherland with the same cannot be mutable and that history and life have tied them together in a lasting faithful union for a very long future. I even dare to maintain that a strengthening of Turkey by capital and human material is a patriotic deed, as a strong and healthy Turkey is to our very fundamental patriotic interest. For the rest, that which we as Austrian Jews have done and can do for Turkey with our Palestine work is only a very small fraction in comparison to that which our fatherland and the German Empire, which is closely united with us, have already done and are still doing in capital and human material for the strengthening of Turkey. In comparison to those gigantic sacrifices the sum of 110,000 crowns which the Central Relief Committee (or more correctly the "Relief Commission 1915 for Palestine"), which was mentioned by Brother Koenig, was able to collect with no little exertion through its appeal out of which possibly 40 to 50 destittue Palestinian Jews, who are Austrian subjects, and are living at present in Vienna, are being aided. The very favorable attitude assumed by our supreme government towards this humane act, and how this government itself lends a helping hand to it, is evidenced by the fact that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has placed at the disposal of this committee 10,000 crowns from the funds of the state, and in the face of the untold suffering which prevails in the midst of the Palestinian Jews, the Austro-Hungarian consul has demanded additional 70,000 crowns, a fact which completely eliminates every doubt about the justification of this action, also from the patriotic standpoint.

Also the scruples of Brother Koenig about whether we have a right to deliver through emigration the Galician emigrants "instead of to the West European civilization to the Jesuitic culture," are lacking all justification. Galicia, with its more than 800,000 Jews (about 12 per cent of the total population), is known as an industrially poor country, which is restricted to its products of the soil only.

The Polish and Ruthenian co-operative companies have forced also the few Jews from the open country districts to move into the city, but here too in consequence of the prepondering majority of the Jewish population engaged in commercial pursuits, trade is wrested from them by the above companies. The degrading and the making of proletariats of the Jewish masses, which were the consequence of it, have created that classic Jewish wretchedness which since many years presses the wanderers staff into the hand of the Jew to seek dry bread in the remote distance for himself and for his starving family.

Most of them emigrate to the United States of North America, and especially to New York, where they earn their scanty subsistence under great misery and privation as white slaves in big tailoring establishments, the so-called "sweat shops," or even in munition factories, without air and without sunshine. Without any contcat with the old home, sinking down in crushing manual labor, they mostly lose already in the second generation every connection with the land of their birth, and in time they disappear in the mass of the North American people.

The ravages among the Galician Jews, which came in consequence of the Russian invasion, through which most of them were completely robbed of the last remnant of their possession, must, in a country which was always poor, where a rise in commerce and industry is impossible, where even a modest earning possibility in the conceivable future is not to be thought of for the 800,000 Galician Jews, a stream of emigration must positively be expected to pour out from that country.

Clear-sighted, noble co-religionists in America, as well as in the German empire, have already united to devise ways and means and to sketch out a plan how to organize, manage and lead in the right direction the flood of emigration which is unfailingly coming with mathematical precision right after the war from Galicia and Poland. Where is the harm if a part of this emigration, instead of going to America, of which it is not yet known whether it will not stem too strong a tide of immigration by a dam of restriction laws, will be turned to Turkey, towards Palestine, the land which is so dear to all Jewry?

The former experiences which were gained during the last few years through the Palestine work have fully justified the confidence placed in this plan. I wish that Brother Koenig could see once with his own eyes the disconsolate and hopeless condition of our brethren in Galicia and the flourishing Jewish colonies and schools (of which I will only name the Art and Craft School Bezalil in Jerusalem) in Palestine, he would form an altogether different opinion of the "Jemenitic culture" which he mentions with such irony.

I believe that with my statements I have completely dissipated the scruples which according to the opinions of Brother Koenig confront us as B'nai B'rith and as patriots through the fostering of the Palestine work. In a time when in consequence of the most cruel of all wars so much misfortune and suffering came over our brethren in the Holy Land, which sweep away the people in masses by death from starvation and threaten with annihilation so many Jewish establishments which were founded with so many sacrifices, in a time when noble minded co-religionists of all lands and before all, our co-religionist who is permeated by love of humanity and true Jewish feeling, the American ambassador in Constantinople, Brother Henry Morgenthau, are vieing with each other to ameliorate the distress there with rich gifts of money and provisions (two ships filled with clothing and provisions have already arrived in Palestine). It gives us moral satisfaction that the co-operation of our Austrian co-religionists in this noble work is not missing, and that many prominent clear-sighted brethren of our Order who know their duties fully are taking a lively part in it.

The social and entertainment features in the foregoing program are strictly for the members of the lodges and their ladies.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE.

Emma Lazarus Auxiliary held its first business meeting on September 21. At the close of the regular order of business the Auxiliary was hostess to Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 and their friends at a delightful dance. The affair was in charge of the entertainment committee.

At a joint meeting of Hildesheimer and Rainier Lodges, held on September 14, 1916, Mr. Henry Newburgh, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, delivered an address. About forty members of Tacoma Lodge were also present. Mr. Julius Shafer, District Deputy, presided at the meeting and introduced the Grand officers. A class of seventeen candidates was initiated prior to the public meeting. The Ladies Auxiliary also initiated a class of seven.

The visit of the Grand Lodge Officers did much to arouse interest in the work of the Order. On Friday evening President Newburgh addressed the Seattle Jewish community from the pulpit of Temple de Hirsch. The visitors and their ladies were considerably entertained during their stay in Seattle and were shown the various Jewish institutions in the city. On Thursday a luncheon was arranged in their honor at Hotel Butler.

BELLINGHAM LODGE, BELLINGHAM, WASH.

The open meeting of the lodge at the synagogue on Sunday, September 17, was well attended and those present were rewarded by an inspiring address by Brother David N. Mosessohn, First Vice President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, who came to give his message in behalf of the Order in place of President Newburgh who was prevented from attending. Addresses were also delivered by Brothers Weiner and Verstandig, of Seattle, and M. J. Schwartz, President of Bellingham Lodge. Mrs. Mosessohn accompanied the visitors and was welcomed by the members of the Ladies Auxiliaries.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE OF DISTRICT NO. 6.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 6 held its quarterly meeting at the Hotel La Salle on Sunday, September 24, 1916. The meeting was attended by more than twenty-five of its members and Past Presidents of the Grand Lodge and Chairmen of various committees.

A great deal of routine work was disposed of. The work of the Social Service Department of the District was one of the subjects particularly dwelt upon, and liberal appropriations were made for pursuit of this work in a number of the larger cities of this District.

A propaganda campaign was decided upon for the District and the Chairman of the Propaganda Committee was authorized to inaugurate the same at the earliest possible time. It is hoped that the record of the preceding year relative to increase of membership will be equalled if not surpassed.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

The visit of Mr. Henry Newburgh, of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, accompanied by Mrs. Newburgh, was a gala occasion. The guests were met upon their arrival by the executives of Samuel Lodge No. 668, and its Auxiliary. On Sunday, September 10, they were entertained with an automobile ride through the beautiful residential district of the city. In the evening there was a special meeting of the lodge and its auxiliary. Mrs. Newburgh addressed the auxiliary relating to them the splendid work done by the auxiliaries in San Francisco. After the initiation of three new members, the members of the auxiliary joined Samuel Lodge in an open meeting and President Newburgh addressed the assembly. His earnest message left a deep impression. A musical program was enjoyed and at its close, refreshments were served.

MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

After a cessation of activities during the summer months, Menorah Lodge No. 771, of Baltimore, formally opened its fall season at its monthly meeting held in September. Mr. Wm. Levy delivered an address in which he reported upon the results of a recent transcontinental trip during which he visited many B'nai B'rith lodges throughout the country.

At the meeting definite steps were taken for the acquisition of a permanent home in which it is intended to concentrate various other Jewish activities.

Menorah Lodge, although only a little more than a year old, has succeeded in becoming one of the influential forces in Baltimore Jewry. Among other things it has been instrumental in re-establishing the Jewish Court of Arbitration, and has assisted the Jewish Big Brother League. In addition, it has taken charge of the work of the Anti-Defamation League, and is co-operating with the newly created Maryland Board of Moving Picture Censors. It is undertaking to prevent the appearance of pictures ridiculing Jewish characters. The Board of Censors has courteously received the advances of the Menorah Lodge in this matter and has agreed to consult with a member of the Anti-Defamation Committee whenever a film depicting Jewish characters is of a questionable nature.

BEAVER VALLEY LODGE, BEAVER FALLS, PA.

On Wednesday evening, September 13, an open mass meeting in the interests of Beaver Valley Lodge No. 777, was held at the synagogue, Beaver Falls, Pa. Hon. Isador Sobel, Erie, Pa., Past President of the District, was speaker of the evening. The subject of his address was "The Orphanage." Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, Pa., First Vice President of the District, made an elaborate speech, and was followed by Mr. Edward Hemple, the enthusiastic B'nai B'rith worker of the District. Meyer Berkman, President Beaver Valley Lodge, was Chairman of the evening.

A goodly number of people pledged themselves at the close of the meeting. It is planned for the entertainment committee of the Lodge, to hold these meetings monthly.

B'NAI B'RITH CLUB, NEW YORK.

Thanks to the efforts of Brothers S. Fibel, Chairman of the Tennis Club, and W. H. Silk, organizer of the club, the B'nai B'rith Tennis Club met all during the summer.

Arrangements are being made for some interesting chess tournaments to take place in the Chess Club during the coming fall and winter season.

The Glee Club has secured the valuable services of Dr. H. Martin as its leader for the coming year. The club will meet every Saturday evening.

The bowling alley which is open on Sunday afternoons and Sunday evenings to its members, has shown much activity. The alley has been pronounced one of the finest in the city.

CLASS INITIATION AND BANQUET BY RACINE LODGE.

An enthusiastic meeting of Racine Lodge No. 697 of Racine, Wis., was held on August 23, 1916. A special feature of the meeting was initiation of a class of candidates numbering nineteen. The meeting was honored by the presence of officers of the Grand Lodge, consisting of President Dr. H. I. Davis of Chicago, Past President of the District Grand Lodge Charles L. Aarons of Milwaukee, Treasurer of the District Grand Lodge Benjamin Braun of Milwaukee, and A. B. Seelenfreund of Chicago, Secretary of the Order. A number of visiting members from Milwaukee and Chicago lodges were also in attendance. At the meeting of the lodge interesting and impressive addresses were made by the visiting Grand Lodge officers, Brothers Dr. H. I. Davis and Charles L. Aarons. After the close of the business meeting, automobiles were on hand to take the party to Little Bohemia, where a banquet was in readiness in honor of the visitors and the class of new members. More than fifty plates were set, and all present were pleased with the perfect arrangements. Remarks replete with humor and wit as well as addresses of a serious nature were made, and all proclaimed the affair a huge success.

OFFICIAL VISIT OF PRESIDENT HENRY NEWBURGH OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 4 TO THE PORTLAND LODGES.

The visit of President Henry Newburgh and Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, proved a great stimulant to the B'nai B'rith in Portland. Mr. Newburgh, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Portland on September 3, a day ahead of schedule. Monday afternoon, Dr. Coffee arrived from San Francisco and left the same night for Chicago, via Seattle.

While they were in Portland, several meetings were arranged for both B'nai B'rith heads with the result that a great portion of the Jewish community of Portland had the opportunity of listening to their messages. The visitors were entertained with true Portland hospitality and left with praises for that city.

A main feature of their visit was the conference in the Benson Hotel, when Dr. Coffee explained to a group of social workers invited by Ben Selling, the chairman of the Social Service Department of the B'nai B'rith of Oregon, the plan for this kind of work in Portland. After a short talk questions were asked and local conditions explained, with the result that increased interest in the work was promised. On Monday evening, Dr. Coffee addressed a large audience in Temple Beth Israel, telling of the work done by his department and of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order. His hearers were deeply impressed by his earnestness and eloquence. Dr. Coffee was introduced by Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, and at the close of his address the entire audience, led by Miss Leah Cohen, arose and sang "America," accompanied by Frederick W. Goodrich at the organ.

On September 12 Mr. Newburgh was entertained at a luncheon by the local lodges in the Portland Hotel. Dr. M. M. Bettman acted as toastmaster and introduced the First Grand Vice-President, David N. Mosessohn, who welcomed the Grand President. Mr. Newburgh responded, and he was followed by Past Grand President Sigmund Sichel, Past Grand President Isaac Swett, Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, Rev. R. Abrahamson, Dr. N. Mosessohn and Dr. A. Tilzer, who delivered short addresses.

In the evening a joint meeting of both B'nai B'rith lodges and the Ladies' Auxiliary was held in the B'nai B'rith Building. A large audience, composed of members and their wives and their friends, were present to greet the grand officers. District Deputy Dr. M. M. Bettman presided, and addresses were delivered by the Grand President, the First Grand Vice-President and Rabbi Jonah B. Wise.

The visitors were extensively entertained. Sunday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Newburgh were the guests of their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Fogel. In the evening they were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. David N. Mosessohn. Monday afternoon an automobile tour of the city was made by Mr. and Mrs. Newburgh and Dr. Coffee, the B'nai B'rith Building and the Neighborhood House being the points of particular interest. Monday evening the party were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Selling for dinner. Tuesday noon, while the time the luncheon given to Mr. Newburgh was in progress, Mrs. Newburgh was entertained at a separate luncheon by the ladies' auxiliary, at which its president, Mrs. M. Wax, presided. In the afternoon the visitors were taken on a trip over the Columbia River Highway. In the evening they were the guests at dinner of Mr. and Mrs. David N. Mosessohn at their Irvington home.

NAT STRAUSS LODGE, BRISTOL, TENN.

On Sunday, September 17, 1916, the regular monthly meeting of Nat Strauss Lodge No. 719 of Bristol, Tenn., was held in Johnson City, Tenn., by special invitation of the Johnson City members, who constitute quite a percentage of the membership of this lodge. Previous to the meeting, the delegation from Bristol were met on their arrival at the station by several automobiles furnished by the Gump Brothers, Harry, Martin and Louis, and given a two-hours' drive around this growing and interesting little city, viewing the sights, especially the National Soldiers' Home, where several of the members are quartered. The Elks' Home furnished the meeting place, the use of which was kindly tendered by that order. An enjoyable day was thus spent.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

CHICAGO B'NAI B'RITH.

The first meeting after the summer vacation was held by Ramah Lodge No. 33 on September 18, 1916, at Hotel La-Salle, where permanent quarters have been secured for the meetings of the lodge.

Due to the fact that a great deal of routine work had accumulated during the vacation, no set program was arranged by the Committee on Intellectual Advancement.

A feature of the meeting was the initiation of a class of fourteen candidates and the presentation of more than thirty applications for membership.

Various appropriations for charitable and philanthropic purposes were made at the meeting and arrangements were perfected for a varied program of intellectual and social features for meetings during the fall and winter season.

For the good and welfare of the lodge. short addresses were made by the President of the District Grand Lodge, Brother Dr. H. I. Davis. Brother Davis is an honorary member of Ramah Lodge, who finds it a pleasure to attend all of its meetings, and his wise counsel and active co-operation is much appreciated by the members of the lodge. Other members who addressed the lodge on various topics were Brothers Edward Sonnenschein, A. D. Weiner, P. P. of the District Grand Lodge, and the Secretary.

A meeting of Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago, representing the local lodges, was held at Hotel La Salle on September 14, 1916. This was the first meeting since the adjournment for the summer vacation, and it was unusually well attended.

The Council took final action in the matter of arranging a summer camp for boys to be conducted under the auspices of the Council, and also made a liberal appropriation for the Committee on Social Service work so as to enable the latter to engage a competent secretary. Reports of the various subcommittees were received and acted upon, principally among them the report of the Committee on Social and Intellectual Advancement, which had mapped out a program for the entire season, embracing lectures and addresses at every meeting of the Chicago lodges by some prominent member of the Order

The Social Service Committee representing the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago held an important meeting at which plans for work for the coming season were mapped out. The Committee is about to engage the services of a paid secretary whose special duty will be to look after the work connected with the Big Brother Movement.

David Fish Lodge No. 130 held its first meeting of the season on Monday, September 18, 1916, at Hotel Morrison, which was unusually well attended. The special feature of the meeting was an address by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, who spoke on the subject, "Israel's Greatest Contribution to America." At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF BRADDOCK LODGE.

Braddock Lodge celebrated its fifteenth anniversary by instituting a Membership Campaign, deeming this an appropriate manner of expressing its appreciation.

The opening salute was fired on September 10 with seventeen new recruits, while the goal to be reached numbers 100; it was indeed as inspiring a meeting as was ever held in the history of this lodge; every member being full of enthusiasm, it augurs well for the goal figure being attained.

In addition to this the Propaganda Committee promises us as royal a banquet in the near future as has so far been witnessed by any member of the Order. All hail to the Committee!

The recent District Convention appears to have awakened renewed interest in B'nai B'rith work as the members realize more than ever the tremendous responsibilities resting upon our Great Order, and that it is essential that each one lend his support if results are to be attained.

Long live Braddock Lodge; may she grow more in strength and usefulness as the years roll by, and celebrate her fiftieth anniversary with a record such as will fill the soul of every Jew with pride.

CREMIEUX LODGE, SAN FRANCISCO.

Cremieux Lodge No. 325, always a leader in the activities of the District, is now engaged in a strenuous contest with other local lodges for the honor of securing the greatest increase in membership during the year. That the contest was to be a very close one became apparent early in the year, the contesting lodges having shown great earnestness and determination in their methods of campaigning.

Cremieux Lodge, long jealous of its reputation, bent all its energies in this direction, with the happy result that fifty new members will be initiated at the close of the contest in October. The initiatory ceremonies will be conducted by the Initiation Team of the Committee of Fifty of the local lodges.

This team has achieved a national reputation, its fame having spread far beyond the limits of District No. 4.

On September 17 Cremieux Lodge and its friends met in the forest shades of Pinehurst for a day's outing. After a trip across the placid waters of the magnificent San Francisco Bay, the guests boarded the "Cremieux Special Train" that carried them direct to the park. Novel features of picnic entertainment were devised for the occasion, and the affair was a decided success.

On the social side, too, Cremieux Lodge keeps to the fore. The first meeting in every month is given over to social features. The whist tournaments on these occasions are anticipated with much delight, for the skillful contestants are numerous and the contest for the championship is very keen.

By far the greatest interest is displayed in the intellectual activity of the lodge. Cremieux Lodge believes that the high ideals of the Order can best be upheld by those who thoroughly understand and appreciate the principles of Judaism, of which the lofty ideals of the B'nai B'rith form a part. Lectures on Judaism touching upon all its phases, ethical, historical and spiritual, are frequently given. These lectures are followed by free discussion which testify to an earnest and profound interest in matters Jewish.

The intellectual activity extends also into the field of literature, art, science and sociology. On the last named subject lectures and discussions of current topics are ably presented by the younger members of the brotherhood.

District No. 4 I. O. B. B. is justly proud of the lodge that bears the name of that illustrious Son of Israel, Adolph Cremieux!

TOLEDO LODGE NO. 183, TOLEDO, OHIO.

On Tuesday evening, September 12, Rabbi Rudolph Coffee of Chicago, Ill., and head of the Social Service Department of the Order, spoke before Toledo Lodge No. 183 on work of his department.

The meeting marked the opening of the lodge's fall and winter activities. About one hundred and fifty members were present.

Rabbi Coffee emphasized the true meaning of social service and outlined the activities of his department. He urged Toledo Lodge to take up the social service work with greater energy. His inspiring talk commanded the attention of all present.

A splendid surprise at the same meeting was the presentation to the lodge by Brother M. H. Lempert of a fine silk American flag.

In the death of Herman Hirsch on September 27, on the eve of Rosh Hashhanah, Toledo Lodge lost one of its most loyal and faithful members.

Besides being a member of the Leo N. Levi Hospital and Denver Hospital Committees of Toledo Lodge, Herman Hirsch was at the time of his death Superintendent of the Toledo Federation of Jewish Charities and Secretary of Congregation Shomer Emoonim, Reform Temple.

He was a man always intensely interested, and a hearty worker in every Jewish activity.

His death is a distinct loss to Toledo Jewry and is mourned by all who knew him.

Following the resignation of Brother W. A. Cohen as Recording Secretary, due to business activities, Toledo Lodge No. 183 of Toledo held a special election for that office at its meeting on September 26, 1916. Brother A. H. Billstein, one of the younger members, and who has done faithful work on behalf of the lodge, was elected Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

At a well attended meeting of Cremieux Lodge No. 325, held on September 11, Brother Herman Gudstadt, Past President of District No. 4, addressed the lodge on the subject, "Why Single Tax?"

At the last meeting of the General Committee of D. G. L. No. 4, held in San Francisco, the lack of activity in some of the lodges was discussed at considerable length. A conference of the presidents and vice-presidents of the San Francisco lodges has been decided upon to discuss methods whereby the general condition may be improved. The General Committee also intends to issue a monthly paper for the lodges of District No. 4. In this paper space will be reserved for lodge items and for the announcement of contemplated social and fraternal affairs.

Modin Auxiliary No. 3, Daughters of the Covenant, gave a very successful Wild West Dance at B'nai B'rith Hall, 149 Eddy St., on August 28, 1916. The affair was under the direction of Miss Mattie Schayer, chair lady of the social committee, and her assistants, to all of whom credit should be given for their energetic work in making the dance both a pleasing and financially successful affair. The dance was given "a la 49." The costumes and music, the calling out of the dances, all tended to make it a most unique and novel entertainment. The hall was crowded with the youth and beauty of the B'nai B'rith, and their thorough enjoyment was manifest.

Under the auspices of Cremieux Lodge No. 325, the annual banquet and outing was held on September 17. A number of original ideas were carried out in the line of games and sports, and dancing was one of the principal features of the day.

A class initiation was arranged by Occidental Lodge No. 345 in connection with its meeting held on September 11. An interesting program was also carried out.

Brother Hugo K. Asher, a prominent attorney and Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, has fully recovered from the serious injuries which he received several months ago in an automobile accident.

The inmates of the Jewish Old People's Home were the guests of the Ladies' Committee and the Committee of Fifty of the San Francisco lodges on Sunday afternoon, September 24, 1916, on an enjoyable automobile ride through the city and its suburbs. All the machines used were loaned by members of the lodges, and returning to the B'nai B'rith Building, the guests were served with refreshments and were entertained by the Ladies' Committee of the B'nai B'rith.

Columbia, Modin and Ophir Auxiliaries to the San Francisco lodges will give their annual dance on October 22, 1916.

B'nai B'rith Day, the annual occasion set aside for observance by members of the Order throughout the country, will be celebrated under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty, representing the ten local lodges, on October 15, 1916, with a great Kiddies' Festival at the Golden Gate Park Stadium. There will be games, athletics and other attractions for the children.

At an important meeting held in the early part of September of the presidents and secretaries of the ten San Francisco lodges, plans for stimulating membership were discussed. The situation was considered from various viewpoints, and numerous suggestions were made. Mr. R. E. Gutstadt, second Vice-President of the Grand Lodge, presided.

TACOMA LODGE, TACOMA, WASH.

A special meeting of Tacoma Lodge No. 741 was held on Thursday evening, September 7, in honor of the official visit of Brother Henry Newburgh of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4. A class of candidates was initiated by the Degree Team and its work was complimented on account of its impressiveness. The Degree Team was garbed in its new robes and made a good impression.

On Thursday evening, September 14, a large delegation of members of the lodge attended a special joint meeting of Ranier and Hildesheimer lodges in Seattle. It is the intention to cultivate frequent visits during the coming winter between the lodges in Seattle and Tacoma and thus display a more intense fraternal feeling.

PORTLAND B'NAI B'RITH.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 held its first meeting of the season on September 11 at the B'nai B'rith Building. Arrangements were made at the meeting for the fall and winter season.

The activities in the B'nai B'rith Building began this season with the new physical culture director in charge, I. Salm, formerly of Cincinnati. He will have direct supervision and it is expected that many new features will be introduced.

A meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314, held on September 26, 1916, was conceded to be one of the finest held during the year. Mr. George N. Black, Past President of the District, delivered an address in which he expressed a hopeful view of the condition of the Jews in Europe at the close of the war.

A class of members was initiated by the degree team of the lodge, and Herman Wise, Postmaster of Astoria, was the orator for the class. At the meeting appropriations were made for various charitable institutions. A Big Brother Committee was also appointed with D. N. Mosessohn as its chairman.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 has decided to celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday evening, October 15, by holding a reception in the B'nai B'rith Building for the children of members and those attending Sabbath schools. An interesting program is being prepared for the occasion.

The Daughters of the Covenant Auxiliary to Theo. Herzl Lodge held an enjoyable session on Septeber 26, during which appropriations were made to various charitable institutions and also to the Simon Wolf Testimonial Fund. At the close of the meeting cards were played and refreshments were served.

The Auxiliary also gave a card party on Tuesday afternoon, October 3, in the B'nai B'rith Building for the benefit of its Charity Fund.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 opened its fall season with much enthusiasm at its meeting held on September 12, 1916. Several applications for membership were presented. Practically the entire evening was devoted to a discussion of social service work with special reference to juvenile delinquents. The speaker of the evening was Hon. Chas. W. Robinson, Deputy District Attorney. The lodge decided to organize a Big Brother Committee with Brother D. N. Mosessohn as its chairman.

B'nai B'rith Day, October 12, will be the occasion of a joint public meeting of the Portland lodges.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE OF D. G. L. NO. 5.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 5 met at Norfolk on Sunday, September 10, those present being President Milton Klein, Vice-President B. Wildauer, Dr. E. N. Calisch, Edwin L. Levy, C. N. Feidelson, Leslie Weil and George Solomon, and Brothers Benjamin Margolius and Rabbi Mendoza of Norfolk and Harold S. Bloomberg of Richmond as visitors.

After examining into the state of the District, it was found that on the whole it was in a fair condition, and as each member of the General Committee pledged himself to active work, it is expected at the end of the year a substantial gain will be materialized.

The Secretary of the District, Rabbi George Solomon, was authorized to proceed to Florida as soon as possible after the holidays for the purpose of establishing lodges in the cities of Tampa and Jacksonville.

The General Committee decided to concentrate its propaganda efforts in the larger cities. It made a special appropriation for propaganda purposes in Baltimore and placed the same at the disposal of the officers of Menorah Lodge.

Brother Dr. Edward N. Calisch of Richmond was appointed a committee of one to take charge of the subscriptions to the Simon Wolf Testimonial Fund.

Brothers Dr. Edward N. Calisch and Dr. George Solomon were appointed a committee to devise ways and means whereby to increase the interest in the meetings of the lodges.

The President submitted a report as to plans for the carrying on of intellectual advancement work, and the same was approved.

Chairman Brother C. N. Feidelson of the Social Service Committee submitted report of the contemplated work on social service lines and an appropriation of $200 for immediate use of the committee was made.

Brothers Edwin L. Levy, Harold S. Bloomberg and Dr. Edward N. Calisch were appointed a committee to prepare a revision of the Constitution and By-Laws of the District and submit advance copies thereof to the delegates 30 days previous to the Convention of the District Grand Lodge to be held in Richmond next January.

The remainder of the session was devoted to discussion of prapaganda efforts in the various lodges of the District.

B'NAI B'RITH OF DENVER.

Under the auspices of the lodge, special memorial services were held on Sunday August 13, 1916, in honor of Brothers A. S. Diamond, Meyer Friedman and H. A. Brilliant.

At a meeting of the lodge held on August 27, 1916, the amendment to the By-Laws changing the meeting date from Sunday morning to Wednesday evening was acted upon.

Dr. R. I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, visited Denver on July 27. During the day he met a number of active members of the lodge and discussed the Social Service and Big Brother Movement with them. In the evening he spoke at Temple Emanuel under the auspices of the lodge on "Judaism and Social Service."

At a regular meeting of the lodge held on September 10, 1916, Brother Herman J. Schwartz delivered an address on "The Jews and Social Service." The lodge decided to resume the series of monthly addresses, which will be made a feature at the first meeting in every month so as to stimulate intellectual activity among the members.

During the week of October 9 a membership campaign will be conducted by the lodge which will be in charge of the Vice-President, Brother S. J. Heller, President of the Propaganda Committee. It is expected that at least another 100 members will be added to the roll.

The Big Brother Committee, to work in conjunction with the Social Service Committee of the lodge, has been appointed with Brother A. B. Cowen, Chairman.

WINNIPEG LODGE, WINNIPEG, CANADA.

The first business meeting of Winnipeg Lodge after the summer vacation was held on Thursday, September 7, with Bro. A. J. Abramovitch, President, in the chair.

A fairly good attendance, nineteen new applicants accepted, and an interesting, if at times rather warm, debate on the "Congress" question featured the evening and augured well for the future.

Particularly encouraging was the character of the attendance, representing as it did almost all shades of opinion, and the tendency, implied in the attitude of the debaters, towards harmonious co-operation.

The large number of applicants is a clear indication not only of the privilege the lodge enjoys, and an appreciation of its service, but also of the activity of the propaganda committee headed by the President.

Gratifying, too, were the reports of the special committee, consisting of Bro. M. J. Finkelstein and L. Rice, delegated to visit Saskatoon Lodge.

The lodge received with justified pride the announcement of the election of one of its members, Bro. L. Rice, as a member of the General Committee.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

The program of Cleveland Lodge and B'nai B'rith Club for the month of October promises to be one of the most varied and interesting in the history of the new building.

The program follows

On Thursday, Oct. 5, Dr Ben Zion Mossinsohn, director of the Jaffa College, Palestine, will address members and friends. Ladies are invited.

On Sunday, Oct. 8, there will be a dancing party for members only.

On Thursday, Oct. 12, will be held the regular meeting of the lodge. Large class to be initiated. Other important lodge business will be discussed.

On Thursday, Oct. 19, there will be a get-to-gether smoker. Speakers for the evening include Ed Bang, sporting editor of the "News", Larry Jajoie, king of baseball; Johnny Kilbane, and other celebrities.

Prizes to winners of last year's bowling tournament will also be awarded.

On Thursday, Oct 26, will be held a musical for B'nai B'rith members and friends; especially the ladies are invited. An all-star program of musical talent has been arranged for President Cohen sent out a circular letter to all the lodges in the District requesting them to send to the office of the District the names of the brothers who volunteered for service on the Mexican border.

President Cohen expects to spend some time in New York for the purpose of visiting the various Metropolitan lodges, of which there are twenty-one in Greater New York.

Asariah Lodge No. 164 will celebrate its forty-fifth anniversary by a banquet and ball Sunday evening, October 22, at Harlem Palace. A number of distinguished brothers in the District have been invited. The President of the District is also expected to grace the occasion by his presence. The Executive Committee will be represented by Bro. Charles Hartman. Bro. Edward Rosenfeld is Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements.

Chananiah Lodge No. 165 will celebrate its forty-fifth anniversary on Sunday, October 29, by a banquet. Bro. Ex-Pres. Moses Oppenheimer is Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements. The Committee consists of Brothers President S. Gallinger, Vice-Pres. Albert Weiss, Monitor Henry Weiss, Treas. Emanuel Stern, Sec. Jos. Kraus, Inside Tyler Jos. Zeimer. Outside Tyler Jacob Goldsmith, Trustees David Vandewart, Adolph Sonn, Isaac Sonn.

The various lodges all through the District, after the summer vacation, have resumed their activities with renewed enthusiasm. Several lodges are planning joint meetings and public debates.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee, of which Bro. Joseph Levenson is Chairman, met Thursday, September 21 and mapped out an interesting program for the fall and winter season.

Bro. William H. Silk and other active brothers in the District are calling attention of the respective lodges to the splendid work of the Anti-Defamation League, which they think ought to be better known to our brothers.

Bro. Herman Asher, Chairman of the Headquarters, sent out a very effective letter to the members in the Metropolitan district asking for contributions towards the furnishing of the Headquarters. A number of brothers responded very generously.

A number of brothers from all over the country who were spending their vacation around New York City, visited the Headquarters and were very much impressed with the attractive surroundings.

Israel Lodge No. 796, the youngest lodge in the District, is showing considerable activity. A number of new brothers were initiated on the occasion of Secretary Dr. B. M. Kaplan's recent visit to Portland, Me.

The Bowling Alley at the B. B. Headquarters was formally opened Monday evening, September 18 by the Jordan Bowling Alley Club. A number of brothers were present.

President Cohen has addressed a communication to the lodges urging them to organize and train Degree Teams in order to exemplify, in an able and impressive manner, the beautiful ritual of the Order. The General Committee has offered special prizes for excellence in Degree Team work.

The quarterly reports show a considerable increase in membership all through the District.

Bro. Ben Scheiber, of Henry Jones Lodge, is Chairman of the Chess and Checker Club. He is arranging a number of tournaments for the coming season. There are a number of very strong chess players in the Metropolitan district.

One of the features to be introduced in the lodges of the District this season will be a discussion at every meeting of current topics, especially those of American and Jewish interest.

A Glee Club has been organized to meet at the Headquarters every Saturday evening. Dr. Herman Martin, who was recently elected Minister of the Temple of the Covenant, has graciously consented to be the director of the Club. Dr. Martin aims at giving the brothers a careful musical training. Bro. David Kraus of Jordan Lodge is the Chairman of the Glee Club.

The second meeting of Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., held on Sept. 24, 1916, was addressed by Mr. David Greenberg, instructor in the Yale Medical School on "Living a Little Longer." Mr. Greenberg accompanied his remarks with charts and illustrations and his talk was highly appreciated.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

On Sunday evening, September 17, Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis held a well attended meeting and smoker. Several prominent members of the Order made short addresses. A class of candidates was initiated by a select team assisted by an orchestra.

At a recent meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, of Cleveland, Ohio, Dr. B. Z. Mossinsohn, Director of the gymnasium at Jaffa, Palestine, presented his application for membership. At the time of his initiation, which is expected to be held on October 5, Dr. Mossinsohn hopes to address the members regarding his activities in the Holy Land and of the activities of the Jews in that country.

Under the auspices of the Social Service Committee of Zion Lodge No. 62 of Columbus, Ohio, regular services are being held for the benefit of the Jewish inmates at the Ohio Penitentiary.

In honor and memory of the late Brother Martin A. Marks of Cleveland, Cleveland Lodge No. 16 is securing contributions for a memorial library to be installed in the B'nai B'rith Building, which will serve a two-fold purpose, a memorial to Mr. Marks and a library for the B'nai B'rith.

The Junior Circle of the B'nai B'rith Auxiliary to Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, contested for "The Mahlin Prize," a gold medal, at B'nai B'rith Hall on September 30. The program was as follows: "The Jews' Prestige in the United States," Mr. Moe C. Nuddleman; "The Mission of the Jew," Mr. Albert Alexander Woldman; "The Jew and the World War," Mr. Emrich B. Freed; "The Prophecy," Mr. Harris J. Grundstein; "The Future of the Jew," Mr. Nathan R. Stern; "A Problem in Its Solution," Mr. Joseph L. Fetterman; "Strike Back," Mr. Eugene Wolf; temporary chairman, Mr. Nat Freeberger; chairman, Mr. Max Meisel.

A Jewish Immigration and Employment Bureau was established at Dayton, Ohio, under the auspices of Eschol Lodge No. 55.

Mr. Sig Livingston of Bloomington, Ill., Past President of Distrist Grand Lodge No. 6, and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order, spoke in St. Louis on Sunday evening, October 1, on "The Jew in Public Opinion." The lecture was under the auspices of Missouri Lodge No. 22 and Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47. There was also an excellent musical program carried out.

On Oct. 8, 1916, Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47, of St. Louis, held its regular meeting when quarterly reports were rendered.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Newcastle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., appointed its Religious School Committee for the ensuing year with Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger as Chairman.

An interesting special meeting was held by Lincoln Lodge No. 780, of Philadelphia, on September 21, at Hotel Walton. A report of the Grand Lodge session held at Erie was made by Brother Joseph W. Salus.

The B'nai B'rith Religious School under the auspices of New Castle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., began its year's work on October 1 with Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger as superintendent.

The regular meeting of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburgh, Pa., was held on Wednesday evening, September 20, 1916. The Propaganda Committee arranged to hold a formal affair at the William Penn Hotel on January 16, 1917. The dance will be strictly invitational, and from plans already made the affair promises to eclipse any event held by any Jewish charitable organization of the city.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

A lodge of the Order is soon to be instituted in the neighboring city of Cheyenne during the month of October. Brother Milton L. Anfenger, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, has been delegated to take charge of the institution of the new lodge.

Mr. Henry Newburgh, of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4. paid an official visit to Bellingham Lodge No. 756 of Bellingham, Wash., on September 7. A public meeting was arranged in his honor at the Temple, where he addressed a large audience on "The Work of the Order."

Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 held its first meeting after the summer recess on September 12, 1916. The famous degree team of the lodge initiated a large class of candidates.

The Ladies' Auxiliary to Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 held its first meeting on September 11. Arrangements were made for the fall work of the organization.

On Sunday evening, September 17, President Henry Newburgh of District Grand Lodge No. 4, accompanied by District Deputy Julius Shafer, made his annual visit and addressed a large number of members of Everett Lodge No. 761 at Bancroft Hall. After the speaking, refreshments were served by the Ladies' Auxiliary.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

A meeting of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 5 was held at Norfolk on Sunday, September 10, 1916. Various matters pertaining to the good and welfare of the District were considered and arrangements were made for the carrying on of an extensive propaganda during the coming season.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

On September 10, 1916, Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694 of Lansing, Mich., resumed B'nai B'rith activities with the best attended meeting the lodge ever had. An earnest awakening in the affairs of the Order is apparent among the members of the lodge, which will no doubt contribute much to the success of its meetings.

Pisgah Lodge No. 34 of Detroit, Mich., is preparing for another class initiation to be held on October 23. Brother Edward Sonnenschein of Chicago, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, has been delegated to pay an official visit to the lodge on that occasion.

At the meeting of Isaac Lodge No. 87 of Milwaukee, Wis., held on October 5, 1916, Dr. F. C. Mock spoke on the subject, "The B'nai B'rith from a Sociological Point of View." The meeting was open to the public and was largely attended.

Winnipeg Lodge No. 650, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, is arranging for a large class initiation to be held on October 22, 1916. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, has been delegated to pay an official visit to the lodge on that occasion.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

The Intellectual and Cultural Entertainment Committee of Birmingham Lodge No. 368 of Birmingham, Ala., have decided to take for the subject of the first open meeting of the lodge, "Proposed Jewish Congress." The plan is to have two speakers, one to discuss generally the objects and possibilities of the Congress, and the other to speak on the relationship of the B'nai B'rith to the Congress.

"The Development Science Has Made During the War" was the subject of an address delivered before Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., on October 3, 1916, by Leopold Seelenfried.

Brother E. L. Bernstein, of Shreveport. President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, has issued a circular letter to the lodges of his District and its leading members thereof, entreating them to resume lodge activities at the earliest possible time. Brother Bernstein proposes to inaugurate the annual propaganda movement early this fall so as to give more time to this work.

GOVERNMENT CHARGES FOR BRINGING PASSENGERS OVER FROM PALESTINE.

American citizens who made application to have their families brought over on the Des Moines had to pay fifty dollars for each adult and twenty-five dollars for children under twelve. It is through the efforts of Congressman Siegel that the government consented to have the United States cruiser Des Moines take away from Palestine families of American citizens.

POGROM TRIAL AT KIEFF.

The trial has been held at Kieff of twenty-one peasants, who in August, 1915, under the influence of allegations of Jewish disloyalty, attacked the Jewish shops at Vishitashlik (Podolia), and robbed our coreligionists of their property. The two ringleaders were sentenced to a year's hard labor and six months' imprisonment, respectively. Six others were sent to prison for four months, and the rest were acquitted.

JEWISH LEADERS

A Series of Historical Portraits

By RABBI SAMUEL COHON, Chicago

Copyrighted, November, 1916, by Samuel S. Cohon

3. Elijah, the Leader, as Prophet.

"By a prophet, the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt; and by a prophet, was Israel preserved." In these words, Hosea summarized the significance of prophetic leadership, in our history. The prophet Moses founded the Jewish people; the prophet Samuel established the monarchy; and, if David succeeded in gaining the love and homage of all the generations, it is by virtue of the prophetic spirit that lived in him. Scarcely a half a century after his death, the physical creation of his genius was destroyed. In place of one strong nation, there are two struggling rival kingdoms. If Israel escaped, at least in part, the dire consequences of the disruption of the monarchy, it was because of the prophetic spirit that filled the heart of the nation, the spirit that welded them together despite their political differences. The prophets were indeed the saviors of our people, in the past; and their spirit is still our saving power today.

The phenomenon of prophecy is, by no means, peculiar to Israel. We find it among almost all the families of mankind, and in all stages of culture. Most of the medicine men of savage races claim to possess the prophetic powers. When in need of divining secret things, they fall into a swoon, believing that thus they release their souls from their bodies so that their spirits may fly to the regions of the dead or to the abode of the gods, and obtain the desired information from the ghosts or deities Some of the ghosts—like those of the Papuans of German New Guinea—are more accommodating; and, in recognition of the offerings of tobacco, cotton, or beads, that are made to them, themselves pass out of the images in which they are supposed to reside, and, sparing the enquirer's soul the trouble of coming to them, enter into the enquirer, thus inspiring him with super-human knowledge. The Melanesians, likewise, believe that the ghosts or spirits convey information concerning the future, through the medium of a living being whose "human personality is for the time being in abeyance" and who is "merely the mouthpiece of the powerful spirit which has taken possession of his body and speaks with his voice." When in this ecstatic state, "his eyes glare, foam bursts from his mouth, his limbs writhe, his whole body is convulsed. These are the workings of the mighty spirit shaking and threatening to rend the frail tabernacle of flesh. This form of inspiration is not clearly distinguishable from what we call madness; indeed the natives do not attempt to distinguish between the two things; they regard the madman and the prophet as both alike inspired by a ghost or spirit." (J. G. Frazer. The Belief in Immortality. I. p. 388.)

Through their dark sayings and mysterious ejaculations, these inspired ones overawe their fellowmen and gain the upperhand in the control of their tribes. The matters of gravest concern to a community are thus left to turn on wayward fancies, on the whims of lunatics. The issues of war and peace, of agriculture and commerce, of all departments of life and activity are committed to these blind guides. "The history of savage and barbarous tribes," writes J. G. Frazer, "could we follow it throughout, might furnish us with a thousand warning instances of the fatal effect of carrying out the crude theory of inspiration to its logical conclusions; and, if we hear less than might be expected of such instances, it is probably because the tribes that consistently acted up to their beliefs. have thereby wiped themselves out of existence; they have perished, the victims of their own folly, and left no record behind!" (Ibid, pages 15-16.)

This "worship of insanity" which has had a most far reaching influence on the growth and decay of nations and institutions, partly provided its own remedy. Ambitious men, seeing the extraordinary power wielded by the feeble-minded through their claims of inspiration, "have often feigned to be similarly afflicted, and trading on their reputation of imbecility, or rather inspiration, have acquired an authority over their fellows which, though they have often abused it for vulgar ends, they have sometimes exerted for good, as for example in giving sound advice in matters of public concern, applying salutary remedies to the sick, and detecting and punishing crime, whereby they have helped to reserve the commonwealth, to alleviate suffering, and to cement that respect for law and order which is essential to the stability of society, and without which any community must fall to pieces like a house of cards." These great services to civilization were rendered by the class of men who, in primitive society, were known as soothsayers, magicians, sorcerers, and medicine men.

These forerunners of modern spiritualism had no room in ancient Israel. We are told that, in the days of Saul, the wizards, sorcerers, magicians, witches, and necromancers, were exterminated from the land. So the poet could say: "There is no enchantment in Jacob, and no divination is practiced in Israel. At this time it is proclaimed unto Jacob and Israel what God doeth." (Numbers, XXIII:23.) Even though survivals of the heathen superstitions lingered in Israel till after the exile, they were regarded as the illegitimate perversions of religion. In Israel, the institution of prophecy was raised from the low level of necromancy and divination, which it occupied among the Canaanites as among savage races, to the highest spiritual planes. Thus the Hebrew prophet became a unique type of spiritual personality, the most exalted figure in the religious history of mankind.

In present day popular usage, the word "prophet" has degenerated to the meaning of "fortune-teller." It must therefore be borne in mind that prediction of future events formed a very small part of the prophet's sacred office. As the Hebrew word (probably a Katil form of the root Naba = Assyrian Nabu. to speak) signifies, the Nabhi was primarily a divinely inspired speaker, a preacher of righteousness. In this sense, was the word Nabhi applied to Aaron. Exodus, VII:12). It is further significant that Moses, who is spoken of as "the father of prophecy," is not described as having foretold the course of the future. The leading prophetic figure after Moses, Samuel, also exercised his powers not so much in divining the secret things, as in arousing the public spirit of the people to overthrow the Philistine oppression and to re-establish the national independence of Israel. As God was the supreme ruler of Israel, religion and patriotism were one in the eyes of the older prophets. Many of them took a leading part in the affairs of the state. Nathan, for example, was responsible for the choice of Solomon as successor to King David; and Ahijah of Shiloh fathered the secession of the Northern tribes from the government of Reboboam, the haughty son of Solomon.

No sooner had the Nebhiim, prophets, risen to preeminence in the state, than they were followed by hosts of imitators, by men who assumed the outward appearance of the prophet but who did not fathom the prophetic spirit. Like the howling dervishes of Mohammedan countries of the present, these men moved around the land of Israel. exciting the people with their acts of frenzy which bordered on madness—thus bringing the very name Nabhi into disrepute. When the monarchy was firmly established, there developed a servile class of court-prophets most of whom licked the king's platters, and became adepts in the art of flattery. They were chronic optimists who saw no evil, heard no evil and spoke no evil, and who gladly catered to the vulgar passions and prejudices of the masses and their rulers. Against these time-servers, these "false prophets" who drew their inspiration not from truth but from expediencey, the few men who were truly dowered with the spirit of God, had to wage incessant war. Micah, one of the most genuine servants of God, sounded the real nature of prophecy: "I truly am full of power by the spirit of the Lord, and of justice and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and unto Israel his sin." (Micah, 3:18) The true prophet was the keeper of his nation's conscience, a man of sincerity who had the moral courage to denounce sin and corruption in places high and low, even at the risk of life and happiness. To his "inner eye," the gift of spiritual vision was given, to see the beauty and majesty of the Lord, revealed in the unfolding life of the cosmos and in the moral conscience of man. "The Father of Truth," writes Max Miller, "chooses His own prophets, and speaks to them in a voice stronger than that of thunder. It is the same inner voice through which God speaks to all of us. That voice may dwindle away and become hardly audible; it may lose its divine accent, and sink into the language of wordly prudence; but it may also, from time to time, assume its real nature with the chosen of God, and sound into their ears as a voice from heaven." No passive instrument of a divine afflatus—he, no unconscious automaton, but an active, conscious champion of the divine laws of truth and righteousness!

All the characteristics of the true prophet, as the fearless advocate of pure religion, and as the intrepid defender of the common people's rights, were combined in the grand figure of Elijah. Fact and legend alike made him the most wonderful personality in the history of our people. With the quickness of lightning, this fiery soul flashed across Israel's horizon, at a time of dense darkness, rending the clouds, and releasing the obscured flood of light which still illumines the lives of men.

The popular religion of Israel, which, through the absorption of Canaanitic elements, had been steadily deteriorating, was further demoralized through the disintegration of Israel's political unity. David's work was carried further—though with extreme difficulty—by his son, Solomon, whom posterity delighted to honor as "the wise." Though known as the "king of peace," history shows that, on numerous occasions, he was compelled to unsheath the sword to suppress his enemies at home and his foes abroad. His reign lives in the mind of the people, as a summer idyl. He opened to his country the floodgates of prosperity, and fired the enthusiasm of the people through the magnificent sanctuary which he built on Mount Moriah in Jerusalem. But the heart of the full-blown flower of Jewish monarchy was already infested with the poison-germs of decay. The splendor of Solomon's reign rested on despotism. The Canaanite elements of the population were enslaved by the state, in the manner in which the Israelites had once been held bondsmen in Egypt. Of the free born Israelites, too, there was demanded compulsory service in the vast building operations, as well as heavy taxes for the upkeep of the extravagant court of Solomon. The dissatisfied people, whose will power had not yet been stultified, at the first opportunity, shook off the burden imposed upon them by the house of David. Thus, in the words of Professor Graetz: "The power to which Solomon had elevated Israel resembled that of a magic world built up by spirits. The spell was broken at his death." (933 B. C. E.) The house of Israel was now divided against itself. Anarchy, civil war, and religious confusion reigned in the land.

As one of the acts of his administration, Jeroboam, the first king of Northern Israel, turned the ancient shrines of Dan and Beth-El into royal sanctuaries, and placed in them two golden calves. His purpose was not—as is commonly supposed—to introduce new deities, but to give the people a material representation of God, in the form of animals. "The spirituality of God, not admitting of ocular demonstration, was, at that period, more remote from their comprehension than the conception of His unity. Sensual dissipation and depravity were not bound up with the worship of the bull, as with the Canaanite service of Baal, and therefore it did not outrage the moral sense." (Graetz, Vol. I, page 187.) Even more dangerous than the material representation of the Godhead, was the tendency of the people to absorb the low practices of their Canaanite neighbors, whereby they came to look upon their own faith with heathen eyes, confusing "the ethical character of Yahweh with the attributes proper to a mere nature-deity." (Skinner. The New Century Bible; Kings I-II; page 222.) "The chief evil arose from the fact that the Baalim were more than mere religious fantasies. They were made the symbols of the productive powers of nature, and thus their worship ministered to sexual idulgences, which it at the same time legalized and encouraged. Further, there was placed side by side with the Baal a corresponding female symbol, the Ashtoreth (Babyl. "Ashtar") and the relation between the two deities was set forth as the example and the motive of unbridled sensuality. The evil became all the worse when, in the popular view, Yahweh Himself was regarded as one of the Baalim and the chief of them. It was in Northern Israel, where agriculture was more followed than in the Southern kingdom, that Baal-worship was most insidious and virulent." (J. F. McCurdy, in the Jewish Encyclopedia, Vol. II, page 380.) So natural did these things appear, that few protests were voiced against dragging the filth and licentiousness of the Canaanites into the religion of Israel. However, in the days of King Ahab (875-853) B. C. E.) a sudden departure in Israel's life again raised the issue between religions, true and false.

Ahab was a man of great energy and statesmanship, who, next to David, was probably the ablest ruler on the throne of Israel, admirably steering the ship of state through the most troublous waters of famine, foreign invasion and comtinuous warfare. (See Cornhill's History of the People of Israel; pp. 101 ff.) However, in matters of religion, he lacked the genius of a David, and, like many other rulers, swam with the current. He contracted a disastrous marriage with Jezebel, the daughter of the Phoenician priest-king, Ithobaal. In order to supply his "pious" wife with a sanctuary where she might worship her own god, Ahab built a temple to the Tyrian Baal, planted a sacred grove or Ashera (an indispensable adjunct to the temple), and imported a retinue of priests of Baal to minister in the Queen's sanctuary at Samaria. "The Phoenician priests or prophets attired themselves in women's apparel, painted their faces and eyes, as women were in the habit of doing, bared their arms to the shoulders, and carried swords and axes, scourges, castenets, pipes, cymbals and drums. Dancing and wailing, they whirled round in a circle, by turns bowed their heads to the ground, and dragged their hair through the mud. They also bit their arms and cut their bodies with swords and knives till the blood ran, providing an offering for their blood-thirsty goddess. Doubtless they were accompanied by the temple priestesses (Kedeshoth), who followed their shameful pursuit in honor of Astarte, and for the benefit of the priests." (Graetz, Vol. I, page 197.) Ahab's building of a temple to Baal, was in accordance with international etiquette, which was followed by King Solomon when he married the Egyptian princess. The menace consisted in that the ambitious Jezebel, not satisfied with a place of worship for herself, set herself to persecute the prophets of Israel's religion, seeking to impose Phoenician civil and religious customs on the people. Her missionary work seems to have met with some success. The attractive rites of the sanctuary of Baal won over many Israelites; and, among them, it was claimed, was the King himself.

At this crucial moment, when the stream of Israel's religion was in danger of being lost in the swamps of heathen superstition, Elijah arose to accelerate its motion and to purify its waters. The Bible tells us but little of the life of this illusive personality. The picturesque narratives of Elijah, suddenly interrupting the brief annals of the House of Omri (I. Kings, XVII-XIX, XXI) seem to be mere extracts of a larger biography of the great prophet. With dramatic abruptness befitting his tempestuous and fiery nature, he breaks into the pages of Israel's history. Like Moses in the early prophetic, and like Samuel in the later Ephraimitic, narratives, the great prophet of Gilead is portrayed "towering above the king, and dominating the history" of the whole people. (Kent. Students' Old Testament, Israel's Historical and Biographical Narratives; pp. 17 ff.) Of his activities only a few incidents are recorded, but these are of such exalted nature that they have forever enshrined him in the heart of humanity.

When Jezebel was at the height of her influence, a drought occurred in the land. According to Josephus, "Menander mentions this drought in his account of the acts of Ethbaal (Ithobaal), King of the Tyrians." (Antiquities, Book VIII, chapter XIII.) Elijah utilized this opportunity by making the bold announcement to Ahab: "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before Whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain three years, but according to my word!" This was a defiant denial that Baal, whom the people worshipped as the God of fertility, was potent to send rain; and a vigorous declaration that the God of Israel alone is the sole ruler of nature. For three years, we are told, there was no rain in the land. A severe famine raged. Man and beast alike languished. In the meantime, Elijah traveled about the East Jordan country and in Phoenicia, where his fame as a holy man and miracle worker had spread. When, at the end of three years, Elijah returned to Ahab, he was accosted by the angry king, as "the troubler of Israel." With characteristic boldness, Elijah, in his fiery wrath, flung back this accusation at the King: "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed the Baalim." In striking form Elijah forced the religious issue to the forefront. Before the assembled hosts at Mount Carmel by the Mediterranean sea, he cast the questioning thunder-bolt: "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him!" If there be many gods, Israel's religion is false; if there be but one, then Baalism is a lie. The picturesque scene on Mount Carmel, in which the rugged, unkempt prophet, wrapped in a crude hairy mantle and leather belt, lashes the luxuriously robed priests of Baal with the whip of irony, is, from an artistic standpoint, one of the grandest in literature. Through the halo of poetry, the historical kernel is quite unmistakable. Elijah again electrified Isarel with the historic battle cry: "Yahweh is our God, Yahweh is one!"

It is characteristic of Elijah, the prophet of the God of Israel, that he refuses to recognize the political division of his people. To him Israel is one nation despite its two kingdoms. When he is about to sacrifice unto God, he takes twelve stones, one for each tribe, and builds one altar. All tribes must be united in the worship of the ONE GOD. Baalism made for divisions. Each city had its local Baal. The God of Israel made for union. The old song that Israel sang on the shore of sea, assumed new meaning: 'Who is like unto Thee, O Yahweh, among the gods, who is like unto Thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, working wonders?"

The zeal with which he attacked Baal-worship, and with which he incited the extermination of the priests of Baal aroused the anger of the vindictive Queen Jezebel. Threatened with her vengeance, Elijah fled to Southern Judah to the old sanctuary of Beer-Sheba, with which the names of Abraham and Isaac were connected. Thence he traveled a day's journey into the desert. Broken in body and spirit, weary of life's burdens he sat down in the scanty shade of a broom-bush and prayed for death to bring him peace. Legend beautified this scene by introducing the element of the supernatural. As the prophet slept under the tree, an angel touched him, saying: "Arise and eat." He opened his eyes, and found a cake baked on coals and a cruse of water. He ate and drank and laid himself down again. Once more the angel touched him, saying: "Arise and eat, because the journey is too great for thee." This time he ate and drank and went in the strength of that food, forty days and forty nights on a lonely pilgrimage unto Horeb, or Sinai, the mountain held sacred in Israel's tradition. In the historic birthplace of Israel's religion the prophet wished to renew his faith in the living God. Here he is made to realize the presence and the spirituality of God "in a spectacle and an experience which for grandeur and depth of conception could hardly be surpassed in literature.' (Skinner. Kings, page 239.) He found a cave and entered there. Suddenly a great storm arose and tore the mountains and shattered the rocks, but God did not speak to him through this fury. There followed an earthquake, and after the earthquake a raging fire, but in these terrors he felt not the presence of God. Then after the fire came a still, small voice. In this audible stillness in the soft whisper of his soul Elijah felt the mysterious power of God. As in the "fleeting glimpse" of the passing train of Yahweh, Moses, standing in the cleft of the rock beheld the attributes of Yahweh as the God of justice and of loving kindness (Exodus XXXIII; 17-XXXIV: 8), so the stern prophet, Elijah, standing at the cave of Mount Horeb, beheld God not only in the attribute of vengeance, but also of compassion. This experience marks a revolution in the conception of God. Unlike the majority of his day, that regarded Yahweh as the God of war, storm, and fire, Elijah beheld in Him the power that throbs through all, and silently sustains all—the God of the spirits of all flesh. Though God is revealed in Nature's powers, in its wonders of rain and fire, and in its mysteries of light and darkness, man can see God only through the small window of his mind, and he can feel God's presence only through his heart and conscience. Communing with the voice of God in his own soul, the prophet battled with the heart-searching question of the value of his life and of his work: "What doest thou here?" From the heart of the prophet surged up the answer: "I have been very zealous for the Lord, the God of Hosts, for the children of Israel have forsaken Thy covenant, thrown down Thine altars, and slain Thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only am left; and they seek my life to take it away." His complaint was its own answer. Because he was the only prophet of God, he could not become the victim of despondency. Though wickedness be on the throne, righteousness in the end must triumph in a world in which God is King. Refreshed in spirit and reconsecrated to his great mission, he returned from the wilderness to work with new zeal among the people. As the exponent of the religion of Israel, demanding that all wrongs be righted and that the oppressed be freed from their burdens, he again became the antagonist of Ahab and Jezebel.

Near Ahab's summer palace, the man Naboth had a lovely vineyard. In a perfectly reasonable manner, Ahab proposed to buy it of him; but Naboth refused, on religious grounds, to part with his patrimony. As there existed, in ancient Israel, no law of eminent domain by which the state can compel a citizen to sell his property, Ahab was greatly distressed. When his proud wife, Jezebel, learned the cause of his grief she took matters into her own hands and unscrupulously instigated the judicial murder of Naboth on the pretended charge of blasphemy against God and the King. His property was thus confiscated by the state, and Ahab acquired the coveted field. In her father's country, Phoenicia, such crimes were the order of the day. But in Israel, despite some false prophets who would have closed their eyes to this atrocious act, the moral conscience was still alive. The following day, when Ahab entered Naboth's vineyard to take possession he was confronted by the rustic figure of Elijah. "Hast thou murdered, and wilt thou also inherit?" rang the stern prophet's scathing denunciation. "In the place where the dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick also thy blood!" These words sounded the King's doom, for this incident more than any other lawless act of his wife, led to the destruction of his dynasty. He heard the voice of his own conscience speaking to him through the mouth of the man of God. Though he had been only a silent partner in the crime, he yet, in a manner that showed a true royal character—reminding us of David's confession of sin, when confronted by Nathan—admitted his guilt, rent his garments, put sackcloth upon his body, and fasted. Surely a spark of goodness glowed in the heart of Ahab!

Elijah began to feel that he could no longer, single-handed, fight the corruption of the country. As his strength was waning and his years declining, he chose Elisha, the son of a wealthy farmer of the North, as his successor in the holy work of religious reform. The mantle of Elijah, unfortunately, fell upon the wrong shoulders, for no greater contrast in the spirits of any two men can be imagined than that between the natures of these two prophets. Elijah had spent his life preaching the word of God. He had striven and labored and died broken-hearted, feeling that all his efforts had failed. Elisha, therefore, took a new course of action. He became a politician as well as a religious leader. He organized the bloodiest revolution in the history of Israel, with the expectation of exterminating, with the sword, the worship of Baal. Upon his death he probably congratulated himself on the signal success which he had attained. History however, has its own way of evaluating men's achievements. Elisha's success was, in reality, a dismal failure. True religion cannot be promulgated with the sword. Not by numbers, nor by physical strength, but by the spirit of God, is religion established. Elijah's failure however, proved to be the triumph of his life work. No thought or deed of genuine worth is lost. For a time it may be obscured and overlooked; but out of the darkness, it shines forth anew. as a star by whose light both great and low can live. Eager disciples treasured the memories of the master's brave acts. His zeal for truth lived in the heart of his contemporary, Michaiah ben Yimlah. (I. Kings, XXII.) Johonadab ben Rechab also, influenced by his spirit, founded the Nazaritic order of Rechabites. Impressed with the degeneracy of the complex city life with the close connection between Baalism and agricultural enterprise and with the demoralization to which the fruit of the vine leads, the men of this order refused to build houses, to plant vineyards, or to till the soil. This protest against vice and luxury acted as a purifying force in the religion of Israel, (Jeremiah, XXXV.) There were many men throughout the land that did not bend the knee to Baal. Through them Eijah's strivings for pure religion were transmitted to later generations, and, though not completely realized in his lifetime, blossomed forth in the teachings of the prophets that followed him. Thus he was a herald of a new order of things, of a deeper religious message, of a more spiritual conception of God.

Already during his lifetime or shortly thereafter, legends began to gather around him. He was said to have revived a dead child, to have been fed by ravens and by angels, to have, at will, brought down fire from heaven, and to have been capable of mysterious appearances and disappearances. To his words the very elements of nature responded. His death, according to popular belief, did not take place in the natural way; but he ascended in a fiery chariot into heaven. (II Kings, I-II.) Later generations enlarged upon these traditions of his superhuman powers, believing him to have become an angel who will, on the great day of God, reappear on earth to perform the great task of uniting the hearts of the parents with the hearts of the children. (Malachai, III:23-24.) He thus became, in popular legend, the forerunner of the Messiah, the messenger of the good-tidings that salvation is coming to the world. In folk-lore, Elijah continues to live as the ever-present helper of the righteous-poor, sometimes showing himself to the pious, in their need. At the B'rith Milah, when the child is brought into the covenant of Abraham, a seat of honor is still reserved for Elijah; and at the Seder table on Passover night, a cup of wine is set aside for him, and the door is cautiously opened to admit this heavenly visitor. Not only in legend but also in sculpture and in painting as well as in poetry and in music, this great personality has been exalted and magnified. The non-Jewish as well as the Jewish world cannot forget this true prophet, the servant of God and the friend of man.

This inaugurator of the new epoch in the religion of Israel, restorer of the altars of God that had been broken down, and champion of justice, stands out in "solitary grandeur," above the king, the priests, and the prophets of his age, a veritable demigod, wondrous in power and courage, and in his zeal for truth. The people rightly felt that in him they had a bulwark of moral strength, surpassing the force of armies. And, with Elisha, they spoke of the rustic prophet of Gilead: "My father my father, the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof!"

If our virtues do not go forth of us 'tis all alike as if we had them not.—Shakespeare.

MOISHE COHN.

By Max Boshwitz, Memphis, Tenn.

Written for the "B'nai B'rith News."

I have gleaned they made you Rabbi, of the rich and fromme Shool,
'Midst the sylvan hills and shadows
where you used to go to school;
Where your Daddv used to peddle, ere
he wedded Sarah Salz;
Who did much to aid your father, by her selling gaensen schmalz.

For she fattened geese for Pesach, in a
rook'ry shack in yard,
And they both trudged on together, o'er
a rugged road and hard;
Then the stork peeped through the window, in their humble cottage home,
And in silence left a parcel, wherein breathed their Avroom.

And the youngster (umbeshrigen!) was a wonder from the start!
For we watched the little rascal, as he won the peoples heart;
And the day of his 'Barmitzwah, he then spoke with so much grace,
That they cheered him in the Temple,
like some winner in a race.

And your uncle—'rother Mendel" (who did business in a tent);
Who so often went machulla, and who never paid a cent,
Gave to you a silver ticker, and your
Aunt a praying shawl,
While your rich and stingy Tante, never even came to call.

Ah! I know your whole mishpoche, ere their lucre gave them tone;
They may put on airs to strangers, but they can't fool Moishe Cohn!
'Tis not wealth that's robed in splendor, that gives signs from when we came;
'Tis the blood that courses within us,
that reveals the noble name.

'Tisn't the boy that goes to college, but the one to studies wed,
That will win the highest merit, that will always rank ahead;
'Tisn't the school wherein you're praying,
'tis the soul that prays within,
That will soar to Shaddai's heaven and the grace of mercy win.

'Tisn't the fault of sabbath holy, that this sacred day we break;
But the worship of the dollar, that some
Jews their creed forsake!
Don't you change the golden standard!
for what seems but base alloy;
Have a care in trading shabbes for the Sunday of the Goy!

'Tis not well to change our dogmas, nor the scenes of childhood's day;
When our mothers decked the Yontive,
when no swine was on the tray.
When the Dad was plain and pious,
never thought to shmad his name!
From a Levy into Levit, empty bubbles
just to gain.

Why adore a pagan fancy? with its Christmas tree and Yule!
Let us light our own Menora! at the fireside and the shool;
For it sings the songs of heroes! of our valiant Maccabee!
Whose grand deeds shall live forever!
in all lands of liberty!

THE NATIONAL JEWISH EFFORT.

That we Jews are over-organized, none will dare deny; and this over-organization in a measure chokes the chance of organization. We have our congregations, and here the weakness is not so strong, though powerful apparent. We have a numerous variety of lodges and associations which one and all pursue a philanthropic and educational course; and notable and the more prominent are the Y. M. H. A. and the B'nai B'rith movements. The latter has ceased to be national, it is international; the former, under the able direction of Dr. I. E. Goldwasser, chief of the board of experts, has practically been nationalized. The Y. M. H. A. performs noble work, but there is nothing in its program that could not be achieved by the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. Why not merge the Y. M. H. A. in the I. O. B. B.? In many places where the Y. M. H. A. is strong, it draws from the B'nai B'rith and makes the latter's existence impossible. Surely, the I. O. B. B. is big enough and extensive enough, not to mention intensive, to be all-sufficing for the older and the younger Jew. We would do well to concentrate our forces in one institution rather than allow them to peter out in many.—Rabbi Montague N. H. Cohen, in the Jewish Tribune.

"Cowardly thinking, timorous shrinking, weak lamentations, faint hesitations mend not our misery, set us not free. Face all hostility, preserve your virility nor ever yield. Vigorous resistance brings the assistance of gods to the field."—Goethe.

The World of the Prophet to the Nations

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

"Wouldst thou the poet understand, go thou to the poet's land." The prophet, it is true, is not honored in his own country. Nevertheless he also must be understood primarily from the conditions of place and time in which he worked. The prophet is a man of words. He is also a man of acts. To the ancient mind the spoken word not merely had a charm, but was a charm in the literal sense, warding off ills and inviting them. A curse pronounced, though without cause, was certain to alight upon the victim. "Open not thy mouth to Satan." Still greater potency was lent to the word by enacting it, by translating it into deed. The mimicry of future events which constitutes the symbolic actions is considered effective: the future is conjured up and invested with the reality of the present. "Like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years, so shall the captive Egyptians be led away by the Assyrian naked and barefoot." Read the fourth chapter of Ezekiel for an example of how the prophet with grim realism enacts the sufferings of the besieged Jerusalemites. These may appear to moderns as playful stagings. But the prophets were actors in the real stage of life. The events of their little world, aye, of the great world beyond the confines of their homeland. stirred them to the very depths of their soul. News was spread by runners, by posts; the lifted up ensign or the beacon lights flaming upon the hills announced the tidings of momentous events. Nothing that happened in the wide world escaped the attention of those storm messengers whom we honor as the prophets of Israel. From their observatory on Mount Zion they scanned the great world and made note of world events.

Look at the catalogue of nations enumerated in the twenty-fifth chapter of Jeremiah. There we find the petty principalities, some of them mere city-states, adjoining Judah. Palestine was naturally broken up by its mountain ranges into separate cantons. There were attempts made at different times, notably by David, to overcome nature and to weld them all into one great realm powerful to match the empires in the north, in the south, in the east, but without lasting success.. The coast remained in the hands of Tyre and Zidon in the north and of Philistia in the south. Beyond the Jordan Ammon and Moab repeatedly subdued just as often broke the yoke. To the south Edom for a time brought under the sway of Judah was secure in its mountain crags and clefts, barring the way to the Red Sea and the gold of Ophir. In the back of the Edomites and threatening them were the numerous Arab tribes of the desert. Their time for overrunning the civilized world of Asia and Africa and for matching strength with Europe had not arrived; the migration northward which was to culminate in the days of Mohammed was then just in its beginning. In the northeast the mighty Assyrian empire, at one time dominant in the Westland, which latterly had vanquished Damascus and Samaria, was tottering beneath the onslaughts of the Scythians, at last succumbing to the joined attacks of Babylonians and Medes. When Jeremiah received his prophetic call in the thirteenth year of Jesiah (626), Nabopolassar had just ascended the throne of Babylon; in 606 Nineveh, that proud mistress of the nations, was no more. In the tenth, but particularly in the eighth, century Egypt had re-asserted its influence in Palestine and Syria and was the cause of all the troubles in those countries inciting the nations to rebellion against Assyria. Sennacherib and Esarhaddon subdued the land of the Pharaohs, but at length Egypt regained its independence. In 608 Necoh set out to attack the dying colossus of Nineveh; Josiah who came athwart him lost his life in the battle of Megiddo; the Egyptian army made its way through Palestine northward only to meet defeat at the hands of Nebuchadnezzar in the battle of Carchemish on the Euphrates. The sequel of events in Palestine meant a struggle between the two empires of the north and south and their sympathizers until at last Jerusalem fell and Palestine was incorporated into the great empire of the Babylonians.

These ancient battlefields are now the scene of carnage again. The Necohs and Nebuchadnezzars are gone; but their struggle for supremacy bids fair to be revived. Egypt is now English. Into whose hands the Tigris-Euphrates valley is to pass hangs upon the fortunes of the battles now raging. Palestine is the bridge between the two continents of Asia and Africa and opens on a third, Europe. As in ancient times, the smaller states can only range themselves on this side or the other. A Balkan empire was in the making, but petty jealousies when it came to dividing the spoils prevented the amalgamation. Palestine may be neutralized; but it is rather bound to be attached to the one or the other great power's influence. From the point of view of the world war and the adjustments that will ensue the history of Palestine will be a mere episode. Yet whether we deal with ancient or modern history there is one point that must not be forgotten. Political power follows the sword, and naturally the great powers with their legions and vast armaments will divide the earth among them. But cultural history is not necessarily made by the potent states. Judea vanquished dominated the world culturally. And so in most ancient times the children of Israel shared to be sure in the great world's culture, but they had something to give. In studying therefore the ancient records, if we are immersed in deciphering the hieroglyphs of Egypt and the wedges of Assyria and Babylonia and opening up a vista of the great events of those world powers, we are apt to fall into the error of those very statesmen in Nineveh and Babylon and Memphis and believe that the future belonged to them, that the world's culture resided in their palaces, and that small Palestine was but a province, one among the many. This view is being spread now by the Pan-Babylonians who would persuade us that all the great things produced in Palestine were the mere echo of the thunder on the banks of the Euphrates or Nile. The student of comparative literature and religion steps in and under his tread of foot all literatures and all religions are leveled down. We will not deny that great things were done outside Judea. We know that pious souls lived and breathed and sang and prayed in the wide world. But we stand within the historic community of Israel. We believe that Judaism means the truth, and the Christians hold really to the same view except that they attach sacredness to that part of Judaism which they call universal as preached by the prophets of Israel and culminating in their opinion in the Sermon on the Mount. From this point of view all the other contributions which were made by others than Jews to the culture and religion of the world fade into insignificance. Not Assyro-Babylonian lore, but the Bible is the center. All else is but a frame.

Jeremiah knew the world of great and small kings. He took sides in the contest as far as it affected his own poor country. He had his sympathies and antipathies. He believed that God would give victory to the northern potentate. He counselled king and nation to remain loyal to the Babylonian. He knew himself as a prophet to the nations, because he realized that the times in which he lived meant the settlement of the fate of every one of them. But the history of the nations was to him an episode in the history of his own people. The world was astir; kingdoms tottered and fell; battles were won and lost; the boundaries of nations were moved; his own little country was involved. But the outcome of it all meant the advent of the everlasting Kingdom of God, and in the preparation of that the chief actor was not this or that world conqueror, but the bleeding Jew.

Was it overweening self-conceit on the part of Jeremiah and his like to imagine that the world revolved about the destiny of a small people? Undoubtedly it seemed so to the world on the outside. The emissary of the great king in the days of Hezekiah scoffed at such presumption, and Isaiah and the citizens of Jerusalem were startled by the general's blasphemy. In the Greco-Roman world the claim of the Jew to being the elect of God evoked similar ridicule and invited hatred. In our own days it is the anti-Semitic slogan that the world was inveigled into taking the Jew at his own valuation. And what is worse, many within are weakening under this constant onslaught in holding fast to the idea of the supreme worth of the Jewish people. Isaiah and Jeremiah had to be content with the same kind of little Jews, Jewish anti-Semites. But it is clear that if anything is calculated to sustain us amidst all trials and troubles it is this faith and this hope, the faith that God has meant us for great things and the hope that these great things will be achieved in due season. Enemies of the world we are only in the imagination of the malevolent. We are here to serve the world. And we have served the world. Jeremiah, the prophet to the nations, suffered persecution. He preached at the risk of his life. He became the pattern of his people. Like him, the Jew was willing to undergo hatred and persecution only that the world might be healed by his wound. We believe indeed that every nation great or small has its place in God's great world, has a mission to fulfil, something to achieve that no other people could do. A degree of emulation is necessary; but that the struggle for national existence should involve everlasting carnage is no part of the divine design. The ultimate goal must be peace. Mankind shall become one band. The prophets of Israel have pointed the way to the truce of nations. And a way there must be found by which Israel likewise may be permitted to realize to the full what is in him, not for himself, but for the world, with which he would be at peace. To recall the Jew to his calling as the prophet to the nations is obviously the duty of the hour. And the role of that ancient prophet to the nations will serve as a stimulus.

RELIGIOUS PREJUDICE IN NATIONAL GUARD OF NEW YORK.

Acting upon the charges of Max J. Klein and others to the effect that they were not admitted to the National Guard because of their religion, Governor Whitman appointed General Louis W. Stotsbury, Adjutant General of the State, to investigate the charges. He submitted a report which in part read as follows:

"The evidence does not, in my opinion, show a general prevalence in the National Guard of discrimination against Jews in the matter of enlistment. The evidence adduced before me is confined to the practices in certain organizations, and it is further limited in that it relates to the acts of officers of sub-units. In other words, the discrimination is by individuals as distinct from the result of any policy or generally prevailing sentiment.

"The evidence shows that several of those who complained of unjust treatment when they applied for enlistment were so dealt with, and so spoken to, as to afford reasonable justification on their part for the belief that their applications were not considered favorably because of their religion. There are other instances in which it would appear that the complainants were unduly sensitive.

"It appears from the evidence that two sergeants who had direct relation with the enlistment of recruits have admitted a distinct bias against Jewish applicants to enter service. No persons holding such opinions should be permitted to have anything to do with the matter of enlistment.

"Various forms of advertisements to secure recruits have been resorted to and in this connection it was shown that in one instance, where an appeal was made for members to join an organization, the statement was made that Christians were preferred. Under justly indignant protests this extraordinary form of advertisement appears to have had but a short life."

After reading this report Governor Whitman issued an order saying, in part:

"Discrimination on account of race, creed or religious belief is un-military and un-American. It is discreditable to the officer who is guilty of it and it brings disgrace on the service to which he belongs. That such conduct will not be tolerated cannot be stated too emphatically.

"While this order is to be taken as a statement of my position in the matter, I feel that some further action is necessary to embody its contents in permanent form, with a view to the prevention of any such occurrences in the future as have now been complained of. I have, accordingly, directed the Adjutant General to prepare and issue an amendment to the regulations where matters of administration are properly to be found, which shall read as follows:

"All officers who are connected with the enlistment of recruits and those who are authorized to approve or disapprove of such enlistments shall, in determining whether an applicant should be accepted or rejected, be guided by an honest judgment, deliberately exercised, as to his fitness for the service, and no applicant shall be rejected on account of his race or religion. It shall also be the duty of officers charged with making enlistments to see that their subordinates are free from such bias or prejudice and conform to the requirements of this paragraph."

IN MEMORIAM.

MARTIN A. MARKS.

August 31, 1916.

We stand in the shadow of a great bereavement. Martin A. Marks has been taken from us by the relentless hand of death. For many years we were wont to look up to him as our guide and counselor and as a creative and constructive force in the management of our beloved institution.

Martin A. Marks was gifted by nature as few men are. He brought to the discharge of his duties those elements of earnestness, honesty and zeal which make for efficiency in all the activities of life. While not entirely unexpected, the news of his demise came as a shock to his many friends and admirers throughout the entire land.

Martin A. Marks was broad in his sympathies, tireless in his efforts and extremely solicitous, not only for the good and welfare of our Asylum, but equally so in the broad field of general philanthropy.

His activity in the Independent Order B'nai B'rith led to his interest in all social and civic movements, and particularly in child-welfare work. No worthy cause appealed to him in vain, and no one could remain in contact with him for any length of time without experiencing a distinct elevation of thought and ideals. He believed that—

"The drying up of a single tear has more of honest fame, than shedding seas of blood."

He was particularly devoted and attached to the cause of the orphan. He realized our wards "are the blossoms of the fruit that will be ripe in future years." He devoted his talents, his time and his energy to promote, not only the material but also the spiritual welfare of those entrusted to the care of our beloved institution.

He was possessed of a charming personality; he was capable of inspiring others and infusing interest and enthusiasm among those who came under the influence of his earnest, sympathetic and convincing pleading.

Martin A. Marks was a great Jew. He did not limit his assistance to those of any one creed, race or nationality. He was one of those to whom distress could prefer its suit.

As founder of the Educational League he leaves behind him a monument of splendid service to humanity and to the cause of higher education.

His domestic life was idyllic. We feign would lift the curtain behind which his devoted family is grieving. May we be permitted to intrude upon the sanctity of their grief with the thought that—

"Life is ever Lord of death and love can never lose its own."

May the genuine devotion to the precepts of our ancient faith, which always pervaded the home of our departed friend, strengthen the mourners and reconcile them to the thought—

"The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away,
Blessed be the name of the Lord forever."

Resolved, That a page of our records be devoted to the memorial of our deceased co-worker, that this memorial be inscribed thereon, and that a copy, duly engrossed, be delivered to the family of our deceased friend and brother, and that the same be published.

Respectfully submitted,

RUSSIA TO BUILD SCHOOLS FOR JEWS ALONE.

From Petrograd via London again comes the announcement that Jews will enjoy the greater educational advantages in Russia in the future. Without revealing its authority for the statement, a news cable says that a series of high schools and technical schools exclusively for Jewish students will be established and greater freedom will be accorded with respect to their entry into the universities.

As proof of the increased facilities for the entry of Jews into the Petrograd University, the cable points out that of 807 matriculated students at the University this year 94 or 11½ per cent are Jews. In the Petrograd Woman's Institute 55 out of 450, more than 12 per cent are Jewish. These figures are significant, the cable says, inasmuch as the Jews constitute only 3 per cent of the population of Russia.

That cannot be great which does not appeal to what is great in us; greatness speaks the language of greatness; that only is great which appeals to what is noblest in us.—G. F. Watts.

Life in a Prison Camp in Germany

By Dr. Alfred Goldschmidt, Chief Physican of the Prison Camp, Quedlinburg

A German prison camp is a small city in the open field and is composed of dwelling rooms, wash kitchens, water-conduit, shower baths, hospital and, by this time, also a relief society, and aid fund, a music band, theater, newspaper and library, all created by the inhabitants of this barrack city.

Organization. The magic touch of the German hand, has here too manifested itself.

The eternal principles of humanity are aroused where it is possible in this most merciless of all wars, and they have constantly penetrated more and more, so that in one of the orders of the war ministry there appeared the beautiful words: "The commandant of the camp is to a certain extent the father of the prisoners of war".

The war ministry fully acknowledged that it is wise to accord humane treatment to the prisoners of war. Positively expecting that the permission given to these prisoners to retain close relations with their home by living their own life in the camp will have a favorable influence upon the fate of our warriors held captives abroad, the war ministry ordered steadily progressing improvement in the life of our prisoners. Good food is provided, smoking is permitted, letters come in and go out, mail packages (for example 14,000 in one week) are received, burial of the dead takes place with all honors in a separate part set aside for a cemetery, Probate cases are administered. the tracing of missing ones is carried out with great care and pestilence is thoroughly guarded against.

The prisoners are vaccinated once against smallpox, twice against cholera and three times against typhus. Vaccination against cholera is repeated after a half of a year because the protection of vaccination lasts a half of a year only. No prisoner leaves the camp without a certificate from the chief physician testifying to his good health and that he has been properly vaccinated. This care is of extraordinary importance, for the prisoners shall not only in their best interest (employment and earning), do useful work in public and private undertakings, but they also must not endanger the life of the civil population by the transfer of plagues. This care is carried to such an extent that also the outside detachments of soldiers who guard the prisoners at work, are subject to the strictest hygienic supervision. The greatest care is taken to prevent the spread of one sickness, which in war time is dreaded more than the cholera. This sickness is the spotted typhus. It is brought in and spread by the Russians, the transmitters are the lice. The struggle against the lice is a hard and costly undertaking. The observation has been made that the spotted typhus caused much greater devastations among the Germans than among the Russians, who had already passed through a certain stage of immunity. Renowned medical investigators perished through contagion while they studied and fought the sickness.

The disinfection of the prisoners takes place in the following manner: A group of fifty men is led into an undressing room where it divests itself of everything. The clothes are hung up in single bundles in the disinfecting room and are exposed for fifteen minutes to a dry heat of 110 grades. During this time the prisoners bathe in the shower bath room. Then they step into the dressing room where their now disinfected things are handed to them in rooms through a window. This way each prisoner receives at least one bath weekly.

At regular intervals an exchange of seriously wounded and sick prisoners, now also with Russia, according to a mutual agreement which was first made with France and then with England. This is done according to some strictly stipulated terms. The investigation is made by a commission to which belong, besides the chief physician of the camp, a major and a lieutenant.

With the sanction of the superior officers a relief society for the prisoners has been established in the camp. At the same time a relief fund with a Board of Directors and regular laws was organized.

Into this fund flow: Voluntary gifts of wealthy war prisoners, voluntary taxes paid on receiving money or packages, at least the half of the receipts at musical performances and similar presentations by the prisoners.

Musical performances!

Yes, also the fruits of modern civilization have become perfectly ripe in the barrack city. A military band of the war prisoners gives concerts in several fields of the camp. Such concerts also take place in nice weather in front of the barracks of the sick. The petition for permission to offer such concerts to the wounded and the sick was supported by the band-master, by the custom of giving concerts in French military hospitals. He stated that he hopes that this will also be looked upon in Germany as a beautiful custom. Its aim is: to extenuate the lot of the sick comrades. During the first "consolation concert" Beethoven and Mozart were represented next to French music.

A newspaper which appears every eight days, "The Speaking Trumpet" supplies the literary wants of the inhabitants. This paper, which, of course, appears under censorship, is very sarcastically designated in the subtitle as "Independent organ of the prisoners of war".

The conceits which remind us of our beer newspaper products, prove that in spite of the imprisonment and the monotony connected with it, humor has not become extinct. So has the thought been conceived and carried through to let a novel be written in six continuations by six different authors. Without any special previous understanding the author who is to carry on the story has to continue it after a perusal of the beginning of the work.

The theater stands under the management of a young professional actor, who has distinguished himself by splendid performances. Mostly comedies are played, society pieces. Here are a few titles for example: "La chance du mari," "'Match de boxe," "Apres six mois," "Nous allons chez les Durand."

The women's parts are presented by men, just as in the time of Shakespeare. Such a performance is a peculiar thing. Usually the place is the so-called "cripple barrack". The public is international, healthy and crippled spectators are crowded together, sitting upon benches or standing. The boards which signify the world are otherwise used as benches, the theater curtain, which is pulled up by a string, consists of combined blankets, the prompter's box is a chair wrapped in a spread, the telephone is a broken bicycle bell on a brown pasteboard stand and so it is everywhere, something made out of nothing. But the "ladies" dresses can surely show themselves.

"The dresses and hats come from the house of Lemoine & Co., Barrack 24B." The pieces presented are usually downright comical, somewhat slippery and not without wit. Here, for example, is a brief statement of the contents: "After six months" . . . Since six months a young married man gives a ten franc piece to every newly hired servant girl on condition that she shall disappear at once. The young wife is naturally inconsolable and treats every new girl like an ornamental figure, but without success. The husband believes that by his trick he protects his wife against deadly ennui, to keep her busy and to furnish the best excuse for himself for eating at his pleasure in restaurants and to go his own by-ways. At last he finds a servant girl that in spite of two ten franc pieces will not go away because she likes the place very much and for her own protection she threatens the husband with denunciation before the young wife.

The library contains 150 numbers, and Goethe has a place in it.

An exhibition of the work of the prisoners showed an abundance of the most interesting works of art in the different departments: Wood carving, mechanic, weaving and others. The production was carried out with the plainest expedients.

Round about the barrack city—with its constraint and its temper, with its art and its stupidity, with its youth and indestructible humor, with its hope and its monotony—lie the buildings of the commanding officers, the commandant as the provost, the buildings of the guards with the ready companies, the French and the Russian places of examination, the buildings for inspection and many others.

A city of men! No woman is to be seen. The women appear only in letters.

Therefore militiamen with loaded guns and fixed bayonets accompany the dwellers of the barrack city on every step that leads out of the individual company districts over the so-called neutral zone into the open field.

So youth, art, whim, with constraint and bitter necessities are united in the years of the world conflagration.

In Europe there is war and this is the reflexion of the war!

Yom Kippur Services in Mexico

Rabbi Landman Conducts Service with Pershing's Column at Colonia Dublan

An ammunition box draped with an American flag was the pulpit from which was conducted the most unique service in the history of American Israel.

In the heart of Pershing's flying column, surrounded by a larger number of non-Jews, white and black, then composed the Jewish congregation, the first army service ever held for Jews on Yom Kippur Day on foreign soil was conducted at Colonia Dublan, Mexico, last Yom Kippur by Rabbi Isaac Landman, Secretary of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. This is the crowning achievement of the remarkable enterprise undertaken and so successfully carried out by the Central Conference of American Rabbis, in conjunction with the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, to carry the message of Israel to the Jewish boys wearing American khaki and marching under the American flag.

Dramatic as this may sound, it was entirely impromptu and without any preliminary planning. At the hour fixed for services, immediately after Retreat was sounded on numerous bugles throughout the camp there was no pulpit at hand. Two of the Jewish boys who had come to pray set up the empty ammunition case, got hold of a flag, draped the box, placed Rabbi Landman's Bible and prayer book upon it and the reverential hush that fell over the assemblage indicated that this, too, was the House of God.

Every Jewish man with Pershing at Colonia Dublan, nearly 150 in number, was present. They found seats on boxes and impromptu benches in front of the pulpit. Back of them and flanking them were over 500 non-Jewish soldiers and officers, including Col. Cabell, General Pershing's Chief of Staff, Col. Young, of the famous fighting 10th Cavalry (colored) that saved Roosevelt's Rough Riders at San Juan, and the three chaplains attached to the troops at Dublan.

In the background were the Mexican hills, over which the sun was going down in all the sublimity of a Mexican sunset. In the nearer background were the tented company streets and rows of adobe huts, lines upon lines of grim field guns of the Artillery and the fires of the field kitchens not yet extinguished. Altogether, it was a setting as wonderful as it was rare, and, as the sun went down and finally disappeared, only the voice of the Rabbi, intoning the service, broke the stillness of the passing day.

At Colonia Dublan the troops are all Regulars; there is not a single militia unit. Some of the Jewish men there have served in the Philippines and in Hawaii, and a few were in the Spanish-American War and in Cuba during the period of occupation. The majority of them had not attended a Jewish service in years. Of the non-Jews assembled, practically none had ever been in a Synagog or knew what Jewish worship was like.

If the great assemblage of non-Jews came to scoff they soon remained to pray. At the beginning of the service the Jewish men were timid in their responses. Soon, however, the spirit of devotion took hold of the entire assembly and non-Jew arose with Jew at those portions where the congregation is bidden to stand.

The sun had circled the distant hills when Rabbi Landman began to preach the Yom Kippur sermon. His theme was "Let Us Reason Together," and his text was from Isaiah 1:16-19. With the vast congregation of non-Jews as well as Jews before him, the Rabbi gave an exposition of Judaism as a religion that appealed to men's reason as well as to their emotions from the times of Isaiah to this day.

The Yom Kippur eve service begun in the glory of a colorful setting sun was concluded in the light of a clear moon marshalling a myriad of brilliant stars that studded a perfect Mexican sky.

The Yom Kippur day service began at 6:30 in the morning. Because of the sand storms that invariably sweep this portion of Mexico during the day the service had to begin early and had to be concluded before nine o'clock in order to make the service possible at all. About 100 Jewish men attended. Some of them later confessed to Rabbi Landman that these were their first services since their enlistment. One of the men had not attended a religious service in twenty-three years.

If the Jews were a missionary people no missionary work that they might undertake could equal this in significance and effectiveness. Among the Regulars this undertaking of the Central Conference of American Rabbis brought back to the faith many who had drifted away entirely, and it effected a great number of family reunions. Boys who had left their homes in anger and had severed themselves entirely from all their family ties were so moved by the spirit of the day and the influence of the service that thy were inspired to write to the parents whom they had well-nigh forgotten, giving their families the two-fold joy of the reunion and the knowledge that their sons and brothers had once more come back within the camp of Israel; for, indeed, this was the psychological moment when such reunions could be affected without a sacrifice of youthful pride.

Rabbi Landman, accompanied by Capt. Lewis Landes, Executive Secretary of the Army and Navy Branch, the Y. M. H. A., left Gen. Pershing's Army base at Columbus, N. M., on Tuesday morning, Oct. 3rd, by truck train to Colonia Dublan. They carried letters from Gen. Funston to Pershing. Arriving at General Pershing's headquarters they found that the General, himself, his Chief of Staff, Col. Cabell, and his Adjutant, Capt. Trott, had already done everything in their power within the necessities of military duty to arrange for the services, both for the eve and the morning of Yom Kippur.

When the order for the services was issued, however, and read to the various organizations, the Jewish boys, who had no news of the coming events, thought that someone was playing a hoax on them. When Rabbi Landman and Mr. Landes, however, went out into the regiments to meet the Jewish men, they were greeted with exclamations of joy and delight. How happy mother or father will be to hear this! was the unvarying exclamation of the boys.

It did not take long to form a committee composed of Sergeant Israel Cohen, Troop G, 11th Cavalry; Solomon Schneider, Color Sergeant, 11th Cavalry; and Samuel Salkovitch, of Ambulance Co. No. 1, U. S. A. These men went from regiment to regiment and troop to troop and informed every soldier of the Jewish faith of the services, urging him to be present.

Rabbi Landman reports that practically every Jew at Colonia Dublan was present at the service of Yom Kippur eve. On account of urgent military duty, some of them could not possibly attend on Yom Kippur morning.

Rabbi Landman also sent prayer books down to El Valle, Mexico, 78 miles south of Colonia Dublan. The 5th Cavalry and the 6th Infantry, U. S. A., are stationed at El Valle. On the trip from Columbus, N. M., to Colonia Dublan, Rabbi Landman met Lieut. Homer M. Groninger, of the 5th Cavalary, and Lieut. Wm. H. Lloyd, of the Medical Corps of the 6th Infantry. They informed the Rabbi that there are 50 or more Jews among these troops.

When these officers heard of Rabbi Landman's mission, they volunteered to carry prayer books to El Valle and to assist the Jewish men there in holding the Yom Kippur services.

General Pershing sent an order to El Valle giving the Jewish men the same privileges to attend services as were accorded at Colonia Dublan. No report has yet been received from El Valle.

General Pershing told Rabbi Landman and Mr. Landes that their visit to Colonia Dublan was a source of great gratification to him, because of the good influence it would have upon the Jewish men.

"They've been down here seven months," said the General, "and your presence on this holiday is a cheering message from home."

When Rabbi Landman suggested that he was probably doing nothing more than clergymen of Christian denominations had done, General Pershing replied: "No, you are the first clergyman who has ventured down this far."

RABBIS TO BE RELEASED FROM MILITARY SERVICE.

A deputation of rabbis and influential Jews appeared before the Russian ministry of the interior with a request that rabbis be exempt from military service. The ministry complied with their request and asked the deputation to prepare a list of rabbis, who, in their opinion, ought to be released from military duties.

MERCHANT OF VENICE ELIMINATED.

Through the efforts of Rabbi F. K. Hirsch of Athens, Ga., the "Merchant of Venice" has been eliminated from the High School curriculus and another Shakespearean play substituted.

B'NAI B'RITH OF GERMANY

A meeting of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 8 was held in Berlin, at the residence of Brother Timendorfer, on May 30th, 1916. Brother Grand President Timendorfer occupied the chair and in opening the meeting he mentioned that he received a letter of thanks from Solidaritaet Lodge of Cracow for 20 boxes of linen and clothing sent by the Grand Lodge for distribution in West Galicia. The Grand President also mentioned a report of Brother Max Rosenblatt of Lodz about the distressful condition of the Jews in Brzeziny, for the amelioration of which the Grand Lodge has appropriated 3,000 marks. Brother Timendorfer finally referred also to a letter of thanks of Brother Rabbi Dr. S. Poznanski of Warsaw, for the 15,000 marks appropriated by the Grand Lodge for the purpose of establishing a loan fund.

Several reports were read from lodges and individual brethren giving information that many sons and other near relatives of members of the Order, who are fighting at the front as officers or as privates in the ranks, having distinguished themselves by great courage and bravery have been decorated with medals and titles of honor.

In response to the call for funds issued by the Grand Lodge for the purpose of strengthening its welfare work during the war, Jacob Plaut Lodge proposed that for the extraordinary war expenditures needed by the Grand Lodge during the next few years it shall levy a graded per cent tax upon the amount of property owned by each individual lodge. As the General Committee had already decided that funds for the welfare work of the Grand Lodge during the war shall not be raised by taxation, but by voluntary contributions, the executive committee resolved to decline the proposition of Jacob Llaut Lodge.

Induced by the movement which exists in Germany for some time to discard all foreign words from the German language, the officers of Toleranz Lodge of Landsberg suggested that the foreign words and titles used in the Order shall be replaced by German terms. This suggestion called forth some interesting remarks. Brother Kuznitzky argued that the Order of B'nai B'rith which is spread nearly over the entire globe, is to a certain extent international and the designations like "Gross-president, President, Vize-President, Prot, Sekretaer, Mentor, etc., are titles which are used in all countries. They are, therefore, to be comprehended as termini technici, which cannot be changed, as the germanized expressions would not be understood in the different countries.

Other brethren emphasized the fact that when the Order was founded in Germany, the designations Grossmeister, Obermeister, etc., for President and Grand President, were intentionally avoided so as not to be confounded with other similar orders. The Executive Committee therefore declined to accept the suggestion of Toleranz Lodge.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee held some time ago it was resolved to contribute to the war orphan funds of the Agurdas Jisroel and of the Deutsch Israelitische Gemeinde Bund. In consequence of a conference held by the President of the Deutsch Israelitiche Gemeinde Bund with Brother Ginsberg and pursuant to a call isssued by that association concerning these contributions, the Executive Committee decided to reopen the question.

Brother Ginsberg submitted the request of the Deutsch Israelitische Gemeinde Bund that the Executive Committee reconsider its previous resolution and forward the call of the D. I. G. B. to the lodges.. The speaker argued that the Grand Lodge must support the endeavors of that body in the interest of centralization and in the interest of its great aim and activity. For the D. I. G. B. is a neutral place, like the Grand Lodge it serves the tendency of no party. Here it is the question of an organization which just like the Grand Lodge comprises all the aims of Judaism and wishes to prevent by its exertions the dissipation and the waste of the means.

The rest of the speakers all coincided with Brother Ginsberg that the care for the war orphans undertaken by the Deutsch Israelitische Gemeinde Bund, which is of a comprehensive nature and which favors no special party tendency, should sooner be fostered by the Grand Lodge which also stands upon neutral ground. But all this notwithstanding the brethren did not think it proper to recommend that the call of the D. I. G. B. should be forwarded to the lodges because the D. I. G. B. has taken position in this call against the Agudas Jisroel. The Order cannot transmit a call to the lodges, which is a kind of polemical proclamation. It is therefore better, they thought, to leave every lodge and every individual brother free to act according to their own judgment. The Dutsch Israelitische Gemeinde Bund will be informed that the Grand Lodge is at all times ready to aid the endeavors of the D. I. G. B. also in the field of the care for the orphans, but it cannot as a strictly neutral organization, transmit the proclamation, in which the Agudas Jisroel is attacked, to the lodges.

The sum of 100 mark was granted to a lodge for the temporary relief of a widow of a late brother, in addition to this a monthly assistance of 25 mark for the time from June 1st, to December 31st, 1916, was also allowed. This lodge is also willing to grant to the widow additional 25 mark per month.

Brother Stein reported about visits paid to the lodges. He stated that Brother Dr. Goldschmidt visited the Berend Lehman Lodge in Halberstadt, installed the officers and reported about the 127th meeting of the General Committee. The meeting of Berend Lehman Lodge was well attended, the discussions were very lively and a general readiness to support the Grand Lodge funds manifested itself on all sides.

Brother Dr. Goldschmidt also visited the Leopold Zung Lodge in Braunschweig. This lodge was also well attended and the words of the visiting brother awakened great interest.

Very favorable reports were also submitted by Brother Nussbaum of a visit to Nassau Lodge in Wiesbaden, by Brother Counselor of Justice, Apfel of Cologne of his visit to Maerkische Lodge in Dortmund after having listened to a report by the visiting brother of the activities of the General Committee and of the need of funds by the Grand Lodge to carry on the welfare work during the war the Merkische Lodge unanimously voted the sum of 1,500 mark. According to the report of Bro. Apfel the Lodge works well also during the war. The meetings are made interesting and the relation of brother to brother is a very intimate one.

Lessing Lodge of Breslau reported that on the occasion when the B'nai B'rith Hospital Train stopped there, Brother Ex-President Dr. Hollaender delivered two highly interesting addresses on the activity of the Hospital Train and on the Eastern Jewish question, which were received with great applause.

Brother Ex-President Dr. Ollendorf, of Barmen, suggested that besides the death notices the Monthly Reports of the Grand Lodge shall also publish the initiations of new brethren. He explained that the address book of the lodge's does not appear regularly every year and the publisher has repeatedly explained that as the sale of the address book is very small, he cannot guarantee that it will be published regularly in the future. If the initiations of new brethren were published regularly in the Monthly Reports and the next new edition of the address book would be interleaved with blank sheets, then every brother would be in a position to keep the list in order.

The address book need only be published every three or four years and more brethren would surely be ready to buy it when their attention is called to the new arrangement. The suggestion of Brother Ollendorf was accepted.

Brother Ex-President Merzbach, of Frankfort o- t- M, called the attention of the Executive Committee to the fact that the book week for the German Empire was just beginning. According to his opinion, he said, the lodges should not permit the opportunity to pass by to gain a favorable impression upon coreligionists in the field through furnishing suitable reading matter. With the sacrifice of a small sum of money the lodges and the brethren individually could operate in an ethical and enlightening sense. The speaker reminded of the suggestion once made in this regard by Professor Goldstein and himself to the Grand Lodge, in consequence of which it placed itself in communication with the presidents of the lodges.

The books to be considered for this purpose are:

1. Nature and Origin of Religion by Schroeder.
2. Culture and Race by Hertz.
3. Israelitic Prophetism by Cornill.
4. From Two Sources by Loewenberg.
5. Concerning Bible and Religious Philosophy by Steinthal.
6. Life's Conduct by Foerster.
7. The Ideal Woman and the Estimation of the Woman in the Old Testament by Wilkes.
8. What are Jews? by Straatz.
9. Twelve from Styria by Bortsch.
10. People or State by Potthof (German War Publications book 10, published by A. Markus and E. Weber, in Bonn.)

Brother Finkel regrets that this suggestion did not come sooner, as the empire book week lasts from May 28th to June 3rd, and in this short space of time the minutes of this meeting could hardly be in the hands of the lodges. But he nevertheless recommends that this suggestion should be transmitted to the lodges as later on an opportunity may present itself to send books into the field.

The Executive Committee resolved to act accordingly.—DR. E. FINKEL.

PERSECUTION OF JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

Hundreds of Roumanian Jews who managed to escape from their native country just before the war and after Roumania declared war against Austria-Hungary have arrived in Budapest and other Hungarian cities. All of the fugitives report persecutions or pogroms in the large Roumanian towns and in many small villages.

Several weeks before the government in Bucharest definitely decided to enter the war, all able-bodied Jews between the ages of 18 and 50 years were ordered to present themselves for military service. Those not responding quickly were rounded up by small detachments of soldiers, maltreated and driven to the nearest garrisons, where they were turned over to Russian drill masters.

All protests against this were either ignored by authorities or punished severely. After the men had been drafted into the army, men began to ill-treat their families and to plunder their homes and stores, while the police looked on without making an effort to stop the outrages.

After the declaration of war, pogroms on a large scale were started in Bucharest, Jassy, Braila and other large cities. Led by Russian soldiers, non-commissioned officers and secret service agents, mobs stormed and demolished the houses and business places of Jews and beat the inmates. In Bucharest three men and two women were killed and many others injured, and in Jassy the number of victims was much larger.

Many of the Jewish families who tried to reach the Hungarian frontier ahead of the Roumanian troops were caught by military patrols and driven back to their destroyed homes or imprisoned. About 2,000 of the fugitives got to the border by walking at night and hiding in the forests by day.

They were permitted to cross into Transylvania when they appealed to the Austro-Hungarian frontier guards for protection. Most of them were in a deplorable condition and without means, but representatives of the Hungarian Jewish Relief Committee took charge of them and procured their transportation to Budapest and other cities not threatened by Roumanian invasion.

MISSIONARIES PROVOKE RIOT IN MONTREAL.

Kol Nidre night witnessed a miniature riot in the streets of Montreal, due to missionary activities and provocation. On the walls of a mission home which is situated in the neighborhood of a synagogue there appeared a sign in Yiddish announcing that "Chief Rabbi" Farthing (the Bishop of Montreal) would deliver an address on the subject "Is Yom Kippur the true Atonement?" A number of Jewish young men on their way to synagogue noticed the sign and became enraged at the affrontery. A committee was sent to the authorities of the Home asking them to remove the sign, but their appeal went unheeded. The Jews then took the law into their own hands and tore the sign off and began throwing stones into the windows. The number meanwhile greatly increased, so that it became necessary to call out a reserve force of police. It was not. however, until Captain Isidore Freedman and his Jewish troop arrived on the spot and with fixed bayonets dispersed the crowds that order was restored. The next morning a missionary, Rev. Neugewitz, attempted to deliver an address on the steps of the Mission House, but was again met by hooting and missiles from the crowd. Again a police force had to be called out in order to restore order.

The Montreal press condemned the Jews for this riot. One of the French papers, La Canada, even went so far as to make the ridiculous statement that the Jews wanted to crucify Bishop Farthing, even as their forefathers crucified Jesus. A mass meeting was held the following Sunday by the Jews of the neighborhood, at which the action of the missionaries was condemned and means were devised to prevent their activities becoming widespread.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Propaganda Committee representing the two B'nai B'rith lodges of St. Louis, Mo., has issued the following circular:

500 New I. O. B. B. Members.

The several lieutenants, captains, corporals and privates in the ranks of the B'nai B'rith have done wonderful work throughout the week's campaign. Several hundred new recruits are already enlisted in our campaign. The cause of the B'nai B'rith is one that needs no explanation. Every self-respecting sincere and loyal Jew should become united in Israel through the instrumentality of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

Practically all lodges in District Grand Lodge No. 2 are now at work in soliciting new members for their respective lodges. St. Louis has the distinction of having the largest B'nai B'rith lodge in the world in having Missouri Lodge in the Order. The Executive Committee in charge of the campaign are bending every effort possible and leaving no stones unturned in securing the largest membership possible. There are in the City of St. Louis some 10,000 Jews who are not affiliated with the B'nai B'rith. It therefore behooves not only the officers in charge of the campaign but every member, who is in the ranks of the Order, to solicit those unaffiliated citizens. It is only by concentrated work and effort on the part of all that complete success of this campaign is possible.

Arrangements are being made to have the initiation take place in one of the most beautiful halls in our city on Sunday, November 26th. At the same time we will celebrate B'nai B'rith Day and will also have with us as one of the principal speakers of the occasion Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Social Service Director of the entire Order.

If you are not a member of our Order kindly approach one of the members of the Order, tell him of your desire to join us and he will be more than pleased to take in your application. During this campaign the initiatory fee has been waived. The dues necessary to accompany the application are $2.00, which will pay the applicant's dues to January 1, 1917.

You can receive further information from A. L. Levis, chairman of the campaign, 619 Third National Bank Building.

ZIONIST MEDICAL UNIT TO GO TO PALESTINE.

The Provisional Zionist Committee, of 44 East 23rd Street, New York, announces that it has secured the consent of the State Department to the sending of a consignment of drugs to Palestine on the Syrian relief ship that is to leave New York under the joint auspices of the Syrian Committee and the Red Cross. The consent of the State Department is conditioned on the Provisional Committee securing the consent of the French and British, as well as of the Turkish Government. Under the same conditions, which, in part, have already been met, a medical unit consisting of ten doctors, five nurses and a representative of the Committee will be sent by the Provisional Zionist Committee to Palestine. This medical unit, which is being organized by Hadassah, the Zionist Women's organization, will be taken from some Mediterranean port to Palestine on a United States navy vessel, and will proceed at once to combat the typhus, cholera and other epidemics that are now pervalent in Palestine amongst the Jews, as well as amongst the Arabs. Owing to the demands for doctors in the Turkish service, there is at present a scarcity of physicians in Palestine. The United States Government ship that will be sent with the drugs to Palestine will have to pass through the French and Turkish blockades off the Syrian coast. This makes it necessary to secure the consent of all the governments concerned in order to enable the relief ship to pass through without molestation. At least $25,000 will be needed for the purpose of the medical unit, and the funds are now being collected. The treasurer of the Medical Unit Fund is Miss Sophia Berger, who is also treasurer of the Hadassah, of which Miss Henrietta Szold is president. A number of liberal contributions have already been received by the Zionist Organization, at 44 East 23rd Street, New York.

The Provisional Zionist Committee, at its meeting held Oct. 5th, has appropriated the sum of $50,700 during the current school year for the schools it supports in Palestine.

JEWS MURDERED IN ASIATIC TURKEY.

The "Wiener Fremdenblatt" reports that when the Russians penetrated Asiatic Turkey the soldiers attacked the Jewish quarters and about 300 Jewish refugees were killed.

Attitude of the Jews in Regard to War in the Light of Poetry

(Dissertation on the Work of Professor Dr. Ludwig Geiger: "The German Jews and the War.")

By Dr. Alphons J. Sussnitzki

The literary production of the Jews in their relation to the war events, from Lissauer's "Hymn of Hate" to the "Trooper's Song" of the Zionist, Hugo Zuckermann, forms a topic for special meditation. And justly so, for we surely are the dualistic people. We are as much "the people of the book" as the people of the Maccabees, and Jerusalem was not only the "Holy City," but also that place which withstood the onrush of the all-conquering Romans for the longest time with the strongest and most effective resistance. Such a world-shaking event as war will necessarily draw out a mighty re-echo in the inner life of the Jew, just as when the proposition is reversed it is easily possible to form an opinion from these expressions of the soul about the attitude of the Jews in regard to the mighty occurrences.

This may possibly have been the train of thought by which Geiger permitted himself to be led when he was preparing himself to write his recently published work, "The German Jews and the War," which shall be here subjected to a criticism. For this reason he also reaches out quite far, although he, himself, seems to have looked upon the treatment of the question in connection with a former epoch, so to say, as a starting point only, as simply an indication of an estimate of the conditions in modern and most modern times. For only in its historical development is it possible to really grasp and to understand this problem.

Although the period of time of the first Jewish immigration into Germany cannot be ascertained exactly, it is at all events an established fact that individual Jews, yes, even smaller Jewish communities were already to be found in German cities, especially in the Rhine country, long before there was a German empire. This, of course, did not hinder that later the Jews were accused in Germany of being without a fatherland, yes, that they entertained inimical sentiments against the state. One of the hardest reproaches that were made against them in times of war (especially in the thirty years' war and not less in the seven years' war) was that they deteriorated the money, clipped the gold coins, mixed lead into the silver ones or used lead almost exclusively instead of silver. Well, there was no doubt some truth in this; for among the kippers and wippers, as the money deteriorators used to be called during the thirty years' war, were really not a few Jews But on the part of the Christians the making use of the "timely opportunity" was not despised and the number of the Christian coiners of base money was certainly not small at that time. Luther was already induced to thunder against those Christians who had learned so quickly and thoroughly to practice usury and similar frauds "even more Jewish than the Jews."

It is therefore easily comprehensible that the Jews of that time showed little enthusiasm for the fatherland even on great occasions and were mentally hardly concerned in the political events. For the possession of a fatherland was denied to them on all sides, and their share in decisive events used anyway to consist mostly in an aggravation of their condition and in a diminution of their rights, which were scanty enough without it. In fact, up to the time of Frederick it may hardly be possible to find any earnest literary expressions among the Jews which had reference to events in the life of the state and which deserve to be looked upon as a manifestation of a mental relation to the state. Also the seven years' war hardly awakened an echo, when we except a festal sermon and a few hymns of thanksgiving by Moses Mendelssohn, and by Ephraim Kuh of Breslau, who was more a poet of small trifles than a singer of patriotic ardor.

"There is, of course, an entire literature which should be considered here in connection with the seven years' war: Jewish German stories, letters about single war incidents and the happenings of the whole war. But as cleverly as these writers know how to imitate the Judaeco-German dialect and as much as they screen themselves behind the names of Jewish authors, it will still have to be assumed that this vesture is purely an external one in order to arouse a certain attention. The writings have nothing farther to do with Jewish sentiment, even if they really come from Jews, which is very questionable."

To be sure, the consequence of this lack of interest was that the question was principally raised whether the Jew is altogether fit for the war-trade and for the protection of the fatherland. Even if the polemic which was conjured up by this question, in which friend and foe participated with great zeal, remained essentially without practical use, it can still claim our interest in a high degree today, on account of the trains of thought which it has brought about. And we will have to count it as a merit of the author for having made us familiar with them in their outlines. The edict of March 11, 1812, made an end to the entire controversy. For as the Jews were made citizens, they became by this very act subject to military service.

But with this edict a complete change of mind was brought about. Thousands of youths and men who up to that time had no conception of the fatherland and who could not have known it, felt themselves all at once as citizens with equal rights. They who till then were accused of being strangers, called by all kinds of nicknames and were excluded from all societies and were made to feel the weight of the yoke of slavery, now possessed a fatherland and were permitted to consider themselves of equal birth with the others. The acquisition of the rights filled them with pride, but the also performed the duties connected with it with joyous hearts, when—only too soon—they were confronted by the task of helping the fatherland in distress.

What the Jews have accomplished during the wars of liberation is well known. At home as well as outside in the field they excelled in the fulfillment of their duty. In hosts they rushed to join the colors and the throng of their volunteers was especially great. And those who remained at home brought their offerings in rich measure or sought to make themselves useful by all kinds of help.

That which deserves to be specially mentioned in this connection is the fact that they all were with body and soul in the work. "To be sure, it was no such complete unanimity of action as in the later war periods, for the fact must not be lost sight of that the Jews were won over to German education (and to the German fatherland) only since a few decades." Nevertheless one receives the impression throughout as though it was the question of a people's affair, a sacred cause of the entire German Jewry. And when Heine and Boerne, Ludwig Robert and Michael Beer praise the national events in verse and prose in words of high inspiration full of patriotic sentiment, they no less reflect in it the sentiment which was then predominating among the Jews of that time.

The same phenomenon repeated itself in the year 1870, only upon a much more united and more extensive basis. "For the first time the German Jews were permitted to consider themselves as full and complete citizens. They therefore took part in the national and popular war against France with full inspiration." What the year 1870 brought forth in poetry was not small in volume, but was, however, not to be compared with the noble tone and the high poetic fancy of the war lyric of 1813. Among these singers are few or no Jews at all. But they, too, did not neglect to speak and to write in their own way for the unity of the fatherland, to rouse the people for the war and to admonish them to have faithful endurance. Special mention deserve the Kladderadatsch and the other humorous papers whose satirical poems about Napoleon enjoyed great favor, Julius Stettenheim, whose original tumbling figure found general applause, and Julius Rodenberg, Heinrich Schwarzschild, Berthold Auerbach, who followed for some time the incidents of the war in the headquarters of the German Crown Prince, and Mrs. Fanny Lewald who was early converted to Christianity, who gave in their different works a description of the time and presented a statement of the frame of mind of the Jews.

But all this pales completely in the face of the conduct of the Jews in the present war, which will always serve as the brightly shining example of devoted love to the fatherland. Unanimously they were there from the very first moment, ready for any sacrifice. As the fatherland called, they all, without exception, came as its sons. "It was a flame which rose up to heaven; not only a sudden flickering shine which quickly loses its glow, but a vast sea of flame which consumed everything. Truly, whoever took part in these days of the outbreak of the war, these moments of exalting inspiration which swept everybody onward, this one possesses a treasure for life which he never can lose."

And this unanimity, this joy of sacrifice, this restless devotion to the interest of the fatherland was also plainly expressed in the literary production of the Jews. Since the outbreak of the war the Jewish papers are full of war articles which breath inspiration and enthusiasm. Though they have not buried the hatchet in regard to the inner political Jewish questions, but have only temporarily laid it out of the hand, though they have not concluded peace for ever, they have proclaimed peace for a while within the jurisdiction of the castle. With fiery editorials, with descriptions of war scenes, with calls for gifts the Jewish journalists work like valiant soldiers of the pen for the national cause. Among the German narrators and poets there are many of the Jewish faith, and one would have to fill sheets, yes, volumes, if one wanted to make the attempt to even name all the publications. The author calls special attention to two poets only, Hugo Zuckermann and Walter Heymann, and he brings something from their writings. He does this not to humble others, but only because these two fell as brave soldiers and have sealed their convictions with their hearts' blood. Zuckermann's song of defiance, "Maccabeans 555," where one can read in words of flame:

"Whoe'er a good sword can swing,
Whoe'er the foe with gun can meet,
Whoe'er loudly the drum can beat,
Shall the arm as offering bring.

Whoe'er hills to conquer aspire,
Whome'er a steed has carried fast,
Whoe'er dares to climb the mast,
His legs we wish to hire.

All your arts, with striving rife,
All your palaces of pleasure,
Your houses and your treasure,
We claim and—your life.

Your life, that knows no death nor age,
From the fathers a heritage.
Clean the Temple to the frieze,
Let us be the Maccabees."

Or Heymann's poem of strong mood "To the Survivors," where the children are admonished in regard to the death of the father:

"A great mother
Is our land;
Heroic death
Has a gentle hand.
Children—
Become like him,
Give him no brand!"

They most plainly give expression to that opinion "which animated, strengthened and filled the German soldiers of the Jewish faith and the men and women who remained at home, which, freeing them all from the fate of the individual and cutting them loose from the selfish desire, lifts them up to general ideas, which carries them from the present moment away to eternity."

I am no friend of apology. For with the defense there is for me unavoidably connected the unpleasant conception of the accusation and the accused. Besides, the apologist is mostly consciously or unconsciously, subjective; he construes his doctrine and not infrequently comes to invent attributes and talents for the one he takes sides for which this one does not possess at all or not in that measure. But here, on the contrary, we have facts free from contradiction and irrefutable, which the well known man of letters and historian has joined into an imposing structure the impression of which one can hardly avoid. At the same time Geiger is objective enough, neither to excuse defeats nor to palliate mistakes of the Jews. So he speaks of the "ill-breeding which is displayed by some few insolent Jews who obtrude themselves and press themselves forward in an unpleasant manner," and does not hesitate to characterize fittingly the reactionary currents which followed the war of liberation and the Franco-German campaign. In fact, one must positively be amazed at the abundance of material in so close a space. For also what I have evinced in the above does not form a reproduction of the contents, but only the development of a viewpoint of the work, which sure enough seemed to me to be specially interesting and which very likely is also the best idea of the author. The book deserves to be wished as wide a circulation as possible, for it may essentially contribute to the influence of enlightenment and to remove many a prejudice.

OUR ORDER AND JEWISH SELF-RESPECT.

(Address delivered at Hastings, Neb., October 15, 1916.)

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is an international factor in the regeneration of Judaism. It is the expression of the Jewish Self-Respect. Within its ranks are found Jews who know full well the meaning of Judaism and the inseparable duties which such a knowledge imposes. In ministering to the sick, the aged, the defenseless and the persecuted, one can read a record of Jewish achievement which brings the glow of moral enthusiasm to every noble heart. Beneficence, however, is but a product of other forces which our order is solemnly pledged to maintain. We know that the blossom and fruitage of character need a favorable soil and the vitalizing sunshine of religion. Morality needs the impetus and guidance of faith for the largest unfoldment of character.

Our order rests upon the high ground of Jewish unity. Within our lodge, the issues that divide are forgotten, and the factors which make for a united Israel are carefully nurtured. Not that we assume a non-commital attitude toward all the vital Jewish questions of our day; but rather because the love for the Jewish cause enables us to see the unity of soul beneath the divergence of opinion and belief. Our Jewish Self-Respect prompts us to unite with all our brethren who strive to make Judaism and the Jewish people live for all time. With those of our people who look for the annihilation of Judaism either through apostasy or neglect, we have nothing in common. For those who desire to be Jews and who bend every effort to make Judaism live in the hearts of their children; such Jews find in the I. O. B'nai B'rith the means for realizing their vision and ideal. Jewish unity becomes a fact in the international scope of our work. The sectionalism of which we complain, the narrow pride of some who come from the favored lands of western Europe, and their uncharitableness towards their eastern brethren has no place within our great order. With the lodges in foreign lands, we do not come to the afflicted in the spirit of a benefactor, but as members of the same order we are only defending ourselves when we plead the rights of the oppressed and the persecuted. What finer spirit of Jewish Self-Respect and Jewish unity can be found anywhere among bodies dedicated to the service of suffering humanity? Is not the best charity revealed when the self-respect of the unfortunate brother is tenderly watched and guarded? Do we not receive more than we give when we interpret our benevolence in terms of Jewish "Tzedokoh" "Righteousness?"

Without our ranks, the I. O. B'nai B'rith has undertaken the holy task of protecting the honor of the Jewish name. To do that we are engaged in an educational campaign which calls for insight, wisdom and intelligent self-sacrifice. To battle with prejudice one needs all the moral resources that he can command. The task of "nailing a lie" has taxed the most gifted. We can do it, however, by first enlightening our own people in matters Jewish, and then with Jews deeply conscious of the full meaning of Judaism we shall be able to wipe out that caricature which the cruel ages have engraved upon the hearts of our neighbors. Jewish manhood and virtue alone will destroy the false image of the Jew in the minds of others, and gradually, by means of education, we shall make it unnecessary to plead with Boards of Education to eliminate the reading of the "Merchant of Venice" in our schools. With a full knowledge of our history, no one will need to be told that Shylock was no Jew and that Jewish idealism is of a finer order than those promulgated by the popular character Shakespeare drew.

Every member of our order knows full well the nature and extent of Jewish duty. Every loyal Ben B'rith enlists all his material, mental and moral resources for the cause of Israel. Wherever aid is needed for the feeble and the helpless, wherever rights of our people need defending and where the dignity and honor of the Jewish name is at stake, there you will find a Ben B'rith responding to the mandate of Hillel who cried, "In a place where there are no men, strive to be a man!"

In this spirit I welcome you as members of our splendid Order. You have pledged fealty to a cause by which your true manhood will reveal itself. As Sons of the Covenont, you will have ample opportunity to manifest your Jewish Self-Respect and occasions will be frequent when your Jewish manhood will be put to a test! May your loyalty to our Order and the character of your devotion add strength to our beloved cause; and as your deeds will find favor in the sight of God, they will redound to the glory of Israel!

JACOB SINGER.

The Jewish Pogroms in Poland

By DR. HEDWIG FISCHMANN

To the blessings of Russian culture, whose little mother Russia would like to see all the peoples of her wide empire participate in, belongs the institution of the constantly returning Jewish pogrom, which has been sanctioned by the state since the eighties of the preceding century. To be sure, this seed of blood did not find an equally favorable soil in every part of the vast empire of the czar. That unutterably frightful harvest of Kishinev or Odessa did not sprout forth everywhere. But when in a territory of the land as the Kingdom of Poland, which is so densely populated by Jews, the number of the pogroms is proportionally low, and their victims, measured by the standard of great Russia are less horribly treated, then some strong undercurrent must have undoubtedly have worked here against the blood-work, and forces fixed in the soil must have partially paralyzed the acts of Russian rage and incitation. For it surely cannot be doubted that the government was firmly determined to produce just here the most favored expedient of Russian despotism, most widely extended pogroms, in order to strike the hated Jewish people and with the same stroke also divert the dangerous revolutionary movements. For only by these means could the ruling powers hope to attain their aim which was formulated by Pobyedonostshev with cynical candor: One third of the Russian Jews will be absorbed by the rest of the population of the country without leaving a remainder, one-third will emigrate, and the last third will die out. In purely Russian territory the government could and still can today be sure at any time of the most zealous co-operation of the great dull multitude whose lowest instincts, the lust for murder and plunder even more than the religious fanaticism it unchains.

It is different in Poland. Surely here too is not the promised land of religious and national toleration; here, too, exists since times of yore a strange anti-Jewish current among the population, which sometimes casts high and sometimes low waves, according as the friction surfaces of the Poles and Jews become more or less sharp in the now and then arising political or economic conflicts; here, too, it is not always the cleanest weapons which are used in the combat: but the Jewish pogrom does not stand in this arsenal. Herein, with few exceptions, the Polish people refused to follow the Russian government. Where it has nevertheless succeeded to unfetter a pogrom upon Polish soil, as in Warsaw, or in Lodz, it never showed those acts of inhuman cruelty and rude bestiality, which distinguished in such a sad manner the Russian arrangements. Here the Pole, who stands upon a higher plane of culture, parts from the Russian Asiatic. In this connection we must, however, not overlook the fact that in the endeavor of the leading Poles to prevent pogroms, or at least to debilitate their operation, the care for their own national interest also plays a most important part. For could there be a better way for Poland to show to the eyes of Western Europe her own ethical height opposite the barbaric oppressor and to secure thereby for herself the sympathies of these powers for the realization of the dream of freedom which has never been extinguished. In fact the Polish press has never lost the opportunity to repeatedly formulate this contrast with strong emphasis. Even a provincial paper, the "Ziemia Lubelska," which favors every anti-Semitic current, wrote with distinct accentuation of this tendency after the Bialystok pogrom, that the Poles, who today are themselves an enslavened people, could no longer defend the Jews as they would have done in former times. And was it not also wiser to attract the strong Jewish party as fellow fighters against the Russian despotic rulers instead of driving them by force into the camp of the enemy and to arouse for themselves a dangerous opponent in their own country? In this the constantly recurring attempts which are made from different Polish directions to assimilate the Jews finally finds its ultimate reason.

But stronger than all these voices of wisely considered reflexion it was a true and genuine feeling of solidarity which undoubtedly determined the Poles to act as they did in the pogrom question. Did not Jewish and Christian blood flow unitedly in the year 1863 for Poland's liberty? Do not both, Pole as well as Jew, groan under the knout of the same hated oppressor? Do they not carry on the same struggle for the most primitive human rights, for the safety of their own lives? And cannot the bloody steel which rages today in the houses of the Jews choose tomorrow the heads of the Polish nobleman as a victim? Out of this spirit was born the nice expression "the solidarity which is mete for the children of one earth," with which the city of Warsaw refused all outside aid for the victims of the pogrom while it claimed work of giving aid for itself as its own right and which it richly fulfilled. And the same leading force speaks out of the knightly manner of action of that deputation of prominent Poles that appeared at the memorial service in a synagogue held for the victims of the Odessa massacre, offering a wreath with the Polish colors, which was consecrated "to the victims of the shameful act of violence as a path of hope that men will finally come to their senses, stretch out the hand to one another and strive together for the ideal and for the light."

When we let the pogroms which have afflicted the Jewry of Poland pass in review according to number and extent just as they were ascertained and set forth in such a thorough manner by the "Commission for the Investigation of the Pogroms," appointed "by order of the Zionistic Fund in London," and published in the year 1909, at a time when they were not yet forced in London to spread the veil of ally-love over the atrocious deeds of the Muscovites, then we find that Poland does not know at all those shocking long pogrom periods through which the southwestern provinces of Russia passed in the beginning of the eighties and in the still much more fearful repetition in the years of 1903 to 1906. Up to the year 1881 there were generally no pogroms at all for generations in Poland. It was only reserved for the reigns of Alexander III and the Peace-Czar Nicholas to let the blood-wave of Jewish pogroms flow over into Poland. All this notwithstanding this territory, not mentioning those attempts to precipitate pogroms which were at once nipped in the bud and the mere threats of a pogrom, knows only the Warsaw pogrom in the December days of the year 1881, the Lodz pogrom in May, 1892, the Czenstochau pogrom in September, 1902, and the comparatively insignificant excesses in Ostrovetz in the province of Radom and in Partschew in the government of Syedletz. Not on the black list of Polish pogroms belong the days of terror of Bialystok in the summers of 1905 and 1906, which were unmasked through the energy of the Douma up to their last fibres and stand before the horror filled eyes of Europe solely as the work of the Russian police and the violence of the military. And the pogrom by the soldiers in Syedletz can just as little be ascribed to Poland. But also in regard to their extent the Polish excesses when compared with the Russian ones, fall behind in a cheerful manner. In the Lodz pogrom, probably the bloodiest of all, the number of the dead victims, according to Mazowiecki's "History of the Social Movement in Poland," was about 40, while in the days of terror in Odessa of the year 1905 in the local cemetery there 302 Jewish graves give awful information, and at the same time the number of the wounded and missing goes into thousands. The same is the case with the material damage. The values which fell a prey to the robbing and destroying rage of the mob in the Warsaw plunderings amounted, according to the estimates of the General Aid Committee, to more than 700,000 roubles, while in Odessa Jewish property worth 3,750,000 rouble was destroyed.

As much as the Polish pogroms prove to have differed among themselves in their real and pretended presumptions, in the details of their sad course, in two points they show a clear consonance: in the performing and managing them through suddenly appearing and vanishish agitators, and through the conduct of the Russian authorities towards the agitators. In this respect the Polish persecutions of the Jews plainly authenticate themselves as a sprig of the great Russian tribe artifically transplanted in another soil.

When the pogrom storm swept through the land in the year 1881, then it seemed as though it must halt at the border of Poland before the firm will of the population of that territory. To be sure, dark rumors of impending excesses against the Jews whizzed through city and village. May 15 was positively designated as the first red letter day, but with one mind the archdioceses and the rabbinate of Warsaw worked to calm the masses of the people, supported by the entire Polish press, which proclaimed that proceedings similar to the Russian ones are impossible in their own country. In fact the undisturbed quietness of the following months seemed to prove that the press was right. That the anti-Semitic party made use of the danger, which this time still passed mercifully by the Jews, to recommend to them to discard all their national peculiarities and to become completely dissolved in the Polish tribe that protects them chivalrously, is just as little to be wondered at as the self-incensing of certain Polish circles. These circles can find a most accurate reflection of themselves in the deductions of their party head, Swentochowski: "At a time when entire Jewish quarters were destroyed in the cities of the empire, the people who hated the Jews, were incensed at them and in this respect were unrestrained, did not even attack one saloon. This calm, this dignity is simply to be credited to the organs of the social order as a merit and undoubtedly springs from the character of the people that knows how to master its impulses and does not seek satisfaction in barbarous acts of violence."

Then the Christmas days brought a fearful awakening out of this beautiful illusion. It was during the holy day service in the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Warsaw when suddenly the cry: "It is burning!" awakened a wild panic among the assembled. Everybody rushed for the exit. Frightful scenes were enacted. Dead and maimed covered the floor of the church. And into this multitude excited to the utmost, is thrust suddenly, nobody can tell where from, the dismal report: Jewish thieves have deliberately caused this panic in order to enrich themselves with other people's property in the general confusion. This is the kindling spark: in solid troops the unbridled masses stream into the houses and dwellings of the Jews. A plundering begins that lasts three days.

Who uttered that cry of alarm is not cleared up to this day. Interesting is the declaration of the state's attorney of the Circuit Court of Warsaw, that an eye witness pointed out to him a strange man and two women as the cause of the panic, that he stopped the man at the door of the church and asked him for his name; the unknown gave name and address which later proved to be false. He himself vanished without a trace since then. With this story of the mysterious unknown agree also the assertions of foreign newspaper correspondents and of many eye-witnesses, that unknown agitators, a "strange hand" took part in the organization and management of the pogrom. It also confirms with the otherwise astonishing fact, that, according to the assertion of the "Novoye Vremya" it was enough when the possessor of a dwelling addressed the entering plunderers in the Russian language to induce them to leave his house instantly. Is it possible for such a spontaneous reverence for the language of its tyrannical master to dwell within a Polish multitude? It requires much native simplicity to believe such a thing, just as it is hard to believe the asservation of the same Russian paper that the Polish rioters strove to manifest the greatest politeness towards the military, always supposing it is so that the plunderers consisted of purely Polish bands.

And now how did this Russian military comport itself? Exactly as it always behaves in similar cases in Russia: it looked on idly at the plundering multitude, encouraged them occasionally by cheers and for the rest it limited its activity to dispersing those Jews who undertook to defend themselves. Who does not think in this connection of the notorious words of the military commander of Odessa, Kaulbars, who declared with conviction in the circle of the assembled bureaucracy: "We all sympathize with the pogrom." Truly, these guardians of order were not to be thanked for it that in Warsaw only one dead and 24 wounded were to be deplored and that the brutality of the Russian pogroms did not come to pass here.

If by this the co-operation, if not the authorship of the government is established beyond a doubt, then the question arises regarding its motives. The reasons for this too, seem to be quite transparent. The Russian despots never felt safe in regard to the population of Poland. To be sure, after the bloody suppression of the revolution of 1863, after the decimation of the nobility, the revolutionary movement outwardly came to a standstill. But from Moscow they looked suspiciously upon the national and socialistic work of organization which was started in Poland in the end of the seventies, recognizing in it, not without justification, preliminary revolutionary work. And, although the Jewish pogrom only came into its sad celebrity as an anti-revolutionary fighting expedient on the part of the government in the revolutionary year, 1905, we can well see in the Warsaw pogrom a first groping attempt in this direction. It is surely no mere accident that just at that time Plehve, who later became minister and pogrom organizer, undertook the suppression of the Polish movement by prison and exile sentences without number.

Clearer still is the connection between pogrom and a counter revolutionary tendency in the pogrom of Lodz in the year 1892, which, thanks to a censorship, even for Russian conditions was manipulated in an unusually strict manner, is wrapped in darkness in many points. But already in its position as conclusion of the first great strike movement of the Polish working classes in this important place of industry that connection is plainly visible without further ceremony. As to which was the excitable moment that changed the walkout of the workingmen into a pogrom, the reports differ widely about it. According to the "Moskovskiya Vyedomosti," this turn was called forth by Jewish strike breakers; according to the voices of other papers, rumors of a murder committed by the hand of a Jew upon a Christian woman, or of church desecrations gave the impulse for it: this is sure that this turn in the general strike of the masses which had lasted several days, occurred almost exactly at the same time when the requisitioned military arrived in Lodz. With the most complete impartiality the cossack hordes let this time their nagaikas (whips) whistle over the heads of attackers and attacked, and under the crashing volleys the blood of the Jewish population and the Polish workmen flowed together. Yes, the Czar, the little father, loves all his children with equal love! It is natural that the Polish press tried to minimize as much as possible the participation of the mass of Polish workmen in the blood bath and to designate Russian spies and dark elements among the masses as the only guilty ones, of whom in reality there was no want. But the one thing stands firm: never again since those days of terror in Lodz did the government succeed in turning a strike movement or a political demonstration upon Polish soil into a pogrom, albeit it did not let it want in attempts. These efforts in the general strike in Warsaw on the occasion of the January incidents of the year revolution, are especially plain. Yet, thanks to the tight political organization as well as to the socialistic and citizens parties, which have since those days given out the slogan: "No more Jewish pogroms upon Polish soil!" every provocation failed.

The special local character impressed its stamp upon the last larger Jewish pogrom in Poland, the one in Czenstochan, in September, 1902. Czenstochan, the familiar place of pilgrimage, inhabited by a large clerical population, is the most favorable soil for the venomous plant of religious fanaticism. Here among a host of pilgrims composed of thrown together uncontrollable elements standing mostly upon the lowest steps of intelligence, it only needs the slightest apparent provocation, only one word to cause these masses of whose psychic excitation and susceptibilities to suggestion have been feverishly aroused by long journeying as pilgrims and praying, by the unusual oppressive glitter of the solemn ceremonies to blaze up in religious fighting frenzy. How quickly are the hands which were just now ecstatically convulsed in prayer, armed to destroy those who believe differently. It is to be understood that the Jewish pogrom of Czenstochan came out of the suggestion of such a mass.

It was the last upon Polish soil. To be sure, also in the following years there was no lack of pogrom dispositions and pogrom panics, but the government was not successful in kindling the fire brand once again in Poland, neither in the days of Kishinev and Homel, nor during the October storm of the year of the revolution, when Russia's earth reeked of the innocently spilled blood. Surely, the Douma elections, those for the first as well as those for the second Douma, have rendered more severe the ever present latent contrast between the Christian and Jewish population of Poland; surely the anti-Jewish movement has increased extraordinarily in strength and exasperation during those struggles; surely veiled and open pogrom threats did again not remain absent in those days, but the dark cloud always passed mercifully over the alarmed ones.

And today? A new day is dawning over Poland. The oppressive iron yoke of Muscovite arbitrariness lies scattered. The sun which once set blood red over Ostrolenka's plains, is rising triumphantly out of tattered clouds. Will his blessing-giving ray shine conciliatingly for all the children of Poland?—Allgemeine Zeitung des Judentums.

THE MACHINE AND THE MAN.

No great business, whether private or public, can be successfully done without organization. The scattering of energies and the multiplying of agencies must needs be wasteful. With the advance of civilization and the increase in necessities ministering to a decent mode of life it become paramount that we specialize and organize. The old patriarchal household with all the industries requisite for food and clothing and the like carried on under one roof on a small domestic scale belongs to the primitive stage of society. We are satisfied to pay for goods received by the proceeds of that labor which it falls to us to do. But even in economic organization on the gigantic scale of the past century, following in the wake of the invention of those labor-saving devices known as machines, it is found to mark an element of success when factory or business corporation is managed not by the many, but by the few. The many may retain for themselves the ultimate right of supervision and of choosing the heads, directors or managers, but once the head has been chosen he must be free to do the things he is bidden to do according to his own best judgment. We are only slowly learning the same lessons in the political business of a nation. In times of war it becomes obviously necessary to concentrate responsibility in the fewest hands, and the more concentrated the command the more effective the war machine will be. The nation, whether free or fettered, and be it the most democratic, must for the time being, resign its powers, delegate them to the dictator at home or in the field. And so it is also largely in peace times. A pure democracy of the New England town meeting variety is clearly impossible when it comes to managing the affairs of a great nation. There is nothing it would seem more definite than the law. It might appear as if the codes left nothing obscure, and as if for every emergency there were a ready precedent. Yet we know how in the supreme court of the nation justices differ in their opinions. The interpretation of the law resolves itself after all into a matter of common sense. After all the tomes have been thumbed and all the erudition has been brought to bear upon a case the individual judgment seems to have the last say. Now, individual judgment is largely subjective. Taste cultivated or innate enters into it. Preconceived opinions cannot be gotten rid of. And so it is with lawmakers and executives. It is well and good to have our political parties. The vanquished minority is there to act as a check. And the parties must have a machine-like organization. Jealous as democracies must be of those into whose hands their powers are committed, with all the devices for democratizing the primaries the machine remains all powerful. The great political conventions meet, there is much noise and much oratory; but after all the business of nominating the highest magistrates of the land and of constructing the platform is done by the few, far away from the din of the convention hall. And the chosen banner bearer of the millions may find himself held in check by a variety of devices such as the framers of our Constitution have wisely designed; once he finds himself in the saddle he realizes that the business of governing has been committed to him, that he will be held responsible for every act done in his name, and that accordingly he must be free to follow his own judgment. Our cabinet is a body of consultors. Lincoln used to invite the opinions of his cabinet and then announce that after all he would follow his own counsel. And in a supreme crisis what indeed can there be done by the executive except to act upon his own judgment?

Organization is eminently useful. Machine-like organization is supremely effective. But after all it is not the war engine that does the work, but the man behind the gun. If he has a cool head and a resolute hand, the deadly effect will follow. And likewise is situated the man behind the government machine. The average voter indeed may think his party's platform to be just what he wants or what the country is in need of, but the most inviting platform would be nugatory did not the conviction exist that the man chosen to carry it out is the right man in the right place. We are satisfied to leave the destiny of millions in his hand because we believe him to be alert to the moment's need and above all selfless and patriotic enough to do the thing that the country calls for. But we must not for a moment forget that we shall have to leave him free to exercise his own judgment. And whether we wish it so or not, he cannot help following his own judgment. Hence it is that in selecting the chief guide of the party the machine must look for high personal merits for those virtues which make for success in any directorial position.

We have had our election. We, on the north of the Rio Grande, fortunately go to the polls without dagger and without bloodshed. The successful candidate, whether he succeeds himself or someone else, need not kill off his adversaries. But whether we have voted for Wilson or Hughes, we have voted for the man. We acquiesce in the verdict of the majority. The defeated candidate may rest assured that in the aggregate the electorate was guided by patriotic motives. We had a hard choice between two excellent men. Happy is the country that can choose. And the country will settle down to its normal life, assured that in the highest command we have a worthy man upon whose judgment we may rely. The platform may or may not be conveniently forgotten; the machine may or may not be at work; the responsible factor in the affairs of our government remains the President of our choice, the man behind the machine.

THEY THAT RETURN.

It is said of a well-known rabbi in Russia that, when after the pogroms in the eighties he noticed in the pews a goodly sprinkling of college graduates, he called out in the language of Isaiah's bereaved Zion: "Who hath brought up these?" The attitude of the average man or woman who had gone up to college had been one of indifference and oftentimes of hostility to all things Jewish, not to mention those who left the Jewish fold altogether. We are told repeatedly that Judaism does not recognize apostasy. The apostate is merely a bad Jew; and the gates are not shut against his return; no ceremony, no declaration is required; he just walks in. They that return, whether they joined the other camp or merely came near the brink, are reckoned as penitent souls, members reinstating themselves in good standing. Good manners and the rule laid down by law dictate that the repentant sinner shall not be shamed. Moreover, it is prudent not to be too strict or rigorous. We would that all Jews were harmonious characters, full Jews. But a minority, which is constantly losing its sons and daughters cannot be too fastidious. If they come back with a less warm atachment to the things the normal Jew hallows, if in a mistaken attitude borrowed from their environment they refuse the synagogue and all that it stands for, if they merely rejoin their kindred in race, it is wise to tolerate them, aye, to welcome them back. We ought to have that faith in the spiritual potencies of our religion that sooner or later they will adjust themselves to the faith as well as the race. It is true, our patience is sometimes sorely taxed. Those who never swerved in the allegiance to Judaism may be intolerant of the criticisms and preachments of these Jews to whom Judaism is a fresh experience. They bring with them experiences gained in alien quarters. They compare the rabbi under whose leadership they would place themselves with the Christian minister to the former's disadvantage. The rabbis are quite capable of taking care of themselves and they least require a brief in their favor on our part. Nor are we blind to their shortcomings. We equally know that it is not all gold that gleams and glistens abroad. Not every Christian minister is a saint or a paragon of kindliness. The fault with our rabbis has rather been that they have sought to copy the traits of their Christian colleagues. Social service, it would seem, is cultivated by our rabbis in a high degree. That they fail to come up to the standard of culture exhibited by the Christian minister would have to be proved. They do not all come from the homes of the rich or cultured. But they are all very busy improving themselves, and ample opportunity is provided them. That intangible something which distinguishes the curate or rector may be wanting. But it is made up by a zeal for the cause of Judaism which the least noble of them is not without. Just now there is a tacit struggle going on in our midst for leadership in Jewry. The traditions of the rabbinate are indeed such that there is always room for the lay leader to work beside the spiritual guide. A generation ago the leadership of the rabbi was undisputed. Today, at least in certain quarters, the lay leader is on the ascendant. There is room for both. But they should not antagonize each other. We of rank and file care little whether Moses or Korah is at the head. Every generation has its Korahs. They that return with earnestness of purpose may range themselves on either side. There is no monopoly in Judaism on leadership. The old guard will in the nature of the cast look askance at the newcomer. "This one fellow came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge." That, of course, is a Sodomite outcry. The masses are more generous. They are forgiving. Shall we say that they are flattered by the return of some great one? Perhaps. The founder of Zionism was one of those that returned. Zangwill poked fun at eating a terefah meal with the Messiah. But rabbis with long locks and long coats sat on the same platform with him and his associates of doubtful religious leanings. They furnished a lesson in tolerance and in true Jewish loyalty. Those that are not against us are for us. The Pharisees greeted Agrippa as a brother. Agrippa, with the true instinct of a ruler, conformed at home. He should be the pattern for our newer leaders. Time will perhaps bring them around to more than conformity. Meanwhile let us refrain from caviling. Let us rejoice in the sons returning to the bereaved and solitary mother, and be they the youngest and freshest. There are many varieties of Jewish service. There are many mansions in our Heaven. And we are taught that the mansions of the penitent are more splendid than those of the righteous who never sinned. The gates of repentance are wide open. Return, ye backsliding children. Bring with you all that is good and noble; soon you will find out that the best and noblest resides in the home which you or your fathers wantonly forsook, not the least being the stubbon resolution to hold fast to the ideals of the fathers, aye, the faith of the fathers, sealed by the blood of martyrs, sanctified by upholding the right of a minority to live according to the dictates of conscience. It is the spark of that undying Jewish conscience that brought you back to the Jew and the Jewish consciousness. We need you all that return, but you need us still more. In being with us there will be rest to your soul. Left on the outside you may achieve great things, but there will remain something that will jar and mar you. Only in returning you will find that which the cultured soul craves most, the peace within.

RABBI M. S. LEVY: IN MEMORIAM.

In the passing of Brother Rabbi M. S. Levy of San Francisco, District No. 4 loses a Past Grand President and the Order mourns the loss of a valued member. For over forty years, Rabbi Levy was minister on the Pacific Coast. He was well known in every hamlet from San Diego to Victoria, giving unselfishly of his strength and working for the best interests of Judaism and the B'nai B'rith. Rabbi Levy was a power for good on the Western shore. An orator of unusual ability, a pastor of deep sympathy toward the unfortunate, a man of strong personality and a pedagogue of commanding influences, Rabbi Levy leaves a void which will not soon be filled. To his sorrowing widow and children we extend the deepest expression of sympathy. May God solace them in their great loss.

PROMINENT BEN B'RITH HEADS SOCIAL SERVICE AT SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Federation of Jewish Charities of San Francisco has elected Mr. I. Irving Lipsitch of New York as its superintendent of social service, of which new office he is to be the first incumbent.

Mr. Lipsitch filled many offices of trust and responsibility, and at the time of his appointment to the San Francisco office he was general manager of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of New York. He was manager of the East Side Free Employment Bureau of New York, which was maintained jointly by the Hebrew Charities of New York and District Grand Lodge No. 1, I. O. B. B. He was a member of the Grand Lodge of District No. 1, also for many years a member of its general committee, and at the last convention of the Order held in San Francisco he was one of the representatives of the District. Fully equipped for his new work, the B'nai B'rith News is confident that Brother Lipsitch will acquit himself creditably, and will be of much service to the cause which he represents.

THREE JEWS GAIN DISTINCTION.

The London Jewish Chronicle recounts the following unusual distinction gained by three Jews during the war:

Brigadier General H. S. Seligman is the first Jew of British birth to have attained that rank.

General John Monash, an Australian Jew, recently was made Major General.

M. Broido, a blind Moscow Jew, recently was made Assistant Advocate by the direct approval of the Czar after the Ministry of Justice had refused to enroll him, although he was a graduate lawyer. The appointment was strongly supported by the Advocate and Deputy Maklakoff.

TO SIMON WOLF

On His Eightieth Birthday.

Made of the stuff from which kings are wrought,
Yet greater than any king.
Brother to men of every clime, and
To every living thing.
Ruler o'er hearts that prize true worth,
Yet servant of all who need.
Rich in what you have given away,
Though deaf to the voice of greed.

A heart that feels for the woes of men,
Whatever their creed or clime,
Honored thy name the whole world round,
For words and deeds sublime.
We honor you this day of days
As you cross the eightieth span
Of the arch of life, a life well spent,
In the service of God and man.

Social Service Department, I. O. B. B.

During the past month, the Social Service Department has made encouraging strides in various parts of the country. From District No. 1 we learn that our brethren in Hartford, Conn., contemplate undertaking the Big Brother Movement. Flatbush Lodge No. 753, Brooklyn, N. Y., has already undertaken Big Brother work, on a large and praiseworthy scale. The Juvenile Association of Brooklyn, under the guidance of the presiding justice of the Children's Court, furnishes Big Brothers for lads who need assistance and guidance. Flatbush Lodge has volunteered its services to this non-sectarian movement, thus insuring Jewish Big Brothers for Jewish little boys. On October 24th, 1916, a public dinner was held in Brooklyn, under the auspices of this non-sectarian movement in the interest of the Big Brother work. For the first time in District No. 1, our Order was represented in this movement. On December 6th, Judge Robert J. Wilkin of the Children's Court will address the members of Flatbush Lodge on the "Big Brother Movement". This Social Service work of Flatbush Lodge will include visits to the friendless, to the sick, and directing the young folks' clubs at different social and educational institutions. A series of public lectures of an educational character has already been undertaken, to give greater publicity to the work. These addresses will be delivered in Synagogues and various other public halls throughout the city.

Our Denver brethren have sent a remarkable report, which shows constructive work along child welfare lines. Last summer, Jewish lads in correctional institutions received scant attention. Now, weekly visits are made to these boys and the officers of the Reform School at Golden, Colorado, comment on the changed attitude of these boys and their willingness to accept instruction. Last month an unusual case of robbery was reported, involving some Jewish boys. Through the co-operation of the Social Service Department, these lads, who ordinarily might have been sent to prison, are on parole and receiving such moral and physical attention, as will unquestionably reshape their future lives. The boy who led his colleagues into temptation will undoubtedly go to the Reform School. The other lads will be looked after by Big Brothers.

District No. 3 reports very interesting results through the Big Brother Movement in Pittsburgh. Boys have been released from the Industrial School on condition that a Big Brother be appointed to keep in close touch with each boy so paroled. The outcome of this experiment will be watched with great interest. If these boys live such lives as it is hoped they will, this policy of releasing first offenders to Big Brothers, will be continued. In Philadelphia our committee is active in looking after the spiritual welfare of those in prison and preparing for the day of their release.

District No. 4 continues its splendid activity and the appointment of Brother I. Irving Lipsitch, formerly of New York, as head of the Federated Jewish Charities in San Francisco, should mean much to our Order. It is hoped that the fine activities upon which the San Francisco Social Service Committee has been started, can be greatly advanced.

Perhaps the most important event throughout the country this past month, has been the election of Mr. L. Edward Lashman, formerly Director of the recreational work of Raleigh, North Carolina, to take charge of the Social Service work in Chicago. Mr. Lashman comes to his new office with an excellent record, both as a social worker and a man of rare executive ability. He will have the united co-operation of all forces within the Order and his advent should start a new era in Chicago B'nai B'rith work.

Progress Lodge No. 113, Peoria, Ill., has successfully undertaken, for the past six months, the fine work of weekly visits to the Bartonville State Hospital. where some sixty Jewish inmates are sheltered. The volunteers are so encouraged, that it is now proposing to extend this friendly visiting, with religious services, to the Lincoln State Hospital, some forty miles away. A number of Jewish children are in this hospital, and such visiting would undoubtedly be of great benefit to them.

A large project in which the Social Service Department takes the deepest interest, is the "Farm City Plan" which District No. 7 is seriously investigating. A special committee is already at work on this plan, and Doctor Coffee hopes in the near future to undertake a Southern trip to appeal for funds to bring this project into being. Many leading members of the Order, especially in Texas, are heartily in sympathy with this movement.

AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS

B'nai B'rith Appoints Representatives on the Executive Committee

At a meeting of the Executive Organization Committee for an American Jewish Congress, which was held in Aeolian Hall, on Thursday evening, November 2nd, a report was presented of the results of the referendum which was recently submitted by the Congress Committee to all its constituent delegates in the matter of the new agreement entered into between this committee and the Conference of National Jewish Organizations. The report showed that the agreement was accepted by an overwhelming majority, 217 delegates to the Preliminary Conference having voted in favor of the same and only four having voted in opposition to it.

The acceptance of this agreement puts an end to the differences which still existed between the Congress Organization Committee and the Conference of National Jewish Organizations, which had also declared itself for the calling of the Congress, and the ratification of the new agreement now assures the convening of the Congress with the co-operation of all sections and groups in American Jewry. In accordance with the favorable results of the referendum, the meeting of the Jewish Congress Committee on Thursday evening took steps looking to the amalgamation with the Conference of National Jewish Organizations.

The acceptance of the new agreement brings about a union of all forces on the Congress program and marks the close of a controversy which has raged in American Jewish life for over one year and a half. Though it is generally agreed that this controversy has been of great educational value in arousing the interest of Jews in the European situation and in the need of comprehensive organization in this country, there were many persons who regretted the heat and bitterness which were naturally engendered by the clash of opinions.

The new agreement which takes the form of the proposed call to the Congress is embodied in the referendum which was submitted to the delegates to the preliminary Conference held in Philadelphia and which is as follows:

AGREEMENT.

Entered into between the Executive Organization Committee for an American Jewish Congress and the Executive Committee of the Conference of National Jewish Organizations, October 2, 1916.

Your committee has agreed with the Sub-Committee of the Conference of National Jewish Organizations on the form of the Call to be issued in convening the Congress. The Call is to read as follows:

(New matter in black face.)

THE CALL FOR THE CONGRESS.

By virtue of the authority vested in us, as the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress, the Jews of America are earnestly requested to select representatives to an American Jewish Congress which shall meet at .... on .... exclusively for the purpose of defining methods whereby, in co-operation with the Jews of the world, full rights may be secured for the Jews of all lands and all laws discriminating against them may be abrogated. It being understood that the phrase "full rights" is deemed to include:

1. Civil, religious, and political rights, and in addition thereto:

2. Wherever the various peoples of any land are or may be recognized as having rights as such, the conferring upon the Jewish people of the land affected, of like rights, if desired by them, as determined and ascertained by the Congress.

3. The securing and protection of Jewish rights in Palestine.

No resolution shall be introduced, considered or acted upon at the Congress which shall in any way purport or tend to commit the Congress as a body, or any of its delegates or any of the communities or organizations which shall be represented therein, to the adoption, recognition or endorsement of any general theory or philosophy of Jewish life, or any theoretical principle of a racial, political, economic or religious character, or which shall involve the perpetuation of such Congress.

The calling and holding of the Congress shall in no manner affect the autonomy of any existing American Jewish organization, but in so far as the Executive Committee selected by such Congress shall take action for the securing of Jewish rights as defined in the call for such Congress, the activities of such Executive Commitee shall, during the period of its existence, be regarded as having precedence over those of any other organization which shall participate in such Congress.

The Congress is to select an Executive Committee which, in co-operation with the Jews of other lands, shall strive for the realization of the objects for which the Congress is called; such committee shall continue in office until the expiration of one year after the adoption of a Treaty of Peace whereby the present European War shall be concluded, and at the end of that period, or sooner if necessary, such committee shall reconvene the Congress and render to it a final report of its activities.

The delegates are to be elected in the following manner:

Your committee has further agreed that:

The general principle with respect to the selection of delegates to the Congress, approved by the Philadelphia Conference, is accepted subject to such modifications as may be required in order to make such principle effective, but it is expressly unuderstood that provision will also be made for the selection of representatives by the various national Jewish organizations which shall desire to participate in such Congress on such a basis of apportionment and in accordance with such definition as to what shall be deemed to constitute a national Jewish organization, as shall be adopted by the committee charged with the calling and organization of the Congress, and which is to be known as the Executive Committee, but the representation of the national organizations as such shall be 25 per cent of all the delegates to the Congress.

The national Jewish organizations which shall thus be entitled to representation, shall be permitted to select their delegates in such manner as they may themselves decide.

The committee issuing the Call shall be known as the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress.

The Executive Committee shall consider the advisability of placing on the agenda of the Congress the subject of the economic reconstruction of the Jewish communities in the war zone.

Respectfully submitted,

The Executive Organization Committee for an
American Jewish Congress.
Chairman of the Administrative Committee,
JOSEPH BARONDESS,
BERNARD G. RICHARDS,
Secretary.

NOTE: As a result of the vote in regard to the Referendum submitted August 27, 1916, the following propositions have been adopted and constitute part of the agreement:

1. The Congress shall be held at such time before the cessation of the present European war as shall be fixed by the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress.

2. The Executive Committee shall be increased to 140 by the addition of two members to be selected by the present committee and by seventy members to be selected by the Conference of the National Jewish Organizations.

Mr. Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, appointed the following as representatives of the B'nai B'rith on the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress: Jacob Furth, St. Louis; Charles Hartman, New York; Adolf Kraus, Chicago; Henry Morgenthau, New York; L. L. Solomons, San Francisco, and Simon Wolf, Washington.

The following were appointed as alternates: Jacob Singer, Philadelphia; Dr. E. N. Calisch, Richmond; Philip Stein, Chicago; A. A. Marx, New Orleans; Samuel Alschuler, Chicago; A. B. Seelenfreund, Chicago.

A CONVERSION MOVEMENT IN SIBERIA.

Reports from Siberia show that there is a regrettable and widespread conversion malady among the Jews in that region. Most families have among their members a "Meshumed" for the purpose of obtaining the right of domicile or to find careers which would otherwise be closed to them. The movement is growing from week to week without meeting any resistance from local Jewry.

SIMON WOLF EIGHTY YEARS OLD

Friends Pay Him Tribute.

On Saturday, October 28, 1916, Mr. Simon Wolf in his home in Washington, D. C., was the recipient of congratulations and gifts from Jews and Gentiles in honor of the eightieth anniversary of his birthday. Hundreds of prominent citizens of Washington called during the afternoon and evening to pay their respects. Their presence as well as the receipt of hundreds of telegrams evidenced the esteem in which he is so highly held for his lifelong service for the good of humanity and the aid of his fellow Jews. More than thirty prominent organizations were represented among the callers including the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the Rabbinical Conference, the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, the Jewish Chautauqua Society, the Ruppert Home of Washington, German Orphan Asylum of Washington, and the Ladies' Aid Societies of the two organizations, the Red Cross, the Second National Bank, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Young Women's Hebrew Association, the Foster Home of Washington, the Hebrew Orphan's Home of Atlanta, the Monday Evening Club, the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, the Jewish Historical Society, the Jewish Publication Society. the National Farm School, the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, the Denver Relief Association, the local Masonic Fraternities and Mystic Shrine, the Temple Sisterhood, the Council of Jewish Women, the Washington Hebrew Congregation, Argo Lodge of B'nai B'rith, District Grand Lodge No. 5, I. O. B. B., the Shamrock Club, the Masonic Veterans, the Commercial Club, the Board of Children's Guardians, the Board of Charities, the Washington Saengerbund, the Bar Association, Ohio Society of New York, and Ohio Society of Washington, Young Men's Christian and Young Men's Hebrew Association.

The house was filled from floor to floor with the most gorgeous floral tributs and lovely tokens of esteem and good will from every part of the country.

Among those sending flowers, telegrams and letters were President Woodrow Wilson, Justice Louis S. Brandeis, Paul M. Warburg, Adolf Kraus, ex-Secretary J. W. Foster, Justices Stafford and Siddons, General Barnett and Lauchheimer, Louis Marshall, Jacob H. Schiff and the German Ambassador.

The telegram from President Wilson was as follows:

"My warmest and heartiest greetings and congratulations go out to you on your eightieth birthday.

"Woodrow Wilson."

Mr. Ben Altheimer, representative of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, presented to him the following poem:

"To say that you are growing old
Is nonsense pure and sheer,
A Ben Berith as great as you
Grows younger every year.
We love you all; we wish you well,
You champion of right and truth.
We celebrate with you today;
Our toast: 'Eternal youth!'"

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith through its Executive Committee, presented to Brother Wolf on the occasion of his birthday a gift amounting to over $11,000. The contributions were from the following sources:

Executive Committee, I. O. B. B.	$1,000
District No. 1	988
District No. 2	2,373
District No. 3	1,385
District No. 4	713
District No. 5	1,860
District No. 6	2,176
District No. 7	731

At the request of Brother Wolf, the B'nai B'rith News is pleased to express in his name, appreciation for the gift and for the pleasant manner in which the same was raised and tendered.

Mr. Wolf expressed himself to a group about him as follows:

"I am happy and contented. The Lord has seen fit to spare me for a great number of years, and I am thankful. The charities that I have tried to aid have remembered me, and I have received the felicitations and the calls of many of the nation's leaders."

RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT AND GALICIAN JEWS.

The government has ordered the release of fifty Galician Jewish hostages, including the Mayor of Tchertkoff, Dr. Kosover. All have returned to their native towns.

The latest information from Brody show that the relations of Russian officials with the Jews in Galicia are now much more cordial than was the case during the first invasion. The mistakes then made are now avoided. The newly appointed Municipal Council of Brody has two Jews among its members.

THE KEHILLAH, XXVII

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

Every movement in history will at one time reach its climax and then begin to decline. For centuries rabbinic Judaism had shaped the Jewish life in a distinct way. The study of the law was the highest aspiration and its observance the noblest ideal. By the end of the eighteenth century we see the first sign of disintegration. Samuel Falkenfeld, rabbi of Posen, who died in 1806, reports that in Tarnópol, where he was rabbi at the end of the eighteenth century, the study of the Talmud had declined. He may have exaggerated, as usually is the case under similar conditions, but it is a fact that in the same city of Tarnopol Joseph Perl, the first champion of modern education, and the powerful antagonist of Hasidism, was born in 1775, and a secular school was opened in 1814. More decisive is the testimony of Rabbi Ezekiel Landau of Prague, who held his office from 1755 to 1793. In his day the umbrella was invented, and the great question arose whether it was permitted to use it on Sabbath. Levi Barent Cohen of London had scruples along this line. He asked a local authority, presumably Tevele Schiff, then rabbi of London, who was inclined to adopt a lenient attitude. It is true that to open an umbrella on Sabbath is like erecting a tent, and to erect a tent is equal to building, but if the umbrella is not entirely closed on Friday, the opening of it is like stretching the ropes of a tent, which is permitted on Sabbath. Levi Cohen was not satisfied with this decision, and appealed to Ezekiel Landau. What the latter says from a strictly legal point of view is not material to us, but we are interested in what he considers proper religious policy. He says no matter what may be claimed in favor of this leniency, we cannot afford in our days of religious laxity to encourage sinners.

Levi Cohen was the father-in-law of Nathan Rothschild and of Sir Moses Montefiore. His descendants are now found among Jews and Christians in both houses of the British Parliament, in the blue-blooded nobility, and in the professions. A great grandson of his was the famous barrister, Arthur Cohen, an authortiy on maritime law, who died November 3, 1914, at the age of eighty-five. The scruples of his great grandfather would, if he had ever learned of them, remained absolutely unintelligible to him.

It is worth while noticing that Ezekiel Landau is not consistent in the application of the policy of fighting religious laxity by insisting on strict observance. He once renders a decision on the exactly opposite ground. He allows shaving by means of a salve, or by clippers on Hol Hamoed, and his main reason is that in our days, when religious laxity is so growing that people begin to use the razor, it is advisable to be liberal in the interpretation of the law. He is, however, uncompromising in denouncing secular education. When his disciple, and afterwards colleague in the rabbinate, Eleazar Fleckeles, published in 1785 a volume of sermons in Hebrew, Landau says in his recommendation of the work that he hopes such books, written in clear Hebrew, will help to keep people from reading books in German. It is significant that among the descendants of Ezekiel Landau living today are Marcus Landau of Vienna, born in 1837, who is an authortiy on comparative literature, and Isidore Landau, editor-in-chief of the Berlin "Boersencourier." Another great grandson, Hermann Landau, died in the city of Prague, where his famous ancestor had been chief rabbi in 1889. He was a publicist by profession.

Significant is also a statement made by Hayim Joseph David Azulai (1723-1806), a native of Jerusalem, who for the last twenty-odd years of his life lived in Leghorn as the representative of the Palestinian Jews. In a work published in 1793 he complains of the religious decline in his day. People neglect the Torah, study philosophy under the claim that in this way they will be better able to refute skeptics, though Satan is the most erudite philosopher. He also regrets that the Italian Jews attend theaters, clubs, and balls, and practice the religious observances indifferently. A great granddaughter of his, Miss Gertrude Azulai, is now at the head of a popular music institute in London.

These conditions were not the same in all countries, but the spirit of the age was noticeable everywhere. A strong individuality like Mordecai Benet could in his own circle maintain the sacred traditions. The vast majority of his parishioners believed with him that Judaism, as it had existed for the last three centuries, must be maintained, and the few who thought otherwise did not openly antagonize him. Conditions changed with his death. It was difficult to find a successor for a man who had imprinted the seal of his individuality on the congregation to which he ministered for thirty-eight years, and it took three years before a successor was chosen. This successor was Nahum (Nehemias) Trebitsch, rabbi of Prossnitz since 1826. Just a word about the name. The new rabbi was known in Prague as Reb Nochem. The law, dating from Joseph II, required that the Jews adopt what we might call civilized names, and while there is no reason why Nehemias should be more civilized than Nahum, the bureaucrats of Austria must have thought differently. These shifting names present quite a problem for the student of biography. A contemporary of Trebitsch was Bezalel Ranschburg, quite a famous Talmudist in his day, and the teacher of Zecharaiah Frankel. The family name Ranschburg points to the town of Ronsperg, Bohemia, where Isaac M. Wise began his career as teacher. Rabbi Bezalel was either a native of that city or a descendant of such. For some reason he, when in 1788, the Jews were compelled to adopt family names, he adopted the name of Rosenbaum, and as the name Bezalel was inconvenient, he called himself Daniel. Thus Bezalel Ranschburg on the title page of his books is identical with Daniel Rosenbaum in the official records of the congregation. Nehemias Trebitsch was the son of a Hazan in the historic Altneuschul of Prague. The father was probably a native of Trebitsch, a town in Moravia. The young man grew up in the traditions of the eighteenth century, though these were rapidly weakening in Prague, where in 1782 a secular school was opened whose teachers, Perez (Peter) Beer and Herz Homberg, were bitterly antagonistic to the aged chief rabbi Landau. The Beth Hamidrash, in which Trebitsch spent his early life, ignored the growing spirit of secularism. A short remark made by Trebitsch in his notes on the Palestinian Talmud, published by Anton von Schmid in Vienna, 1820, is highly significant. The Talmud speaks of a resolution, probably passed in the second century, which prohibited "the language of the Gentiles." Trebitsch adds the note: "This is a very important hint for our own age, when people are ashamed of the language of our fathers."

In literature Trebitsch has not left any works of consequence. These notes on one section of the Palestinian Talmud—the project to publish the complete work was never materialized—and some notes on Maimonides, is all that we possess of him. He was, however, known as the great Talmudic scholar, and Mordecai Benet, who may have known him personally from the time when he was living in Prague, recommended him to Prossnitz, the second largest congregation of Moravia. From this place he was, as already stated, called as rabbi of Nikolsburg, and elected Landesrabbiner of Moravia. The former position was filled by election by the trustees of the congregation, and the latter was an appointment by the government upon the presentation by the representatives of the Jewish congregations of the province. It was in itself a difficult matter, as already said, to fill a place which a powerful personality had held for so long a time. People compared notes and they found that the new rabbi was not up to the standard of his predecessor. What follows now I have learned from older people in my boyhood. My father came to Nikolsburg as Bahur in 1834, and although he did not attend the lectures of the Landrabbiner, but those given by the Dayan, Samuel Kohn, of whom mention was made previously, he knew the position of the rabbi and his standing in the community during the first years of his office from personal observation. An uncle of mine, Immanuel Wiener, born 1816, who had the proud distinction of possessing a "Chower" diploma, issued by Moses Sofer, was a direct student of Trebitsch. He was even a member of a rebellious coterie which, dissatisfied with the explanation of a difficult Talmudic passage by the Landrabbiner, appealed to the young rabbi of Vienna, Lazar Horwitz. Another member of this rebellious class was Selig Loeb Hahn, who was my teacher in Talmud when I came to Nikolsburg in 1870 (Lazar Horwitz, Responsa No. 47). In 1892 I met the then already very aged Bernhard Weidenthal in Cleveland, a native of Bohemia, who treasured with great pride two diplomas issued to him, in German and in Hebrew respectively, by Nehemias Trebitsch. I may say right here that Weidenthal denied some of the statements that I had made in the "Deborah," according to my best recollection from the reports given to me in my youth. One of the faults that people found with Trebitsch was that he was too mercenary. Indeed, one ought to be careful in repeating such statements for various reasons. People are always prone to demand of the rabbi an idealism in money matters which they do not practice personally, and often personal prejudice in other respects colors these reports. The fact, however, remains that Trebitsch did not measure up to the ideals of his parishioners. The following story I remember distinctly, as my uncle, Immanuel Wiener, reported it to me. Rabbi Trebitsch met at a funeral one of the leading men of the congregation whom he had not seen for a long time. He expressed his astonishment, saying: "Reb Bezalel, why have you not been to my house for such a long time?" Bezalel answered: 'You know, Rabbi, it is on account of the Hoikar," which is an untranslatable pun on the first word of Proverbs 25, 17: "Let thy foot be seldom in thy neighbor's house," and on the Yiddish (German: Hoecker) for hunchback, by which Bezalel referred to the rabbi's wife, who was deformed. The ghetto enjoyed such clever puns, though we should consider them the height of rudeness.

Whether the story records an actual fact, or is merely an anecdote which my "Vetter" Mendel had heard while a Bahur, I cannot determine. As a piece of Kulturgeschichte, however, I wish to quote the fact that in olden times the awkward, impractical Bahur was usually the victim of the most difficult problems which the "Schatchen" had to solve. An especially undesirable maiden was termed "Bochurim goods." A little Jewish anecdote may not be out of place here. Somebody asked the question, Why is it that in former years the wives of the rabbis were so homely, and now they are not? The answer is, a foreman in a bakery, examining the cakes as they come out from the oven, finds one that is partly burned, or half baked, or misshapen, or for some other reason unsaleable. He puts it aside and says: "This is for my people." Thus the Almighty, creating a woman who is misshapen, puts her aside for the consumption of his own people. Therefore, as long as the rabbis were God's own people, they got the wife which nobody else would take. Now, however, since they have ceased to be "fromm," God does not honor them any more.

The greatest difficulty against which Trebitsch had to contend was the growing spirit of secularism. In regard to the general education of boys and girls, this could no more be helped. At least I do not remember having heard anything of an opposition by Nehemias Trebitsch to the Jewish school, opened in 1839, and I would have heard it if such had been the case, for during the first year of my schooling in Nikolsburg I lived in the house of Mayer Froeschels, who was one of the teachers of the school at the time when it was opened. The opposition to secularism was confined to rabbinical training. Prossnitz, where Rabbi Nehemias was officiating when called to Nikolsburg, elected such a secularist, Loew Schwab (1794-1857) as its rabbi. He was a pupil of Mordecai Benet, but like all the progressive young men of that age, had in an autodidactic way acquired secular education. Trebitsch could not antagonize him because he was not yet confirmed as Landesrabbiner, and Schwab possessed a rabbinic diploma, signed by his predecessor, and had officiated as rabbi in a Moravian congregation. It was different when, after Trebitsch had been recognized as Landesrabbiner, the congregation of Loschitz elected Abraham Neuda, 1812-1854, best known by his wife, Fanny Neuda (1819-1894), the author of a devotional for women, "Stunden der Andacht," which has gone through more than twenty editions, as its rabbi. Neuda, like his brother-in-law, Adolph Schmiedl, who died as rabbi of Vienna, November 7, 1913, at the age of ninety-three, Hirsch Beer Fassel (1802-1883), the father-in-law of Rabbi S. H. Sonnenschein, and the successor of Schwab as rabbi of Prossnitz, were progressives. Their greatest heresy, of course, was that they read German books, preached and wrote in German, though this was usually not free from Yiddishisms, and were in favor of what was then considered reform. To be sure these reforms were of a very mild character. Schwab, for instance, introduced the custom of holding wedding ceremonies in the synagogue instead of, as was formerly the custom, in the open air. Trebitsch implored in vain for his congregation to oppose the innovation. He opposed the election of Fassel, but he did not succeed with the government because he had previously issued a rabbinical diploma to the candidate whom he now opposed. In future, however, he would be more careful and, therefore, he antagonized Neuda with all his power. The rejected candidate and his congregation invoked the aid of the government, claiming that the Landesrabbiner was trying to check the intellectual progress of the Jews, which the government encouraged. Trebitsch probably denied this claim and gave as reason for his objection the insufficiency of the candidate's knowledge in theology. Thus the comical situation was created that the government ordered an examination to be held under official supervision, with a legal adviser of the government as presiding officer and a Catholic priest as member of the commission of which, besides the Landesrabbiner, two other rabbis formed part. This was the result of several years of litigation. The examination took place in 1841, and a year later, July 6, 1842, Nehemias Trebitsch died in his native city, Prague, while on his way to Karlsbad, in his sixty-third year. The congregation, which in 1829 had made such efforts to have the body of its beloved rabbi brought from Karlsbad for interment, did not make any effort in this case, though meantime railroad transportation would have made it much easier. This in itself shows the difference in popularity.

With the rabbi the system for which he stood had died. It took five years before a successor was elected, and this successor, Samson Raphael Hirsch, represented the ideas of secularism which Trebitsch had so bitterly antagonized. In his own family these tendencies also made themselves felt. I know only of one son of his, Seligman Trebitsch, who lived in Prague, and of whose existence I only learned lately through a notice by the ghetto novelist, Solomon Kohn (1825-1904), a relative of his. One daughter was married to Jacob Bruell (1812-1889). rabbi of Kojetein, who is a Hebrew author of modern type, and whose two sons, Nehemias (1843-1891), rabbi of Frankfurt am Main, and Adolph (1846-1908), were representatives of radical liberalism. Another daughter married Samson Kulke, rabbi in Kostel in Moravia, who died January 5, 1894, at the age of eighty-five. He is the father of the popular ghetto novelist, Eduart Kulke (1831-1897), who while glorifying the old ghetto virtues, had married out of the faith.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN IN CHICAGO.

The Central B'nai B'rith Council, representing the three Chicago lodges, has taken preliminary steps for the inauguration of a campaign for members and appointed a managing committee to take charge of the work. The plans contemplated are to follow closely those of last year, which resulted in an increase in membership of over one thousand. Teams of five members each, headed by a captain, have been selected, and a list of available material representing known members of the highest class had been prepared and these lists were distributed among the teams. Prior to this, a circular containing an appeal to join the Order was mailed to all those who had been selected as desirable to solicit for membership and the responses indicate that the result of last year will be equaled, if not surpassed.

During the first week of the campaign, more than 200 applications had been secured. The managing committee holds weekly meetings at which reports are received and plans for the campaign are discussed.

The class initiation will be held at the Hotel La Salle on Saturday evening, January 20, 1917. The Central B'nai B'rith Council will officiate. The President of the Order and a number of the members of the Executive Committee, as well as all the District Grand Lodge officers, are expected to honor the occasion with their presence. The principal address of that evening will be delivered by Brother Sigmund Livingston, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, and Chairman of the Anti-Defamation League. His subject will be "The Jew in Public Opinion." After the formal ceremonies will be over, refreshments and cigars will be served and a program containing musical, vocal and vaudeville numbers will be carried out.

RUMANIA'S JEWISH POPULATION

According to the latest statistics there are 115,308 Jews and 124,659 Jewesses in Rumania. This number constitutes about 3 per cent of the general population. In the opinion of the Jewish statistician, the late M. Isidore Loeb, the number of Jews in Rumania was much larger in 1876 but owing to persecution the Jews have suffered, there has been a diminution in the Jewish population of about 41 per cent in the course of the last forty years.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Oct. 17, 1916.

The High Festivals are now nearly concluded, and despite the war conditions, both the public and the private Sukkahs were as beautiful and as numerous as in the olden days. Every synagogue, of course, boasted its festive structure; and though there is much nursing to be done, much, too, of all manner of patriotic and charitable work, yet the gentle hands that adorned the Sukkahs of old found time this year to hang the apples and the grapes, and beautify the walls with curtains and emblems—to the delight of the children. Private booths, too, seemed to be as numerous as ever, and the firm that specializes in Sukkah building in London had many orders to execute. For it is a curious thing that the modern spirit of business enterprise has entered the realms of religious ceremonial. Our grandfathers built their own Sukkah; we are too busy with our avocations to have the leisure, and so, from the Chief Rabbi downwards, we have our booths built for us. The frail tents' covering, however, still gives opportunities for personal attention. There are not many Jewish farmers in England, but those that have estates of their own are generous enough with vegetation and shrubbery. Some sources of supply have become historic. Thus the Rothschild estates have been wont to furnish certain Sukkahs with the needful covering. One of our London brethren was able to obtain so much "green" from a friend in the country that another, hearing of the plentiful supply, came in person to add to his own stock which happened to be meagre. We verily believe that the common kinship through the Order must have facilitated the transaction; he that took was after all taking from a brother, and he that gave, as we know, gave willingly for the same reason.

No doubt it was the same in all the belligerent countries. No doubt they, as we, recalled on the Great Day of Atonement those who had given their lives for their country. No doubt with them also the synagogues were full of men in uniform who had received special leave for the Holy Days. In many a synagogue these vitisors were accorded special honors; they opened the Ark or carried the Scroll. In one place of worship we saw a soldier called up for Hagboh, and with him a sailor for Gelliloh.

* * *

Apart from the special atmosphere of the Festivals with their appeal for "one band to do Thy will" the train of thought suggested by the same religious procedure all over the world helped, above the din of war, to strengthen the consciousness of our common faith and of the super-tragedy of the Jew. Everywhere he is doing his fair share both at the front and at home, not unmindful all the time that grim necessity forces him to take up arms against his fellow-Jew. That is why the Jews' response to his country's call should be highly appraised. He makes it because he is a citizen, gladly fulfilling the citizen's duty, and this consideration must surely weigh when the time comes for the making of peace and the re-establishment of Europe.

When that time arrives the Jews who have fulfilled the citizen's supreme duty but who also possesses the citizen's rights must press the claims of those Jews who having no rights have yet fulfilled their duty. There are people who cry out against the alliance with Russia; people who might otherwise have a good deal of sympathy with the Allied cause. But facts are facts and have to be reckoned with. Like Jacob wrestling with his visitor, let the best be got out of them; let it be said, "I will not let thee go unless thou give me a blessing." Very many Jews in England hold this view. The changes that the war will bring cannot as yet be foreseen. Mere complaining and exhibitions of temper will not take anyone very far. In a time of crisis it is essential to maintain one's balance and strive to make the most of such opportunities as offer. Besides events in Russia have taken a promising turn. M. Protopopoff has become Minister of the Interior, and the Petrograd correspondent of the "Daily Chronicle" states that the emancipation of the Jews is part of his program. The pessimists, after all, can only base their feelings on past experiences. Every right-minded person in the world cannot but condemn Russia's and Rumania's treatment of their Jews. But what of the future? Even the pessimist may be wrong. And the Jews have always been optimists.

The English army in France now has two Jewish Brigadier-Generals, General John Monash, of Australia, was the first to have the honor conferred upon him, and General Seligman is the second. There is hardly any need to add that in the British army Jews freely obtain commissions and hold all ranks in accordance with merit. This will not be news to American readers, where similar conditions prevail, and where Jewish generals have not been unknown.

There is no need to expatiate on the stream of money that is flowing into the various funds for relieving distress, whether at home or of the victims of war abroad. It should be mentioned, however, to give an indication of the fact that it is continuing. The Belgian refugees established in Poland Street have become famous, and the organization of the place has won renown for its excellence. Cabinet ministers visit the building to see for themselves how splendidly Jews can organize; people interested in similar institutions come to learn. The Russian Relief Fund, too, is still in existence, and a fund to provide food for Jews interned in Ruhleben (near Berlin), has likewise been started. Yet home charities carry on, and in the general hospital collection Jewish synagogues come third. When it is remembered that Jews are numerically among the smallest denominations in London, the inwardness of this fact becomes apparent. The 1915 collection of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund yielded a total of £39,516 (say 160,000 dollars), to which the church of England contributed over £30,000 (say 120,000 dollars); the Congregationalists £1,894 (say 7,500 dollars); the Jews £1,594 (say 6,300 dollars); the Roman Catholics, who were sixth on the list, £781 (say 3,400 dollars).

A Jewish play is again on the boards in London. "Potash and Perlmutter" are continuing to amuse the London theatergoers with their experiences "in society". It has been said that laughter is the nearest road to sympathy. If this is true, the work of Mr. Augustus Yorke and Mr. Robert Leonard will contribute much to give the average non-Jew a sympathetic idea of the Jew as he is. With all his little ways, with his own native peculiarities, he is yet warm-hearted and human, intensely human. Certainly the play presents a most sympathetic study of the Jew, and the best of it is that the onlooker laughs all the time. A play of this kind is sometimes better than a dozen sermons. Certainly it is necessary besides sermons, and meetings and resolutions. Both Mr. Leonard and Mr. Yorke, as well as the author himself, are American Jews, and American Jewry has reason to be proud of what they are doing for Jewry as a whole.

In the world of new novels, too, the Jews have received attention once again. The writer calls himself Charles Brumm, clearly a pseudonym, and his book bears the title "Ahasuerus". The main theme of the story is the legend of the wandering Jew. Round this the author has woven a plot which is placed in Manchester, and branches off to Germany. Despite the somewhat melodramatic coloring, the story holds the reader, more especially as the writer has skilfully interspersed in it actual events that occurred just before the outbreak of war in August, 1914. Charles Brumm seems to know much about Jews. We rather suspect that he is himself of Jewish origin, though his connection with Jews must date a good while back. He, too, depicts the good qualities of the Jew, and the contrast between the Jewish and some of the non-Jewish characters speaks for itself. He says some acute things about Germany and her Jews; he appears to know both quite well. An interesting note is prominently placed on the outside cover, viz., "The author intends to devote any profits derived from the publication to the benefit of the Belgian Refugees."

There has been no change in the situation of the Russian Jews of military age in this country. Voluntarily recruiting is still in progress, but it is impossible to say as yet whether the number of recruits is large or small. We shall hear in due course. Possibly compulsory enlistment will come later on: and in that case it is intended that exactly the same treatment shall be meted out to the Jews who are Russian subjects as to English citizens generally. No doubt a tribunal or tribunals will be set up for adjudicating on cases where appeals are lodged for exemption, and it is safe to say that Jews will be members of the appeal boards. Still if the voluntary enlistment is specially fruitful, compulsion may not be necessary. It is too soon as yet to speak definitely.

In the meantime the East End Jews do not forget their poets, and when the occasion arises celebrate their silver jubilee. Bialick was the hero recently, and Israel Zangwill presided over a gathering which paid its tribute to the great Hebrew writer. One sentence from Zangwill's speech is worth recording. He said that great Russian writers like Gorky and Andreiiev had an unbounded admiration for Bialick, and that they were rather ashamed to think that a people which produced such a man should be treated as the Jews were treated in Russia. Appropos of Russia, is it not splendid testimony to the free spirit of England that despite the war and the war conditions, a preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral—the Bishop of Clemsford—in calling the church back to God, should have remarked that his warning was needful seeing "that in one way or another all nations had forgotten God—Russia by her treatment of the Jews, Belgium by the Congo atrocities!"

The London Lodge will this month hold its first meeting after the summer recess, and one of its first duties will be to express its sympathy with the President, Brother Rowson, on the death of his brother in action in France. It also hopes to welcome Brother Lieutenant Maurice Myers, who is recovering from illness contracted while on active service. The lodge hopes in due course to help the establishment of sister lodges in Birmingham, Liverpool and other provincial centers, though progress is necessarily slow. Yet it is good that these aims have been definitely adopted. There is no reason why a Grand Lodge should not be formed in this country before long. Much work will have to be done in the community; and the Order hopes to be able to take no small share in its direction and completion.

YOUNG MEN'S HEBREW AND KINDRED ASSOCIATIONS.

The second triennial convention of the Council of Young Men's Hebrew and Kindred Associations will be held in New York City on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, November 10, 11 and 12, 1916. The program includes conferences on "Americanization Work," "Religious Work," "Army and Navy Work," "Vocational Guidance," "Boys' Work," "Girls' and Women's Work" and "Communal Aspects of Jewish Work." A number of prominent social workers will participate in these conferences, among them Jacob Billikopf, Col. Harry Cutler, Dr. M. Rosenau, Dr. C. S. Bernheimer, A. H. Kaminsky, Felix M. Warburg and Rabbi Aaron Eiseman.

The conferences above referred to are for the purpose of giving practical help to the young men and women interested in community and association activities.

CONVENTION OF THE ROUMANIAN JEWS.

The national convention of Roumanian Jews of America will be held in Philadelphia on December 31, 1916. This has been decided upon at a meeting held in New York recently by representatives of the American League of Roumanian Jews, the Federation of Roumanian Jews of Philadelphia. The committee was appointed to draft a manifesto to be issued to all the Roumanian Jews of America calling on them to organize and to be represented by delegates at the convention.

This activity on the part of the Roumanian Jews is in response to an appeal of Dr. Adolph Stern, of Buchar[illegible] president of the Union of Native Jews of Roumania, and also president of the District Grand Lodge No. 9 of the B'nai B'rith. The Union of Native Jews is the only political organization the Jews have in Roumania which, aided by the B'nai B'rith, is fighting for civil and political emancipation.

ARMY MAN MUST REVISE BOOK ASSAILING JEWS.

Captain Levy Eltinge of the United States army was directed by the War Department to expunge from a book recently written by him statments regarding Jews as "highly objectionable."

THE RUSSIAN-AMERICAN TREATY.

In answer to an inquiry by the editor of the American Hebrew whether the State Department is considering the negotiation of a new treaty with Russia, the following reply was received:

"Department of State,
"Washington, October 13, 1916.
"Mr. Herman Bernstein,
Editor the American Hebrew,
"44 East Twenty-third Street, New York City.

"Sir: The Department acknowledges receipt of your letter of October 5, enclosing a copy of an article. stated to have been published in The Day, relative to the question of the conclusion of a commercial treaty between the United States and Russia. You inquire whether this government would consider the making of a new commercial treaty which would discriminate against American citizens upon religious grounds.

"In reply you are informed that the Department is not at the present time negotiating a commercial treaty with Russia, and does not propose to consider the negotiation of a treaty which would discriminate against American citizens.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant, for the Secretary of State,
(Signed) "Alvey A. Adee,
"Second Assistant Secretary."

CARING FOR THE IMMIGRANT.

The question of the unemployed immigrant has become one of this country's greatest problems. Too many of us fail to take sufficient interest to inquire if the customary haphazard method of receiving these strangers here fits into the best possible place in our national economy.

We are the only nation that with painless and hence cruel hospitality receives a heterogeneous throng of hopeful venturers. The ogre in the castle of a fairy tale showed like impartiality, and I am not sure but that he evidenced more humanity in eating some of his guests than we do in leaving them to slow starvation.

A national plan of distribution is plainly the only guarantee of economical assimilation of those who are allowed to come. Our present policy sems to be towards systematic restriction. But a careful plan of distribution should not be thought of as a substitute for, but rather a corollary of a wise selection in admission.

The immigrant dreads to leave the colonies in these eastern cities, where they are spared the pain of learning a new language and new manners. Thus the alien population of the city grows, a labor surplus forms, the sweat shop feeds fungus-like upon human wretchedness, men search anxiously for work, but find it not, or, if successful, crowd out others who take up the same despairing role.

We have come to realize that the adopted son of the United States cannot become a citizen of the republic merely through the miracle of a document and seal, but that consecrated and painstaking effort must be expended with a generous goal before he can really enter into the fellowship of what has been a nation of idealism.

We cannot expect him to study seriously how best to serve his country until he has some assurance of the continued existence of himself and family.

The government of no civilized country of the Eastern world has been less ready than our own to interest itself in the economic welfare of his able-bodied citizens.

It will be practicable some day, I think, for the government to assume complete charge of the immigrant, say, two days after his arrival, giving him trustworthy information as to the opportunity of this land of his adoption.

Such extension of our present efforts in the immigrant's behalf would be effective tactics in the war on poverty this age has undertaken.

PASS RESOLUTION DEMANDING RIGHTS FOR JEWS.

The adoption of a resolution demanding through the British Government, at the Peace Tribunal at the end of the war, full civic and political rights for the Jews in those countries where they do not enjoy these rights, was one of the final and important acts of the 32nd Convention of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress, held in Toronto.

QUARTERLY MEETING OF JEWISH ORPHAN ASYLUM, CLEVELAND

The first quarterly meeting of the forty-ninth year of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, Cleveland, O., was held at the institution on Sunday, October 15, in lieu of the regular date, October 8.

In the absence of President Louis Levi, the vice-president, Judge Philip Stein, occupied the chair. Director Samuel Trost of Cincinnati, brought personal greetings from President Louis Levi, who was ill, stating that he is making progress and hopes to be able to attend to his official duties in a short time.

A report of an informal conference held in Chicago, Sunday, October 17th, was read and it was ordered that it be made a part of this record, as follows:

Special Meeting at Chicago, September 17, 1916.

An informal conference of the trustees and directors of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, was held at Hotel LaSalle, Chicago, on above date, Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund of Chicago, acting as secretary.

Mr. Philip Stein presided and called attention to the death of Mr. Martin A. Marks, trustee and treasurer of the corporation as well as treasurer of the General Fund, and to the serious illness of Mr. Louis S. Levi, President of the Institution. He informed the meeting that the purpose of the gathering was first, to consider what steps, if any, be taken in view of the illness of President and to consider the filling of the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Marks.

Mr. Emil Joseph, as chairman of the Local Board submitted correspondence regarding the condition of President Levi, from which it appears that he was temporarily incapacitated from attending to the duties connected with his office.

Mr. Jacob Furth offered the following resolutions:

"The Trustees and Directors of the Jewish Orphan Asylum assembled in informal conference, having been informed of the illness of Mr. Louis S. Levi, President of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, tender to him and to his family their deep sympathy and express the hope for his speedy restoration to health, and that until such time as Mr. Levi shall again be enabled to perform his duties as President of the Orphan Asylum, Mr. Philip Stein as vice-president of the Institution, shall act in lieu of the president."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

The question of filling the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Marks was then taken up for consideration. Mr. Jacob Furth suggested that before any action is taken regarding the filling of the vacancy that the question of dividing the treasuryship of the Orphan Asylum by electing a treasurer for the sinking fund and a separate treasurer for the general fund, be discussed. This was done, and it was uanimously agreed that the conference is of the opinion that two treasurers be elected.

The chairman then called for suggestions as to names to fill the existing vacancy in the trusteeship. Mr. Jacob Furth recommended for trustee and treasurer of the sinking fund, Mr. Fred Lazarus of Columbus, Ohio, and the recommendation was unanimously agreed upon.

Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund suggested for the office of general fund treasurer, Mr. Alfred A. Benesch, and this recommendation was also unanimously agreed upon.

The attention of the conference was called to the fact that at the last meeting of the Board of Trustees a committee was appointed to consider and submit recommendation as to the advisability of designating some bank or financial institution as a depository for the funds of the Orphan Asylum, and that in view of the death of Mr. Marks, who was a member of that Committee, it was suggested that it be recommended that the committee be discharged and that a new committee consisting of Mr. Emil Joseph and the two treasurers to be elected, be appointed to perform the duty entrusted to the former committee. The conference unanimously agreed upon this suggestion.

In view of the fact that until the election of a treasurer of the sinking fund is held that contingency may arise whereby access to the securities of the sinking fund may be found imperative, the conference unanimously resolved that the local board be authorized to take whatever steps they will deem necessary to meet such contingency.

The conference further resolved to recommend that a committee of trustees be selected to examine and check up all the securities, bonds, investments of whatever nature, to the credit of the sinking fund as well as those pertaining to the general fund.

The educational features of the institution as well as those pertaining to the moral and social uplift of the inmates, was extensively discussed by Messrs. Furth and Joseph.

There being no further business before the conference, the same upon motion, adjourned.

Action on Report.

The report was then acted upon seriatim.

1. It was carried that the vice-president take charge of the affairs of the Orphan Asylum and perform the duties of the president until such time as the president is again able to resume his official duties.

2. It was carried that the bond for the Treasurer of the General Fund be fixed at $50,000, and that the sufficiency of the bond, both as to its form and financial responsibility, be submitted to a committee. The chair appointed: Philip Stein, Emil Joseph.

3. Upon motion it was ordered that a committee be appointed to consider and submit recommendations as to the advisability of designating a bank or financial institution as a depository for the securities, bonds, investments and property of the General Fund of the Orphan Asylum. The chair appointed: Emil Joseph, Alfred A. Benesch, Fred Lazarus.

4. It was ordered that a committee of three be appointed to examine and check up all the securities, bonds, investments and property of whatever nature of the General Fund. The chair appointed, Fred Lazarus, S. S. Kiser, A. B. Seelenfreund.

Mr. Sidney Pritz presented resolutions in memory of the late Mr. Martin A. Marks, which were adopted by a rising vote and ordered spread upon a special page of the records.

Mr. Aaron Waldheim presented resolutions in memory of the late Mr. Chas. Stix of St. Louis, which were adopted by a rising vote and ordered spread upon a special page of the records.

The Chairman appointed Messrs. Sidney Pritz, Samuel Trost, and Herbert R. Bloch a Committee to draft resolutions in memory of the late Mr. Alex Strauss of Cincinnati, and also to recommend his successor.

It was carried that a Committee be appointed to recommend a permanent memorial in memory of the late Mr. Martin A. Marks and to report at the next Quarterly Meeting.

Mr. Abram Stearn, Chairman of the Nominating Committee to fill the vacancy on the Board of Directors caused by the transfer of the late Mr. Martin A. Marks from the Board of Directors to that of Trustee, submitted the name of Mr. N. L. Dauby. Upon motion, Mr. N. L. Dauby was elected to fill the vacancy.

The report of the Nominating Committee to recommend a successor to the late Charles Stix of St. Louis, nominated Ernest W. Stix, who was duly elected to fill the vacancy.

The report of the Committee to make recommendations as to the advisability of permitting children who are approaching the age at which they are graduated to visit a surviving parent for a period of two weeks was read, and after several amendments had been considered and acted upon agreed to, permitting the children to so visit surviving parents.

The Chairman appointed Mr. Jacob Furth to fill the vacancy now existing in the Chairmanship of the Committee on Dual Existence of the Orphan Asylum.

Applications for the admission of children were then considered and it was moved, seconded and unanimously carried that section 15 of the General By-Laws be amended by striking out the word "Grand" therein contained so that when amended, section 15 shall read as follows:

"The Board of Trustees and Directors shall elect from their body at each annual meeting a President, Vice-President and Treasurer of the General Fund, provided such officer elected is a member of a Lodge of the I. O. B. B. They shall also elect at the same time a Recording and a Financial Secretary who need not necessarily be members of the Board, but if not elected from their body, shall have no vote in the Board.

The Chair referred to the large cash balances on deposit at present in the current bank accounts and it was ordered that the Finance Committee and officers having charge of the Funds ascertain in what cities in the two Districts, funds can be invested at a satisfactory rate and with safety.

It was carried that a Committee of three be appointed to consider the advisability of erecting a Branch Asylum in District No. 6 before the erection of a new Asylum in District No. 2. The chair appointed the following Committee: Aaron Waldheim. Ben Altheimer, W. B. Woolner.

Attention was called to the splendid services that Mr. Simon Wolf rendered to the Orphan Asylum, and to the fact that he will celebrate his 80th birthday on October 28th. It was ordered that a Committee of three be appointed to prepare appropriate resolutions and to present them to Mr. Wolf. The chair appointed Ben Altheimer, Alfred A. Benesch, Bernard Ginsberg.

The Chair requested Mr. Altheimer to deliver the resolutions in person to Mr. Wolf.

There being no further business, the meeting, on motion, adjourned.

JOINT MEETING OF HILLEL AND FLATBUSH LODGES, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

At a joint meeting of Hillel and Flatbush Lodges, held at Savoy Hall, Brooklyn, at which a class of candidates was initiated, and at which great enthusiasm prevailed, there occurred an event which is unusually noteworthy. It transformed the meeting, raised it to a high plane; it brought back the achievements of a glorious past to the recollection of the older members and to the grateful appreciation of the younger ones.

Maurice P. Davidson, District Vice-President, was in the chair. He noticed at about 10 o'clock in the evening, an old man, who was slowly struggling into his overcoat and very quietly preparing to take his departure. All evening he had sat, an interested and silent spectator. Recognizing in him the venerable Morris Adler, President of District No. 1, who in his day had labored valiantly and successfully in the cause of Judaism and who performed deeds which have not been forgotten, he announced to the brethren that there was in their midst a man whose modesty was only equaled by his greatness, whose achievements still lived in the memory of many of the living and whose deeds would outlast the lives of all present. He described a man who had labored zealously for the advancement of humanity, the upbuilding of Brooklyn, who had served by appointment of four Mayors on the Disciplinary Training Committee, who had served for many years as a member of the Board of Directors of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum of Brooklyn, and who, as President of District No. 1, had contributed greatly to the upbuilding of the Order.

While these remarks were being made, this old and venerable man, realizing that they were directed to him, paused and slowly took off his overcoat and resumed his seat. A committee, consisting of Brother I. B. Schmidt, past president of Hillel Lodge, and a member of the Board of Governors of the Home, and Brother Albert Moritz, past president of Flatbush Lodge, thereupon escorted Past Grand President Morris Adler to the platform. With dignified and venerable mien, but with the firm stride of a young man, and with a face shining with pleasure and appreciation of the honor conferred upon him, he stood on the platform, facing the enthusiastic applause of the brethren. His address, reminiscent and prophetic will long be remembered by every man in the room. He recounted the past glories of the Order and showed the firm foundation on which it rests and upon which will be built the superstructure of continued glorious achievement. Although seventy-seven years of age, he spoke with the fire of youth, with the vigor of manhood, and there flowed from him, as it were a spirit of benignity and love for his fellowmen which brought all into direct communion with him. At the conclusion, he was thanked by a rising vote and elected to honorary membership of Flatbush Lodge.

HUNTINGTON, WEST VIRGINIA.

Huntington Lodge No. 795, of Huntington, West Virginia, held an unusually well attended meeting on November 3, 1916. Out of a total membership of thirty-three, thirty were present in answer to the roll call. Reports from different chairmen of sub-committees showed much activity and the progress recorded bespeaks for the lodge a bright future. During the meeting, two candidates were initiated.

The Lodge unanimously resolved and authorized its officers to secure a permanent location for the Lodge. The headquarters are to include club rooms, a meeting hall and entertainment suite, rest rooms, lounging rooms, reception rooms and an elaborate library.

An entertainment committee also recommended that during the season, dances and socials be held under the auspices of the Lodge. Recommendations were unanimously adopted.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATION BY WINNIPEG LODGE.

October 22, 1916, will, beyond any doubt, be recorded as red letter day in the annals of Winnipeg Lodge, I. O. B. B. The occasion of our commemoration of B'naí B'rith Day of this year will be remembered by every member who attended any part of our program. Besides the presence of Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, who at this time took occasion to launch the social service work of the order in our city, our lodge was fortunate in obtaining the attendance of Bro. George Papermaster, president of Dacotah Lodge of Grand Forks, N. D., to head our degree team in administering the obligations to a class of twenty candidates. In rendering the president's part of the initiation ceremony, Brother Papermaster so impressed every brother in attendance that we feel confident that the true object of our ceremonial has been accomplished and additional inspiration in the performance of our obligations has been brought to our work, for we can truthfully say that never in the history of our lodge had such an impressive initiation been put forth.

After the initiation ceremony Dr. Coffee in chosen words expounded to the newly initiated brothers the practical objects of our order's work. Then turning to the lodge at large Dr. Coffee addressed us on the nature and scope of the social service work of our Order. He pointed out the origin and causes of the evils with which his department is seeking to remedy. The life of our immigrant co-religionists, their ignorance of the language and customs of the new environment, which fact creates an opening for the cunning and artful despoiler of innocent young girls in our largely populated Jewish centers to exploit his designs. The abnormal relationship existing between the matured parent who arrived in America and his young boy or girl 10 to 12 years of age, the latter who by reason of economical conditions of the family soon feels that he is financially independent of the former ends in a complete severance of the family ties, and after a short time the child in its formation period of life, lacking the advice and counsel of the matured mind, enters upon an easy money course by means of which he aligns himself with the most degrading and immoral influences of the cities. "The purpose of the Big Brother movement," Dr. Coffee said, "is to apply the preventative rather than the curative remedy to our evils. We must clean our own house. The Jewish white slaver should be punished to the fullest extent of the law, and this should be done by Jews. The Big Brother movement aims to provide the young Jewish urchin of the cities with a brother who shall give the proper aid, advice and counsel to the 'Little Brother.' Those influences which tend to develop a strong character are provided. To accomplish this work it is necessary that a systematic means of finding out wherein the evils lie and the enlistment of all forces in the communities, such as the Juvenile Court offices, the superintendents of our penal institutions and reformatories must be obtained that the actual facts of individual cases may be ascertained. The means to apply the remedy to the evil, the source through which this intended co-operation shall go forth is the I. O. B. B. and to every community the lodge should stand ready to do its share and likewise, each member in every lodge."

Following Dr. Coffee's address, Brother Papermaster was called upon. Brother Papermaster expressed the deepest satisfaction with the work of the Winnipeg Lodge. He related instances where through his personal efforts the Winnipeg Lodge has rendered some very helpful assistance to despondent Jewish people whose relatives live in Grand Forks. Brother Papermaster closed his remarks by calling attention to the duties which devolve upon our people in the future. The past sacrifices of our patriarchs, the might and power of our ancient kings and the teachings of our prophets and sages, though they served the purpose of their existence in their day and time and the record of their accomplishment will serve as guiding stars wherever we shall be, yet our duty today should not be lost sight of. The future of Israel is dependent upon the proficiency of those who shall be called upon to constitute the Israel of the future, and these are our children. To their needs must we address ourselves with firm resolve never to relinquish our hold. To use the words of the Psalmist: "He (the Lord) from the mouths of babes and sucklings founded He His might—His might is our might—Judaism."

A. J. ABRAMOVICH.

CHICAGO B'NAI B'RITH.

On Monday evening, October 16, 1916, David Fish Lodge No. 130, held one of its best meetings in the history of the lodge. The meeting was attended by over 100 members and among those present were members of the Executive Committee of the Order, officers and past presidents of the District Grand Lodge and a number of visiting brethren from sister lodges.

A special feature of the meeting was an address by Judge Joseph B. David, who spoke on the subject "The Jew Now and After the War." In his address Judge David depicted the sad condition of the Jews in belligerent lands abroad and emphasied the necessity of unity among the Jewish people so that when the Peace Treaty is to be considered by the warring nations, that a united demand be made by the Jews of the world for full social and religious rights to their co-religionists in all lands. Judge David's address was followed by short remarks on the part of Judge Philip Stein, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, Dr. H. I. Davis, President of the District and Edward Sonnenschein, First Vice-President thereof.

A number of applications for membership were presented and initiation was held by the new Degree Team, the principal parts of which were filled by Brothers B. Stenge and H. Okin, who acquitted themselves most creditably and made the initiatory ceremonies a real treat to those who were present.

Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 will celebrate its 50th anniversary on November 28, 1916, with a banquet at the Hotel Ia Salle.

Ramah Lodge No. 33 held an unusually well attended meeting on the evening of October 9. In response to the appeal issued to members, more than 100 applications for membership were presented. A special feature of the evening was the address by Brother Leon Zolotkoff on the subject "The Jewish Problems of the Day."

The members of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 were addressed at a meeting of the Lodge held on October 24th, by Judge Harry E. Dolan on the subject "The Boy Problem." The speaker illustrated his address with stereopticon views.

The Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago, at its monthly meeting held on November 6th, 1916, appropriated the sum of $500 for the pursuit of social service work under the auspices of the Chicago lodges. The Special Committee on social service has secured the services of Mr. Edward Lashman, who will act as the Secretary of the Committee and will have direct charge of the "Big Brother Movement." The committee in charge of the membership campaign reported progress, and on the date of the meeting, nearly 300 new applications were reported.

HAR SINAI LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

An interesting meeting of Har Sinai Lodge, No. 8, was held on Thursday evening, Oct. 12, 1916.

Reports of the Publicity and Prison Aid Committees showed considerable progress made by both, particularly the Prison Aid Committee, which has extended its efforts in the care of Jewish prisoners at the Holmesburg Prison. A number of lodges have expressed their approval of this work and have made contributions to help carry it on.

The Publicity Committee arranged an entertainment consisting of first showings of Paramount motion pictures. The meeting was well attended and the entertainment much appreciated. The committee in charge of this work announced that there will be a novel feature at each meeting for the purpose of entertaining the members and making the meetings interesting.

MISSOURI LODGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

At the regular meeting of Missouri Lodge, No. 22, of St. Louis, Mo., held on Oct. 15, 1916, the sixtieth anniversary of the initiation of Bro. Isaac Fuld as a member of the lodge and the Order was fittingly celebrated in the presence of Brother Fuld.

An original interesting travelogue was given by Bro. Karl M. Vetsburg, president of the District Grand Lodge, on the wonders of Colorado and the Rockies, including over one hundred views, showing in detail the work of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives in Denver, Colo. This occasion was the first official visit of Brother Vetsburg to Missouri Lodge since his election as president of the District Grand Lodge.

After the conclusion of the travelogue, a business meeting was held which was followed by a luncheon. As a special order of business, final action was taken in the matter of an appropriation of the sum of $500 to the Y. M. H. A.

"OPEN HOUSE" PARTY BY COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

For five hours on the evening of October 18, members of Covenant lodge, Duluth, Minn., their families and friends were entertained at the October "open house" party in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel. These "open house" parties are staged once a month.

The program included a chicken supper served by the Temple Aid society; addresses by Dr. K. J. Hoke, the new superintendent of schools; Bernard Silberstein, commissioner of safety; Dr. Maurice Lefkovits, rabbi of Temple Emanuel, and A. B. Kapplin, president of Covenant lodge, and vaudeville numbers by Bert Levy and Miss Anna Chandler, headliners at the Orpheum theater this week; Herbert Hoey, a member of "The Red Fox Trot" company, and amateur talent from among the membership of the lodge and their friends. The program was arranged by President Kapplin.

Succoth Service.

At 6:30 o'clock Dr. Lefkovits conducted a short Succoth service, bringing the festival to a close, after which the women of the Temple Aid society served a chicken dinner to eighty persons in the vestry rooms.

Following the dinner, Commissioner Silberstein was introduced by the lodge president as the toastmaster for the evening and Dr. Hoke, the lodge's guest of honor, then gave an address on "The Relations of the Home to the School." He spoke at length on the history of education in this country, the developments of teaching in the public schools and his plans for Duluth. He was very well received, and at the close of his address met the lodge members and their families.

Dr. Lefkovits gave a short talk, welcoming Dr. Hoke in behalf of the lodge members and the Jews of Duluth. He spoke on the ancient educational systems of the Jews, showing how the customs of teaching trades and making education free and compulsory, established in the days when the Hebrew race was in power, are now being adopted.

Levy Tells Stories.

Mr. Levy, who is a member of the B'nai B'rith, was compelled to leave for the theater immediately after the dinner, but he returned at the conclusion of his act and entertained the members with a number of stories and his experiences in traveling throughout the world.

Miss Chandler and her accompanist, David Dreyer, also were guests of the lodge at dinner. Miss Chandler rendered several songs before leaving for the theater and at the conclusion of her act also returned to the temple where she again entertained with songs and stories. She was presented with a huge bouquet of roses, a gift of the lodge members. The actors were taken to and from the theater in automobiles.

On Mr. Levy's return the six young women, who gave a cabaret number at the Succoth entertainment last Sunday, sang several new songs, with parodies on members of the lodge. The sextet was composed of Misses Abrahamson, Mae Klein, Sadie Gingold, Rae Hammell, Alice Wetzler and Rosalind Bondy. Miss Esther Gomberg accompanied at the piano. Mrs. Leon S. Selig and Len Traubman repeated their duet number and John Altman entertained with clog dancing. Mr. Levy then told stories until Miss Chandler returned from the theater.

The six young women repeated several of their songs when Miss Chandler returned, she having expressed a desire to hear them, after which she entertained a second time. Herbert Hoey of "The Fox Trot" company, sang two solos.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

On Monday evening, Oct. 23, 1916, the members of this Lodge and their friends were entertained by Bro. Rabbi Harry Levi, who delivered a very instructive lecture with stereopticon views, on "The Jews of Many Lands."

Though the meeting rooms of the Lodge in Odd Fellows Hall on Warren St., Roxbury, are very spacious, they were crowded by an interested and enthusiastic audience, showing that the lecture was very well received and deeply appreciated.

During the business meeting of the Lodge earlier in the evening, the numerous applications for membership, and the reports of officers to the various committees showed the Lodge to be in a very prosperous condition, and progressing rapidly. Many novel and entertaining features for the near future are promised by the Intellectual advancement and Entertainment Committees.

The Lodge was also honored by a visit of the President of the District, Judge A. K. Cohen, who enlightened the members on the various activities of the Order throughout the District.

CLEVELAND B'NAI B'RITH.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 held a rousing "Get-together" meeting on Thursday, October 19th. It was attended by 350 members, many of whom had not been present at a session of the lodge for months. The occasion was the awarding of prizes to the successful contestants in the bowling tournament, which had been participated in by several teams.

In addition to the musical program and the monologues, there were addresses by prominent Clevelanders interested in amateur and professional athletics.

Prof. Emile L. Strauss, Vice-President of the Lodge, and Chairman of the Propaganda Committee, is preparing for the "fall drive." He refuses to divulge the kind of "masked batteries" or "caterpillars" that will be used, or to disclose the particular "sector" in which he will operate. He is confident, however, that before January 1st, 1917, many of our "enemies" will be enrolled in our camp.

The fortnightly Sunday evening dances continue their success and popularity. Even the older members of the lodge have fallen victims to the "one-step."

The B'nai B'rith Martin A. Marx Memorial Library Fund is still growing. Up to date, $300 has been secured.

Mr. Woldman, Chairman of the Committee on Clubs of the Junior Circle, I. O. B. B., is forming a Glee Club.

An oratorical contest was given by the Junior Circle of B'nai B'rith at the Club Building, on October 29th. The contest was open to all members and the winner was presented with a gold medal designated as the "Mahler" prize, given by Mr. Mahler. The judges were men prominent in Jewish affairs of Cleveland. Mr. Max Meicl, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, was Chairman of the evening. Beside the contest there were piano and violin selections and the evening's entertainment was concluded with dancing. The program was as follows:

Temporary chairman—Mr. N. H. Freiberger, chairman entertainment committee.

Chairman of the evening—Mr. Max Meisel.

Violin solo.........Mr. Manuel Steil
Piano accompanist, Mr. Biel.

Oratorical Contest

"The Jew's Prestige in the United States" ....Mr. Moe C. Nuddleman

Naming the winner by the judges.
Presentation of the gold medal....... .... Mr. Mahler
Dancing in the ballroom—Outside orchestra.

The first meeting of the Fall term of the Junior Circle I. O. B. B. was held on Sunday, October 22nd. The members enjoyed an address by Judge Levine, entitled "The Soul of an Organization."

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

On the morning of Shemini Azereth, October 18th, Doctor Rudolph I. Coffee, in charge of the Social Service Department of our Order, occupied the pulpit of Rabbi C. David Matt, and preached on "The Problem of Poverty," commenting on the agricultural aspect of the holiday week just closing. The sermon emphasized the great possibilities for Jews who settle on farm lands in America. This is all the more desirable. as those Jewish children, who dwell in the crowded sections of our large cities suffer such serious handicaps. What the B'nai B'rith is doing along Social Service lines, was indicated during the address.

On Friday evening, Doctor Coffee occupied the pulpit of Dr. S. N. Deinard and spoke on "Judaism and Social Service." It is no solution of the Jewish problem in America, to point to certain individuals who possess great wealth, and expect them to keep down race prejudice. This feeling of prejudice is best overcome by the fine lives and the noble aspirations of the Jewish people in this country. Our interest in social welfare, our efforts to overcome poverty and our co-operation in progressive movements, best show that the Jew is inspired by his religion. Judaism lays very slight emphasis on belief, but greatly emphasizes action and daily conduct.

The following day the Minneapolis Social Service Committee held a meeting, which Doctor Coffee attended, Brother Susskind presiding. The local situation was carefully analyzed and the special work which the Social Service Committee of the Order can undertake, was definitely mapped out. This committee should be in a position to do excellent work.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The ten B'nai B'rith lodges of the city have awakened to the need of increasing their membership and of strengthening the order in that city. While the present membership is nearly 2,000 the field is large enough to make it possible for the lodges to double their membership.

On October 1st, Mr. Henry Newburgh and Mrs. Newburgh, returned home after an absence of nearly a month. They visited Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Vancouver, and many other cities in the Northwest. Everywhere the President of the Grand Lodge and his wife were enthusiastically received. "In every community I found B'nai B'rith affairs in a prosperous condition and now I am well satisfied with the results of the trip," said Grand President Newburgh. "While membership gains in some localities are more than in others, I found conditions generally prosperous and feel that the lodges are working well and in the right direction."

Through efforts of the Social Service Bureau of the B'nai B'rith of the District, prison authorities in every city on the Pacific coast were asked to serve a special dinner for their Jewish prisoners to break their fast after Yom Kippur. Brother Harry K. Wolff, District Chairman of Social Service, issued instructions to all the members of the committee throughout the District and many authorities cheerfully and gladly complied with the request.

A unique event in local B'nai B'rith circles was held on Wednesday, November 1st, when Ophir Lodge entertained all the Past Grand Presidents who are residing in and about San Francisco. A team composed of Past Grand Presidents headed by Brother Edward I. Wolfe, exemplified the ritual to a class of candidates and an informal supper followed in the banquet room. Dr. A. E. Cerf was Chairman of the Committee arranging this function and was assisted by a number of members active in B'nai B'rith work.

B'nai B'rith Day, the annual holiday observed by members of the Order throughout the United States, was celebrated in San Francisco Oct. 15, with a kiddies' festival at the Golden Gate Park stadium.

Under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty, hundreds of children—boys and girls of members, children of the Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum and of other Jewish institutions—were entertained.

The day's program included games, athletics and other attractions. At noon lunches were given to the little ones and toys distributed. Prizes were awarded in the athletic contests.

The youngsters romped and played until dusk brought an end to their day of merriment.

Members of the ladies 'auxiliary assisted in caring for the children and in carrying out the day's events.

Henry Newburgh, president of District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., will pay his official visit to the ten San Francisco lodges Wednesday evening, November 15, in B'nai B'rith hall. The event is being awaited with much interest.

Grand President Newburgh will tell the local members in detail the work accomplished during the year and will point out the opportunities for future activity.

Arrangements have been begun by the Committee of Fifty of the ten local B'nai B'rith lodges for a grand ball to be given at the Hotel St. Francis Wednesday evening, November 15. The affair will be strictly formal and the committee in charge is exerting every effort to excel all previous social affairs ever given by the Committee of Fifty.

Past Grand President Harry K. Wolff is chairman of the arrangements committee. Among his assistants are Richard E. Gutstadt, second grand vice-president; Milton Meyer, grand trustee; Henry Zekind and Dr. Alvin E. Cerf.

At a recent conference of the Presidents and Secretaries of the Lodges, steps were taken to infuse greater interest in the lodges. Among other things, a consolidation of the lodges was considered.

The Columbia, Modin and Ophir Auxiliaries of the San Francisco lodges held their annual dance on Sunday evening, October 22nd, 1916.

GRAND FORKS, NORTH DAKOTA.

Tuesday evening, October 24th, on returning from Winnipeg, Can., Doctor Coffee stopped off in Grand Forks and delivered an address on the work of the Order. Thanks to Brother M. Rabinovitch, the spacious meeting room in the City Hall had been procured for the occasion and Brother George Papermaster presided. Although called on very short notice, the meeting was attended by a large number of Jewish folks residing in the city. The speaker brought a message of the many lines of activity which the B'nai B'rith is conducting and aroused considerable enthusiasm, while outlining the scope of the Social Service Department, and the Anti-Defamation League.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA.

During his recent visit to the Northwest. Doctor Rudolph I. Coffee, Social Service Director, stopped off in that city and injected new life into the local Social Service Committee.

On Wednesday, October 17th, a special meeting of the committee was called and very well attended, at which plans were made to care for Jewish inmates in penal and correctional institutions throughout the state. It was agreed to work along the lines of the Big Brother Movement and pay special attention to the educational needs of the immigrants. That same night (Shemini Azereth), Doctor Coffee occupied the pulpit of Dr. L. I. Rypins, speaking on "Is God Cruel?" The theme developed that man, disobeying natural laws, brings disaster upon himself. God is not cruel, man is cruel to himself. Most catastrophes may be explained as man-caused disasters. The economic difficulties of our Jewish brethren in this land can be greatly lightened through proper guidance and friendly help. We can also fight and lessen much of the race prejudice from which Jews in America suffer. The sermon outlined the distinct service which the B'nai B'rith is rendering. The following night (Simchas Torah), Doctor Coffee occupied the pulpit of Dr. David Kahn, speaking on "Israel in America." Judaism is a religion of deed, not creed and the entire ritual aims to intensify the thought of helping our brother and neighbor. The Jews of America have done splendid work along philanthoropic lines. In this field, the great machinery of the B'nai B'rith will be used to render constructive Social Service work.

The following day, in company with Dr. Myron Sherper, a visit was paid to the State Penitentiary at Stillwater and in the afternoon to the Boys' Detention Farm. The Social Service Committee will keep in close touch with these institutions, co-operating with the officials to advance the interests of Jewish inmates.

On Wednesday evening, October 25th, an open meeting was held in the lodge room, at which Brother Milton Firestone presided. Doctor Coffee chose as his subject, "America and the Jew," pointing out that we have here unexampled opportunities for assisting our Jewish people. He emphasized the great work which the Anti-Defamation League and the Social Service Department will play in this development. Following the lecture, there was a very interesting inter change of opinion between members of the Order and the speaker. Brother Gustavus Loevinger, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District. moved a vote of thanks to the speaker as the meeting adjourned.

JERICHO LODGE, PITTSBURGH.

Jericho Lodge No. 44 will stage the largest musical effort recently undertaken in Pittsburgh in the Schenley Theatre on the evening of November 16th. The operetta, "The Pilot of Tadousac," is from the pen of Florence Goldsmith, of Connellsville, an unusually talented writer of musical comedy.

A cast of sixty young men and women form the nucleus of this production, which is being conducted under the efficient leadership of Redmond Flood, special professor of dramatic art at the Carnegie Institute of Technology; Ella Wertheimer, dancing instructor, and Ralph Lewando, musical conductor. Rehearsals are being conducted with regularity and they evidence a decidedly finished production.

ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LODGE, PITTSBURGH.

The first of a series of entertainments by the Abraham Lippman Lodge was given on Wednesday evening, October 25th, which proved a decided success. The program consisted of musical and vocal numbers and a recitation by Mrs. [illegible], which was one of the features of the evening. Brother Leonard S. [illegible] delivered an address on "Social Service," outlining the "Big Brother Movement" of the Order. Refreshments were served at the close of the entertainment.

A card party will be held at the lodge rooms on November 23rd for members and their ladies only. Prizes will be given and an enjoyable evening is assured.

Arrangements are being completed for a full dress affair to be given by the lodge on January 16th, at the William Penn Hotel.

IRON RANGE LODGE, CHISHOLM, MINN.

On Sunday, Oct. 22, 1916, Iron Range Lodge No. 793 of Chisholm, Minn., entertained two Grand Lodge officers in the persons of Brothers Chas. D. Oreckovsky of Duluth, Minn., member of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, and Gustavus Loevinger of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District.

The visitors arriving in the morning were met at the depot by a committee and were later entertained at dinner at the home of one of the members. In the afternoon a meeting of Iron Range Lodge was held, at which a class of seventeen candidates was initiated. The meeting was attended by fully fifty members of the lodge coming from Chisholm, Eveleth and Virginia.

After the initiatory ceremonies Bro. Loevinger made a short talk on the subject, "Is it Worth While?" He emphasized briefly that in his opinion there was something worth while for which the Jewish people as such continue their separate identity and that the B'nai B'rith was one of the most efficient means to this end.

In the evening there was a banquet, attended by about fifty young men, at which numerous toasts were delivered. Brother Loevinger, after the toastmaster read the preamble to the constitution, addressed the audience on the subject, "Are We Sincere?" He said that the preamble is the secret of the Order, this being in reply to a question from the audience, "What is the secret of the B'nai B'rith?" The speaker then proceeded to prove by referring to the hundred and odd institutions the Order maintains; the relief work done by it through the Educational League, Immigration work, Social Service work, Anti-Defamation League; that the Order is sincere and is endeavoring to carry out as far as possible the preamble and the provisions contained therein.

The visiting Grand Lodge officers in reporting their visit expressed their appreciation of the splendid treatment accorded them and paid a tribute to the splendid examples of manhood and womanhood they met during their stay in Chisholm.

BRADDOCK, PA.

On Thursday evening, November 2nd, some twenty-five of the faithful hied themselves surreptitiously to the new domicile of our esteemed Brother, Past President Jonas Adler, who now resides at Edgewood, Pa., and with music and provender, deliberately took possession of the premises; imagine the astonishment of our good Brother, upon witnessing, unannounced, such an invasion into his sacred retreat amid the hills of Western Pennsylvania; in the course of time, he managed to adjust himself to the situation, and everything passed off lovely; amid speeches and eats, all had a royal time, and are anxiously waiting to see who shall be the next victim, for this sort of thing is a monthly occurrence, and tends to bind us closer to each other; it is the best we have discovered for bringing the brothers into closer contact, and in this and other methods we increase the attendance at our regular meetings. Try it, you who are at a loss to know how to get together; cold tongue, corned beef, cheese and rye bread, together with something to moisten one, are splendid instruments for bringing the people of our faith in close communion.

Wishing you success, we sign ourselves,
PROPAGANDA COMMITTEE.

NEW CASTLE LODGE, NEW CASTLE, PA.

The largest class of candidates that was ever initiated at the meeting of New Castle Lodge No. 609, took place at a well attended meeting held on Sunday, November 5, 1916. Prominent officers of the Grand Lodge were present and had charge of the initiation ceremony. Among them were Brothers Isador Sobel of Erie, Past President of the District Grand Lodge; Mark Alexander, member of the General Committee; Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, and Marcos Feuchtwanger, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge.

Visiting delegations from sister lodges were present from the cities of Butler, Ellwood City, Sharon and Beaver Falls. At the close of the meeting, a buffet lunch was served to the members and visiting guests and at which numerous short talks on the work of the Order were indulged in.

ST. LOUIS B'NAI B'RITH.

Mr. Sigmund Livingston of Bloomington, Illinois, president of the Anti-Defamation League, addressed a large audience composed of the members of B'nai B'rith Lodges of St. Louis, and of their friends and guests on Sunday evening, October 1st, 1916, at the United Hebrew Temple. The subject of his address was "The Jew in Public Opinion." The speaker was introduced by Brother A. B. Frey, of St. Louis, who acted as Chairman of the evening for the B'nai B'rith Lodges of St. Louis. Brother Frey called the attention of the audience to the splendid work done by the Anti-Defamation League and of the distinguished part which Brother Livingston has played in this movement.

In his lecture, Mr. Livingston traced the organization and growth of the League, then pointed out the chief activities of the League. He called attention to the important fields of activity in which the League has worked, among which are motion pictures, magazines, the daily press, permanent literature and the stage. The speaker gave concrete illustrations of the results accomplished by the League and of the necessity of constant vigilance.

There was also an excellent musical program consisting of two organ solos, a violin solo and two vocal solos.

RIMMON LODGE, RICHMOND, VA.

At the meeting of Rimmon Lodge held on October 15, 1916, the Social Service Committee (Herbert T. Ezekiel. Chairman) reported that prior to the holidays, the four Jewish inmates of the Virginia State Penitentiary were visited, that a special basket was sent to them in order to make Rosh Hashonah, dietarily speaking, different from other days, that the superintendent gave the prisoners permission to rest from their labor on the Day of Atonement, and that the Committee's activities had done much to brighten the lot of the men. The Chairman showed the lodge a testimonial of appreciation from the inmates—a highly creditable piece of artistic work which was done with an ordinary pen.

The lodge appropriated a sum for buying tools, to be used by one of its members who will teach manual training during the winter at the Neighborhood Home.

A Committee of ten was appointed to make arrangements for the meeting of the Grand Lodge, District Number 5, which will be held in Richmond next January.

The Lodge regrets deeply the departure of Brother Jos. L. Levy from Baltimore. This gentleman is one of the Order's staunchest supporters. He was for a long time Grand Secretary of the District. One of his sons is President and another Secretary of Rimmon Lodge, an unusual situation.

45TH ANNIVERSARY OF ASARIAH LODGE, NEW YORK

Asariah Lodge No. 164 celebrated its Forty-fifth Anniversary Sunday, Oct. 23 at Harlem Palace, 27 West 115th St., by an elaborate banquet and dance. The toasts were as follows:

Words of Welcome—Bro. Edward Rosenfeld, Gov. of the Home, toastmaster and Chairman of Com. on Arrangements.

Grace—Bro. District Secretry Bernard M. Kaplan.

"Our Lodge"—Bro. Dr. Leo Schnepp, President.

"Our District"—Hon. Abraham K. Cohen, President of the District.

"Our Order"—Bro. Charles Hartman, Member of the Executive Committee.

"Our Future"—Bro. Past-President Joseph H. Ullman.

Remarks—Bro. Sol Sulzberger, Treasurer of the District.

"Our Home"—Bro. Myron Sulzberger, President of the Home.

Remarks—Bro. Henry Meyers, Gov. of the Home.

Remarks—Bro. Henry Gutenstein, Gov. of the Home.

Remarks—Bro. William B. Koller, Gov. of the Home.

"The Ladies"—Bro. Isidor Simon.

In the prayer on the occasion God's blessing was invoked "on the President of the Order, Bro. Adolf Kraus, the President of the District, Bro. A. K. Cohen, our beloved Order, the American people, all Israel and all humanity." The speeches were of a very happy nature, and the entire affair was most enjoyable. The brothers in charge deserve great credit for the true B'nai B'rith spirit in which this anniversary was celebrated.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND, ORE.

During a recent visit of Mr. Hershfield, representing the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of New York, he was a guest of honor at an impromptu luncheon given by the two B'nai B'rith lodges of Portland. At this meeting Mr. Hershfield told about the destitute circumstances of our co-religionists in Europe and as a result of his appeal the members of the B'nai B'rith present pledged themselves to raise funds for continuing the present relief work.

In order to stimulate attendance at the local synagogues, the Synagogue Committee of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 arranged a special program for Friday, October 27, 1916, at the Ahavai Sholom Synagogue. There was a sermon by Hon. D. Solis Cohen, as well as special music. The Lodge intends to visit all the synagogues of the city during the winter and members of the B'nai B'rith and their families are urged to attend.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by the lodges of the city on Sunday afternoon, October 15, 1916, with a "Kiddies' Day."

More than 500 Jewish children participated. The exercises included addresses by Rabbi Jonah B. Wise and First Grand Vice-President David N. Mosessohn, who spoke of the unity of Americanism and Judaism in B'nai B'rithism. Talented Jewish young people participating in the program were: Piano selection by Beatrice Klapper, recitation by Minerva Holzman, a violin solo by Sylvia Weinstein, recitation by Corinne Buck and instrumental trio by Zohn brothers. Following the program the children each received a box of candy and a silk American flag, which were handed out by the committee. The local B'nai B'rith lodges were the hosts of the affair, which will long be remembered by both the kiddies and the grown-ups. Dr. M. M. Bettman, district deputy, presided.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314, held a most interesting meeting on October 24, 1916. Five new members were initiated and the applications of seven were presented. After the business session, a joint social session was held with the Daughters of the Covenant. Mrs. Lola G. Baldwin of the Woman's Protective Department of the Police Department of the city, gave an interesting talk on the work of her department and Judge J. P. Cavanaugh addressed those present on experience he has had on the bench. At the conclusion of the evening's program the ladies served refreshments.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF CHANANIAH LODGE, N. Y.

A celebration with impressiveness and dignity took place Sunday, Oct 29th, at the Savigny, 229 Lenox avenue, when Chananiah Lodge No. 165 celebrated its 45th anniversary. First Vice-President of the District, Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, Second Vice-President of the District, Bro. Maurice P. Davidson, the Treasurer of the District, Bro. Sol. Sulzberger, District Secretary Bro. Bernard M. Kaplan, represented the Grand Lodge on the occasion, Bro. Henry Meyers, one of the Governors of the Home at Yonkers, representing the Board of Governors. The speeches by the Grand Officers were very appropriate to the occasion. So were also the remarks at the festive board by the following brothers: S. Gallinger, Albert Weiss, Emanuel Stern, Joseph Kraus, Moses Oppenheimer. Bro. Emanuel Stern, who is "the orator" of the lodge, presented to Bro. Moses Oppenheimer a silver handled cane in recognition of the brothers worthy services. Bro. Albert Weiss acted as toastmaster. In the language of one of the distinguished guests, the brothers and their ladies will long remember this "feast of reason and flow of soul." One of the most gracious acts of Chananiah Lodge on the occasion was the entertainment of some of the old people of our Home at Yonkers, who were especially invited to be present.

BRADDOCK LODGE, BRADDOCK, PA.

Braddock Lodge No. 516 celebrated its fifteenth anniversary on Sunday evening, October 22nd, at Carnegie Hall, Braddock.

Brother Jos. W. Salus, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, delivered a stirring message appertaining to the mission of the Order, which was both instructive and entertaining.

A large number of members of lodges adjacent to the city, as well as those of the Pittsburgh District, were present. An exceptionally fine musical program was carried out.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Kansas City Lodge No. 184, held an uuusually well attended meeting in the vestry rooms of the Temple on Monday evening, October 9. The feature of the evening was the address by Brother J. L. Lorie, Past President of the District Grand Lodge. He spoke on the subject "The B'nai B'rith, Its Origin, Worth and Future." He held the close attention of his audience numbering in the hundreds. In his address he showed clearly how the B'nai B'rith steered its ship in the careful course, avoiding entanglements and ever keeping in mind its main object, to preserve the universality of the Order. He explained the reason why the Order has not espoused Zionism and yet, not being opposed to it; how the Order endeavored to harmonize the differences between the advocate of Congress and Conference. He called the attention to the fact that the Order is at all times prepared by its Emergency Relief Fund to render quick relief wherever the cry of help shall be sounded. He recited the accomplishments of the Anti-Defamation League, of its work in eliminating scurrilous reference to Jews and of its plan of education to eliminate prejudice and ignorance of the Jewish people.

Much applause followed his address. Most of the members expressed themselves delighted of having had an education in B'nai B'rith ideals and B'nai B'rith work.

LEON SCHWARTZ LODGE, TALLADEGA, ALA.

In this small town out of nineteen possibilities, the Lodge has a membership of every one and besides there are five members from the neighboring community of Sylacauga. Although this Lodge is but fifteen months old, it has established a place for itself in the local community. The secretary of the Lodge is volunteering to help a number of immigrants to learn English, and begin a nucleus of a night school under the auspices of this Lodge. The secretary has started a Sabbath school for the children, and fifteen of these youngsters are now getting the history and principles of our religion. Last summer this Lodge had a joint meeting with the Gadsden and Anniston Lodges and had a notable gathering.

Brother Oberdorfer was the orator of the occasion, and the Lieutenant Governor of the State also made an address. It was a very successful meeting, and inspired every one with enthusiasm. The secretary has been working with Gadsden officials to try to get another meeting there in the near future.

YONKERS, NEW YORK.

Bro. Henry Meyers, Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, arranged a very interesting Thanksgiving Day program, to be held at the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Yonkers. All the brothers of the Metropolitan district have been invited. The orator on the occasion will be the First Vice-President of the District, Brother Joseph Rosenzweig. There will also be addresses by the President of the Board, Bro. Myron Sulzberger. The opening prayer will be delivered by the Dean of the Board, Bro. Mo. Minzesheimer and the closing prayer by the District Secretary, Bro. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan. The musical program will be in charge of Bro. Rev. Simon Schlagor of Temple Emanuel, assisted by the able choir of Temple Emanuel. An interesting feature of the program will be a piano solo by the well-known young artist, Miss Blanche L. Kaplan. Bro. Henry Meyers will preside over the service and deliver the introductory address.

HAR SINAI LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

An interesting meeting of the Har Sinai Lodge No. 8 has been arranged for Thursday, November 9. At this meeting a course of lectures on social service will be inaugurated. Prominent speakers have been asked and consented to address the members. Rabbi Max D. Klein, of the Congregation Adath Jeshurun, will be the speaker, and it has been arranged to have the Honorable Raymond MacNellie, Judge of the Juvenile Branch of the Municipal Court, address the members at the December meeting. A luncheon has been arranged to follow the meeting at which general discussion of the subject will be had. The secretary of the lodge has sent out invitations to the members of all other B'nai B'rith Lodges to attend this meeting.

MISSOURI LODGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

More than 350 members attended the meeting of Missouri Lodge No. 22, in St. Louis, on Sunday evening, October 15. Brother Karl M. Vetsburg, President of D. G. L. No. 2, delivered an exceedingly interesting lecture on the Denver Consumptive Hospital, illustrated with many views of the hospital. The lecture was embellished with views and descriptions of the scenic beauties of Colorado and other western states.

Another feature of the meeting was the presentation of a gold headed cane to Bro. Isaac Fuld on the occasion of the 60th anniversary of his membership in Missouri Lodge. Bro. Fuld became a member of Missouri Lodge on October 16, 1856. He is still active in his membership, rarely missing a meeting, and the Lodge hopes to be able to celebrate the 75th anniversary of his membership.

So many features were arranged for that meeting that it proved one of the most interesting and instructive meetings of the year.

A business meeting was held after the address and at its conclusion, lunch was served and a social hour was spent.

The Lodge took final action upon the resolution to donate the sum of $500 to the Union Men's Hebrew Association.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT TULSA, OKLA.

On Sunday, Oct. 29, 1916, Tulsa Lodge was instituted at Tulsa, Okla., with a charter membership of thirty-four. The meeting which was most enthusiastic and well attended, was held in the vestry rooms of the Synagogue.

Bro. Louis Cohen, of Fort Smith, Ark., member of the General Committee of D. G. L. No. 7, acted as installing officer and presided over the ceremonies. He was assisted by Bros. H. L. Cohen of Drumright, Okla., past president of Fort Smith Lodge of Fort Smith, Ark.; Bloom, of Muskogee Lodge, and Louis Feenberg, of Fort Smith Lodge.

After the formal institution of the lodge and initiation of candidates, the election of officers was held with the following result:

Emil Offenbacher, President.
J. Beren, Vice-President.
Alfred Clark, Secretary.
M. G. Rubin, Treasurer.

Rabbi M. Teller was honored with the appointment of Monitor.

Much credit is due to Bros. Louis Cohen and Dave Feenberg for the successful organization of this lodge.

MAGIC CITY LODGE, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Magic City Lodge. No. 725, I. O. B. B., though just a little over three years old, has determined to cast aside the atmosphere of "infancy" and begin life of "youth"—not old age—hustle and struggle for progress, and let the local community know that within its midst is a live organization greatly interested in the general welfare of the Jewish people. As soon as one name on the membership register is, for one or another reason withdrawn, two new names must appear.

In line with that new motto a special membership committee consisting of Brother I. Urdong, I. Copeland, M. Shapiro, J. Weinstein, H. Swedlow, F. A. Abelson and Chas. A. Lass, were charged with the duty of getting new members. The result is that eighteen new applitions had been signed for the last week and many more coming.

The Social Service Committee has recently done splendid work in helping the local Jewish butchers and grocers keep up with the local sanitation laws. Credit is especially due to Mrs. L. Goldman and Mrs. Chas. A. Lass, two good women with noble Jewish hearts, who assisted in the splendid progress of the Social Service Committee.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., in carrying out a more constructive program this year has provided an interesting lecture for every meeting. Joseph Levenson, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of District No. 1, addressed the meeting of October 8th on "The Future of the B'nai B'rith." He emphasized particularly the need of young men of enlightment and capability to take up the leadership in the work of the Order. Dr. Louis H. Levy of that city delivered a very instructive lecture on "Eugenics and Sex Hygiene" at the meeting of October 22nd.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT CHARLESTON, W. VA.

Charleston Lodge No. 788 was instituted on Sunday, October 15, 1916, at Charleston, W. Va., by a delegation representing District Grand Lodge No. 3, consisting of Brothers Marcus Feuchtwanger of New Castle, Pa., First Vice-President Isidor Sobel of Erie, Pa., Past President Leon B. Stein of Wheeling, W. Va., member of the General Committee, and Edward Hemple of Pittsburg, member of the Propaganda Committee of the district Grand Lodge.

The Lodge was organized with 35 members and additional 30 applications were secured at the time of its institution. The meeting was very enthusiastic and indications are that the new Lodge will be one of the active Lodges of the District.

Mr. Phil May was chosen President and Rabbi I. Bettan monitor of the new Lodge, and all the officers are much interested in the work and success of the Lodge.

The ceremonies took place in the Elks Club Room and the initiatory service was conducted by Brother Isidore Soble who gave a forceful exposition of the aims and objects of the Order. He was followed by Brothers Feuchtwanger, Stein and Hemple, who related their experiences in connection with the work of the Order, also dwelling upon the importance of the community of Charleston affiliating itself with the Order. The closing address was made by Rabbi Bettan who delivered an inspiring address upon his own conception of the B'nai B'rith.

Charleston Lodge was organized by Brothers Edward Hemple and Richard Rauh.

LINCOLN CITY LODGE, LINCOLN, NEBR.

On Sunday, October 15, 1916, a committee of Lincoln City Lodge No. 377, consisting of Rabbi Jacob Singer, Morris Friend and Victor Friend, proceeded to Hastings and Grand Island, Nebr., in which cities a class of thirteen members were initiated for Lincoln City Lodge and a number of new applications were secured. Owing to inclement weather a number of prospective members were prevented from coming from Grand Island and other places in the vicinity.

The occasion was a unique one in a Jewish sense for so small a community. The meeting was held in the afternoon and at its conclusion a dinner was served in which more than sixty men and women participated. Rabbi Singer addressed the audience at the dinner. Later a dance concluded the festivities. Much interest was manifested in the work of the Order and the committee feel confident that a religious school and other Jewish activities will ensue there and in the neighboring towns as a result of their visit.

ISAAC LODGE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

At a meeting of Isaac Lodge, No. 87, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, at which more than 125 members were in attendance, addresses were made on Jewish charitable work in Milwaukee.

J. H. Scidelmann, secretary of the lodge, urged co-operation of all Milwaukee charitable societies, stating that the scope of each overlapped that of the others and that more could be accomplished by co-operation. It was suggested that committees from each organization be appointed to provide homes for Jewish children who are arraigned in juvenile court. Co-operation in the Big Brother movement in Milwaukee was advocated. Other speakers for their respective organizations were Mrs. Max Polacheck, president Council of Jewish Women; Miss Stella Rosenbaum, Abraham Lincoln House; Mrs. I. Greenberg, president Ladies' Sanitary Benevolent Society; Mrs. M. S. Halfaer, president Social Workers' Society.

UNIONTOWN LODGE, UNIONTOWN, PA.

The committee representing District Grand Lodge No. 3 at the institution of Charleston Lodge, at Charleston, W. Va., paid an official visit to Uniontown Lodge No. 471 of Uniontown, Pa., on October 16, 1916. The meeting was one of the most successful the lodge ever had. Brother Isidore Sobel of Erie, Pa., addressed the public meeting under the auspices of the lodge at the Standard Club. He told of the work done by the Order which is represented in many parts of the world. He emphasized the altruistic work of the District through the orphanage at Erie. Brother Sobel was followed by Brother Edward Hemple of Pittsburgh, Pa., chairman of propaganda of the District Grand Lodge, who informed the audience of the propaganda efforts made within the district to stimulate the Order. More than 100 representatives of the Jewish community and their ladies attended the meeting and a large number of applications for membership in the lodge were received.

The committee who arranged for the meeting consisted of Brothers Rosenbaum, Sterns and Lapunsky.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Elaborate preparations are being made for a joint class initiation to be held Monday evening, November 27th, in honor of the president of the District, Judge A. K. Cohen, who will be the guest of the Metropolitan lodges. A number of distinguished speakers will address the joint meeting. Among the invited guests will be Brother Henry Morgenthau, ex-Ambassador to Turkey, and Brother Rev. Dr. Samuel Schulman.

New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1, which is the oldest lodge in the Order, at a recent meeting amended its by-laws, doing away with the sick benefit feature, offering "as the highest inducement for members the opportunity to help in the great work of the Order." Brother Meyer L. Victorious was re-nominated as the president of the lodge for the second term.

A joint meeting of Maccabee and Washington Lodges was held at the headquarters on Thursday evening, October 26th. Mr. Monroe M. Goldstein, secretary and counsel of the Nation Desertion Bureau, delivered a very interesting address on "The Spouse's Hegira."

Brother Joseph H. Ullman of New Haven visited Jehuda Halevi Lodge Sunday. October 8th, and addressed a meeting of that lodge. Jehuda Halevi Lodge initiated a number of new brothers at its last meeting.

Brother Joseph Levenson, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, visited New Haven, where he addressed a large meeting of Horeb Lodge.

Bro. Archibald M. Hillman of Worcester, Mass., was appointed member of the General Committee in place of Brother I. Irving Lipsitch, who moved to San Francisco, where he accepted the position of General Director of the Federated Charities.

Manhattan Lodge No. 156, held a very interesting meeting Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, "to consider provision for adequate celebrating the Lodge's fiftieth anniversary with a fitting program and an enlarged membership."

Bro. Wm. H. Silk, President of Akiba Lodge No. 173, has arranged a program of current topics of Jewish and American interest to be discussed at its meetings.

The Ladies Auxiliary of Edward Everett Lodge, of which Mrs. Emily K. Duschnes is President, is arranging a Bible Study Class to meet once a week.

The Board of Directresses of the Ladies' Auxiliary Society of the Home for Aged and Infirm at Yonkers, met Tuesday, October 10, at the headquarters, and mapped out the work for the coming year. These ladies visit the Home from time to time, treat the old people at the Home to special dinners, and furnish entertainments for the recreation of the old people. This very worthy society has been co-operating with the Board of Governors and has been of great service to the Home. The following are the officers of that society: Mrs. Edward Loeb, President; Mrs. David Wile, Vice-President; Mrs. George Bruck, Treasurer; Mrs. Emanuel Marx, Secretary. At its last meeting Mrs. Max Danziger was appointed a Directress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mrs. Simon May.

Among some of the distinguished members who recently joined the Order in New York City is the well known author and child's specialist, Dr. Herman Sheffield.

Israel Lodge No. 796, of Portland, Me., will shortly give an illustrated lecture on "Palestine." The committee in charge of the arrangements consists of the President of the Lodge, Bro. Dr. Elias Caplan, and Vice-President Max L. Pinansky. The General Committee received a letter from Israel Lodge stating that the work of the District Secretary, Bro. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, during the high holidays at Portland, was of benefit not only to the Lodge but to the general community.

President of the Board of Aldermen of New Haven, Conn., Brother Samuel Campner of Horeb Lodge, member of the General Committee, has been the acting mayor of New Haven for some time. Brother Campner is a young man of 29, and is making a splendid record in his official capacity as the acting chief executive of the city.

On Tuesday, November 7, the Headquarters Committee, of which Brother Herman Asher is Chairman, assisted by a number of brothers on the Intellectual Advancement Committee, arranged with the Western Union Telegraph Company to have a special wire at the headquarters, announcing election returns. Several other features were arranged to make the program of the evening very enjoyable. A very interesting program of musical numbers and classic dances was followed by an informal dance. The affair was for the entertainment of the members and their families and was largely attended. Miss Irene Stolofsky, a brilliant young violinist of Chicago, added much to the pleasure of the evening by some delightful selections.

Brothers Herman Asher and W. H. Silk have organized a minstrel show, which will be in charge of Mr. Adolph Newberger.

Jordan Lodge gave an informal dance in honor of the Ladies' Auxiliary of which Mrs. Henry W. Pollock is President, on Thursday, Nov. 2, at the B'nai B'rith Headquarters. The affair was very enjoyable as are all the affairs given by Jordan Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Cincinnati Lodge No. 4 of Cincinnati, Ohio, held a membership campaign during the week commencing October 22, which was known as "B'nai B'rith Week." The campaign was conducted on a plan similar to that of last year, which resulted in bringing in more than 400 new members to the Lodge.

Mr. Bernard Friedberg of Cincinnati, Ohio, has been elected President of the Covenant Endowment Board of District Grand Lodge, to succeed the late Martin A. Marks of Cleveland, Ohio.

In connection with the membership campaign of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of St. Louis, arrangements are being made to have the class initiation take place on Sunday, November 26, on which occasion also, the annual observance of B'nai B'rith Day will be held. One of the principal speakers of the occasion will be Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Social Service Director of the Order.

At a meeting of Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., held on Oct. 8. 1916, Bro. Morton M. David addressed the lodge on the subject, "The Jewish Criminal."

Bro. Arthur F. Friedman was elected Trustee of the lodge to fill the vacancy caused by the death of his father, the late Meyer Friedman.

The membership campaign of the lodge which was to have been conducted last month has been postponed to the week of Oct. 22. Vice-President Bro. Simon J. Heller, chairman of the Propaganda Committee, has arranged for a vigorous campaign.

The St. Louis Alumni of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, held a meeting recently at which election of officers was held and plans for the celebration of Dr. S. Wolfenstein's seventy-fifth birthday were made. Dr. Wolfenstein was formerly superintendent of the Orphan Asylum.

Under the auspices of the Committee on Social Service of District No. 2, services at the Ohio Penitentiary were held on the recent Jewish holidays. Rosh Hashonah was observed with a service and sermon by Rabbi I. B. Jashenoski. In his lecture he explained the thorough meaning of the holy day and its object lesson. Speaking, reading and music were important details of the program.

Yom Kippur services were in charge of Mr. H. Bernstein, of Columbus, who after the reading of the scriptures, made a short address on the subject, "Man's Reconciliation with God." At the close of the day a luncheon was given to all the Jewish prisoners by Brother Myers. [illegible] was observed with services in charge of Rabbi Jashenoski, who gave an interesting talk on the meaning of [illegible]

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Under the auspices of the Social Service Committee of District No. 3, Mr. Edward Hemple of Pittsburgh, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 3, officiated for the holy days at the Huntingdon State Reformatory at Huntingdon, Pa.

At a meeting of the Entertainment Committee of the Associated B'nai B'rith Lodges of Pittsburgh, held on October 10, 1916, a detailed report of the picnic held under the joint auspices of the four lodges was made. Although the affair was never planned with a view to making money, but was simply a social undertaking, sufficient moneys were realized to enable the committee to appropriate the sum of $100 for the benefit of the war sufferers, and a check for that amount was ordered sent to the Pittsburgh Jewish Relief Committee.

The religious school at New Castle, Pa., under the auspices of New Castle Lodge No. 609 of the Order, is conducting its sessions for the year with a very encouraging enrollment. Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, is in charge of the school.

As January 1917 will mark the first year of the existence of Lincoln Lodge No. 780, of Philadelphia, the Lodge decided to hold the first annual banquet on the date of the anniversary and to invite the presence of the entire Executive Committee of the District.

Charleston Lodge, No. 788, was instituted at Charleston, W. Va., on Oct. 15, 1916, with sixty-four charter members.

The Committee of the Grand Lodge officers consisting of Bros. M. Feuchtwanger, Isidor Sobel, Leon B. Stein and Edward Hempel, delegated to institute the new lodge at Charleston, W. V., also paid an official visit to Huntington Lodge, No. 795, at Huntington, W. Va. The visit was very much appreciated by members of the lodge. The visiting officers addressed the lodge on the work of the Order. The meeting which was a very successful one was held in Elks Club Rooms and material results have been accomplished by the visit of the Grand Lodge officers.

On their return home from Charleston, W. Va., where a new lodge was insituated Oct. 15, 1916, Bro. Isidore Sobel and Edward Hempel stopped over in the city of Connellsville and secured forty names to the application for charter for a lodge to be instituted in that city.

The first of a series of monthly entertainments under the auspices of Abraham Lippman Lodge, No. 672, of Pittsburgh, Pa., was held on Wednesday, Oct. 25, for the benefit of its members, as well as the members of the sister lodges. An excellent program was carried out and refreshments were served.

The Propaganda Committee of Abraham Lippman Lodge, No. 672, of Pittsburgh, announces having appointed a sub-committee of fifty to carry out the plans for an elaborate winter affair under the auspices of the lodge, to be held at the William Pitt Hotel on the evening of Jan. 16, 1917.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

A minstrel and vaudeville show, under the auspices of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, of Los Angeles, Cal., took place the first Sunday in November. The event proved to be the biggest and most enjoyable affair of the season.

Fresno Lodge No. 723, of Fresno, Cal., held its first dancing party of the season on October 25, 1916, which was attended by more than 100 members and their ladies.

On October 24, 1916, Oakland Lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Cal., held a whist tournament in its club rooms. Although the tournament proved an interesting part of the evening's entertainment, a feature of the affair was a musical and vaudeville program arranged by Mr. Jos. Kletz, Chairman of the Committee.

At a joint meeting of the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Bellingham, Wash., and its auxiliary, held on October 8, the proposition to admit ladies to the auxiliary whether or not they had relatives in the Lodge was voted on by the members.

Elaborate plans are being perfected by the Entertainment Committee of Emma Lazarus Auxiliary of Seattle, towards making the annual ball more successful than those given previously. The affair will take place on November 29.

Oakland Lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Cal., is making arrangements for the celebration of the forty-first anniversary of its institution on November 28, 1916, in its club rooms. The officers of the Lodge jointly with the Arrangement Committee are making an effort to make this event a memorable one in the history of the Lodge. The membership campaign under the auspices of a special committee headed by Brother Lionel Wachs, promises that the Lodge will reach the 250 mark in its membership before the close of the year.

At a meeting of the Lodge held on October 31, 1916, Mr. Walter Brandt addressed a large number of members present on the subject, "Lloyd's Insurance Problems."

Columbia Auxiliary Daughters of the Covenant held a literary night during the month of October, presenting an interesting program before a large gathering of members and friends.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

The annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 5 will be held in the city of Richmond, Va., in January, 1917. A committee of Rimmon Lodge No. 68 has been appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

Rimmon Lodge No. 68, of Richmond, Va., held a well attended meeting on Sunday, October 15, at which a number of new members were elected. The Lodge appropriated the sum to purchase tools for the teaching of manual training at the Neighborhood Home. The Social Service Committee of the Lodge cooperates in the work of this Home.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council representing the Milwaukee lodges, a membership campaign has been inaugurated and the prospects are bright for a large increase in the Milwaukee B'nai B'rith.

Brother Solomon Levitan, of Madison, Wis., Sergeant-at-Arms of District Grand Lodge No. 6, who four years ago lead the Republican ticket for presidential elector in his state, is this year a member of the State Central Committee.

Mr. Edward Lichtig of Bay City, Mich., is spending some time in Flint, Mich., at the request of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, for the purpose of securing a class of new members for the Lodge. As a result of his efforts, committees were appointed to canvas the city and their efforts, together with that of Brother Lichtig's, netted so far thirty-one applications. Brother Lichtig proposes to secure at least fifty new candidates, and the entire class to be initiated towards the end of the month and for which occasion a number of Grand Lodge officers have been invited to attend, and, no doubt, will be present.

Illinois Lodge No. 794, of East St. Louis, Ill., held a well attended meeting on Tuesday, Oct. 17. A class of three candidates were initiated and several applications for membership were presented, which will be acted upon at the next meeting.

Mt. Royal Lodge No. 729, of Montreal, Canada, held a well attended meeting on Sunday, Oct. 22, 1916. Aside from the regular order of business a discussion was held by the members on some features of social service work which the lodge is arranging. The discussion developed much enthusiasm and new life was infused in the old standing committees. The officers of the lodge, particularly Bro. J. Levinson, its president, are earnestly striving to secure favorable results in the matter of bringing about a hearty and steady incease, not only in the numerical strength of the lodge, but also in its activities.

On Oct. 25, 1916, Brothers Alfred F. Mecklenburger, member of the General Committee, and H. M. Seligman, District Deputy of the State of Illinois, paid an official visit to Racine Lodge, No. 697, of Racine, Wis., for the purpose of initiating candidates. A class of four was initiated by the visiting Grand Lodge officers.

Brother Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, of Des Moines, Iowa, member of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, visited Ottumwa, Iowa, and laid the foundation for the institution of a B'nai B'rith Lodge in that city. He has arranged to return to that city on Nov. 13th, and address a meeting of those interested in the formation of the Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Under the auspices of Memphis Lodge No. 35, of Memphis, Tenn., a meeting was called by Rabbis W. H. Fineshriber, B. W. Hirsh and G. M. Schloss, representing the lodge for Sunday, October 15, 1916, for the purpose of organizing the Big Brother movement of the city. An Executive Committee of eleven was appointed in whose hands was placed the detail work. Fifty-three members have signified their willingness to be enrolled as "Big Brothers." While the movement originated with the B'nai B'rith Lodge, it is not intended to confine the workings of the "Big Brothers" to the Lodge or Order, but rather to make the organization as broad in its scope as possible.

Emanuel and Alabama Lodges, of Montgomery, Ala., gave a joint intellectual culture entertainment on Sunday evening, October 29.

A well attended meeting was held on October 30, 1916, by Home Lodge No. 243, of New Orleans, La. It was decided to hold a literary meeting jointly with J. K. Gutheim Lodge on November 27, and to invite members of all the other sister lodges of the city. A lecture on the subject, "The Racial and Religious Elements of B'nai B'rith," will be delivered on that occasion by Dr. Mendel Silber, and a discussion will follow.

Brother Louis Cohen of Fort Smith, Ark., member of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7, organized a new lodge of the Order at Tulsa, Okla., on October 28 and 29, 1916.

Gulf Lodge No. 221, of New Orleans, La., held a well attended meeting at the vestry room of the Touro Synagogue on November 2, 1916. Various matters of importance were considered; also steps looking to an increase of membership during the coming season.

Houston Lodge, No. 434, of Houston, Texas, held a meeting on October 25, which was of special interest as a good program was carried out. There were a number of speakers from the local Lodge, as well as members from out of town.

Beaumont Lodge No. 435, of Beaumont, Texas, is one of the most progressive lodges of the District. While its membership is comparatively small, numbering only fifty, the Lodge is quite a factor in all matters appertaining to Jewish interests. At a recent meeting of the Lodge a membership campaign was resolved upon and it is expected that the Lodge will double its membership during this season.

Birmingham Lodge No. 368, of Birmingham, Ala., held an important meeting on September 17, at which plans were worked out for the Lodge during the coming season. Various committees were appointed, among them, the Social Service Committee, with Dr. M. Newfield as Chairman, the Membership Committee headed by Brother J. D. Rosenberger, and the Intellectual Culture and Entertainment Committee with Brother R. M. Sterne in charge.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE No. 3.

A meeting of the General Committee was held at the Hotel Majestic, Philadelphia on October 29, 1916. All the officers and members were present; in addition thereto a number of Past Presidents of the Grand Lodge and chairmen of standing committees.

The committee resolved to hold annually three sessions. It was further resolved that in view of the recent convention of the District having appropriated a sum to the National Farm School, that the institution be represented in the Order, and that, accordingly, the Farm School be authorized to appoint a committee to meet with a like committee of the General Committee to bring about an affiliation. The committee resolved unanimously to delegate officers of the General Committee as well as prominent members of the Order to visit newly instituted lodges at various times so that by their presence to instill new enthusiasm among members of such lodges and thereby aid in bringing about the permanency of such lodges.

Brother David Bortin outlined the social service work of the District, elaborating upon the need of funds to carry on the work, whereupon the sum of $250.00 as a preliminary appropriation was made for the pursuance of this activity. Brothers B. S. Pollak and D. Phillips were appointed additional members of the Social Service Committee of the District. It was further resolved that the Educational Board of Allegheny County and Prison Aid Society of Philadelphia be under the direct supervision of the Social Service Department of the District.

A committee consisting of Brothers Bortin, Salus, Meyerhoff, Phillips and Platowsky was appointed to take charge of the renovation of the B'nai B'rith Statue to Religious Liberty, located in Fairmont Park, Philadelphia.

The committee consisting of Brothers Jay Singer and Pollak was appointed to act with a like committee from the National Farm School to bring about an affiliation of the two organizations.

The subject of propaganda and intellectual advancement received careful consideration.

DEMAND FRANCHISEMENT OF JEWS.

In Nizhni Novgorod took place a conference of the fur traders of all Russia. The conference adopted a resolution stating that in order that the fur trade should develop unmolestedly it is absolutely necessary that the Jews be enfranchised, as the greatest merchants are Jews. The member of the Imperial Duma, Salazkin, was president of that conference.

JEWISH LEADERS

A Series of Historical Portraits

By RABBI SAMUEL S. COHON, Chicago

Copyrighted, December, 1916, by Samuel S. Cohon

4. Isaiah, the Leader, As Literary Prophet.

The world is divided into many kingdoms. The oldest and the most formidable is the kingdom of force, in which might makes right, and in which the man of strongest arm and swiftest foot is ruler. Partly on the ruins, and partly by the side of the kingdom of brute force, the empire of the intellect was established, in which human thought plans and builds cities, invents and perfects machines, discovers and develops the mainsprings of physical existence. In the midst of this empire in which the general, the builder, the engineer, the merchant, and the inventor are kings, the prophet lifted the banner of the new kingdom, the kingdom of God—the spiritual sovereignty of truth and righteousness. Through his lofty "thought and is clear expression," he gained power over the souls of men. The prophetic word glowed as fire, and set men's consciences aflame.

But the word, once uttered, takes wing, not to return again. Especially the unpopular utterances of prophets, for which they were persecuted and stoned, could hardly have been treasured in the fleshy hearts of men. Besides, the finest memory is fallible. How much the art of writing has done for the preservation of what is truest and best in the realm of the spirit can hardly be estimated. Though libraries, too, furnish fuel for the flames of bigotry, and parchments also are subject to decay, manuscripts are prone to have greater longevity than the memory of mortals. Thus, in the book, the prophet's message found refuge from persecution. "Wondrous indeed," writes Carlyle, "is the virtue of the true book. Not like a dead city of stones, yearly crumbling, yearly needing repair; more like a tilled field, but then a spiritual field; like a spiritual tree, let me rather say, it stands from year to year, and from age to age."

Of the great books of the world, the four volumes of prophetic writing of the Hebrew Bible—those of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and the Minor Prophets—have exerted the most far-reaching influence in shaping the destinies of mankind. The first of Israel's seers whose words were committed to writing, was Amos of Tekoa, a Judean citizen who appeared with his message in Northern Israel, during the prosperous reign of Jereboam II. (760 B. C. E.), about a century after Elijah. This true successor to Elijah, a man of fiery zeal and an impassioned preacher, feeling the weight of the people's appalling indifference to his message, seized upon the art of writing as vehicle for his thoughts, and thus preserved them for the more responsive hearts of subsequent generations.

In the religion of Israel, Amos intensified the note of God's universality and justice. Ever since Moses beheld God as the Eternal Spirit that created and upholds the order of nature and the life of man, religion has found its chief expression in morality. Justice ceased to be a matter of policy between men, and became the foundation of God's throne. Out of the rays of light that shone from the face of Moses, the noble band of prophets wove Israel's crown of glory. As in the case of Nathan in relation to David, and of Elijah in his conflict with Ahab, the prophets considered it to be their duty to test human conduct in the light of their God-given ideal. Amos went farther than all his predecessors in applying the plumb-line to the nation's life, and in emphasizing the preeminence of righteousness over ritual, in religion. From his high tower of inspiration, this shepherd-prophet passes moral judgment over foreign nations as well as over the Northern and Southern kingdoms of Israel. To him, God is the universal Lord, the ruler of all the families of the earth, and their redeemer from oppression. (Amos IX: 1-7.) If Israel occupies a special place in divine providence, it is as the servant of righteousness (Amos II: 9-111: 2). In language bold, vigorous and right in poetic images and symbols, he assails the injustice and selfishness of the ruling classes, and the hypocrisy of the priests, the official guardians of religion (Amos IV-VI; VIII). In the name of God, he declares: "I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not take delight in your solemn assemblies. Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them; neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts. Take thou away from me, the noise of thy songs, for I will not hear the melody of thy viols. But LET JUDGMENT RUN DOWN AS WATERS, AND RIGHTEOUSNESS AS A MIGHTY STREAM." (Amos V: 21-24.) God does not demand animal sacrifice; He demands that the moral law be observed, that justice be done, that its mandates be carried out by rich and poor alike.

The younger contemporary of this stern religious and social reformer, Hosea, the son of Beeri, a native of the North, in vibrant tones sounded the message of God's pardoning grace. Like Amos, he tore down the veil from the life of the people, and disclosed the hideous sores in the body politic, the crass immorality and spiritual stagnation. "The Lord is at strife with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth nor love, nor knowledge of God in the land; but perjuring and lying, murdering and stealing and adultery prevail." (Hosea IV: 1-6.) "My people are doomed to destruction," complains the prophet, "because they lack knowledge." In ignorance of the moral nature of God, they offer Him the service rendered to the licentious Baalim. Priests and people alike are partners in the offence. Image worship is rampant in the land. Anarchy, civil strife, and oppression go hand in hand with their religious laxity. The apostacy of Israel, deep-rooted in the past, dominates the people's destinies, and will ultimately lead them to ruin. However, as a man of tenderest affections and most sympathetic soul, he came to feel—partly through his own experience with his faithless spouse—that greater than God's justice, is His long-suffering love. Though the day of reckoning is at hand, there is a way of redemption for the people, from the clutches of sin "Return unto thy God," he pleads; "keep mercy and justice, and wait for thy God continually." (Hosea XII: 7.) Knowing the fulness of God's mercy, which sustains the whole wide creation, Hosea speaks in God's name: "I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger; I shall not return to destroy Ephraim, for I am God and not man, the Holy One in the midst of thee; and I will not come in fury." (Hosea XI: 9.) Thus, to Amos' idea of religion's being grounded on justice, Hosea added the element of love. In mystic form, he expressed God's love for Israel, in the musical words: "And I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord." (Hosea II: 21-22.)

Amos' trumpet call to righteousness, and Hosea's flute-like pleading for repentance, blended in the sonorous message of the prince of prophets and literary artists, Isaiah, the son of Amos of Jerusalem. The seeds of prophetic truth came to fruition in his doctrines. In the mind of this religious genius, righteousness and love combined in the ideal of holiness, morality's most perfect expression.

Unlike the lives of Moses and Elijah, which must be read through a thick veil of legend, Isaiah's life is revealed to us in his own words and thoughts. His work is his biography. However, if, in the study of the lives of Moses and Elijah, the great difficulty consists in the separation of legend from fact, in the case of Isaiah, the great task of the student is to distinguish between the various utterances contained in the book which goes by the name of Isaiah, to determine which of them are authentic, and thus to be in a position to draw the picture of the prophet. "One's first impulse," writes that excellent judge of literature, Matthew Arnold, "naturally is to receive a book as it comes to us, and from all unsettlement of it one is averse. But we have to get over this natural conservatism in the present case, because so much more embarrassment to our understanding is created, so much more check given to our full enjoyment of Isaiah, by rejecting all re-arrangement than by accepting it." (M. Arnold, Isaiah of Jerusalem, pages 32-33.) We must bear in mind that editors, in ancient time, were not guided by "the rules of modern literary workmanship." "Their main object," writes W. Robertson Smith, "was to get together everything that they could find, and arrange their material in volumes convenient for private study or use in the synagogue. In those days, one could not plan the number of volumes, the number of letters in a page, and the size and form of the pages, with the freedom to which the printing press has accustomed us; the cumbrous and costly material of ancient books limited all schemes of editorial disposition. In ancient books, the most various treatises are often comprised in one volume; the scribe had a certain number of skins, and he wished to fill them." (W. R. Smith, Prophets of Israel, pages 211-212.) When the remains of ancient prophecy were collected—some two hundred fifty years after the death of Isaiah—after the days of Ezra the Scribe, the editors distributed them as best they could, in the four prophetic volumes of our Bible. Thus several fragments from the writings of other prophets found their way into the book of Isaiah.

Modern scientific studies of the literature of the Bible have established, beyond reasonable doubt, that the magnificent songs of consolation which now form the second part of the book (Chapters XL-LV; LVI-LXVI) were composed at least one century and a half after Isaiah, by men whose names have not come down to us. In the first part of the book, too, there are several non-Isaiahanic orations (XIII-XIV: 23; XXIV-XXVII; also XXIV-XXXIX and several smaller passages). These passages were, in all likelihood, appended by an early scribe, to the role which bore Isaiah's name, either because of a faint similarity in tone, or perhaps with "no more profound intention than the desire to economize writing material." (G. F. Moore, literature of the Old Testament, chapter XVI.) Later on, however, they were accepted as the writings of Isaiah himself, and thus produced a most confusing idea of his message and of the very nature of prophecy. Hence, by detaching from Isaiah all the passages referring to events that occurred long after his activity, and by reading him in connection with his own time, the effectiveness of the prophet becomes so imcomparably greater, that—to quote Matthew Arnold—"the reader who imagined himself to know Isaiah previously, will be astonished and charmed; he will feel that he now really knows him for the first time, so new will be his sense of this great prophet's beauty and power."

A careful study of the sermons which are unmistakably his, reveals him to have been a man of a wide range of thought, of a profound acquaintance with the past history and with the politics no less than with the social customs of Israel and of the neighboring nations. As deep thinker and as literary artist, he holds a foremost place in the world of letters. In reading him, one feels the workings of a chaste and spiritual soul, whose words, though more than twenty-six centuries old, are still as fresh as the dew-drop. His imagination is immaculately pure, aflame with the vision of God. His lips burned with fervor for truth. His matchless eloquence rested on genuine sentiment and moral earnestness, on bold and striking figures, on terse but simple and direct phrases, and on vivid and elegant turns of expression, rich in humor, but refined and restrained throughout. His words sometimes strike as a sharp battle-axe, hewing down corruption and hypocrisy; and sometimes they are as soft and tender as a mother's lullaby. In his works, the Hebrew language blossomed forth into its finest flower, and ripened into its most beautiful literary forms.

For a period of not less than forty years (740-701 B. C. E.), this lofty spirit preached the word of God at Jerusalem, to deaf ears and callous hearts. To impress his hearers with the seriousness of his message, he often resorted to expedients which would appear extremely strange and sensational, in our day. He gave his children symbolical names to show, and to ever remind the people of the fate that would overtake them. One of his sons he called "Maher-shalal-hash-baz," "Spoil spreadeth, prey hasteth," to indicate the speedy approach of judgment by a hostile invasion. Another son he named "Shear Yashuv" to express his belief in Israel's final return to God's grace through a "faithful remnant." The idea embodied in these names runs through the whole book. To protest against the short-sighted and dangerous alliance with the newly risen power of Egypt, against Assyria, Isaiah walked around for three years in a prisoner's garb, in sackcloth and barefooted, as a sign to the people, that their bulwark, Egypt, would thus be led captive by Assyria. He preached not from one pulpit, nor on set occasions. He delivered his addresses whenever and wherever occasion demanded a word of truth: in the field and open street, in homes and in palaces, to private individuals and before public assemblies. The sermons are of various lengths and forms. Some of them consist of just a sentence or two; and others are fully developed orations. Some of them are in plain prose; others, as his songs and parables, are in carefully intricate metres. Whatever form his writings may have, they show, in every detail, the consummate art of the prophet. If, in reading them, we lose sight of their literary beauty, it is because we are overpowered by their stirring appeal to our consciences. Deep calleth unto deep! Isaiah's words arouse our moral sense; they turn the searchlight of reason upon our own motives and actions.

He began his prophetic activity in the year 740 B. C. E., the year in which Uzzia, the proud king of Judah, at the end of fifty-two years of brilliant success and prosperity, sank from his splendor into a leper's grave. In that year, Isaiah tells us, the veil dropped from his eyes, and face to face, he saw the majesty of the King of Kings. As he stood in the sacred Temple, the whole place was transformed in his imagination. Where stood the ark, he beheld God Himself, sitting on a throne high and exalted, and the train of His robes filled the whole Temple. The panneled figures round the ark appeared as living angels, each one having six wings—with two he covered his face, and with two his feet, and with two he flew. Hovering around God's throne of glory, they, in the manner of the priestly choruses, sang antiphonally the great song of praise. As one chorus sang: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts," the other replied: "The fulness of the whole earth is His glory." In this purely symbolical imagery, borrowed from the earthly Temple, Isaiah described his exalted views of the heavenly throne of God. In the thrice repeated "holy," Isaiah made the seraphs proclaim the truth, born in his heart, that God is not only just and merciful, but that He is above all things, holy; that He abhors sin, and is exalted in moral purity. There is no place on earth which does not show God's infinite majesty. He is in the Temple; but He, the Holy One of Israel, is also in the busy market-place, and in the people's homes and hearts. Overwhelmed by that vision Isaiah felt that the very pillars of the Temple were shaken by the mighty voice of the angels; and that smoke, rising from their flaming words, filled the whole sanctuary. Standing there, in the presence of God's holiness, Isaiah was filled with the sense of his frailty and sinfulness. "Woe is me!" he exclaimed, "for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts. Then one of the seraphim flew unto me with a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar. And he laid it upon my mouth, and said: Lo, this hath touched thy lips; thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged." (Isaiah VI: 6-7. See G. A. Smith's Commentary.)

Purified in heart, he heard God's call, saying: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for me" to the people? Eagerly he called out: "Here am I; send me." "Go, then, and tell the people," was God's charge, which Isaiah couches in bitter sarcasm, "'Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye, indeed, but perceive not!' Dull the hearts of the people, deafen their ears, and blind their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and convert, and be healed." And he said: "How long, O God, will the people's spiritual blindness last?" Then came the awful reply: "Until the cities be desolate, without an inhabitant, and houses without a man, and the land be left desolately waste." (Isaiah VI: 7-11.) To make an impression upon the people they must first be crushed. The tree of Israel will have to be cut down to its roots, and a new plant be raised out of its stump. Uniting "in one practical aim" Amos' idea of the salvation of the righteous few in a nation purified by judgment, and of Hosea's belief that Israel's deliverance could come not through political combinations, but through repentance and reliance on God, Isaiah proclaimed the doctrine that, out of the faithful remnant of the "holy seed in the fallen stock," the New Israel will be created. Shear Yashub! (See W. R. Smith, Prophets of Israel, page 209.)

Thus, in full consciousness of the gigantic difficulties of his task, Isaiah consecrated himself as prophet. The world is ever out of joint; miseries, wrongs, and injustices always cry out to heaven. But the days during which Isaiah preached were overfilled with evil. Five years after his consecration, when the youth Ahaz, a grandson of the victorious king Uzzia, came to the throne of Judah, the national fortunes began to take a downward turn. The little kingdom of Western Asia, with the aid of the strong kingdom of Urartu, in Armenia, conspired "to rid themselves of the Assyrian peril." As Tiglath-Pileser IV was taken up with the conquest of Urartu, Syria, Ephraim and Philistia formed a triple alliance against him. To strengthen their cause, they tried to gain the aid of Judah. As Ahaz refused to join them, he drew upon his kingdom the wrath of Pekah ben Remaliah, King of Israel, and of Rezin, the King of Syria. They took advantage of Ahaz's weakness and inexperience, and invaded Judah, with a view to forcing it into compliance with their plans. So great was the terror of the people that, in Isaiah's words, "the heart of the King was moved, also the heart of the people, as the trees of the forest are moved with the wind." (Isaiah VII: 2.) (See J. M. P. Smith, The Prophet and His Problems, page 150ff; also S. A. Cook, article "Israel" in Encyclopedia Brittanica XV 365ff.) Finding himself in great straits, Ahaz undertook a policy of preparedness, by fortifying the city of Jerusalem and by appealing to the Assyrian monarch for help but acknowledging his suzerainty. One day, when Ahaz was inspecting his fortifications, Isaiah appeared with his son, whose symbolic name "Shear Yashub," was a continuous reminder of the national salvation through the faithful remnant, to warn the king against the suicidal policy of inviting the Assyrian wolf into the fold, urging that the preparedness which Judah must have, was not of a military but of a religious and moral nature. "Take heed," he said, "but remain peaceful; fear not, be not dismayed" for the fierceness of your enemies. They are two burnt-out firebrands; their days are numbered; their punishment will come through Assyria itself, without special solicitation. They rely on the strength of arms; but you must depend on God's help. But "if ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established." (Isaiah VII: 4-9.)

To impress the vacillating king with the truth of his words, Isaiah promises him a sign from God. (Isaiah VII: 10-12.) Fortunately for Isaiah, Ahaz did not ask for a sign, for the prophets could not enforce his teaching by external proof. "The power of their message," writes J. M. P. Smith, "lay in its appeal to the hearts and minds of those to whom it was addressed. Truth was self-authenticating in their age, even as in our own. It must find its way into the minds of men as a welcome guest, else it will not enter at all. Its only credentials are its inherent worth." (J. M. P. Smith, The Prophet and His Problems, pages 76-7.) That the truth of a prophet's words cannot be established by outer demonstrations, was later recognized by the Torah itself. The book of Deuteronomy (XIII: 1-5) warns the people against accepting a religious doctrine that does not accord with what they have already learned of God, even though the new doctrine be supported by signs and wonders that actually come to pass. "Even a miracle cannot validate a lie." (Ibid.)

When Ahaz shrank from the idea of testing God, Isaiah himself offered the king a token of God's presence and readiness to deliver. In symbolic form —which, on account of its obscurity, has given rise to the wildest theological speculations—he declared that "a young woman who shall become a mother within a year, may name her child 'God is with us' ('Immanuel'), for, before the babe begins to develop into intelligent childhood, the land of Pekah and Rezin shall be laid waste, and Judah as well as Israel (that is, on condition that Judah persists in its obtuseness) shall be stripped of all its artificial wealth, and reduced to wild pasture ground." (This passage has absolutely no Messianic import whatever.) To, in any way, connect it with a prediction of the coming of Christ is to grossly misinterpret the nature of prophetic teaching in general, and of Isaiah's doctrine in particular. To quote the words of a Christian scholar the token which Isaiah gave "was not a miraculous conception." The word "alma," which the English version renders "virgin," means, strictly speaking, nothing else than a young woman of age to be a mother. On the person of the future mother, Isaiah lays no stress; it does not appear that he pointed his hearers to any individual." (W. R. Smith, Prophets of Israel, page 272; 426-7.)

Isaiah's warning did not appeal to Ahaz as good statesmanship. It is good to have faith in God; but, when the enemy is ready to strike, he felt one must take up the sword. He therefore sent heavy tribute with this humiliating letter to Tiglath Pileser of Assyria: "I am thy son and thy slave. Come up and deliver me from the King of Damascus and from the King of Israel." The Assyrians did not wait for a second invitation. Straightway, they dispatched one army against the Kingdom of Israel, annexed two-thirds of Israel's territory and executed Israel's king. A second army was sent against Damascus. After a siege of three years the Assyrians broke for all time, the strength of Damascus. Through the help of Assyria, King Ahaz actually managed to save the kingdom of Judah. He could therefore congratulate himself on his brilliant policy. But subsequent events showed that another victory, such as he had won, would mean the end of his kingdom. The wolf was now in the fold and his hunger grew. The kingdom of Israel was in its death throes. Isaiah had seen right when he declared that "Spoil speedeth, prey hasteth." Undermined by moral laxity, by corrupt government and anarchy, it could not withstand the blow of Assyria. (Isaiah XXVIII.) In order to shake off the Assyrian yoke, Israel's last king, Hoshea, made a desperate attempt to secure the help of Egypt, but thereby only precipitated the fall of his nation. The new Assyrian monarch, Sargon, leaped in rage, with all his might, upon Israel; and, after three years of siege, he captured Samaria (721 B.C.E.), and crushed the life out of the kingdom of the Ten Tribes. And now that the Northern Kingdom, which politically, commercially, and culturally surpassed the Kingdom of the South, was destroyed, the life of Judah, too, was no longer safe. The tribute which this little kingdom was forced to pay to Assyria, taxed it to its utmost capacity.

As long as Ahaz lived, things seemed to be quiet; but no sooner was he succeeded by his son, Hezekiah, than trouble again began to brew. A strong party grew up in Judah which began to advocate the overthrowing of the Assyrian yoke, by forming an alliance with Egypt, which was now raising its head again, under the rule of an Ethiopian prince. In this coalition, Ashdod, Edom, and Moab also took part; and much help was expected from Merodach Baladan who had wrested the independence of Babylon from Sargon and from Urartu which had again regained its power. Against this dangerous movement (in 713-711 B.C.E.), Isaiah again fought most desperately. He saw that, despite the apparently favorable auspices, Judah was taking the precipitous road which, shortly before, had led the kingdom of Israel to destruction. While he had opposed, in the first place, Ahaz's alliance with Assyria, he felt that to break it now would bring fatal disaster upon his nation. For three years, he wore the garb of a prisoner of war, to symbolize that Egypt and Ethiopia, upon whom Judah wished to rely, would themselves be led captive by Assyria. (Isaiah XX.) However, his pleadings were again in vain. Upon the death of Sargon (in 705 B.C.E.), the passion of the people of Judah to free themselves from Assyria, became too strong to be stemmed by Isaiah. He warned them and he threatened them: "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help, and rely on horses, who trust in war chariots because they are many, and in horsemen because they are very strong; but look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord! Yet He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not recall His words; but will arise against the house of evil doers, and against the help of them that work iniquity. Now, the Egyptians are men and not God, and their horses flesh and not spirit. When the Lord shall stretch out His hand, both he that helpeth and he that is helped shall fall, and they all shall perish together." (Isaiah XXXI:1-3.)

Isaiah was no partisan of Assyria. In that mighty empire, he saw an instrument of God's righteous anger. When it should have completed the task assigned to it by Providence, it too would receive the punishment due it for its presumption and pride. (Isaiah X: 5-15). Isaiah contended that Judah should neither rely on the power of Egypt, nor fear the power of Assyria, but trust solely in God. To politicians and militarists, such policy never did appeal. Yet the history of the world knows of no wiser international principle than that which Isaiah expressed in these words, to his nation: "In returning (to God) and in rest (in Him), shall ye be saved; in quietness and confidence, shall be your strength." (Isaiah XXX:15.)

His words again failed to produce the desired effect. Hezekiah, together with a number of other small kings, relying on Egypt—Merodach Baladan seems to have been the moving spirit of this revolt (Isaiah XXXIX)—raised a rebellion against Assyria. Thereupon, Sargon's son, Sennacherib, subdued Babylon, Phoenicia, Moab, Ammon, Edom, Ashdod, and Philistia. Crushing the army which Egypt had sent to the relief of her allies (701 B.C.E.), Sennacherib completed the subjection of Ekron, and marshalled his forces against Judah, the leading member of the confederacy. He captured forty-six Judean fortresses. Hezekiah now recognized the danger in which his country was involved, and perhaps the wisdom of Isaiah's policy. The sacred historian tells: "And Hezekiah, King of Judah, sent to the King of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended; return from me; that which thou puttest on me will I bear. And the King of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah, King of Judah, three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold. And Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king's house. At that time, did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doors of the Temple of the Lord, and from the pillars which Hezekiah, King of Judah, had overlaid, and gave it to the King of Assyria." (II. Kings XVIII:14-16.) The Assyrian record of this campaign boasts of a tremendous number of captives and innumerable oxen, horses, cattle, etc., that were taken by Sennacherib. Concerning one thing, they are silent; and that is Sennacherib's sudden retreat from Jerusalem. The Biblical records, however, tell this remarkable story: After receiving Hezekiah's tribute at Lachish, Sennacherib, as if regretful of having let Judah off so lightly, sent his army against Jerusalem, defiantly and insultingly demanding its surrender. The people were panic stricken. Hezekiah, chastened by the reverses that came upon him, now sent to Isaiah for aid. In his extremity, he was forced to fall back on Isaiah's policy of relying on the saving power of God. Isaiah himself was wounded by the boastfulness of Sennacherib. "The axe," he said, "boasts against Him that strikes therewith." (Isaiah X:15). In a stirring poem—the authenticity of which cannot be doubted with good reason, for it is in full keeping with Isaiah X—he roused the spirit of his compatriots. Referring to Assyria, he said:

"She mocks thee, she laughs thee to scorn—the virgin of Zion;
Behind thee, she shakes her head—the daughter of Jerusalem.
Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed?
Against whom hast thou raised thy voice,
And lifted up thine eyes on high?
Against the Holy One of Israel!
By thy messengers hast thou reproached God;
And hast said: "With the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountain, to the uppermost part of Lebanon;
And I will cut down its tall cedars and its choice fir trees;
And I will enter into its farthest lodging place, the forest of its fruitful field.

. . . . . .

'Because of thy rage against me,' concludes Isaiah in God's name,
And thy tumult which has come up to mine ear,
I shall put my hook in thy nose,
And my bridle in thy lips,
And turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.
And the remnant that shall escape of the House of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward,
For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant,
And they that escape, from Mt. Zion.'"
Shear Yashub!

The remnant shall be left, not because of Judah's righteousness, but because of the zeal of the Lord of Hosts. (Isaiah XXXVII:22-32. II Kings XIX:21-31.) Isaiah's prediction did not go beyond the withdrawal of the Assyrian army. But more happened. Jerusalem had a miraculous escape. The Jewish historian tells the story in these simple words: "Then the angel of the Lord went forth, and smote, in the camp of the Assyrians, a hundred and four score and five thousand men; and, in the morning, behold! they were all dead corpses." (Isaiah XXXVII:36). The fact that Sennacherib retreated because of a disaster that overtook his army is sustained also by an Egyptian legend recorded by Herodotus. Only, according to his account, the loss was sustained at Pelusium, on the Egyptian border. He writes: "As the two armies lay here opposite one another, there came, in the night, a multitude of field mice (symbol of pestilence) which devoured all the quivers and bowstrings of the enemy, and ate the thongs by which they managed their shields. Next morning they commenced their flight; and great multitudes fell, as they had no arms with which to defend themselves." (Herodotus, Book II, par. 141.)

In the mind of Isaiah, the kingdom of Judah was saved not because of its merits, but because of God's forgiving love. Greater patriots never lived than the prophets of Israel. But their patriotism was not the blind kind that weeps over physical calamities, and rejoices over national triumphs, no matter how attained. Isaiah's patriotism was of the kind that aims to purify the nation. He sounded the prophetic alarm against the germs of inner decay, and he applied the surgeon's knife in order to remove the cankerous growth within the body of Israel. The part played by Isaiah in the siege of Jerusalem (as narrated in Isaiah XXXVI-XXXVII) produces the impression on modern readers that he was the court-prophet and statesman. He indeed, from the beginning to the end of his career, addressed his message to the kings and rulers of state; but he occupied no such position in the political life of the people as did Samuel, Nathan, Ahijah and Elisha. His words, for the most part, fell on deaf ears. The politicians of his day could not bring themselves to look upon the vexing problems of state in the light of his spiritual ideal. They were engrossed in the events of the day; whereas Isaiah, as a true prophet, was absorbed in God's eternal law of righteousness, and strove to deduce from it the principles of conduct for his own time. (See M. Buttenweiser, Prophets of Israel, pages 269 ff.)

Isaiah's words grew out of the troublous conditions of one of the most critical periods in history. His book therefore, "took the shape of a prophetic commentary on the political events, the social and religious phenomena" of his age, written from the standpoint of spiritual truth, of faith, justice and holiness. He unfolds a ghastly picture of the dominant evils of his time. The material prosperity during the reign of Uzziah had undermined the foundations of Judah's social life. The expansion of commerce which grew out of the subjection of Edom and of the Harbor of

Elath on the Red Sea and of the important caravan route from Sela to Southern Arabia, tended to enrich the grandees and courtiers. With the concentration of capital in their hands, they began to swell their estimates by forcing the poor farmers out of the land. (Isaiah V:8; Micah II:2, 9.) The desolation of the land after the Syro-Ephraimitic war, and the increased taxation for the purpose of paying tribute to Assyria, fell heaviest on the poorer elements. These sufferings of the poor, only helped the rich to gain title to large tracts of land, and then to reduce their occupants to a state of dependence. Numerous times, in the course of his ministry, Isaiah was impelled to denounce, in the most scathing terms, the wickedness and inhumanity of the land owners who joined house to house and field to field, thus crowding out the poor. He inveighed against the demoralized rich who, in their hardness and greed, plundered the weak and exploited the helpless orphans and widows; and then, in their perversion, exchanged their ill-gotten wealth for illicit pleasures. This is the picture of the demoralization of wealth of all times. With stinging scorn, he satirized the gaiety and the wantonness of the grand ladies of the aristocratic circles (whom Amos called "the kine of Bashan"), their immodest dresses and their jewelry which is an eye-sore to God. (Isaiah III:16-26.) The dissolute and materialized upper classes corrupted, by their bad example, also the lower classes, the bulk of which was no less free from vice, pleasure-seeking, and superstition. The general moral blindness affected the priests, rulers, and judges, who turned light into darkness and darkness into light, who called good evil and evil good, who justified the wicked for a bribe, and removed the righteousness from the just. Seeing this "universal reign of injustice" and perversion, Isaiah could not but tremble at the thought of the fate which must overtake the people in a world governed by the laws of a righteous God. "The Lord will enter into judgment with the elders of His people, and the princes thereof, for ye have eaten up the vineyard (a figure for Israel); the spoil of the poor is in your houses. What mean you that you crush my people, and grind the face of the poor? saith the Lord God of Hosts." (Isaiah III:14-15.) God's indignation appeared to the prophet, to be expressed clearly, in afflictions that befell the land. (Isaiah I:4-9.) However, the people closed their eyes to the lessons of history; and, in their moral obtuseness, courted destruction, "drawing guilt upon themselves, with the cords of their vain policy; and sin, as with a cart rope; saying: 'Let Him make speed, and hasten His work that we may see it, and let the purpose of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come that we may know it.'" (Isaiah V: 18-19.)

In the oration which now stands as the introduction to his book, but which may be regarded as the grand finale of all his preaching, or as the magnificent overture in which the leading motifs of his prophecies are sounded, Isaiah not only unfolds the sore spots in the political, social and religious life of the people, but also holds out a positive ideal to which the nation must conform: "Wash you, make you clean (not alone in a ceremonial but in a moral sense); put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, correct the oppressor, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." (Isaiah I:16-17.)

As a man of profound faith in the ultimate triumph of goodness, he could not believe that the world was hopelessly given over to corruption. He saw better days ahead, when society would come into a healthier and saner state of existence. In exquisitely charming fairy forms of which he was supreme master, he wove the tapestry of his vision of the ideal state. He spoke of the coming day when a true king—not a puppet in the hands of corruptionists, but a strong and enlightened monarch—conscious of his responsibilities to the poor as well as to the rich, would sit upon the throne of David, and rule the land in justice. He shall be "as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as a river of water in a dry place, as a shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Isiah XXXII:2.) Under his equitable rule, the officers and magistrates will abhor bribes, and respect no person in judgment. Then, too, the warring factions of the nation will be at peace. The wolf and the lamb (that is, the oppressor and the oppressed) will then dwell together, and the infant will not be harmed by the venomous asp. "None shall hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the knowledge of God shall fill the earth, as the waters cover the sea." (Isaiah XI.)

This is the dominant note in Isaiah's economic and political program. When Divine justice shall become the foundation of the state, peace and good-will shall prevail throughout the land. Upon this foundation, the international Temple of peace must be built. "The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." (Isaiah XXXII:17.)

These ideals of Isaiah reach their climax in his vision of universal peace—which appears also among the prophecies of his great contemporary, Micah of Moresheth (Micah IV:1ff), with whom he shared many ideas——: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all the nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, 'Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths,' for out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isaiah II:2-4.)

Isaiah's was indeed a stormy career. History is silent about his end; but tradition—working on the hypothesis that his free and bold utterances gave offense to the ruling classes and to the fanatic idolators—tells that he died a martyr's death, in the days of the reactionary son of Hezekiah, King Manassah.

But his great work lived on. During his lifetime, when he found that his efforts to spiritualize the life of the nation were in vain, he set himself to lay a sure foundation in Zion, to raise a new generation in the true religion, in the faith and in the knowledge of God, and thus prepare the faithful remnant which, though small, would be the nucleus of the new Israel. (Isaiah VIII: 16-18.) "Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto the House of Jacob—He who redeemed Abraham——: No longer shall Jacob be ashamed, nor shall his face grow pale, for when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify the Holy One of Jacob and shall fear the God of Israel. They also that erred in spirit shall gain understanding, and they that murmured shall take instruction." (Isaiah XXIX:22-24.) In this hope, he wrote the orations which now form the proud heritage of Israel. His prophecies, cast in highly artistic forms, in rich balances of phrase and flow of rhythm, suffered much at the hand of later generations. Many passages were dislocated, and the drastic notes of some of his bold figures were piously toned down. (See Isaiah VI:13). Cheerful passages were appended to a number of his sermons, in order to remove their harsh severity. His words were, for thousands of years, misinterpreted by Jews and non-Jews. The Christian Church has exhausted its ammunition in the vain endeavor to prove that Isaiah predicted the birth of Jesus. An ancient Rabbi(in the Talmud (Sanhedrin 99a), sounded the truth about this matter, when he said that Isaiah made no predictions about a future Messiah, but that his words about the righteous king (Chapter IX:2-7) referred to his own times. In the light of present-day sane scholarship, the light of Isaiah's genius grows ever brighter.

The words in which this literary prophet stormed the strongholds of corruption, still have a ringing appeal to our consciences. Across the wide stretch of twenty-six centuries, his voice speaks to us of today, of the inspiring ideal of holiness, of pure faith, and lofty patriotism. In sublime accents it reminds us of our frailty and of God's majesty: "Man shall be brought down, and the eyes of the haughty humbled. But the Lord of Hosts alone is exalted in justice, and the Holy God is sanctified in righteousness." (Isaiah V:15-16.) And again in gentle reassurance comes this message of love to our hearts: "God waits to be gracious to you; and therefore is He exalted that He may have mercy upon you, for the Lord is a God of judgment. Blessed are they that wait for Him." (Isaiah XXX:18.)

RIGHT OF RESIDENCE OF RUSSIAN JEWS.

A message from Blagovestchensk announces that the local authorities had ordered all Jews who had settled there, on the strength of Prince Tcherbatoff's circular, to leave the town. No exception was made in favor of refugees from the invaded provinces and of heads of recently-built-up large commercial industrial houses.

All the Jewish refugees settled at Starodub have been transported into the interior provinces.

Fads in Religious Education

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

"God made man straight, but they have sought out many inventions." To be simple and normal was what the Creator intended man to be, but somehow he is prone to over-nicety and is affectedly subtle. Such seems to be the meaning of the great word of Koheleth, the sacred philosopher. We are reminded of it on contemplating the hair-splitting of the latest faddists in education, particularly in moral or religious training. The teaching of Judaism would seem to be an old occupation. But if we read the latest literature on the subject, we might be led to believe that it is but of yesterday. The truth is that these ultra-moderns have emptied themselves out of all that goes by the name of tradition that they must go a-begging for the crumbs from the tables of the ethicals. They forget that the latter approach the subject from an entirely different point of view. The ethicals have for the most part emancipated themselves from religious associations and certainly would owe allegiance to no historical body acknowledging positive religious doctrine. Their aim is to make the children moral beings without recourse to the sanction of religion. Morality for them is a religion. Character building is in their estimation the goal of schooling. Now religion includes morality, but it is more than that. For Jews to model their religious lessons on the pattern of those of the ethicals means surreptitiously to import an outlook upon life that simply is not Jewish. If some of our teachers and superintendents honestly would have the things that differentiate Jew and non-Jew done away with, let them openly and above board confess their position. The insidiousness with which they work in the foreign ingredient from within makes them dangerous.

There is indeed nothing so harmful in a religious community as the faddist. An established religion has its time-honored views and methods which should not be lightly dislodged. Religion is naturally conservative. It is an anchor which saves us from foundering. Without the artifices of the moderns who parade as Jews but are unreligious ethicals at heart, the teaching of the Jewish child in the Jewish school would appear to be a simple and straight matter. For if we ask, What is it that, more than anything else, we wish to inculcate in our children? the answer cannot be but, Judaism and loyalty to the Jewish cause. I am not going to debate now whether Judaism should be taught from a catechism or not. The best kind of teaching is not by the direct but by the indirect method. What a child imbibes unconsciously will be far more abiding than what it is taught by rote. Memorizing a catechism is parrot-work. Big words are usually employed which baffle the child. On the other hand, the doctrines of Judaism can best be imparted by suggestion, by tacking them on to a subject seemingly remote. I should say that we Jews possess in the Book a natural text-book. Its compiler was a pedagogue vastly superior to the modern educationist. It is singularly well graded. The stories of the Bible, which even the ethicals recommend in the early stages of moral training, are inimitable in their style and immediately appeal to the young mind. If we sermonize on them we spoil them. If we let them exercise their spell naturally, unaffectedly, without much comment or homily, they will serve their purpose most adequately. The stories originated in the hoary past and betray their connection with many a culture which, though defunct now, is not wholly lost. In the book of Genesis the Jew is linked to the world. In the beginning we have God and mankind. The Jewish child should indeed learn that we in no wise disassociate ourselves from humanity, and that we share in the natural human instincts of duty. The fear of God is universal. Joseph would not sin against God. But Genesis is only a prelude. In the next books we have the progressive unfoldment of the people whose sons we are, whose blood flows in our veins, whose aspirations thrill us as no others can. The biblical educator had a clear vision as to the double nature of Jewish education. We are commanded to teach God's laws and statutes and ordinances, in modern phraseology the duties of man, the things he is to do and the things he is to forbear doing, the Thou shalt's and Thou shalt not's. At the same time we are enjoined to tell our children the wondrous doings of the Lord, what he wrought among Israel, in modern language Jewish history. Telling is the Jewish parent's duty to his child. And he is to tell the tales exactly on the same occasions and in the same manner as they were narrated in ancient Israel, when a festive season rich in commemorations drew near. Historical teaching of the religious kind must be indirect. For it is not mere history, the knowledge of dates and facts. It is a history that is to beget enthusiasm, love for the past. And enthusiasm and love inhere in sacred seasons and sacred places. There is an atmosphere about the locality and the time that no other agency can produce.

We want our children to take their station in the state as citizens, in society as useful members. We want them to be well informed and cultured. We want them to do things and enjoy things. We want them to lead normal and moral lives. But keeping them out of jail is not the sum of our duties towards them. We all love our offspring. But as we watch them grow we love to discover a trait that perchance reminds us of ourselves or of a near or remote ancestor. In common parlance, we say that we love to have them say the Kaddish when we are departed. Now the Kaddish is not a fetich. But there is a thought behind the wish which even moderns can learn to appreciate. The sacredness of family ties and traditions is involved. Among the nations of mankind none but the Jews and the Romans understood the value to be placed on family traditions. To the Roman the son was the one who would carry on the sacra of the family when the father was dead. We Jews express the same idea by the word Kaddish. The Kaddish draws the child to the synagogue, to the community of Israel. Prayer may be made anywhere. God hears our petitions uttered in the privacy of our homes. The synagogue is not so much for prayer as for worship, communal worship. For it is worship in common with others, in common with an entire people, that links us to our kin. The highest duty of the child and the man with us is to be a Jew. We believe that being a Jew involves being a good man and a good citizen. But if Judaism at all means to us what it should connote, there cannot be anything higher, nobler, more sacred.

The simple deduction from our easoning is that scope and methods of Jewish education cannot be mere character building, but rather the building up of the Jewish character and the Jewish consciousness. Where these two are not developed, or in sheer wanton destructionism suffered to be atrophied, we have turned Jewish children into pagans and have said to them, Go serve other gods, the gods of new-fangled notions of education totally at variance with our own. If there be among us "a root that beareth gall and wormwood," we must weed out the noxious plant. We, even all the men of Israel, our wives, and our little ones, that stand before the Lord, know ourselves as members of a historic body held together by traditions which we must impart to those that are to take our place after us. We have had the ethicals at all times; we had them in the days of Hadrian and they then stepped out and down. The Jewish people persisted in despite of many defections. We shall outlive the latest, if we but continue to tell our children the nobility of being Jews.

FEDERATION OF JEWISH FARMERS OF AMERICA.

The eighth annual convention of the Federation of Jewish Farmers of America was held in New York, November 30, December 1 and 2. At the opening session 1,500 delegates were present who were welcomed by Louis Marshall, Simon Wolf, Dr. J. L. Magnes and Cyrus Sulzberger. It was reported that since the formation of the federation in 1909 with thirteen affiliated bodies, it now numbered fifty-seven. At the second day's session a resolution was adopted asking President Wilson not to place any restrictions upon immigration because of the present dearth of farm laborers. It was voted to organize an employment bureau so that members might secure helpers at a minimum of inconvenience and expense. Last year the federation contributed $5,000 toward the relief of war-stricken Jews; this year it plans to give $10,000. It has decided to incorporate under the laws of New York state. A special committee was appointed to distribute on farms the immigrants who would arrive here after the war. Greenbaum Greenblatt was elected president. The convention concluded with a ball at Grand Central Palace.

The Jew as a Citizen

By Rabbi Bernard H. Rosengard.

The French savant, Anatole Leroy Beaulieu, in his famous book, "Israel Cherz Les Nations," replete with passages of unstinted admiration for the Jewish people, makes the following significant statement, which truthfully portrays the situation and fastens responsibility upon the wrong-doers. "All the virtues that the Jews possess are inherently national and inherited from a famous ancestry, while their vices are largely due to persecutions by Christian nations."

Now, this voluminous and versatile author, though kindly and suave, is a non-partisan and an uncompromisingly impartial critic and observer. While generous in his eulogy of virtue, of moral excellence, and tenacious application to high principles and ideals, he does not hesitate to chastise with his trenchant pen iniquity and deviation from the path of rectitude, wherever it exists, and by whomsoever practised. With a penetrated vision he views with commendable approval some of the redeeming traits of the Jewish character. He emphasizes their loyalty, their conservative instincts, and their firm stand on all questions vital to them, never betraying any weakness or pusillanimity whenever a principle is at stake.

Professor James K. Hosmer, of Washington University, is no less pronounced in his generosity of appreciation of the role played by the Hebrew people in the various lands of their dispersion. He asseverates that, "had the Hebrews not been disturbed in their progress a thousand or more years ago, in their pursuit of culture and altruism, they would have solved all the great problems of civilization which are being solved now."

The Earl of Beaconsfield (Benjamin Disraeli), Great Britain's illustrious Prime Minister, whose impassioned eloquence thrilled the gilded chamber of England's legislature, throughout his epochal career, maintained with scarcely a single qualification, the indubitable superiority of the Hebrews over the most prominent of modern races. In his unbounded enthusiasm he maintains that, in an intellectual sense, they have conquered modern Europe. These and other statements, similar in tone and import, by men of eminence in many vocations of life, will suffice to demonstrate abundantly the value of the Jew as a citizen, and the incontestable proposition as to his being a factor of considerable importance in every countrv where the "open door" of equality of opportunity and untrammeled freedom of enterprise is extended to him.

The Jew, looking back to the illustrious men and women of his race from pre-historic days down to modern times, who have in a spirit of true patriotism rendered immortal services to their respective countries, which have more often than not, Torquemada-like, dealt out to them fire and sword, can truly challenge the world to unearth a single record where he has planted the standard of revolt against any recognized authority.

The Hebrew recoils with horror from the contemplation of a deed, subversive of his religious and moral code, that may retard human weal and betterment and not sanctioned by the thin, small voice of the human conscience.

And this freedom from vice, this clean bill of moral health, was characteristic of the Jew down along the stretch of ages. A Pharaoh, a Sennacherib, a Vespasian, an Antiochus, with all their daring and sanguinary deeds of rapacity, with all their unholy persecuting zeal, which if practised upon less dowered peoples would have driven them to desperation, might have crushed out their moral beautitude, their stamina and virility, were unable to obliterate a single Jewish characteristic. The Divine Light, which in the form of the pillar of fire, dispelled the impenetrable darkness of the trackless African desert, is continuing to lead the "kingdom of priests and holy nation" into the haven of rest and into their rightful heritage.

With no small truth and justification the Jew can still pride himself, as did the Psalmist and warrior-king of old, on the indubitable fact that Domine Illuminatio Mea—the Lord is my light—a motto inscribed upon the portals of the Cambridge (England) University.

The Jews' superiority to all petty annoyances; their attitude of disdain of all ignoble tactics pursued by the countries and governing powers, with which they were brought into contact, stamped them with the hall mark of fortitude and [illegible]ability. Like the phoenix which is said to rise from its own ashes, has Israel risen from the processes of persecution indulged in by many nations. But with bite after bite of outrage and contumely, all have not been able to drive the life out of their Judæan prey.

George Eliot in her fine work, "Impressions of Theophrastus Such," has this descriptive passage of us: "A significant indication of their natural rank is seen in the fact that, at this moment, the leader of the Liberal party in Germany is a Jew (Eduard Lasker); the leader of Republican France is a Jew (Leon Gambetta); and the head of the Conservative ministry in England is a Jew (Lord Beaconsfield). Tortured, flogged and maligned—their name flung at them as an opprobrium by superstition, hatred and contempt—how proud they have remained!" It is thus possible to bring into evidence a host of quotations, both from friendly and malevolent historians, bearing unstinted testimony to the part played by the Jew as a citizen, in which capacity his attribute shone resplendent. The tongue of cavil and malice has never succeeded in convincing any but the unthinking populace, that our interests, social, commercial and educational, are not indissolubly bound up with those of the peoples in whose midst we move and have our being. We have afforded the world ample demonstration of the value and unimpeachable thoroughness of our citizenship.

Everyone who is dowered with sanity, and with freedom from the miasma of prejudice, will readily acknowledge the well established fact that those communities flourished and reached the apex of prosperity whose attitude toward their Jewish neighbors conformed with the principles of justice. The world has, however, progressed to an incredible degree, and happily the glaring disabilities of past ages no longer confront us. But if mankind had achieved remarkable results, it is surely but a truism to assert that the Jewish race had lent their heart—whole co-operation which rendered possible these gratifying results.

Let us give a rapid glance at our eventful history and vicissitudes in the Ibernian peninsula (Spain) during the zenith of her power and glory. We have ever claimed that our progenitors were domiciled in this country even during the Carthaginian dynasty. Our ancestors held a commanding position there; they owned and tilled the soil, were the agents of commerce, and the cultivators of fine arts. "Everyone—according to the eminent historian, Dean H. Milman, sat under his shady fig tree, or cluster-laden vine, singing hymns to the mighty God of Israel, who again had mercy on his people." But this beatific period was not suffered by the fanatical powers that be to remain.

The Inquisition, that horrible nightmare, that fiendish instrument of carnage and torture, which had covered glorious Spain with eternal infamy, was visited upon loyal Israel, with the tacit approval of their Majesties, Ferdinand and Isabella. A sad commentary indeed, on the frame of mind of the unreasoning populace of Navarre, Castile, Arragon, etc., and a too palpable evidence of base ingratitude of monarch and people to their estimable and patriotic Jewish fellow countrymen. This ineradicable disease of anti-Jewish excesses, this outburst of rage and fury on the part of the adherents of the "religion of love and good will, while it debased the perpetrators and held them forth to the execration of posterity, served to enhance and to bring into strong relief the nobility of character, the exemplary strength of faith and calm resignation of our helpless brethren to whom martyrdom seemed to have been viewed as an inalienable part of their exalted faith, which counsels the commendableness of forfeiting this life for the ineffable bliss of a future state. And the grim story of tumultuous expeditions of the Crusaders did not add to the "comity of nations." Der Jude wird immer verfolgt!

But, amid this recrudescence of fanaticism so malignant, the irradiating luster of the Jewish character and the enviable quality of the Jewish citizenship shamed their persecutors. Like a beacon of light, standing upon an eminence and warning the mariners to avoid the lanes of shoals and rocks brimful of danger, so had Israel been. They stood for the maximum of human justice. They have never ceased to emphasize, by word and deed, the eternal principles expressive of an intensive and an all-embracing humanity. The B'nai B'rith cherishes the principles of human justice and perfect equality. It is an organization whose extent and ramifications are world-wide. Its aim is to vindicate the claim of the Jew to the irreducible minimum of justice and the exemption from the bane of discrimination. As a human entity, as an indisputable factor in the social organism, the Jew demands justice and no special privilege and immunities. He asks for justice, which is the fundamental virtue of social life. For, as a French historian so convincingly says, "It embraces all those actions that are indispensable to society, and that every virtue, under the name of charity, sincerity, humanity, probity, love of country, generosity, simplicity of manners and modesty, are but varied forms and diversified applications of this axiom

Conceived by public-spirited coreligionists and dedicated to the proposition that all God's handiwork are born equal, but viewing with regret and dismay the tardiness with which the preponderating majority of mankind, are accepting the principle of human justice, in especial reference to the descendants of the Patriarchs the B'nai B'rith, by collective counsel and by concerted deliberation, set itself the noble task, resolutely, to redress their brethren's grievances, to bring light and enlargement into their dwelling, and to ameliorate their status in those countries, stifled and surcharged with the pestiferous odor of persecution, so that in the stately diction of the prophet Amos (ch V. v. 24), "Judgment shall roll down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream."

Verily, Justice exalted a nation. Zedakah t'romem goi. Justice which is divine, which recognizes the sovereign right of all men to a like treatment and encourages all opportunities for the development of the innate powers of men; which knows no ill-treatment on the score of difference of creed, but fully holds out the hand of genuine fellowship to those who pursue a right conduct and contribute to the social, moral and material well being of state, aye, that justice which admits of this broad conception will assuredly exalt a nation.

May the B'nai B'rith prove the beneficent and constructive instrument in the consummation and in the energizing of the humanitarian purpose, for which it strives with such commendable zeal and indomitable resolution. For, assuredly, the excellence of the citizenship of the Hebrew—even amid inhospitable and malevolent environments, is universally conceded and has become a well-established axiom.

UNION OF AUSTRIAN JEWS.

The Austrian Government has sanctioned the scheme of an Imperial union of all Jewish communities in Austria. According to the scheme eight provincial unions will be established. The provincial unions will form one Imperial union. The object of the union will be to establish seminaries for rabbis and teachers, to support all small and poor communities, and to safeguard the interests of the Jews in general. It is reported that all sections of Jewry excepting the devout assimilators, are enthusiastic about this plan, and it is hoped that it will speedily be carried into effect.

CHICAGO BIG BROTHER MOVEMENT.

An Appeal to the Members of the Chicago Lodges.

The Social Service Department of the Central B'nai B'rith Council has established an office in the Tribune Building for its Big Brother work. A secretary has been engaged to devote his full time to this movement and it is expected that results will soon follow.

Should this work prove successful it will satisfy a need long felt in Chicago. Each day there appear in the courts of Chicago a number of boys who, through lack of proper guidance, commit delinquencies sufficient to bring them before the judge. In practically all of these cases, the friendly advice of an older brother, or an adult friend, would have checked these tendencies in the boy. The Central Council of B'nai B'rith is undertaking the big work of preventing the appearance of Jewish boys in the city courts.

The Secretary is making an appeal to all members of the Chicago lodges to volunteer their services as Big Brothers. Surely many men will add their names to the list when they realize that by so doing they can keep the Jewish boys from the courts and so save them to the Jewish community.

Through the office the men who thus volunteer their services will be assisted in every way in improving the home conditions of the boy, in furthering his education, in supplying him with work, or in rendering him any financial assistance necessary.

Join in the work. Help keep one more boy straight.

All men volunteering for this work should send their names to L. Edward Lashman, secretary, 1228 Tribune Building.

B'NAI B'RITH OF GERMANY

With the beginning of the month of September this year, vacation was over for the individual lodges as well as for the Grand Lodge of District No. 8, and the B'nai B'rith in Germany resumed activities with fresh energy and renewed vigor.

On September 9, Brother Grand President Timendorfer presided at a meeting of the Executive Committee which was held at the temporary meeting rooms of the lodges.

Before proceeding with the order of the day the Grand President gave expression to some warm words of praise in memory of the departed Ex-President of Montefiore Lodge of Berlin, Brother Counsellor of Justice Dr. Ignatz Cohn. The deceased Brother was a prominent lawyer who took a great interest in the welfare of the community in which he filled a position of honor. Although he was a very busy man, he found time to devote himself zealously to the aims and objects of the Order and was for a number of years a member of the Court of Appeals.

With great gratification the Executive Committee received the report that on August 13, 1916, an observation tower was publicly dedicated, which was erected upon the Eichwalds Kopf, near Schmitten, in honor of Brother Ex-Vice President Joseph Wisloch of Frankfort-on-the-Main. As President of the Taunus Club Brother Wisloch has shown great ability and constant devotion to duty, and in gratitude for the blessed work which he has accomplished the structure was given the name of Joseph Wisloch Tower.

Three Berlin lodges submitted to the Grand Lodge the programs of their work for the first winter months. Brother Timendorfer called the attention of the Executive Committee to these programs and placed special emphasis upon the fact that the Berlin lodges have provided for the intellectual advancement by a series of lectures. The Executive Committee expressed its joy over the fact that the monition of the Grand President has fallen on fruitful soil in a good many lodges. It thanked the Berlin Lodges and gave utterance to the hope that all the rest of the lodges in the District will not remain behind the Berlin Lodges. The Grand President stated that it is his special wish that the lodges shall do all they possibly can to increase their membership during the winter. It is already known that during the year 1916 the membership of the District has decreased by several hundred members.

Brother Timendorfer expressed great satisfaction with the report of Lessing Lodge of Breslau, that it has recently received several foundations, toward which, among others, Brother Commercial Counsellor Sternberg gave 5,000 mark, Brother Moschkowitz 1,000 mark, and Brother Meyer Koppenheim 600 mark. This lodge has also resumed its regular meetings on September 9.

Up to the present time the sum of 61,857 mark were collected for the War Welfare Fund.

It was resolved to request those lodges whose general contributions do not yet reach the expected amount of 10 mark per member, to send in the sum received to date with the names of the donors and to raise the missing sum as soon as possible, so that the collection can be closed.

The Executive Committee resolved to secede from the Union of the Societies of Jewish Nurses, because the Union will not permit the B'nai B'rith nurses to wear a cap-band with the initials I. O. B. B.

The interesting report of the Central Association for the welfare of the youths about its activity during the year 1915, was received and filed. The membership fee to this association for 1916, amounting to 100 mark, has been ordered to be paid at a previous meeting of the Executive Committee.

Upon the request of Officiating Councellor of Justice Fayans-Bernam, at present States Attorney in Schaulen, the Grand Lodge appropriated the sum of 200 mark for the benefit of a woman living there who is in great need. The money was sent to the Counsellor of Justice who offered to pay it out to the poor woman in weekly installments of 15 to 20 mark. In consideration of the fact that in his request the Counsellor of Justice also touched upon the woeful circumstances of the rest of the Jews in Schaulen, the Executive Committee has inquired of the "Relief Fund of 1915" what it intends to do for the suffering Jews in Schaulen, and the "Relief Fund" answered that the Jewish population in Schaulen receives a monthly assistance of 1,000 mark, and that a delegate of the Hilfsverein is contemplating to visit shortly the occupied territory on which occasion he will also study the needy condition of the Jews in Schaulen, and will then report.

Brother Stein reported that the Toynbee Hall of the Berlin Lodges will resume its activity during this winter in the usual manner and he expressed the hope that in spite of the hard times the managers of the Toynbee Hall will be in the position to carry out its program throughout the entire winter as a blessing to the suffering coreligionists.

Action on a petition of Brother Field Chaplain Rabbi Dr. Winter for aid for the Jewish population in Grodno, was laid over to the next meeting of the Executive Committee, when the "Relief Fund" will have reported.

It was resolved to send friendly gifts to the brethren in Ruheleben and to the B'nai B'rith nurses in the field.

Upon motion of the Finance Committee the Grand Lodge will subscribe 30,000 mark to the Fifth War Loan. The Executive Committee expressed the conviction that in these hard times the individual lodges will surely also fulfill their duty to the fatherland and help the War Loan as much as it lies within their power.

Brother Ex-Grand President Fenchel completes, on October 7, this year, the eightieth year of his life.

A considerable number of the German lodges reported that a great many brethren and relatives of brethren have been decorated with the Iron Cross and other medals of distinction, and that quite a number of brethren have been promoted to the rank of officer in reward for bravery on the battlefield and for efficient service rendered to the fatherland.

The Executive Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 8 met in Berlin at the residence of Brother Timendorfer on October 3, 1916.

Brother Timendorfer announced that Brother Ex-President Waythaler of Allenstein, has several highly interesting articles in the "Allenstein Zeitung" of August 27, 30 and 31, on the invasion of Allenstein by the Russians.

Brother Kuznitzky has attended the dedication of the new lodge rooms of Fraternitas Lodge in Dresden as the representative of Brother Timendorfer and reports that the ceremony was extraordinarily elevating.

Brother Dr. Adam of Steinthal Lodge in Hamburg, who is now at the Russian front as head staff and regiment physician, was decorated with the Iron Cross first class.

Brother Dr. Hollander reports about the last trips of the Hospital Train which is in great demand. Just now it has brought 230 seriously wounded to Leipzig. It may be that special water tanks for the winter will be built at the expense of the government in the single wagons for the sick.

By the withdrawal of Brother Maretzki from the Executive Committee a seat has become vacant in the Executive Committee, and by the withdrawal of the brethren Schleyer, Plant and Maretzki three seats have become free in the General Committee. In reality the Grand Lodge as such is alone authorized to fill these seats in the General Committee. But as at the present time the Grand Lodge cannot be convened it is to be proposed to the General Committee to elect Brother Ex-President Dr. Hirsch in place of Brother Maretzki, who shall then. by virtue of his being the chairman of the Committee on Nurses also become a member of the Executive Committee.

The prospect of calling a meeting of the Grand Lodge in the near future is soon to be considered.

With satisfaction the Executive Committee took cognizance of a letter of the President of the Order, Brother Kraus, dated June 9, 1916, which came into the possession of the Executive Committee on September 13. In this letter Brother Kraus imparts the information that the Executive Committee of the Order has resolved to put a stop under all circumstances to the publication in the "B'nai B'rith News" of all remarks which contain anything to which any one of the belligerent nations may object as being injurious or fault-finding. He writes:

"During the continuance of the war we wish to avoid everything which could wound the patriotic feelings of even the most sensitive brother, but we reserve the right to throw light upon the conditions in Russia and Roumania where our brethren are so frightfully persecuted."

Brother Alexander Katz reported that the relief of Roumanian Jews in Germany does not meet with any objection on the part of the authorities and that according to information received by him such relief can be granted.

Brother Field Chaplain Dr. Sali Levi in Wilna, requests the assignment of 2,000 mark for the Children's Polyclinic of Wilna. Some time ago 3,000 mark were placed by the resolution of the General Committee at the disposal of an institution which the chief physician, Dr. Hamburger, had undertaken to establish. As through the recall of Dr. Hamburger the project could not be realized, 1,000 mark was paid out for a similar clinic which already existed in Wilna under the management of Dr. Schabad.

The Nurses' Union of Herder Lodge and three brethren of the Grand Lodge have placed 2,200 mark at the disposal of the Grand Lodge for East Jewish purposes, the union of nurses stating specifically that their money is for the milk kitchen in Wilna. It was decided that 1,000 mark of the above amount shall be assigned to the children's polyclinic in Wilna.

Field Chaplain Dr. Winter, in Grodno, applied to Breisgau Lodge in Friedburg for a collection of means for the establishment of work shops in Grodno for young men and young girls. The Jewish "Relief Fund" having been asked for an expression of opinion on the matter, warned against the dissipation of funds. It stated that the relief work for Russian Poland is organized upon a plan of unity and Grodno is being continually helped. From January till October, 1916, it has already received 111,000 mark. For these reasons an appropriation for Grodno could not be made.

Lessing Lodge in Breslau has resolved to petition the Grand Lodge to set aside a sum of at least 30,000 mark from the proceeds of the collections for the War Welfare Fund, which shall serve as a nucleus of a foundation for the benefit of brethren in distress.

The proposition will be given consideration by the General Committee. Brother Peiser will report on it and he will be assisted by Brother Ginsberg.

Brother Archivist Dr. Zizier of Pless, has written a work "About the Races and Eastern Jewish Question," which was published by Karl Jollowicz in Posen. In this work the author states the respective conditions in a clear and lucid manner. The book is especially appropriate for non-Jewish circles. It is urgently recommended to the lodges to give it their consideration and to help to increase its circulation. Free copies can be had at the office of the Central Society of German Citizens of the Jewish Faith, S. W. 13 Linden Street, Berlin.

On October 17, 1916, a meeting of the Executive Committee of District No. 8 was held in Berlin, at the residence of Brother Grand President Timendorfer, who occupied the chair. Brother Grand President Timendorfer imparted information that the managing physician of the Hospital Train, Brother ex-President Dr. Zimmermann, has withdrawn from his post. Although the agreement with Brother Zimmermann still had to run several weeks Brother Zimmermann gave up his place before the expiration of the agreement because he considered this step to be in the interest of the Grand Lodge, for an opportunity offered itself at that time to procure a head physician for the Hospital Train in the person of the staff physician, Dr. Jakubowski, a military chief physician, in place of the managing doctor, gives the advantage of being able to dispense with the director of transport. As Dr. Jakubowski will very shortly be initiated in Amicitia Lodge, only brethren will be active in the leading positions of the Hospital Train.

Brother Dr. Zimmermann was unfortunately forced to decline to remain permanently with the Hospital Train on account of his private practice.

The withdrawal of Brother Dr. Zimmermann is undoubtedly a great loss to the Hospital Train. He has positively conducted his office in an exemplary manner. His relation with the brethren on the train were truly fraternal and friendly and in his work for the fatherland and for the Grand Lodge he was a model of industry and fidelity. He is at all times sure of the heartiest thanks of the German District of the Order.

Brother ex-President Maxmilian Stein of Berlin tendered 5,000 mark to the Grand Lodge as a nucleus for a Maxmilian Stein foundation, the interest of which shall be applied to the benefit of the Jewish youths according to the discretion of the Grand Lodge. The Executive Commitee accepted the foundation with hearty thanks.

In a letter dated Oct. 4, 1916, the German union of Jewish Nurses deplores the fact that the nurses' organization of the Grand Lodge has seceded from the union, but it expresses the hope that the friendly relations between the Grand Lodge and the union will not be in any way disturbed and that both organizations will go together in any important question for the benefit of the cause of the Jewish nurses.

Brother Timendorfer paid a visit to Hardenberg Lodge in Frankfort o. t. O. and delivered a lecture there on Sunday, Oct. 15, 1916. Brother Timendorfer highly praised the zeal with which the brethren seek to fulfill the duties of the Lodge. Also on this visit the Brother Grand President was strengthened in his conviction that the attendance at the meetings of the lodge can be increased by interesting reports and lectures only. For this reason he proposed to the Executive Committee that the war, notwithstanding it shall foster the spiritual work in the lodges. For this purpose the Grand Lodge shall grant subsidies to the smaller lodges which are not in a position to arrange extensive lecture courses. In order to be able to place at the disposal of the lodges a number of lecturers, Brother Timendorfer proposed to publish a new list of speakers which has not appeared since 1914.

The Executive Committee concurred in the propositions of Brother Timendorfer and resolved to act accordingly.

In a letter the Steinthal Lodge of Hamburg referred to the proceedings of the Executive Committee in the matter of the Committee Pro causa Judaica which was established in Switzerland. In this letter the lodge explains that some time ago the Executive Committee has, especially in view of the neutrality of Roumania, adopted the resolution that for the present it shall not take a decisive position in the question suggested by the Switzerland Committee.

The Lodge inquired whether the Executive Committee still maintains the same standpoint after Roumania has joined Germany's enemies in a cunning manner. Brother Kuznitzky pointed to the fact that in a previous meeting the Executive Commitee had expressly decided that on account of the lodges this question shall not be taken up at all because it is of a political nature. To the individual lodges it remains unforbidden to foster the work of this committee. The Executive Committee decided to act accordingly.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE FOR AN AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS.

In accordance with the articles of the agreement entered into on October 2nd and subsequently ratified by the Jewish Congress Organization Committee and the Conference of National Jewish Organizations, the calling and the organizing of the proposed American Jewish Congress has been placed in the hands of an Executive Committee of one hundred and forty to be known as the Executive Committee for an American Jewish Congress. Of the one hundred and forty members of this committee, seventy are representatives of the Jewish Congress Organization Committee and seventy of the Conference of National Jewish Organizations, six of whom represent the Independent Order B'nai B'rith.

A meeting of sub-committees of the two organizations interested for the purpose of arranging details of the first meeting of the Executive Committee for an American Jewish Congress was held on Sunday, December 3rd, and a committee on arrangements was selected with power to call the organization meeting of the Executive Committee.

By virtue of the power vested in the sub-committee on arrangements a meeting of the Executive Committee of One Hundred and Forty will take place on Monday morning, December 25th, beginning at 10 o'clock sharp at the Hotel Savoy, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth street, New York City, when permanent organization will be effected and other business relating to the organization of the Congress will be considered.

The sub-committees of the two organizations interested propose the following tentative program for the meeting on December 25th:

1. Roll call.
2. The election of a temporary Chairman and Secretary.
3. The election of a Nominating Committee.
4. The election of permanent officers, such as: Chairman, Secretary, Treasurer and an Administrative Committee to take charge of the detailed work of the organization.
5. Date of the Congress and place of the same.
6. Methods of electing delegates to the Congress.
7. The matter of placing the question of constructive relief on the agenda of the Congress.

As all elements in American Jewry have agreed to the holding of an American Jewish Congress and a large responsibility rests upon the Executive Committee of One Hundred and Forty forthwith to take up the problems involved in securing full rights for the Jews in all lands, the importance of this meeting cannot be over-emphasized.

The Menorah Movement

By Benjamin Levinson

of Yale University, Vice-President of the Intercollegiate Menorah Association.

From the moment the light of the Menorah, that ancient historic symbol of intellectual warmth and enlightenment, which the Jews carried with them into captivity, was recognized by a small group of Jewish students at Harvard, a new era of progress was initiated among the Jewish students of America.

In this critical period when the center of gravity in the Jewish world has once more unmistakably shifted, when with a population of nearly three million Jews in America, the responsibility as well as the distinction of world leadership in Jewry falls upon us, it is important to examine the progress of "the Jewish student movement of America." A recent census conducted in the universities revealed that there are at least 10,000 Jewish students attending the colleges and universities of the country. It is conceded that these 10,000 young men and women represent an important potentialty in Jewish life and development. The Menorah idea, whether by anticipation of the unique role that American Jewry was destined to play, or because of its deep attachment to the culture, achievements and ideals of the Jewish people, set itself the important task of bringing about a renaissance among the Jewish students of the country.

The late Joseph Jacobs in his greeting to The Menorah Journal upon the appearance of the first issue, said—"I greet the appearance of the official organ of the Menorah Societies something in the spirit of Ibsen's Master-Builder, who hears the coming generation knocking at the door." This greeting may equally well have been applied to the first Menorah Society at Harvard, which was organized in the first university of America in October, 1906. "The fomation at Harvard University of the first Menorah Society is a landmark in the Jewish Renaissance," said Justice Brandeis in his greetings. The organization of the parent Menorah Society meant the creation of a movement for the study and advancement of Jewish culture and ideals which was to scatter its seed to the leading universities of America. The Menorah idea was conveyed through the able and enthusiastic disciples graduated from Harvard; but chiefly because of the spontaneous and contagious wave of self-realization and awakening that followed the inception of the Menorah idea. The same conditions and phenomena of Jewish student life that existed at Cambridge existed with certain local modifications in the other universities.

While it has been found that the Jewish students who attended our universities a generation ago were dominantly possessed of the belief that participation in Jewish life and studies were incompatible with their aim of complete association in the student life of the university, that attitude, while still prevalent, has undergone at Harvard, as elsewhere, disillusionment and change. With the beginning of the present century Jewish students began to appear in our universities in increasing numbers. The inherent love of education, coupled with American opportunity, multiplied the number of Jewish students seven or eight-fold in a very short period. For a time this changed condition brought only a state of chaos. There was a striking indifference and apathy to all things Jewish, and a consequent shameful ignorance of the history, literature, religion and achievement of the Jewish people. Men who understand themselves aright would be proud of their lineage, under the spell of illusion and shame, even denied their Jewish heritage. Perhaps the most unfortunate and deplorable phase of the changed conditions was the deep rift of antagonism and mistrust that arose between Jew and Jew. There arose classes of Jewish students who formed themselves into antagonistic groups, forgetful of the common bonds of intellectuality as well as the mutual ties that bound them together.

To heal this breach, to inculcate in the Jewish students a respect for their heritage, to inspire them with devotion to the high ideals that is the proud patrimony and achievement of the Jew, to instill in them a desire to study the literature, the history, the religion and the problems of the Jew, Menorah Societies were organized in the universities of the country. This movement starting at Harvard because of the spontaneous desire of a handful of students to promote these objects has spread rapidly and naturally until today in the decennial year of the movement, there exist [illegible] r can [illegible] according [illegible] in the East, [illegible] University of California in the West, and as far south as the Universities of Texas and Tulane, are affiliated and united in one national organization known as the Intercollegiate Menorah Association. That within the short period of ten years Menorah Societies should exist in nearly all the principal universities of the country attests to the deep-rooted demand among the Jewish students for an organization that will minister to their intellectual and spiritual needs.

In the pursuit of the object defined in its Constitution, to-wit: "The promotion in American colleges and universities of the study of Jewish history, culture and problems, and the advancement of Jewish ideals," the Intercollegiate Menorah Association performs two functions; first, it regulates the nature and purposes of every constituent Menorah Society and secondly, it endeavors to stimulate and assist the Menorah Societies in carrying out their common purposes. The Intercollegiate has come to be recognized by Jewish undergraduates as the one national organization of its kind, dedicated to the serious purpose of contributing to their intellectual, moral and spiritual uplift. Its aim is distinctive and unique; unlike the Jewish Greek-letter fraternities, it does not organize Jewish men primarily for social purposes; unlike other societies it is not organized for partisan propaganda. Not only has the Intercollegiate Menorah become the official mouthpiece of Jewish undergraduates, but with the continuing development of the movement, followed by the graduation of more and more members, and the constantly increasing number of graduates attracted by the activities of the organization, the Intercollegiate is assuming the larger proportions of the Jewish academic movement of the country.

Since the primary object of a Menorah Society is the study of Jewish history, literature, religion and ideals, it endeavors first of all to be strictly academic in nature. A Menorah Society is open in every university to all men interested in a liberal, non-partisan study of the culture and achievements of the Jewish people. It partakes of the liberal character of American universities themselves which offer the student the opportunity of electing a liberal course in the arts and sciences. A Menorah Society, while making its earnest appeal to the Jewish students, is open to all men of the university, Jew and Gentile. For the Jewish student a Menorah Society particularly supplies a need by furnishing him with courses in Jewish history and contemporary problems; the courses offered by the Semitics departments in most universities do not fulfill the requirements of Jewish students desiring a general knowledge in that field. Furthermore, Menorah Societies, through the loyal self-sacrificing co-operation of a body of Jewish scholars and men of affairs have given the Jewish students the unique opportunity and advantages of drinking knowledge and inspiration from the messages and association with these princes and sages of Israel in America.

Partly through self-realization and re-awakening, partly through association with Menorah lecturers, a Menorah Society is instrumental in producing Jewish students with virile moral fibre. Consequent upon the intellectual grasp of the splendid contribution of the Jew to civilization, his unique survival through the ages, persisting in his adherence to certain high ideals, there comes in just appreciation of the nobility of his heritage. Shame and concealment is placed by ready acknowledgment of his Jewish heritage, a spirit of reverence for the ideals and achievements of the Jewish past, a true appreciation of the present day problems of the Jew, and finally a spirit of obligation and services to the future of the Jew. A new moral attitude is created whereby the class distinctions too strictly drawn between the rich and poor Jew, the orthodox and the reform, the Zionist and the non-Zionist, are reduced or obliterated. A Menorah Society is thus an agency for unifying and consolidating Jewish men, under the full recognition that as Jews they have common moral and intellectual qualities paramount to the apparent differences that may exist.

A Menorah Society by thus unifying the different elements of Jewish students and inculcating in them the spirit of service is a valuable patriotic agency. Professor Benjamin W. Bacon said In an address before the Yale Menorah, "I think I see in your society a recognition of the real spirit of the motto of our country, e pluribus unum. That does not mean a sinking of the differences between us all into absolute uniformity, but rather the harmony that can result from the recognition of these differences and developing your own individualities so that we shall have a variety in unity." America thus requires that the Jews shall not sink their individuality and distinctiveness absolutely and irrevocably in some indefinable melting-pot, but that the Jew shall as a people contribute their full share of ethical and cultural values to American civilization. What richer field of contribution to the future development of America lies before the Jewish students than service in the large Jewish communities which have arisen in recent years? In addition to the fulfillment of general obligations to state and nation which every citizen must give, there is afforded this remarkable opportunity for enlightened leadership and loyal co-operation in the work of the community. Our multiplying problems, our increasing measure of responsibility, calls for servants and leaders ot the new generation, who will combine an understanding of the deep underlying roots of American institutions with a warm devotion to the tradition and ideals of their Jewish heritage. The Menorah Societies are serving this double function.

A Menorah Society is accorded honor and respect on the university campus because of its recognized cultural value. A Menorah Society is looked upon as a cultural institution similar in character to the Deutscher Verein or Cercle Francais; it functions as an open forum from which Jewish culture and ideals may be presented to the entire student body. A Menorah Society does much for the dissemination of enlightenment about the Jew to the non-Jew. Far from accentuating prejudice and antisemitism it exerts a wide beneficent influence by conveying to the non-Jewish students knowledge of the true Jew and his real contribution. The warm endorsements given the Menorah Movement by the college authorities in every university are but the recognition of the universal influence exerted by Menorah Societies in university life. Indeed, the sanction of the authorities of a university are a sine qua non to the establishment of a Menorah Society. University authorities have, however, given more than their mere sanction and approval to the movement. Ex-President Eliot of Harvard is one of the very ardent admirers of the Menorah Movement; President Wheeler of California has accorded the Menorah Society a high place of honor in the activities of the university; President Hadley of Yale warmly endorses the movement: "By studying the literature and history of the Jewish race, men at Yale and elsewhere can do a great work for the learning and for the inspiration of our country; especially can this Society do a noble and inspiring work."

The Intercollegiate has thus been enabled to prosecute its program in the various universities through suitable means. It has enrolled in its service as lecturers the leading rabbis, scholars, and men of affairs of America. Through the instrumentality of the Intercollegiate these lecturers have appeared from Menorah platforms in the universities of the country. Through programs and syllabi of study in Jewish history, literature and problems, the constituent societies have been stimulated to go a step further than the passive attendance at lectures. Study-groups for intensive study and research work in the field of Jewish history and achievement have been established by nearly all Menorah Societies. As a consummation of opportunity and accomplishments, the Menorah Societies have been enabled, through assistance rendered by B'nai B'rith Lodges, in some instances, and through public-spirited individuals, in other cases, to establish Menorah Prize Competitions for essays dealing with the history, culture and religion of the Jew. Not only have these prizes stimulated Jewish students to fruitful labor in the field of Jewish humanities, but Gentile students have freely participated, and the dignity of the Menorah movement has been enhanced in the respective universities. To assist in the work of these competitions and in the general functions of Menorah activities, Menorah Libraries have also been established, containing a complete set of the books issued by the Jewish Publication Society of America and other volumes.

For a long time the founders of the Menorah Movement entertained fond hopes and aspirations of establishing a nonpartisan, academic publication to act as an ideal medium of communication between the societies and serve the additional function of standing as the true exponent of Jewish culture and ideals to the thinking men and women of America. The appearance of "The Menorah Journal" in January, 1915, was greeted with responses of admiration mixed with amazement. Its external forms strikingly aesthetic, its literary contents vigorous and substantial, yet non-partisan; the whole enterprise the accomplishment of a movement of the Jewish college youth of America who had consecrated themselves to the field of Jewish service in the spirit of noblesse oblige. American Jewry was astounded by this heroic undertaking, and many predicted that "The Menorah Journal" had overshot its mark, had established too lofty a standard to maintain, and would fall by the wayside as a mushroom publication, the dream of idealists. But "The Menorah Journal," as an institution imbued with the fervor and spirit of the Menorah Movement itself, has passed from triumph to triumph. The model publication of America for the dissemination of Jewish culture and ideals, it has commanded the literary talent of the Jewish spokesmen of the age—whether on questions of Reform or Orthodox Judaism, Jewish life and letters, Zionism or anti-Zionism. Its contributors, Gentile as well as Jew, have in many instances been men of international fame. But "The Menorah Journal" has, moreover, been a medium for stimulating the literary genius and production of the Jewish student of America who has recognized the publication as his official organ. Whether you ask the opinion of Jews in Philadelphia and Baltimore, or in Cincinnati and Chicago, you will find that "The Menorah Journal" is a knowledged a literary institution, a constant source of inspiration and encouragement. Had the Menorah Movement contributed to Jewish life in America the single practical contribution of "The Menorah Journal" its existence would be regarded as noteworthy.

Through the instrumentality of "The Menorah Journal," through the constituent societies, its graduates and disciples, the Menorah idea is becoming a more universal influence in American Jewry. The older graduates of the universities who have hitherto been fast in the grasp of lethargy and indifference are awakening to the inspiring message conveyed by Menorah ideals; the men of the community who are helping seriously to shape the destinies of Jewish development in America and abroad, are coming to a realization of the immense possibilities of this movement of the young educated Jews of America. On the threshold there appears a generation of Jewish young men and women, who, while they are trained in the liberal arts and sciences, while they are imbued with a deep sense of patriotism to America, refuse to suppress and conceal their identity, or content themselves with a spirit of laissez-faire towards all things Jewish. The new generation pledges its loyalty to the ancient Menorah. It is imbued with a just sense of pride in the knowledge of its Jewish heritage, it is acquiring Jewish consciousness and sense of obligation which will fit them in heart and mind to be true servants of their people.

The future of the Menorah Movement rests not only with the Jewish students, but with the men of the community who can help to fulfill the dreams and visions of Menorah leaders—Menorah lectureships, chairs in Jewish history and literature in our universities, Menorah classics, the establishment of more Menorah prizes, Graduate Menorah Societies, the wider circulation of "The Menorah Journal," with its message of enlightened Judaism. Is this a mere skeleton program or will it be given soul and substance? Already Associate Committees are springing up in our larger Jewish centers—New York, San Francisco, Chicago, Pittsburg—to mobilize the moral and material forces of the community about this Jewish student movement, young, virile, and potential. Dr. Emil Hirsch at a meeting held in Chicago for this purpose recently said: "All possible encouragement and assistance should be given to the Intercollegiate Menorah Association for the reason that their efforts tend to help build the future."

The Menorah Movement has already stimulated and attracted annually a body of three thousand Jewish students to the light and warmth of the Menorah. The Menorah is not merely symbolical and metaphorical, but is a living force in the lives of many; it is the beacon light of high ideals, morality and perseverance that has illumined the way for the preservation of the Jewish future. When the great body of Jewish students of America, of whom there are 10,000 in our universities today shall have been brought within the zone of Menorah light and radiance, the future of the Jew here and elsewhere will have been immensely benefitted.

Americanization of the Immigrant

Manual Published Under the Auspices of the Social Service Department of the I.O.B.B.

Problem.

According to the last United States census, there were in 1910 thirteen million foreigners in America, of whom three million could not speak the English language. Over one million were illiterate, yet only 35,000 adult foreigners were attending the night schools of America. These figures are approximately the same today. The problem of educating immigrants in the English language has never received the consideration due its importance. Today Americanizing the immigrant is becoming a chief concern of the Department of the Interior. The present European war has emphasized the need of greater solidarity in America. Speeches have been heard by radical and irresponsible persons, apparently placing fealty to the land of one's birth above loyalty to America. Such words led many thoughtless citizens to plead more strongly for the restriction of foreigners and to join labor leaders in urging that the existing laws on immigration be made more stringent. Thoughtful and far-seeing citizens argue for the Americanization of these immigrants. They believe that we have neglected our plain duty in not opening our schools, day and night to the immigrants and offering them every opportunity for acquiring the American spirit so as to become thoroughly at home in our land.

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith feels that there is much work to be done in Americanizing those Jews who have come here from distant shores. Because of a desire for religious freedom, as well as the opportunity for economic independence, our brethren have landed in large numbers. That thousands of Jews will come here at the conclusion of the war is the earnest conviction of many thoughtful persons. One illustration is clearly shown in the clothing industry. Workers in that trade were never receiving such high wages. Never before have they saved as they now are putting aside every possible penny. This money is being saved to bring over their relatives from the lands of desolation and persecution as soon as the war will cease. Prudence urges that we prepare the way for the new immigrants. Let us hasten the process by which those persons now in America may be aided in their desire to become thorough-going American citizens.

Figures for Chicago indicate that of its two million and a half inhabitants two hundred thousand are ignorant of English and eighty thousand can neither read nor write any language at all. There are eighty-six newspapers in Chicago printed in twenty-five different languages and more than half the citizens of Chicago read non-English papers. Such figures do not indicate proper assimilation. Chicago may be an unfair illustration. In Los Angeles, where a survey was made in 1915, the percentage of foreign-born population is not so large. Because of the strange environment, the economic difficulties and unusual hardships of making their living in a new land, we might expect some special provision to be made for them. Yet only eight-tenths of one per cent represents the total amount of money spent to help these people. The school budget totaled $38,983 for night schools toward Americanizing these immigrants. Less than 1 per cent of the budget is set aside to prevent the misery which results in 40 per cent of the sickness, crime and unemployment in the city. While these figures will not hold for Jewish people in America, there are too many Jews who can neither read nor write English. Were they aided along these lines, they would become far more useful citizens.

Here is a vast field for real preparedness. Unless this problem be attacked and overcome, it is absolutely certain that there will be restriction in immigration. Only the presidential veto has prevented such a bill from being enacted, time and again. Both houses of Congress today overwhelmingly favor such a law. The best argument to counteract this illiberal spirit is to Americanize the immigrants within our borders. The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith feels that a splendid opportunity is here offered to educate and assist those Jewish men, women and children who are already with us. It proposes, by means of schools, centers and through personal friendship, to fit our brethren to take their places in America, where they can be the most useful parents to their children, the most efficient economically, and will best help America, as well as Judaism.

Plan.

While this idea of Americanizing every Jewish immigrant is essentially a Jewish concern, yet in a larger phase it is distinctly an American problem. Therefore, as American citizens, we should help to create a strong public opinion in every city which shall insist on the creation and proper maintenance of night schools. Some cities lack them altogether. In other communities these schools are conducted for a few months each winter with tired day-school teachers, or students earning their way through college, in charge of classes. Such teachers work a great hardship on the pupils. Teachers should be selected with the utmost care for this difficult labor. Very few communities in America have yet grasped the idea that the night school is a most vital part of the larger school problem. The curriculum should not pattern after the primary or grammar grades, but should be arranged with special thought to the needs of the particular group of immigrants, and the special nationalities of immigrants attending the school. Every effort should be made to encourage attendance, both of men and women, and the school should be most convenient to the center of population. In 1915, after a spirited campaign to encourage attendance at night school, Detroit increased the attendance 153 per cent.

In addition to the night school, there should be a day school for adult foreigners in the larger cities, with a curriculum and discipline suitable to the needs of the pupils attending. Many workmen, such as waiters, motormen and conductors employed in the rush hours, have free time during the day to attend school and can be given what is almost equivalent to individual instruction.

Where no night school is organized under the direction of the public school system the local lodges of the B'nai B'rith should encourage one for co-religionists under Jewish auspices. Teachers should be engaged who speak clear and grammatical English, as well as understand Yiddish. The curriculum should be shaped along practical lines. While it is helpful for the students to know important facts in American history and our Constitution, it is of far greater importance to acquaint them, first of all, with the health ordinances of the city, the police rules, and such matters as vitally affect their daily lives. Ignorance of such regulations bring many persons into the police court. A growing feeling throughout the country aims to make the public school much more than a classroom of instruction. It should become a community center. This provides a public forum to encourage good citizenship. It also offers opportunity to speak out in the name of the entire district, as protesting against unclean streets, disreputable houses and gambling dens. This can also voice the communal need as petitioning for recreational grounds and increased school facilities.

The B'nai B'rith, through its stated committee, should get in touch with the Jewish students attending night school, and along the line of the "Big Brother" principle, provide fellowship for these people. Not only the husband, but his wife should be encouraged to attend night school. This is particularly true in those states where equal suffrage is granted. When a man becomes a citizen, his wife automatically receives the right to vote. For this high privilege, she should be carefully prepared. If the mother learns English she is better able to look after her children. The break between parent and child is lessened when both speak the same language. The mother speaking English can enter more fully into the life of her child. Many cases of child delinquency trace back to children who have broken away from parental control because the father and mother were unable to speak English and follow them in their play hours.

Recommendations.

Each lodge should appoint a sub-committee of the Social Service Committee on Americanization of the Immigrant. This committee shall first make a survey of its local community, if one has not recently been made. Let the committee ascertain the number of Jewish people unacquainted with the English language. These people should be encouraged to attend school. Others should be urged to further their education and advance to economic efficiency.

Everything possible should be done to encourage the men to prepare for citizenship. Every Jew residing here five years should be urged to take out his naturalization papers.

A careful house,to,house survey of the Nineteenth Ward of Chicago has just been made by the Chicago Hebrew Institute, covering 2,099 families. Of the 724 aliens here over twenty-five years, but four neglected to become citizens. Yet almost 40 per cent of our brethren delayed so doing for a number of years. They should be encouraged to become American citizens as soon as their period of residence allows.

The pay night schools too often think only of helping the pupils to secure the necessary credits for admission to higher or professional schools. Their teachers should be urged to emphasize the ethical ideals as well.

Jewish people should be taught that increased knowledge of the English language and American methods mean higher earning capacity. The spirit of industrial efficiency calls for English speaking workmen. Many accidents trace back to misunderstanding of orders. One single blunder, due to a workman's inability to understand English, cost a Detroit firm last year $2,000.00.

Finally, we would emphasize proper religious instruction for the growing youth. Many congregations, composed of recent immigrants, overlook the importance of religious school instruction for the children in English, and Hebrew translation into English. The B'nai B'rith can encourage the formation of such classes for this purpose that our young folks obtain a correct viewpoint of Judaism. They should be told the ethical ideals, and led to the spiritual interpretation of the ceremonies which obtain in traditional Judaism.

Educating our foreign brethren tends to a closer understanding by Americans of the social value of the immigrants. As we give them our American ideals they are better able to give us the finest and best products of their European civilization. All this is not "welfare work." Fundamentally it is the outgrowth of civic necessity. It makes for a better understanding between capital and labor. It will minimize the differences between the several nationalities. It will surely lessen the feeling between Jews coming from different sections of Europe. It will positively create a healthier and better Judaism, and thus a better Americanism in this land.

RELIGIOUS AUTONOMY FOR THE JEWS OF POLAND.

By H. Eliassof.

The report that the emperor of Germany and the late emperor of Austria, who had proclaimed the political independence of Poland, have also decreed the religious autonomy of the Jews of Poland, was generally received by the American Jewish press and the leaders of American Israel with great gladness and satisfaction.

A small number of editors of certain Yiddish papers expressed their doubts of the efficacy and their general disapproval of the edict of the religious autonomy. But their editorials lacked the force of conviction, because they could not hide the fact that they belong to that faction of extremists in Judaism who look with unbridled suspicion upon everything regarding religion that comes from Germany, where Moses Mendelssohn lived and taught and where the search-light of reason was first turned upon blind belief among the Jews. Their reasoning was biased and their conclusions were therefore fallacious.

There really are a number of valid reasons of political, economical and historical import why we should not yet express our unconditional satisfaction with this move by the central powers on the chess-board of the war. When we consider the question in its present aspects we certainly find enough rational reasons why we should not rush for the timbrel and harp to intone hallelujahs and give vent to exuberant joy over this problematic gift to the sorely tried and abundantly anguished Jews of Poland. The whole move is indeed conspicuously problematical. Are not the central powers giving away a bird which is still in the bush where it may easily take wing and fly away beyond reach? The central powers have not yet won the war. What if the entente allies should be the victors? And here is the strong political reason for hesitation. Will Russia, which has loudly protested against the proclamation of the political independence of the Poles living in Russian territory now occupied by the German forces permit the Jewish religious autonomy to continue in case she is victorious?

Russia threatens to mete out dire retribution to her Polish subjects, in case victory perches upon her banners, for accepting the gift of political independence from her enemies. And although the Jews in Russia possess a sort of religious autonomy, are not the Jews of Poland running a tremendous risk by accepting a benefaction from her adversaries before the war has been fought to a finish? Is not the lot of the Jewish subjects of Russia bitter enough without giving this provocation to their tormenter and cruel taskmaster? Besides, we know so very little at present about the real extent and significance of this new religious autonomy.

Will it be modeled after the religious autonomy which the Jews of Germany and Austria enjoy, or will it be a resurrection and repetition of the old religious autonomy which was granted to the Jews of Poland under the charters and privileges purchased by them at immense and immeasurable cost from various Polish Kings and magnates? It is plainly obvious that the plans of the religious autonomy of the German and Austrian Jews is not yet suitable for the Jews of Poland. Neither economically nor culturally are they ripe for such an advanced position. If it is to be the old Polish autonomy over again, which included the arbitrary rule of the Kahal, the degrading pillory, the merciless herem, the neglected hekdesh (almshouse), and all the other institutions, which are out of all harmony with our modern age, such an autonomy is surely not worth having at all.

And here is the historical reason: Poland as an independent state was most of the time a land where the Jews suffered most bitterly from the hatred of the nobles and the church. False accusations were often trumped up against them, either by the one or by the other. Blood accusations, charges of host desecrations and the whole gamut of the satanic inventions as means for murder and carnage were the order of the day. The mobs were at all times ready to swoop down upon the helpless Jews to pillage, to massacre, to ravish and to torture Jewish men, women and children. The greater part of the Jewish population of Poland consisted from the very earliest times of German Jews. They commenced to immigrate into Poland as early as the beginning of the tenth century. They obtained charters and privileges from princes and kings which granted them religious liberty, autonomy in judicial matters, freedom of trade, independence from the Schlakhta, or lesser nobles, and protection from the attacks of hostile mobs. But Poland was always a state that did not possess the ability to maintain peace and order in its own midst and a state that is powerless to enforce peace and order among its own national classes, cannot guarantee liberty for any length of time to the mixed elements of its population who are depending upon the good will of those classes. The charters and privileges given to the Jews by the princes and kings were too frequently disregarded by the nobility, the church and the masses, and the lot of the Jews in Poland became more unbearable than it was in any other country on the face of the globe.

The Jewish Encyclopedia and S. M. Dubnow, in his "History of the Jews in Russia and Poland," tell enough tales of horror of the life of the Polish Jews to make any man shudder. In both places we find the following proclamation of the Jewish Council of the Four Lands, issued in 1676:

"We have sinned grievously against the Almighty; the disturbances increase from day to day. It is becoming more and more difficult to live. Our people are considered as naught among the nations; and it is wonderful, in view of all our misfortunes, that we still exist."

The Jewish Encyclopedia adds to the above: "This was followed by a series of paragraphs ordering implicit obedience to the instruction of the Kahals. In this way the power of the Kahals became very strong and very oppressive and the bulwark of superstition and religious narrowness. It often abused its power. The mental level of the Jews gradually sank."

Even after the last partition of Poland, when the provinces of Warsaw, Wilna and many other districts came under the tyrannical rule of Russia, the Poles vied with their own oppressor in hating and ill-treating the Jews living in their midst. Their recent cowardly commercial boycott against the Jews almost completely ruined the entire Jewish population of Poland.

In the face even of these brief historical outlines of Polish cruel and brutal treatment of the Jews must we not ask the question whether the Poles can now be trusted more than in the past to continue the religious liberty of the Jews for any length of time? And to this question the Poles alone must give the answer.

JEWS AT PUBLIC SCHOOLS, RUSSIA.

The Polytechnic for Women recently opened at Kharkoff has established an open door for Jewesses, no restriction of any kind having been instituted.

On the other hand, a hundred and twenty Jewish refugees have been suddenly expelled from a Kharkoff gymnasium.

GREED.

Just the other day, in agreement with time-honored American custom, we kept the Thanksgiving feast. We on this side of the ocean certainly should be grateful to Providence that we have been spared the horrors of war. All we know about the tragedy of the world-war is what we read at a safe distance. A few Americans have had a glimpse of it, but even their most vivid portrayal is not the same as living through it. We may thank God that our households are intact and that our men are all pursuing peaceful tasks. Yet for all that it cannot be said that the war is not affecting us. Yes, as a nation we are in a highly prosperous condition. We are a selling and a lending nation, not a buying and a borrowing one. Money there is in plenty and it is cheap. The warring nations, particularly the allies, are spending millions of dollars with us. The mills are working with a feverish activity to supply them with munitions and all the outfit that an army is in need of. There are no unemployed. Wages are high. But with it all there is the reverse picture. The price of commodities is mounting high. For the inexorable law of supply and demand rules the market. Our wares are in demand abroad. So we at home are paying the prices those abroad are willing to pay. The dollar is fast losing the purchasing value of a year and a half a year ago. In the midst of unprecedented prosperity the country is groaning under a burden not of its own making. Some of us are growing very rich. But the bulk of the nation are growing poorer. The middle classes are beginning to feel the pinch. As for the poor, the ordinary staples of diet are beyond their pocketbook. And the outlook is not a cheerful one. The war is not going to last forever. Sagacious business men predict that the prosperity will last six months beyond the end of the war. An impoverished Europe will be in no position to buy. They will be of necessity practicing the strictest economy. A panicky feeling is already seizing us now.

It goes without saying that the effects of so gigantic a conflagration must be world-wide. Whensoever wealth is destroyed on an enormous scale, whether by a calamity which no human ingenuity could have warded off, or by the ruthless hands of man, we all have to pay the price. The earthquake and the fire that wrought havoc on the Pacific coast a decade or so ago led to the failure of a [illegible] of insurance companies and [illegible] raised the price of insurance for every one of us. And so it will be when the war shall have ended. But what is aggravating the situation in our midst right now is the inordinate greed of unscrupulous traders in the commodities of life. They who withdraw products from the market, or raise prices arbitrarily, of them it is said: "The Lord sweareth by the pride of Jacob, surely I will never forget any of their works." So say our rabbis of old. Apparently human nature has not changed much. The sin of greed was known in ancient Jerusalem as it is rampant today in Chicago and New York. Whether the evil can be remedied by legislation remains to be seen. The kings of this or that commodity have at their disposal legal talent to see to it that there is no undue restraint of trade. The law seems to be impotent to remedy the evil. Nor can we expect much from an appeal to their consciences, for business is business. Yet it stands to reason that a long-suffering public will lose its patience.

Not only do we confront the greed of individuals, but also the greed of nations. When the furies of war are unleashed, nations seem to forget the elementary duties and conceptions of right. The greed for power and domination is not a whit better than the greed for wealth. And perhaps it is the latter that is at the root of the world war and the manner in which it is conducted. We live in abnormal times and the normal virtues seem to be forgotten. Let us pray for peace that we may rid ourselves speedily of both kinds of greed. It is high time that we are reminded of the fact that as individuals and nations we have a soul which at present stands tarnished. The obsessing vice of the hour is certainly greed.

THE LIGHTS WE KINDLE.

When to the strain of a melody sweet and pleasing we kindle the lights of Hanukkah, what are the emotions that sway us, the memories that thrill us? It is a far-off event that we commemorate. It happened in Palestine so many centuries ago. A vicious king undertook to ride rough-shod over the things sacred to the Jew. There were apostates in our midst, aye, in high position. The priesthood at the Temple had become corrupt, in league with the heathen. The altar had been desecrated and impure sacrifices were offered to a strange god. Sabbath and circumcision were proscribed. The sacred schools were ruthlessly destroyed. A pious priestly family living in a corner away from the noise of the capital rose on behalf of the religion of the fathers. Judah the Maccabee made war upon the Syrian. The few vanquished the many. Jerusalem was occupied by the faithful. The Temple and altar were re-dedicated. A small cruse of oil was found in a nook in the Temple, and the holy lights were kindled afresh. And in commemoration of the miracle it was ordained that for all time to come the Jews should kindle lights in their abodes on the five and twentieth days of Kislev and for seven days thereafter. These are the eight days of Hanukkah, of the re-dedication.

The cruse of oil that miraculously was saved and then sufficed for re-kindling the sacred lights! The miracle has been enacted again and again in the history of the Jew. There have been times when it seemed that our end was come. There are times in the life of an individual when the spirit of endurance, of resistance, is at its lowest; and then suddenly there is light and help. So it is with nations. So is has been with the Jewish people. We have passed through many vicissitudes which seemed to sap our strength. Periodic persecutions dealt us severe blows. The world's catastrophes always involved us. Being few in number, we were the hardest hit. Just now again the voice is heard, The Jew in Eastern Europe is on the road to extinction. It is no alarmist cry; it is the saddest truth. The calamity is certainly one of the greatest in our history. And it touches us to the quick because, help though we shall, we feel that our assistance, even when it is expressed in millions of dollars, will but be a mite. And yet the cry is known to every one who scans the pages of the records of our past. With the prophet of old we have exclaimed many a time, Wilt Thou make an end to the house of Israel? And even in times of peace, of normal conditions the lukewarmness of the many, the indifference of our best intellects, the defection of those on the top have been the refrain of the lamentations of those to whom Israel's weal was dear. A small handful, we seem to be reduced in number so soon as a few peaceful years have been instrumental in furthering our growth. But we never lost our faith in our destiny. Inured to all kinds of misery, our powers of recuperation resemble those of the bird of wonderland. The cruse of oil never fails us. The heroism of the small Maccabean band is still with us. In every generation we have those that valiantly do service in Israel's battles. And what is Israel battling for? What is this festival's watchword? "Not by might, nor by power, but by the spirit of God." We are here to proclaim to the world that might is not right. We are the apostles of the freedom of conscience. Neither persecution nor hardship nor flattering cajolery shall make us swerve from the path marked out for us. Our neighbors talk of peace on earth while engaged in butchering each other. The wickedness of national jealousies is coming home to those who have humanity's welfare at heart. Israel's prophets boldly demanded the cessation of warfare. Israel is imbued with faith in the better nature of man. And in token of this faith we kindle the lights, symbols of peace and joy.

DR. SAMUEL WOLFENSTEIN CELEBRATES 75TH BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY.

Dr. Samuel Wolfenstein, former superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, celebrated his 75th birthday anniversary on December 10, 1916, and graduates of the Home came from all over the country to honor the celebrant. In the morning the Jewish Orphan Asylum Literary Union arranged a program of exercises, including a debate on "Woman's Suffrage." At noon a luncheon was given the visiting graduates at the B'nai B'rith Building, and this was followed by the quarterly meeting of the Alumni directors. In the afternoon a concert was held in the Orphan Asylum Chapel and in the evening at 6:00 a banquet was given in the ballroom at the Hotel Statler, at which more than 300 participated. Mr. Geo. I. Wirpel, president of the Alumni, presided, and the speakers were Rabbi Moses P. Jacobson of Shreveport, La.; Rabbi Abram Simon of Washington, D. C., and Captain F. Slawitzki of Chicago. Dr. Wolfenstein responded.

All those present at the various exercises entered their names in a birthday book, which was presented to the doctor as a memento of the occasion.

Preceding the day of celebration on Saturday evening, a reception was held for all visitors then in the city, at the Hotel Statler.

The B'nai B'rith News extends to Dr. Wolfenstein hearty congratulations, coupled with the prayer that he may be spared for many years to come in the enjoyment of good health and a happy life.

JEWS PERMITTED TO LEAVE OCCUPIED TERRITORY.

The German government has given permission to some classes of the Jewish population of the conquered territories in the East to leave for America. In consequence an emigration movement has set in which may assume great proportions in a short time. As far as Polish Jews are concerned, only those of non-military age are permitted to leave the country. Among the 400 Jewish emigrants from Poland and Lithuania aboard the Ryndam, there are only a few men, and these few are of non-military age.

To comply with the difficulties arising from the new emigration movement, emigration bureaus have been established in Warsaw and Kowno.

PRESENTATION OF TESTIMONIAL TO JUSTICE LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

A Testimonial was presented on November 26th, 1916, to Mr. Justice Louis D. Brandeis, of the United States Supreme Court on the occasion of his Sixtieth birthday. The testimonial reads:

"To the Honorable Louis Dembitz Brandeis, on his sixtieth birthday, November thirteenth, nineteen hundred and sixteen, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Honorary President of the Provisional Executive Committee for General Zionist Affairs, Imbued to the Heart with American and Jewish Ideals and Indefatigable Worker in Translating them into Action—A Testimonial of Gratitude for his Services to the Jewish People and a Tribute of Love and Loyalty to Our Leader."

This testimonial bears 8,000 signatures of persons residing in 210 cities and towns located in 43 of the states of the Union and the Canal Zone. Among the more distant points to send in signatures are Phoenix, Ariz., 15 cities in California, 12 cities in Texas, three cities in Oregon, three cities in Washington and one in the Canal Zone.

The presentation ceremony took place at the Aeolian Building, New York City, and was presided over by Nathan Straus, and the presentation speeches were made by Dr. Stephen S. Wise of the Free Synagogue, New York City, and Jacob de Haas, Secretary of the Provisional Zionist Committee.

A fund is being raised in connection with this testimonial, which fund will be used to create a foundation for some Jewish purpose, the scope and conditions of which will be named by Mr. Justice Brandeis within a few days.

RESOLUTIONS OF ARGO LODGE NO. 413, WASHINGTON, D. C., IN MEMORY OF ISAAC L. BLOUT.

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty Ruler of the Universe, in His benign wisdom, to call from our midst. in the golden evening of his sublime existence, when the shadows were deepening into night, the late lamented brother of our Order, Isaac L. Blout, and

Whereas, Being one of the oldest members of the local lodges of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and a high officer of the Order, he came to be beloved by all its members for the bigness of his heart and the wholesomeness of his soul, and for his untiring zeal and efforts in the work of the Order, and

Whereas, He was a citizen of public spirit and charitable of design, donating his services and his substance for the good and uplift of others, without fear and censure or hope for favor or reward, and

Whereas, a deep and irreparable loss has been suffered to the community, to ourselves, and to his family by his demise, now, therefore,

Be It Resolved, That the condolences and sympathy of Argo Lodge of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith be extended to the family of the dear deceased, who felt his loss most deeply, because of his constancy and devotion to them, and

Be It Further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of Argo Lodge and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

Social Service Department I. O. B. B.

During the past month the work of the Social Service Department has made splendid progress. Mr. Edward Lashman came to Chicago to undertake the new post of Secretary of the Chicago Social Service Committee. His office will be in the headquarters of the order. The personnel of the newly appointed Chicago Committee consists of Israel Cowen, chairman; Edwin Cahn, C. I. Callman, Rabbi Samuel S. Cohon, Joseph Finder, Judge Harry M. Fisher, Hugo M. Friend, Milton R. Hart, Dr. L. R. Melnikoff, Harry Okin, Arthur I. Pereira, Benjamin Samuels, Jacob C. Schwartz, Arthur S. Stein and Bert Stern.

Doctor Coffee, social service director, traveled to various cities in the South last month urging the lodges, through the Social Service Committees, to intensify their activities.

Some very interesting reports have reached the office of constructive labor during the past month. From them we take the following three as typical and as showing various aspects of the work of the department.

I. S. was born in New York City and later moved to Chicago. At the age of 18 he was arrested for disorderly conduct. Had the truth been stated before the judge, he would have been sent to the State Reform School for three years, during which time he would have received proper schooling and learned a trade. Unfortunately he was advised by his lawyer to swear falsely that he was 21 years of age, and to plead guilty. Following this wretched advice, he was sentenced to the state penitentiary for one year. At the conclusion of his term, I. S. returned to Chicago, and was placed in a local sanitarium by friends when he developed signs of tuberculosis. Later he was sent to Denver, Colo., where he regained his lost strength and secured a good position in a department store. The following year a former guard of the Illinois State Peniteniary, while shopping in the store, recognized I. S. as a former inmate at Joliet. That night I. S. lost his position. Soon after the Social Service Committee of Denver was asked to interest itself in him. A good position was quickly found and he is receiving a good weekly wage, as well as sympathetic counsel. Last month he was without friends; now I. S. has earnest friends who will carefully watch his career and guide his steps.

Abraham W. W., born in Poland, is 17 years of age. At the age of 10 he was driven from home by his stepmother. After wandering through many cities of Europe, he left Bremen as a stowaway on a vessel clearing for New Orleans. In 1913 he was arrested in Chicago and sent to a Catholic School. After three weeks in this school he was turned out for refusing to submit to baptism and conversion. The following year he was arrested in Colorado with three other boys for robbing a store, and sent to the State Reform School at Golden, Colo. In July of this year Doctor Coffee, with members of the Social Service Committee visited this school. Abraham was pointed out as hopelessly bad. In conversation Abraham stated that he had not a friend in the world; that no one visits him and there was no reason why he should be good. A Big Brother was at once appointed to look after Abraham and from that day his conduct steadily improved. Each Sunday morning a representative of the Denver Big Brother Movement visits Golden and looks also after every Jewish lad. Efforts were recently made to procure Abraham's release on parole. The State Board agreed on condition that he would enter the navy. A guardian was appointed for him and Abraham is now crossing the Pacific on a man-of-war. Four months ago Abraham was considered incorrigible. Today he is entering a training school which will unquestionably make a real man of him.

S. A. at the age of 17, came to America about 10 years ago. After a brief residence in New York, he drifted to Chicago and commenced to sell cheap jewelry. He was arrested for having robbed a house and though absolutely innocent, was sentenced for a year in the city prison. Quoting his own words, "What I did not know when I went in, I learned before I came out." A year in company with evil associates taught him of their bad ways. On his release S. A. failed to find employment and drifted back to his prison pals. For over six years he associated himself with the lowly and members of the underworld.

Early this year S. A. was brought to the attention of the Social Service Department of our Order. Doctor Coffee, co-operating with the Social Service Committee of P———, found him a position. After a month's trial, S. A. returned to Chicago because of ill health. He was given a most careful medical examination, glasses were provided and everything was done to build up his weak physical condition. Last June a position was obtained for him with a large mail order firm. The post was too difficult and at our personal request he was changed to a different department, where he has been ever since. After working steadily for almost six months in one position, we feel that S. A. has been redeemed to a life of honesty and rectitude.

S. A. is determined to lead an upright life and he deserves every possible assistance. Success in this case was only attained through the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith assisting him to become strong physically and patiently bearing with his weaknesses at the outset.

RECEPTION TO PRESIDENT A. K. COHEN BY THE NEW YORK CITY LODGES.

The Metropolitan Lodges tendered a reception to the President of the District, Hon. A. K. Cohen. Many of the brothers attended. There were several brothers from other cities who came to attend the reception as a courtesy to President Cohen. There was a class of forty-five candidates initiated in honor of the occasion. The ritual was exemplified in a very impressive manner. The brothers comprising this special degree team were: William Asher, Myer L. Victorius, Louis Lorence, Chas. Katzenstein, Harry Goldman, Herman Sperling and Lester Brucks. The reception was held under the auspices of the Intellectual Advancement Committee. The orator of the evening was Bro. Dr. Samuel Schulman. rabbi of Temple Beth-El. President Cohen responded in a very happy manner and spoke very feelingly about the work of the Order and how it ought to appeal to every true Jew. The other speakers were Bros. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee; Joseph Rosenzweig, First Vice-President of the District, and the Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Commitee, Bro. Joseph L venson.

SOME STATISTICS OF JEWS IN THE WAR.

Dr. Max Nordau has calculated that at present about 700,000 Jews are fighting in the ranks of the various belligerent nations, and that already many thousands have been decorated for bravery. They have earned more than 2,000 crosses of the Legion of Honor, war crosses and military medals in France; three Victoria crosses, besides numerous Distinguished Service Orders and Distinguished Conduct Medals in England and more than 8,000 Iron crosses in Germany. Dr. Nordau estimates that so far some 60,000 Jews have died in battle.

SIGNOR LUIGI LUZZATTI.

Our illustrious co-religionist, statesman and economist, Signor Luigi Luzzatti, who was formerly Prime Minister of Italy, has been invited to visit this country to confer in connection with an effort to be made to obtain equal rights for the Jews in such countries where they are deprived of such rights by restrictive laws.

The co-operation of such a master mind, of a statesman who occupies such very high standing in the diplomatic circles of the world must prove of inestimable value and benefit to the Jewish cause. Signor Luzzatti has already shown on several occasions that his heart is with his people and that he champions the rights of his oppressed brethren in faith. In 1913 he was among the first to support the protest of the Jews of Silistria against their being brought under the sway of the Rumanian government. In the columns of the "Corriere della Sera" he called the attention of the world to the great injustice which such a step would inflict upon the Jews and he pleaded with the Powers not to permit such a wrong to be consummated. In the same year he also published a strong appeal to the Powers on behalf of the Rumanian Jews which caused consternation in Bucharest.

In the interest of the Jewish cause it is to be hoped that Signor Luzzatti will accept the invitation and pay us a visit in the near future. The American Jews will surely know how to honor such a distinguished guest and how to appreciate the co-operation of such a brilliant intellect.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR JEWS.

"Perseveranza" reports that a committee has been formed in Milan whose special aim is to influence public opinion of the whole civilized world in favor of equal social and legal rights for Jews in all countries. There are no Jews on the committee.

Testimonial Dinner by the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society to Mr. Simon Wolf

The words "The Book of Books to the Man of Men" expresses the sentiment behind the presentation of an embossed copy of the Old Testament to Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington by the Board of Directors to the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America. The Biblical injunction, "Welcome the Stranger," is most appropriately inscribed on this gift by this national Society to the man who has for many years aided it in its great work for the immigrant cause.

The presentation was made at a dinner arranged under the auspices of this Society, and at which Judge Leon Sanders, its President was toastmaster, in the grand ball-room of the Hotel Savoy on Tuesday evening, November 29th, 1916. The ball-room was beautifully and appropriately decorated for the occasion. The gathering was representative of the entire nation, east, west, north and south, and was arranged in honor of Mr. Wolf's eightieth birthday, and as a tribute to his work as patriot, statesman and humanitarian, and was notable because of the prominence of the assembled guests.

Federal and city officials, business, literary and professional men and women, known for their civic, philanthropic and personal accomplishments, to the number of three hundred, were present, and vied with one another in doing honor to the guest and in acknowledging his beneficent activity in behalf of the Jewish immigrant. Those who were not present in person were present in spirit, and many sent letters and telegrams all expressive of their great regard for Mr. Wolf. The most notable of these were letters from President Wilson, Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, Nathan Straus, Oscar S. Straus, and Rabbi Edward N. Calisch.

The dinner was served in strict accordance with the Hebraic dietary laws.

The opening prayer was pronounced by Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein and Grace was said by Rev. H. Pereira Mendes. The guests all wore the traditional skull cap inscribed in commemoration of the occasion, and each guest received also a book containing prayers suitable for the occasion.

Leon Kamaiky, the first Vice-President of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America introduced Judge Leon Sanders, who, in an eloquent address, welcomed the guests, the most imporotant part of his speech being:

"No man is these whole United States has done more for the education, for the elevation of the Jewish immigrant than Simon Wolf of Washington. Only a few days ago, after our organization had determined to give this dinner to Simon Wolf, we took the trouble to investigate the records and statistics, and it will surprise you, as it has surprised us, to know that Simon Wolf alone has been instrumental in preventing 103,000 Jewish immigrants from being deported after they had arrived upon American shores.

"That is a record to speak of, and a record to be proud of. I do not know how we can show our appreciation other than we show tonight. There is no money that can pay for such service as he has rendered. He can be proud of the fact that he has, in the true sense of the word, done his duty as a man, done his duty as a Jew, done his duty as an American, when he has helped to give opportunity to the thousands who otherwise would have had no opportunity to live or enjoy life."

Seated at the speakers' table were men representing the nation and state and organizations with which Mr. Wolf had been connected during his half century of service as the unofficial ambassador of American Jewry at the Capitol. Speeches were made by Honorable John B. Densmore, solicitor of the Department of Labor; Frederic C. Howe, Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island; Judge Leon Sanders, President of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America; Honorable Marcus M. Marks, President of the Borough of Manhattan; Mr. Arthur Brisbane; Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston, President District No. 1, Independent Order B'nai B'rith; Charles Shohl of Cincinnati, Vice-President of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Isidore Hershfield, Dr. Abraham Simon of Washington, Dr. J. L. Magnes and Rev. H. Masliansky.

The speech of presentation was made by Mr. Harry Fischel, Treasurer of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society and chairman of the committee of arrangements.

Mr. Arthur Brisbane proved to be a most interesting, entertaining and instructive speaker. Famous throughout the United States and the world as an editorial writer of sterling worth, he lived up to his reputation. He said in part as follows:

"I am very glad the agencies of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society are being used to spread the Jewish immigrant throughout the United States—that is, to scatter it, as Mr. Schiff has described it to me, and I am still more delighted that the effort to scatter the population and prevent congestion fails distinctly as regards this and some other cities. It would be a great misfortune if you didn't have in New York City as you have, a very great Jewish city, a city greater than any city was in the days we read about in the history of the Bible, by far the greatest Jewish city that ever existed, because you want unity and power. I know better than some of you the prejudice in the United States, in its various forms—stupidity, ignorance, envy, dislike of the man who begins early and compels his competitor to begin early—and I know that prejudice is still very strong. Nothing can overcome it simpler than a million votes in one lump, and you now have and should keep the million votes in one lump. And when you have eight million people in New York, I hope that still about one in four will be as today, a representative of this people.

"Now when we talk about wanting Jews to come to the United States, I said nothing could do more to overcome this prejudice than a greater number of votes in one place, but I expect there is one thing which can do more, and that is philanthropy, active Jewish charities. Mr. Schiff called my attention to a very interesting fact which I did not know (among many others), and that is in the Hebrew language there is no word for 'charity,' that the nearest approach, as Mr. Schliff wrote it for me here, is tzdoko. I can spell it, but I can't say it, and that the word means 'justice.'

"I think it is a beautiful thing to have this gathering and to honor Mr. Wolf. It is a very good example for the younger people, to make them feel it is worth while to give your life to such a cause as that to which he has devoted his."

Other speeches, too, were most interesting, striking remarks being made by all the speakers individually and collectively.

After the presentation, Mr. Wolf responded with an address which showed that the same power, the same eloquence, the same ability to sway people's minds, which always characterized Mr. Wolf's utterances, was still with him, and that he was in truth "eighty years young."

Among the guests present were: Jacob H. Schiff, Samuel Untermeyer, Hon. Henry M. Goldfogle, Justice Irving Lehman, Hon. David Leventritt, Isaac N. Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Bernstein, Sidney C. Borg, Hon. Jacob A. Cantor, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Hutkoff, Max J. Kohler, Adolph S. Ochs, James Speyer, Louis Edward Levy, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Bernstein, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Nathan, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Asofsky, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Edelhertz, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel P. Hays, Paul M. Herzog, Mr. and Mrs. Isidore Hershfield, Edward Lauterbach, Herbert H. Lehman, Joseph S. Marcus, Rev. H. Masliansky, Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, Hon. Julius Mayer, Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, Percy S. Straus, Mr. and Mrs. W. Irving Wolf, Mrs. Simon Wolf and Isador Saks, also Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fischel, and Dr. and Mrs. B. B. Berkowitz.

YIDDISH AT A UNIVERSITY.

The study of Yiddish has been inaugurated by the University of Wisconsin, which is probably the first university in the United States to teach it. Seven persons are enrolled in the first class. Not only will they learn to read and write Yiddish, but they will make a study of the best books written in that tongue and of the newspapers published in Yiddish. Professor L. B. Wolfson is conducting the course.

JEWISH SCHOOL STRIKE IN THE ARGENTINE.

At Visza Alba all the Jewish pupils at a certain school struck as a protest against a Spanish teacher, who published in a newspaper an insulting article against the Jewish children and Judaism. Many Christian pupils joined their Jewish comrades in the strike. The local Jews sent a protest to the Minister of Education against the action of the teacher.

THE KEHILLAH, XXVIII

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

As old as thinking humanity is the feeling of people, when they grow old, that the younger generation is different from them, and not as good as they were. The author of the Book of Koheleth, who according to tradition is King Solomon, but, though critics deny this to be a fact, at any rate lived more than 2,000 years ago, warns those who say "the former days were better than these" (7, 10). The same is said by the Roman poet, Horace, who expresses his impatience with those who praise the past, and find fault with the present. Homer, in describing a duel between two of his heroes, says they hurled rocks against each other which a man in our days would not be able to even move. Glueckel of Hameln, an interesting woman who, born at Hamburg in 1648, wrote her memories in the beginning of the eighteenth century, reports in her naive way how her father-in-law, when she visited him as a bride, made her a present of a piece of silver. It was only worth about ten thalers, she continues, "but in those days children were different from what they are now. We appreciated father's kindness."

While it is foolish to believe that the world is constantly degenerating, it is a fact that it is constantly changing. Every generation outgrows some of the ideals of its predecessor, but the difference between two generations is not always equally marked. The fifteenth century saw the invention of the gunpowder and the printing press. Both revolutionized political and economic, and with it, social life. These changes could not fail but make a deep impression on the ideals of humanity. The medieval idea of conformity and obedience changed for one that believed in individual liberty, and in rebellion against authority. The same we observe in the nineteenth century when steam engine and its most important application in railroad transportation, together with the electric telegraph, created again a complete transformation of political, economic, social and intellectual life.

Judaism, rigid as its theology appears to the outsider, also had its changes from generation to generation, but since the beginning of the Christian era, and the loss of Israel's national independence, no period saw a more decisive change in the whole life of Judaism than the epoch beginning with the French Revolution. There are two factors at work which characterize this change. They are the entrance of the Jews into the political life of their country, or, as we usually say, their political emancipation, and the spread of secular education. The first is characterized by the act of the French Parliament, passed September 27, 1791, recognizing the Jews as citizens, possessing equal rights with their neighbors, and the second, which in the nature of things cannot be so distinctly traced to a definite day, is the publication of Mendelssohn's translation of the Pentateuch, 1783. This generation, which lives through the second half of the eighteenth century, is characterized on the progressive side by Mendelssohn (1729-1786) and his co-workers, on the opposing side, again, by Ezekiel Landau (1713-1793) and his contemporaries. The next generation whose main activity falls within the first third of the nineteenth century, is characterized on the progressive side by the rationalistic school of Mendelssohn's disciples, as David Friedlander (1750-1834) and Herz Homberg (1759-1841). The opposition to this movement is most strongly represented by Moses Sofer (1761-1839), by Mordecai Benet (1753-1829), and others too numerous to mention. The next generation, whose activity fills the second third of the nineteenth century, is characterized on the progressive side by Abraham Geiger (1810-1874) and on the conservative side by Samson Raphael Hirsch (1808-1888). There is, however, a greater division of degree in conservatism and liberalism than in previous epochs. To the conservative side, for instance, may be counted Zechariah Frankel (1801-1875), though he was denounced by Hirsch for coquetting with infidels, while the latter again is vehemently attacked by representatives of the immediate school of Moses Sofer, especially Hillel Lichtenstein (1815-1891). The next generation, whose activity fills the epoch immediately preceding our [illegible] characterized by a lagging of the [illegible] the religious question, while the national and social problems of the [illegible] take the foremost rank. It is the [illegible] Zionism, and for our purpose [illegible] the religious problem as the center of thought, we might group its ideals around Isaac Jacob Reines (1839-1915).

What a pleasure it would be had we the data necessary to present our ancient history, especially around the year 70, when Israel lost its national independence, with equal clearness. I shall attempt it, not with the pretense of giving actual facts, which unfortunately is impossible, but as a mere hypothesis. Would we know more about Hillel than we actually know from our sources, we might compare his age to that of Moses Mendelssohn. He taught: "Be a disciple of Aaron, seeking peace and pursuing it." Now let us suppose that he was born about 30 B. C. He lived during the prime of his manhood as a contemporary of Herod. In those days already he antagonized the patriotic agitation of the Maccabaean period, declaring that Judaism must abandon its political aspirations and confine itself to the development of its religious life. He, therefore, would be a sort of Mendelssohn, or, more strictly speaking, a prototype of the most conservative of Mendelssohn's circle Herz Wesel (1725-1805), who stood for the preservation of traditional Judaism with the only exception that he advocated a more systematic education in Hebrew, together with secular training. The next generation would be represented by Johanan Ben Zakkai, Hillel's disciple, who—to quote one typical doctrine of his—says, as the sacrifice in the temple atones for Israel, so works of charity atone for the Gentiles. Without drawing the comparison too tightly, we might find an analogy between him and the humanitarian ideas of the post Mendelssohnian school. Let us say he was born in the year 10, and died about 80. The next generation, again, would be represented by Eliezer Ben Hyrcanus, Johanan's beloved disciple, who, seeing the inroads made into the rank of Israel by the latidunarian ideas of the age, insists on a rigid preservation of all the practices inherited from the fathers. He is the cemented cistern which will not allow one drop to leak through its walls, and he boasts that he never taught anything which he had not learned from his teachers.

We define his age chronologically as from 50 to 120, and compare him to Samson Hirsch. The next generation again would be represented by Rabbi Akiba (60-135), to whom the strict ritualistic observance is mainly the means of preserving Israel's national identity. He is a sort of Isaac Jacob Reines. The book of Canticles is to him the holiest of all Biblical books because it teaches in an allegorical way that Israel is his Beloved's, and no other nation has a share with him.

The difficulty in our ancient history is that we do not possess these exact data that we possess in our latest epoch of history. Yet, even if we should possess them, we could not mechanically assign each historic individuality to a certain period, such as we might do in a stock farm. Human beings are spiritual individualities, and in spite of what materialists may teach, not mere animals. Returning to our subject, we would find it difficult where to place a man like Nehemias Trebitsch (1779-1842). He is a sort of posthumous member of the age of Mordecai Benet. Such figures as he are really pathetic. Their actual generation has passed, and with their own age they have not been able to maintain contact. I said previously that the published works of Nehemias Trebitsch do not furnish us sufficient information on his character. An occasional homiletical remark, "a piece of Torah," as our fathers used to call it, may be helpful to us in understanding his individuality. It is preserved to us by Solomon Kohn (1825-1904), the exponent of the Prague ghetto in fiction, who has heard it from the otherwise unknown Seligman Trebitsch, the son of Rabbi Nehemias. It is interesting as a subject in itself. Our Passover Hagadah contains the well known Midrash, that the Torah classified children into four divisions, the studious, the flippant, the phlegmatic, and the stupid. The character of the studious is indicated by the question (Deut. 6, 20): "What mean the testimonies and the statutes and the judgments, which the Lord, our God, has commanded you?" The character of the flippant, again, is indicated in the question (Ex. 12, 27): "What mean ye by this service?" The difficulty of this homily is obvious. We can understand the rabbinic deduction that one who says, what mean ye by this service, thus excluding himself, is a sort of infidel, but we cannot see why the other who also speaks of God's commandments "to you" should be different, and indeed a whole library of artificial explanations of this passage has been written. Nehemias Trebitsch added his share by saying the first type, the studious, is a child who is not Bar Mitzvah, and therefore he modestly says, why has God commanded you such statutes. The second type is a grown up young man, or else he could not be called a "Rasha," and therefore his remark shows the infidel. It may not be out of place to state here that all these attempts are the best type of rabbinic dialecticism, based on false premises. The real answer to the question is that the author of the Midrash quoted from memory, and gave the words of the studious, as saying, "what are these testimonies which the Lord commanded us," his memory evidently confounded this verse with verse 23 of the same chapter, which says: "The Lord has delivered us." Therefore he is the studious, while the other, who says, "What mean these practices to you," is the flippant. This is by no means a hypothesis, for we find this erroneous quotation not only in the Talmud, but even in the oldest editions of the Hagadah. A later publisher discovered the error in the quotation, corrected it, and then the text was right, but the homily was naturally wrong.

It was previously pointed out that the subsequent generations showed how Trebitsch had outlived his age, though he died when only sixty-two. One of his sons-in-law was Samson Kulke (1809-1894), rabbi in the little congregation of Kostel, not far from Nikolsburg, where he officiated for fifty-five years. I dimly remember having seen him in Nikolsburg, a type of a period long past, as if he had stepped out of a show case of a museum. His son, Eduard (1831-1897), was a ghetto novelist of the school of Leopold Kompert, but very much his inferior. Yet his works, though by no means classic, are historically quite valuable, because they represent to us the ghetto life in its last stages, under the restriction of marriages, and under the excessive and oppressive Jew taxes, with all the misery on one hand, and the religious intensity on the other. When I lived in Penzing, a suburb of Vienna, in 1881, working for my degree, Eduard Kulke lived there too. Among my neighbors was a plain old-fashioned woman from Kostel, who felt very bitter against the son of a pious rabbi who had married a Gentile woman. She had, besides, another more serious grievance. At one time a couple in Kostel had married contrary to the rabbinic law. They evidently were married by a magistrate, or by a less scrupulous rabbi. Rabbi Kulke, however, predicted that this marriage would not turn out happy, and so it was. The only thing the good woman could not understand was why these pious and learned men, who have such influence in heaven, should be so partial, cursing sinners who are not of their own kin, but keeping their curses in their pocket when they are personally interested in the sinner. Another story I remember from the time I was a student in Nikolsburg. A young man had died of an accident, and Rabbi Kulke in the funeral sermon proved to the audience that such would be the end of all who eat Trefah.

The other son-in-law of Nehemias Trebitsch was Jacob Bruell (1812-1889), for many years rabbi in Kojetein, Moravia. I remember him as a man of a more modern type in his appearance, shaved —I hope with Aurum—except for short side and chin whiskers, and wearing the high boots and the long coat which the older Catholic priests at that time used to wear. His literary activity was along the line of modern historic research, such as we find in the works of Frankel and Isaac H. Weiss. His two sons were modernists in the strictest sense of the word, the older, Nehemias (1843-1891), named for the grandfather, and born within a year of the latter's death, was one of our most meritorious scholars in historic research, and rabbi of the very advanced reform congregation of Frankfurt am Main. His brother, Adolph (1846-1908), three years his junior, was teacher at the Frankfurt "Philanthropin," the liberal school established in 1804, which, as its name indicates, aimed to train Jewish young men along broad, humanitarian ideals. He was a popular author and far removed from ideals of the grandfather, who had entered upon his duties as Landesrabbiner of Moravia with the determination to weed out German culture from the vineyard of the Lord.

JEWISH WAR ORPHANS.

The future of the hundreds of thousands of these poor children is engaging the attention of the Joint Distribution Committee, and a sub-committee was appointed to make the necessary inquiries and ascertain the attitude of the U. S. government, etc.

THE DEATH OF EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH.

When an entire people stands with tearful eyes and sorrowing heart at the bier of its beloved ruler, the flood-gates of compassion are opened and the whole world weeps in sympathy with the mourning millions over the lamentable loss. Such tears are the real priceless pearls and the genuine precious gems which adorn the crown of the departed monarch. They speak louder and ring truer than all the high-sounding words of the eulogies uttered by the cringing courtiers, the adulating court chaplains and the epauletted and sword-clattering generalissimos. The people's tears demonstrate the facts that the deceased sovereign was more than a master who bestowed titles and estates; that in addition to being a monarch he was also a man, a true child of humanity with a noble heart and a liberal mind, who was a true friend of his people and knew how to temper justice with mercy.

Such a monarch was the Emperor Francis Joseph, whose death is now mourned not only by the many nationalities, racial and religious groups comprising the Austrian empire over which he reigned for 68 years, but also by the whole world, outside of the warring nations, who are the enemies of his country.

Emperor Francis Joseph was a capable, kind and just ruler. Although he was a staunch Catholic, he was a liberal and benevolent monarch. The grip which the church had on his religious inclinations had not squeezed his inward organs out of their natural position. He had not only a heart, but his heart was in the right place. His life was full of sorrows, but his sufferings ennobled his soul.

The Austrian Jews had very good reason to call him a "melekh hesed," a kind king, for he was their liberating benefactor. He was their real friend. By the constitution which he gave to his people he lifted the Jews out of a degraded existence, full of hardship and misery, on account of the many restrictive laws which hindered them on every step, and placed them in a respectful life, blessed with the rights of full citizenship which entitles them to occupy the highest social, political and military positions in the land. He protected them as much as it was in his power against the savage onslaughts of the unscrupulous anti-Semites. He repeatedly took an open stand against Lueger, the notorious Jew baiter of Vienna. In two instances only did he permit the church to dominate his will and to cause him to grieviously hurt the Jews and to inflict upon them much anguish of soul. It was in the case of the poor Jewish shoemaker Hilsner, a victim of a false blood accusation, who still languishes in an Austrian prison, and in the case of the Jewish girl Michalina Arten, who was abducted by the priests and kept in a convent to be baptized. On these two occasions he was intimidated by the church and refused to listen to the pathetic pleadings of the Jews. But the Jews of Austria now remember only the many good deeds which he showered upon them with a lavish hand, and they will continue to honor and bless his memory through many generations. The Galician Jews now recite the Kaddish prayer in their synagogues every day and pray for the repose of his noble soul and we fervently respond, Amen.

THE COMING CONVENTION OF RUMANIAN JEWS.

The convention of Rumanian Jews of the United States and Canada, which will be held in Philadelphia December 31st, will be visited by a number of prominent Rumanian Jews from France, Switzerland and Italy, who will have an important message to convey relative to the condition of Rumanian Jews.

The Rumanian Jews established in New York and Philadelphia are fully organized and are working in complete harmony for the furtherance of the interests of their brethren in Rumania and are zealously working for their civic and political emancipation.

Rumanian Jews living in different parts of the United States and in Canada have already signified their intention to cooperate by appointing delegates to the convention as representatives of their respective organizations. The Independent Order B'nai B'rith, which has always taken a keen interest in the welfare of the Jews in Rumania, having been instrumental in sending one of its members, Benjamin F. Peixotto, as American Consul to Rumania in 1870, has promised to render every possible material and moral aid to the movement. The Jews in Rumania, realizing that under the present conditions in Europe, they can expect very little aid, if any at all, from their brethren in or around the war zone, place their entire hope for their salvation upon American Jewry.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Nov. 15, 1916.

In all the belligerent countries the nation has been organized for a war economy. Those at the front have their work marked out for them; those at home have duties no less urgent. Jews everywhere are doing their share in both categories, and Jews in England may look with pride on their contribution to the national services. The number of Jewish soldiers is increasing, and the number of Jewish chaplains in the field increasing with it. Nor are these limited to the home troops; the Australian contingents also have their chaplain at the front. There can be no doubt that the Jewish chaplains are performing valuable and excellent work for the men, which is not limited to religious services, though these, too, have their place. As for the conduct of Jewish soldiers, it is not too much to say that, judging from the reports to hand, it is above the average for excellence.

One or two little incidents are interesting. A story is told that in one case when it was necessary to graft some skin on to a wounded officer, a Jewish soldier volunteered to supply the required amount from his own body. For another vignette the following extract from a Jewish officer's letter speaks for itself:

"Yom Kippur was spent in trenches, and I found it impossible to get the boys together on this most auspicious day. A remarkable incident about these trenches were the names of 'Yiddish.' We had a Yiddish Street, Yiddish Road, Yiddish Trench and Yiddish Sap. From inquiries made, I learned that the boys of the London Unit did so well in these trenches that their immortal name was given to the scene of their immortality."

Jews are to the fore at home, too. A large number of men over military age are special constables and members of the national volunteer corps, and no small number of Jewesses are giving of their best services in all sorts of volunteer war work. Very many are nurses; others are connected with canteens for soldiers; others again are busily occupied in connection with the welfare of women munition workers. Not a few are themselves munition workers. Recently an interesting proposal has been mooted. It has been suggested that special munition works should be established which should be open on Sundays and closed on Saturdays, in order to give orthodox Jews an opportunity of putting in a full week's work at munition making. Whether anything comes of the proposal remains to be seen. But that it should have been made shows how keen is the desire of Jews to help in the nation's work.

Despite this activity the streams of the various relief funds continue to flow on. Beside the general funds there are the specifically Jewish war collections—for Russian war sufferers, for Jewish prisoners at Ruheleben, for interned Jewish civilians in the prisoners' camps in the Isle of Man. Be it remembered that all the time the ordinary charitable institutions are being kept up, and the Jewish Hospital is included among the number. An out-patients' department is already in being, and it is expected that further progress will be possible before long. And if the Jewish Board of Guardians is making a special appeal for funds, in the first place, it does so every year, and in the second, it will in all probability get what it needs. For the Board of Guardians enjoys special favor in the community. Jews have never allowed their poor to fall on the public rates. It was a voluntary act, and is one of the traditions of Anglo-Jewry that is likely to be maintained for a long time yet. It is possibly worthy of mention in this connection that the Sunday Morning Hebrew classes at the Jews' Free School have been opened again. Some time ago it was recorded in this column that these classes had been stopped for lack of funds. The funds are forthcoming again, and the educational work may continue as of old.

Internally the problem that is agitating thinking men is that of synagogue attendance. Then as Sabbath service attendance was before the war, it is thinner still at present. The malady seems to affect the orthodox, no less than the "reformed" synagogues. People who look to the future are a little troubled at the prospect. Yet, on the other hand, there appears to be a good deal of interest in Jewish affairs—in historical or topical subjects of Jewish interest, and Zionism is giving signs of being very much alive in this country. Zionism may be condemned as an "ism," but not even its extremist opponent can deny that it does stir up interest in Jews and all about them. That at least is more than the synagogues are able to do. Anyhow their problem remains, and to a good many people it appears insoluble.

Be that as it may, the business of Synagogue organization must be continued. In this sphere of work the London Jewish community is fortunate in possessing a number of men who throw themselves heart and soul into communal work. Their policy may not be popular; their "government" is often autocratic, worthy of the traditions of the feudal system. But of the single-mindedness of the men themselves, of their unselfish efforts in the general cause, there can be no doubt. London Jewry has been fortunate in this respect; the old tradition of noblesse oblige still continues with unabated vigor. One of the best types of this class of public worker was the late Mr. Felix Davis, a Vice-President of the United Synagogues, who died since the last London Letter was written. A man of affairs, blessed with opulence, gifted with culture and learning, Felix Davis was a communal leader who won the approbation of his colleagues, the love of his friends and the respect of the general public. What was really at fault with him, as with the other communal leaders, was not the men themselves, but the system. Given the system, however, as it is, no better set of men could be desired, and Felix Davis was foremost among them. His special favorite institution was the Jewish Orphanage at Norwood, the Neve Hatzedek, which does a great work for the community. Beside the United Synagogue and the Norwood Orphanage, Felix Davis was also interested in discharged Jewish prisoners. Into everyone of his interests he threw himself with all his heart, and his loss is deplored by the whole community. He has been succeeded in the Vice-Presidency of the United Synagogue by his friend, Mr. Albert Woolf. Mr. Woolf is just such another communal worker—thorough, self-sacrificing, splendid, but a little seigniorial and high-handed. So the system continues. Perhaps its weakness may be best exemplified by saying that it is like Government by the House of Lords only; the Spirit of the House of Commons is missing. All the same it is no small thing for a community to have such men as Felix Davis and Albert Woolf.

The London Lodge will learn with great pleasure that Mr. Pastel, one of the refugees from Belgium in whom the Brethren were specially interested, has qualified with great success as a medical practitioner, and the Lodge extends its very hearty congratulations to him and best wishes for his future career. In regard to the other refugees they are now all settled somewhere or other, and are economically independent. No better ending could have been desired for the Hostel which the London Lodge opened.

The position of the Russian-born Jews resident in England remains as before. The treatment of the Russian Jews in England, admittedly a difficult problem, is receiving the attention of the Cabinet, and though no definite news on the problem is as yet forthcoming, it may be confidently stated that the Russian Jews will be treated fairly.

FUTURE OF THE JEWS IN RUMANIA.

A representative of the Paris "La Renaissance Juive" had an interview with M. Labovard, the Rumanian Minister in Paris, on the future of the Rumanian Jews. The Minister expressed his satisfaction that the Jewish soldiers in Rumania were fighting bravely side by side with their Christian comrades. He said the Jewish soldiers who received distinctions in the war would certainly be naturalized. As for the Jews who would be transferred by a victorious Rumania from the Hungarian Kingdom to the Rumanian State, they would retain all the rights they now enjoyed. The Minister further explained that the anti-Jewish restrictions in Rumania were losing their raison d'etre. The Minister stated that he did not think it likely that all Jews would be emancipated at the end of the war, but the Jewish soldiers would receive concessions.

COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., will stage a home-talent minstrel and vaudeville show Wednesday evening, Dec. 13, at the Little Theatre.

The entertainment will open only to the members of the lodge, their families and friends. The Duluth branch of the Drama League, which owns the Little Theatre, recently gave the lodge permission to use the playhouse.

The show will open with a regular minstrel program. The first part will last about an hour, and then there will be vaudeville numbers. E. A. Silberstein will act as interlocutor and the following will be the end men: Charles Rosenfield, Abe B. Kapplin. Jay Schrader, Max Rosenfeld, Louis Kramer and Barney Scott.

After the minstrel show the following vaudeville numbers will be presented: Miss Bessie Meyers of Minneapolis and Len Traubman in an original singing skit, "Late Again," by Abe Kapplin; Miss Jeannette Gomberg and Charles Rosenfeld, society dancing; A. B. Kapplin and Jay Schrader in an original sketch, "Big Time," written by the former, and a miniature musical comedy, "The Seminary Girls," written by Miss Alice Wetzler. The following girls will take part: Esther Abrahamson, Rosalind Bondy, Jeanette Gomberg, Rachel Hammel, Mae Klein and Alice Wetzler. Miss Esther Gomberg will accompany the young women at the piano.

MERIDIAN, MISS.

On Tuesday evening, Nov. 28, Asaph Lodge No. 286 held a special and open meeting in the Temple, at which Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Social Service director, delivered an address before the members and friends of the Order. The meeting was called to order by Rabbi Abraham Brill, who briefly explained that it was the good fortune of the lodge to secure the services of Dr. Coffee that night, while he was on a Southern tour. The speaker chose "The New B'nai B'rith Work" as his theme, clearly and forcibly outlining the new ideals of the Social Service Department. He laid great stress on the Big Brother movement and told of its splendid results in the North. This rapidly growing movement is the accepted form of juvenile endeavor by those most competent to discuss the problems of the growing boy, and if we wish a healthy, vigorous Judaism, it behooves us to pay earnest attention to the youth of today. He brought a message of good cheer to those interested in farm endeavor, urging that plans be undertaken to encourage Jews to settle in the district as farmers.

While in Meridian, Dr. Coffee spent a very profitable time with local B'nai B'rith members. The Eastern district of Mississippi has suffered greatly from migration to the North, and successive bad crops, with the result that there should be splendid opportunities for Jewish settlers in that section of the state. There are also state institutions to be visited to look after the wants of the Jewish inmates. The local social service committee will tend to all Jewish problems which seek solution.

CLASS INITIATION BY ST. LOUIS LODGES.

The joint initiation of Missouri and Ebn Ezra lodges in St. Louis Sunday evening, Nov. 26, was a most impressive and successful event. The initiation exercises were conducted in the United Hebrew Congregation under the guidance of Bro. Harry Simon, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 2. ably assisted by A. B. Frey, Jacob Lambert and Edward Boehm.

Directly after the doors of the spacious auditorium were opened to the public, all the seats were quickly filled. When Bro. A. L. Levi, chairman of the St. Louis B'nai B'rith lodges, called the meeting to order, standing room was at a premium. On the platform were Bros. Karl Vetzberg, president of District No. 2; Jacob Furth, member of Executive Committee of the Order; Sidney Kusworm of Dayton, Ohio, member of the General Committee, and Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago. Brother Vetzberg briefly expressed his pleasure at the splendid sight of initiating 250 new candidates. Norman Sadler, one of the new members, responded fittingly. Brother Kusworm brought greetings from a sister lodge and emphasized the need for union of forces in Israel. Dr. Coffee spoke at great length on the new work of the B'nai B'rith. He laid stress on the Big Brother movement and illustrated its fine results in Chicago. St. Louis should take up this labor in all earnestness. It means the saving of Jewish boys to lives of honor and rectitude. He also spoke very fully on the subject of prison reform. There are not many Jews in jail throughout the country, yet every Jew under sentence is just one too many. Our duty is to provide employment and to offer friendship to released prisoners. We must aid them to keep straight. He told of being accompanied to the station by two reformed former convicts. One year ago both men would have drifted back to evil ways. Today, thanks to the B'nai B'rith, they are law-abiding, industrious and self-respecting men.

ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LOGE NO. 672, PITTSBURGH, PA.

What will probably be one of the most stupendous charity affairs ever held in Pittsburgh has been announced by Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672, which is to hold a ball at the William Penn Hotel on the evening of Jan. 16, 1917. The lodge. working in conjunction with its Ladies' Auxiliary, has pledged itself to raise a minimum of $2,000.00 for the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children in Erie, Pa.

Although the lodge is but a few years in existence, having started with fifty-six members, it has now an enrollment of 225, together with a Ladies' Auxiliary numbering over 100. In the first year of its existence it contributed $2,500.00 secured by means of an entertainment for the Orphanage. Following this, the lodge became particularly active in Social Service, endeavoring to alleviate the living and working conditions of the poor.

DAN LODGE, CHARLESTON, S. C.

Inspired by lodge spirit that had been accumulating for months (and also by a desire to raise funds for furthering the aims of the lodge), Dan Lodge held its first annual ball on the evening of Nov. 21, the committee, officers and members contributing their time and labor in efforts to make tht affair a success.

Those connected with arranging the ball were more determined than hopeful, more energetic than sanguine, and the final success of the affair was a deserving tribute to their initiative and hustle.

The charming and irresistible dispensers of refreshments proved to be very efficient, and their services helped swell the income of the evening. In obtaining the refreshments good work was accomplished by a special women's committee. In obtaining more publicity for Dan Lodge and B'nai B'rith, in fostering the get-together spirit, and especially in raising funds for the lodge, the ball was a complete success; so much so that another will be held next season.

ANNUAL BANQUET BY TOLEDO LODGE, TOLEDO, OHIO.

On the evening of Dec. 3 Toledo Lodge No. 183 held its eighth annual banquet and class initiation. Twenty-nine new members were taken into the Order.

Dr. J. H. Jacobson presided over the banquet in his usual clever manner. The principal speaker was Karl M. Vetsburg, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, who delivered a forceful address upon the Order's work during the past year.

Dr. R. H. Kornblith spoke upon the work of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant aid Society.

The banquet was generally declared the most successful in the lodge's history

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

The Committee on Intellectual Advancement has arranged a series of lectures on the history of the Jews in Europe. The first lecture of the course was given on Nov. 16. Owing to the illness of Bro. Dr. Samuel Wolfenstein, Brother Rabbi Jacob Klein delivered the first lecture on the subject, "The History of the Jews of the World". The lecture was open to the public. Mrs. Maxwell H. Sussman entertained with vocal and piano music. Similar lectures will be given every third Thursday in the month.

The general committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2 will meet in Cleveland on Sunday, January 14, in connection with the regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Jewish Orphan Asylum. Plans are under way to hold a large class initiation in the evening in honor of the visiting brethren.

A minstrel performance, participated in by members of the lodge and some other local amateur talent, is being planned for the month of December. The auditorium and stage of the B'nai B'rith building are ideally adapted for such a performance. A dancing party is to follow.

The bi-weekly dancing parties arranged by the dance committee continue in popular favor.

At one of the regular meetings in December, Brother Alfred A. Benesch, secretary of the lodge, will deliver a lecture, illustrated by stereopticon slides, on the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver. Brother Benesch visited the hospital in June, in company with Brother Karl M. Vetsburg, president of the Grand Lodge, and Brother Sidney G. Kusworm of Dayton, member of the General Committee.

In the near future, Brother Simon Peiser, superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, plans to deliver a stereopticon lecture showing life and activities of that institution.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 is arranging for one of the most elaborate dinners and entertainments in its history to be given in the B'nai B'rith building, on Sunday evening, Dec. 17, which will be the twelfth annual affair under the auspices of the lodge. The dinner will be at 6:00 and the entertainment, followed by a dance, will begin at 9:00.

The after dinner speakers will be Sigmund Livingston, Bloomington, Ill., chairman of the Executive Committee of the Anti-Defamation League; Karl M. Vetsburg of St. Louis, president of District Grand Lodge No. 2; Rabbi Moses J. Gries of Cleveland, and Sidney G. Kusworm of Dayton, O., member of the General Committee of the district.

At 3:30 in the afternoon there will be an entertainment for the ladies, while the initiation of a class of 200 candidates is taking place.

The committee that is arranging for the affair is composed of Bernard Benson, George J. Klein and Alfred A. Benesch.

A meeting of the Junior Circle Auxiliary to Cleveland Lodge No. 16 was held at the club rooms in the B'nai B'rith building on Nov. 26, 1916. After the nomination of officers and the close of regular business, an old-fashioned dance was held which was attended by members of both organizations and their friends.

LOS ANGELES LODGE, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Under the auspices of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, of Los Angeles, Cal., a benefit entertainment was held on Nov. 18, 1916. More than $1,500 was the net result of the affair held at the Walker Auditorium. More than a thousand persons were in attendance and the hall was packed to overflowing. The program, which was varied and extensive, was followed by a dance in the Lincoln Hall in the same building. The affair was under the direction of the officers of the lodge, aided by a special committee of the lodge and by members of the ladies' auxiliary. The fund collected will be used to further the various charitable and philanthropic undertakings of the lodge.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT MANSFIELD.

Mansfield Lodge No. 797 was duly instituted on November 26th, 1916, by Brother Harry Levisen, assisted by Brothers David Alexander, L. M. Frank, S. Messing, M. M. Simon and Saul H. Calish, all of Toledo, Ohio, as representatives of the District Grand Lodge No. 2.

The Lodge starts with a membership of 33 and the officers elected are as follows:

President, L. Freundlich; Vice-President, [illegible] Reder; Secretary, M. F. Weil; [illegible] H. Weil; Monitor, B. Loeb; [illegible] Monitor, E. Joseph; Guardian, [illegible]; Warden, R. Piowaty.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Cremieux Lodge No. 325 has completed arrangements for a class initiation on the occasion of the official visit of Grand Lodge officers, to be followed by an entertainment. A class of 25 candidates has been secured for the initiation, which is to take place on Monday evening, Dec. 11. The election of officers will also take place on that evening.

The lodge has appointed Past Grand President Gutstadt chairman of a committee to arrange a banquet similar to the one held last year. The lodge has also received the promise of Congressman Julius Kahn to address its meeting in the month of March upon some timely topic.

Dr. Richard M. Cerf was elected chairman of the committee of 50 representing the ten San Francisco lodges.

With the year drawing to a close, the lodges are preparing for the election of officers, and in all the lodges arrangements are being made for special programs and entertainments on the occasion of the installation of their new officers.

Columbia Auxiliary No. 1, Daughters of the Covenant, gave an enjoyable country dance in the B'nai B'rith Hall on Wednesday evening, Dec. 6, 1916. Many novel features were offered and the affair proved to be a success.

Modin Lodge and its ladies' auxiliary held a whist party on Monday evening, Nov. 27, 1916, in the B'nai B'rith hall. Prizes were awarded.

The Leo N. Levi Youths' Auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith, which has been growing rapidly in membership, gave an entertainment on Monday evening, Nov. 13, 1916, which proved highly creditable.

An elaborate program of music and oratory was successfully carried out at the joint meeting of San Francisco lodges on Wednesday evening, Nov. 15, when President Henry Newburgh of the District Grand Lodge paid his official visit to the lodges. Brother I. J. Ashheim, secretary of the District Grand Lodge, presided, and Rabbi Martin A. Meyer, Grand Orator, delivered the principal address. President Newburgh in responding reviewed the work accomplished during the year and pointed out new fields for future endeavors.

Ophir Lodge No. 21 gave a "Past Presidents' Night" on Wednesday evening, Nov. 8, which proved a gala occasion. Seven Past Grand Presidents attended as guests of honor and a team composed of officers conducted a class initiation. Addresses and a banquet followed the regular order of business. The lodge is arranging for a Channuka night celebration, to be held on Dec. 20, on which occasion members of Leo N. Levi Youths' Auxiliary will be guests.

The annual ball of the San Francisco B'nai B'rith lodges, held at the St. Francis Hotel on Wednesday evening, Nov. 22, 1916, was a most successful and brilliant affair and comprised a gathering of important men and women of social and business circles of the city. The women's auxiliary had a capable committee to assist in the arrangements.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

On Friday night, Dec. 1, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Social Service Director, occupied the pulpit of Touro Synagogue, preaching at the invitation of its rabbi, Dr. Emil W. Leipziger, chairman of the Social Service Committee, District No. 7. A personal invitation had been extended to all B'nai B'rith members in New Orleans. A large number of people thoroughly in sympathy with the new labor was in attendance and heard "The Next Step in B'nai B'rith Work". In the past our Order has stressed care for the widow, the orphan, the sick and the needy. Hereafter volunteer workers will devote their energies to prevent the causes which lead to such misfortune and misery on earth. This will aid in the greatest of all wars, that against poverty.

The following morning Dr. Coffee occupied the pulpit of Rev. Dr. Max Heller and again a large attendance greeted the speaker. He emphasized the need in modern life of careful analysis. Too often we blame God when the disaster was clearly man-made. Too many people live in the atmosphere of supine fatalism, failing to realize that man has overcome the most unexpected obstacles, when once he has set mind to it. In the spirit of social service the world is surely getting better. Brother love urges us to make this a happier and more pleasant place wherein to live. Practicing social service, we emphasize the Jewish note in modern life.

While in New Orleans Dr. Coffee met the members of the local Social Service Committee of which Dr. J. W. Newman is the chairman. His committee contains the names of many earnest and sincere men from whom good work may confidently be expected.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY OF BETH ZUR LODGE, MOBILE, ALA.

With song, music, addresses and entertainment, the golden anniversary of the founding of Beth Zur Lodge, No. 84, of Mobile, Ala., was celebrated on November 30, 1916. In the forenoon the meeting of the lodge was held, at which a large class of candidates were initiated and addresses were made by the visiting Grand Lodge Officers, E. R. Bernstein, of Shreveport, President of the District Grand Lodge; M. M. Goldman, of New Orleans, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge; Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order; S. Haas, of Mobile, Ala., and A. Klein, of Meridian, Miss., charter members of the lodge.

A number of letters and congratulatory telegrams were received and read.

The anniversary services in the Temple attracted a large assemblage. It was an occasion where the "Mission of Israel" was briefly but eloquently told by President Bernstein, and "Judaism and Social Service" was plainly but in well-rounded periods told by Dr. Coffee, both subjects being handled in such a manner as to make them lessons for the hearers to carry home with them.

An elaborate musical program was carried out.

The exercises were opened with an invocation by Rabbi Alfred G. Moses and was followed by Mr. H. Hess, who spoke the welcoming words and concluding same with the introduction of President Bernstein, who spoke on the subject, "The Mission of Israel." Mr. Bernstein read a letter from Captain Leon Schwartz, of Mobile, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, now in Arizona doing patriotic duty.

Mr. S. Haas, who with Mr. S. Strouse, Mr. A. Klein, of Meridian, comprised three of four living charter members, spoke briefly of the Lodge, its creation, its accomplishments and its hopes for the future. Other short talks were followed by Dr. Coffee, who delivered the address on "Judaism and Social Service." Dr. Coffee gave a concise resume of the work mapped out by the Social Service Department, explaining that the Department, although a new activity of the Order, really represents an additional link in B'nai B'rith activities. He said. "Throughout the country we have splendid Hospitals, Orphan Asylums and Homes for the Aged. Now we call upon our members to give their time and their personality to assist in volunteer work. There is the great Big Brother Movement in all parts of the country. This wonderful wave of prison reform which our American friends are furthering so remarkably calls our own Lodges to offer friendly help to release Jewish prisoners. The hope of the Jew is not in the crowded sections of the large Eastern cities. We must send our brethern to the farms of the large Western and Southern States, in the hope of renewing the ancient ideal that each man might live under his own vine and fig tree."

Following the addresses and benediction by Rabbi Moses, the assemblage was served refreshments and the program was concluded with dancing.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATION BY ESHCOL LODGE, DAYTON, O.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly celebrated by Eshcol Lodge, No. 55, of Dayton, O., on Sunday, Nov. 19, at their lodge room in the Rauh Building, when a class of 110 was duly initiated. The affair started at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and was followed by a dinner at 6:30 and a dance in the evening. The speaker of the day was Brother Karl M. Betsburg, President of D. G. L., No. 2, and his address on "The Order" was most inspiring and enjoyed by the 300 members present. It was a red-letter day for Eshcol Lodge, and the interest manifested by both the attendance and the enthusiasm displayed plainly shows the future possibilities of building up a large and powerful organization.

The Lodge will initiate another class of about 30 candidates at the December meeting, when they will be addressed by a prominent local speaker. Brother Sidney G. Kusworm, member of the District General Committee, who was chairman of the membership campaign, did noble work in securing such a large class, and was extended a vote of thanks for his untiring efforts on behalf of the Lodge.

The matter of building a "Community House" will shortly be taken up by a committee appointed by the President and the local lodge will father the project, co-operating with the other Jewish bodies for the purpose of erecting a suitable building to house all the various activities including the Y. M. H. A. Rabbi Lefkowitz made an ardent plea for the consummation of the plan and the work will be pushed forward at once.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

On the invitation of Rainier Lodge of Seattle, Wash., the degree team of Theo. Herzl Lodge of Portland has been asked to officiate at the initiation of a class of 50 candidates in that lodge on Dec. 28. The two Portland lodges have also been invited to send delegations, as have also the other lodges of the Pacific Northwest.

President Isaac Swett of the B'nai B'rith Building Association, announced the appointment of standing committees of th B'nai B'rith building for the ensuing year.

The Sunday night social held at the B'nai B'rith Club on Dec. 3 was most successful from two points of view: the attendance was unusually large and the program was of the best. The program included a wand drill by the Junior B'nai B'rith under the direction of Instructor Salm, a musical trio and a demonstration of new social dances.

B'nai B'rith services were conducted on Friday evening, Dec. 1, 1916, at the 6th Street Synagogue. A special program was arranged for the occasion.

On Tuesday evening, Nov. 28, Theo. Herzl Lodge and its ladies' auxiliary participated in ceremonies of interest. The lodge, by its degree team, initiated a class of candidates in the presence of a large number of members. Following the initiation the lodge closed its session and the meeting was turned over to Dr. A. Tilzer, deputy for the ladies' auxiliary, who took charge of a most interesting program, in which Oregon Auxiliary No. 2, Daughters of the Covenant, was presented with its charter by Brother David M. Mosessohn, first vice-president of the District Grand Lodge. After the adjournment of the meeting refreshments were served by the ladies. Short addresses were made by Mesdames Wax, president of the auxiliary, Mosessohn, Klapper, Lauterstein and Rosenstein.

The first B'nai B'rith basket ball dance, held on Nov. 21, was a complete success. The attendance was large, the music was excellent and all present enjoyed themselves.

B'nai B'rith services were held on Friday evening, Nov. 10, 1916, at Tefereth Israel Synagogue. Mr. D. N. Mosessohn officiated and Mr. M. Mosessohn delivered a lecture. The synagogue was crowded with members of the congregation and of the Portland lodges.

On Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, 1916, Dr. Boris D. Bogen, field secretary of the National Conference of Jewish Charities, addressed an open meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge at which a large number of members interested in social work were present. Dr. Bogen explained the workings of present-day relief work and of modern methods instituted by the National Conference.

LINCOLN LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A well attended meeting of Lincoln Lodge No. 780 of Philadelphia, Pa., was held on Nov. 2, 1916, at Hotel Walton. A most interesting report was rendered by the committee on "The Reading of the Bible in the Public Schools".

The committee on the first anniversary banquet made a lengthy report. The first annual banquet will be held on Jan. 4, 1917. The invited guests will be the entire general committee of the district.

The president reported that the general committee of the district met at the Hotel Majestic on Sunday, Oct. 29, having spent almost the entire day in its deliberations. As a result of their labors, there will be a united effort of all the lodges in Philadelphia to give, in the near future, a combined ball for the benefit of the Orphans' Home at Erie. On that committee there were appointed David Phillips and Harry M. Miller, of Lincoln Lodge.

At the next meeting of Lincoln Lodge, to be held next December, there will take place a large class initiation of candidates.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF OAKLAND LODGE, OAKLAND, CAL.

The forty-first anniversary of Oakland Lodge No. 252 was celebrated Nov. 28 in Convent Hall, Oakland, Cal. Mr. Henry Newburg, president of District No. 4, was present and was accompanied by a staff of officers and distinguished members from San Francisco.

One of the chief events of the evening was the initiation of 40 candidates by the degree team of a committee of 50 from San Francisco. The ceremony was impressive and was carried out with full robes and regalia.

Past President George Samuels delivered the greetings of Oakland Lodge to the visitors. President Newburgh delivered the presidential message and the address of the evening.

Morris Mazor, president of the Oakland B'nai B'rith, also made a short address. This was the most elaborate anniversary night ever held by the lodge.

B'nai B'rith of Chicago

On November 28, 1916, Oriental-Hillel Lodge, No. 72, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its institution with a banquet at the Hotel La Salle. Of the charter members, four are surviving, and two of them, Brothers M. Goodman and A. P. Levi, were present at the celebration.

Brother Maurice Markowitz, President of the Lodge, welcomed the members and the guests, and introduced as the chairman of the evening Brother Julius H. Meyer, a Past President of the District Grand Lodge. The following toasts were responded to:

"The Order," Adolf Kraus, President of the Order.

"District Grand Lodge No. 6," Dr. H. I. Davis, President of the District.

"The History of the Lodge," Philip Stein, member of the Executive Committee of the Order.

"David Fish Lodge," Benjamin Samuels, Past President of the Lodge.

"Ramah Lodge," A. B. Seelenfreund, Secretary of the Order.

"The Ladies," Dr. Gotthard Deutsch of Cincinnati.

On behalf of Ramah Lodge, Brother Seelenfreund presented as a token of their esteen a beautiful American flag and the same was accepted on behalf of Oriental-Hillel Lodge by its president.

The celebration was brought to a close with a dance which lasted until the early hours of the morning.

Ramah Lodge No. 33 held a well-attended meeting at the Hotel La Salle on Monday evening, November 13, 1916. More than 150 applications for membership were presented as a result of the propaganda campaign. Special feature of the meeting was an address by Brother Dr. Isaac L. Rypins of St. Paul, who spoke on the subject, "The Jewish Problem and the Problem of the Jew." Dr. Rypins eloquently portrayed the misfortunes that befell the Jewish people during the present war, pointed out the animosities and the prejudices that are constantly increasing, making the lot of the Jews harder and harder even in this country. To counteract this growing danger, he pointed out the necessity of righteous living on the part of the Jew, emphasizing the fact that good conduct, upright living and faithful observance of the duties as a Jew and as a citizen will tend greatly to relieve present undesirable conditions.

Brother Rypins' address was followed by an ovation and a rising vote of thanks was tendered by the lodge, coupled with an invitation to soon agin honor the lodge with his presence.

Rabbi Charles J. Freund of Grand Rapids, Mich., was a special guest of David Fish Lodge No. 130 at its meeting held on Nov. 20, 1916, at the Hotel Morrison. Rabbi Freund addressed the lodge on the subject, "Utah and Her People, or Mormonism from a Jewish Standpoint." He accompanied his lecture with stereopticon views. Rabbi Freund enlightened the audience with the history and origin of Mormonism, depicted its steady growth, and his address proved novel, entertaining and instructive.

Preceding the address, four candidates were initiated and a large number of applications for membership were presented and ordered referred to various investigating committees.

Among the new members initiated was Mr. Edward Lashman, of Chicago, the Director of the Big Brother Movement of the B'nai B'rith in Chicago.

At the close of the meeting, cigars were served and a social hour was spent.

The annual observance of B'nai B'rith Day will be held on Saturday evening, January 6, 1917, at Hotel La Salle. Arrangements are under the auspices of Central B'nai B'rith Council. Speakers of the evening will be Prof. Edmund J. James, President of the University of Illinois, and Harry A. Wheeler, First President of the Chamber of Commerce, Chicago. The celebration will be brought to a close with a reception and ball. Reservations for the banquet are now being taken and in view of the fact that a large number of reservations have already been made, those who contemplate attending should secure their reservations at the earliest possible time.

The Central B'nai B'rith Council, on behalf of the Chicago lodges, gave a musical and ball on Saturday evening, November 25, 1916, in the ballroom of the Hotel La Salle. The program was under the direction of Dr. Joseph B. Sonnenschein, which was as follows:

Piano solo ....Isaac Van Grove
  a. Marche Militaire...Schubert-Tausig
  b. The Lark.................. Gliska
Vocal solo.........Elsa Harthan-Arendt
  Aria from Opera "La Tosca"... ...
  ....Vici D'Arte
Child Readings ....Jene Ludgin
Vocal Duet ....
  Arendt, Dr. Joseph B. Sonnenschein
Vocal Duet........Elsa Harthan-Arendt
  a. Abschied der Voegel
  b. Sweet and Low
Violin solo.................Ida Divinoff
  a. Caprice Viennoise........ Kreisler
  b. Zapateado (Spanish Dance)......
  .... Sarasate

The evening's affair was brought to a close with a ball.

The Propaganda campaign inaugurated by the Central B'nai B'rith Council on behalf of the Chicago Lodges is showing good results. Up to December 1 more than 400 candidates have been secured and the committee in charge of the campaign confidently hopes that the number secured will equal the record of last year. Preparations are being made now for a monster class initiation to be held at Hotel LaSalle on Saturday, Jan. 20, 1917.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Maimonides Lodge No. 46 of Nashville, Tenn., was favored on Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 4 and 5, with the presence of Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Social Service Director. Lecturing on Monday evening at the Y. M. H. A., under the auspices of the Council of Jewish Women, Dr. Coffee chose as his theme "Religion Tomorrow". Last month the American citizens divided their votes among five political parties, yet the following Saturday and Sunday these very persons required almost two hundred rituals of worship to pray to God. Today there are two hundred religions urging man to be religious. Tomorrow there will be less of the dogma; more of the emphasis will be laid on deed. This ideal of social service has always been a cardinal principle of Israel.

On Tuesday evening a special meeting of the lodge was held in the Vine St. Temple, presided over by Brother J. Moss, president of the lodge. Dr. Coffee spoke on "B'nai B'rith Social Service Work". Early this year, when in Nashville, Dr. Coffee had outlined a plan of action. Now he was pleased to report the spreading of the Social Service idea throughout the lodges of the North. This work will henceforth be a most important factor in all B'nai B'rith activity. Concrete illustrations were given of the successful application of the Big Brother movement. He encouraged the local members to interest themselves in bringing worthy immigrants to Central Tennessee. There is ample farm land and good opportunities for deserving poor folks.

It was a pleasure to learn that Judge Madison Wells of the Juvenile Court recently spoke in the highest terms of the Big Brother work being carried on by the lodge. As a result of the conference between the director and members of the committee, the Big Brother movement will hereafter take up preventive cases as well as those of a remedial character.

TOLEDO LODGE OBSERVES B'NAI B'RITH DAY.

On Sunday evening, Nov. 12, Toledo Lodge, No. 183, observed B'nai B'rith Day with a splendid program of speakers and music.

Rabbi Louis Wolsey, of Cleveland, was the principal speaker. His subject was "Facts and Fictions About the Jew."

In forceful words, lightened here and there with a touch of humor Rabbi Wolsey pointed out that others have always taken our race as saints or devils, Daniel Derondas or Shylocks, instead of plain human beings.

The dramatic voice of the speaker and his pleasing delivery held the rapt attention of the large audience.

The enjoyable program included vocal selections by Miss Minna Plotkin and Mr. Herbert Davies, and piano numbers by Mr. Thomas Rubee Wilson. Judge Curtis Johnson, of Toledo, was also a speaker.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION BY NEBRASKA LODGE, OF OMAHA, NEB.

The 34th anniversary of the institution of Nebraska Lodge, No. 354, of Omaha, Neb., was celebrated on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, 1916. The attendance was very large, and after the regular business was disposed of the meeting was closed and all present assembled in the banquet hall to participate in a sumptuous spread. Brother Isidore Ziegler acted as toastmaster. Addresses were delivered as follows: "The Past History of Nebraska Lodge," by Brother Max Morris; "What Nebraska Lodge Stands for at the Present Time," by Brother Chas. S. Elgutter; "The Future Possibilities of Nebraska Lodge," by Brother Rabbi Frederick Cohn; "What the Order is Doing and Stands for," by Brother Nathan Bernstein. The pleasant feature of the celebration was the presence of a large number of older and charter members of the Lodge.

THE B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE AND HOME FOR FRIENDLESS CHILDREN OF DISTRICT NO. 3, ERIE, PA.

The first quarterly meeting of the fifth year of the Board of Governors of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3 was held at Erie, Pa., on November 26th, 1916, a number of Governors from the District being present.

Nine applications for admission to the Home were acted upon favorably, seven boys and two girls, as follows: Altoona, Pa., 1; Paterson, N. J., 2; Martinsburg, W. Va., 4; Erie, Pa., 1; Woodbine, N. J., 1. With these admissions the Home will shelter thirty-four children, making it necessary to open the second cottage. The committee is looking for a teacher who could also act as supervisor of this cottage. Among the recommendations was that of equipping a work shop of eight benches for vocational training.

The Committee on Memorial Tablets reported that the cost of installation will be about $500. Inasmuch as no funds are available for that purpose the Committee was given further time in the hope that some friend might donate a sufficient amount to install the tablets in memory of a dear one departed.

By vote of the Board the January quarterly meeting will be held in the City of Pittsburgh.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

A special joint meeting of Alabama Lodge No. 299 and Emanuel Lodge No. 103 was held on Sunday morning, Dec. 3 to greet Brother Ernest R. Bernstein of Shreveport, La., President of District No. 7 and Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, National Director of the Social Service Department. Brief addresses were delivered during the meeting by various members of the lodges and responded to by the two visiting brethren. That evening, a splendid open meeting was held in the Temple, at which Rabbi B. C. Ehrenreich presided. After a brief opening prayer by Dr. Ehrenreich, President Bernstein delivered a most sympathetic eulogy on the life and work of the lamented Leo N. Levi, former President of the Order. Such a man can never die. Even when he passes from our midst, his work lives on in the shape of a memorial, more lasting than any possible monument or tombstone. It is for us, the living, to continue the statesmanlike plans of our deceased President. It is a privilege to remember that he was called to his highest office from District No. 7, where he had been born and reared.

After a musical number, Dr. Coffee spoke on the "New B'nai B'rith Work", in which he gave an analysis of the work which had been undertaken since the Social Service Department had been in operation. The Big Brother movement is spreading in all parts of the country under B'nai B'rith auspices. Although the number of Jewish prisoners, away from the Atlantic seaboard, is by no means large, nevertheless the B'nai B'rith is emphasizing the need of taking personal care of each one when released from State or Federal Prison. When we can co-operate, our Order will aid Jewish farmers to till the soil. District No. 7 is entitled to great credit for the large and ambitious plan relative to the "City-Farm" project. Practically every State in the Union has Jewish farmers successfully tilling the soil. We shall encourage Jews to leave the crowded centers of population and settle in the country districts.

A reception was tendered the visiting guests at the conclusion of the meeting by the local committee. It was unanimously agreed that much enthusiasm had been awakened by the two meetings. Local members feel greatly encouraged thereby.

BULLETIN OF THE CULTURAL ADVANCEMENT COMMITTEE. DISTRICT NO. 7, I. O. B. B.

The Cultural Advancement Committee of this district offers a prize of $50 for the best essay on the following subject: "Why Every Jew Should Be a Member of B'nai B'rith." The essay which wins the prize will be read at all the lodges on B'nai B'rith Day, January 21st, 1917.

NEW CASTLE LODGE, NEW CASTLE, PA.

A very well attended meeting of New Castle Lodge, No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., was held on Sunday, Nov. 5, 1916. A class of 13 candidates was initiated by the degree team composed of a number of visiting Grand Lodge officers.

Among the prominent officers who attended this meeting were Mr. Isidore Sobel, of Erie, Pa., Past President of the District; Mark Alexander, of Pittsburgh, a member of the General Committee; Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, Pa., Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District; M. J. Kraus, of Elwood City, a member of the District Court of Appeals, and Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge.

A large number of visitors were in attendance from Sharon, Beaver Falls and Elwood City.

After the regular order of business was concluded, addresses on the welfare of the Order were made by the visiting Grand Lodge officers and by Reverend A. Moss, one of the new members initiated.

After the meeting a buffet luncheon and smoker was held. The meeting was a great success and will be long remembered by those present.

On Sunday evening, Nov. 26, 1916, New Castle Lodge, No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day with an open meeting. The lodge room was filled to its capacity and a most excellent program was carried on.

Rabbi I. E. Philo, of Youngstown, O., delivered the principal address on the subject "B'nai B'rithism." Reverend A. Moss made the opening prayer and the program included vocal and instrumental members, which aroused much applause.

Dr. B. M. Beyer presided at the celebration and a short talk on the work of the Order was delivered by him as well as Brothers Feuchtwanger, Harris and Rosenblum.

DES MOINES LODGE No. 330, DES MOINES, IA.

Brothers H. D. Frankel and Gustavus Loevinger of St. Paul, second vice-president and chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the district, respectively, paid an official visit to Des Moines Lodge No. 330, of Des Moines, Ia., on Dec. 1, 1916. Upon their arrival they were met by Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer and immediately thereafter embarked upon a campaign for membership which lasted the entire day. At the close of the day 32 new members were secured for the lodge. Considering the rather limited field, and the fact that during a large part of the day there were only two teams canvassing the Jewish community, the teams being Rabbi Cohn and Loevinger on one team and Rabbi Mannheimer and Frankel on the other team, the results were gratifying and amply repaid the efforts made. In addition to the actual increase in new members secured the teams received a large number of promises of others who agreed to affiliate with the lodge within a short time.

At the request of the officers, Des Moines Lodge did not prepare any entertainment, except that there was a luncheon arranged at noon, which was participated in by ten of the leading members of the lodge, at which plans for the future work of the lodge were discussed.

In the evening Brother Frankel addressed a public meeting in the temple of Rabbi Cohn, choosing as his subject "The Simplest Faith," and Brother Loevinger spoke in the temple of Rabbi Mannheimer on the subject, "The Changing Jew." The addresses were in connection with the usual Friday evening services.

NAT STRAUSS LODGE, BRISTOL, TENNESSEE.

On Sunday afternoon, the 19th inst., Nat Strauss Lodge, No. 779, of Bristol, Tenn., had as their guests nearly the entire Jewish population of this city at a "Kaffee Klatch," given in honor of our Johnson City members, residents of a nearby community. Refreshments, music and dancing were the features of the entertainment, which was interspersed with short talks on the "Aims and Purposes of the Order" by several of our members. Inasmuch as this was the first affair of any kind, religious, social or otherwise, that brought so many of our co-religionists together on one occasion, and in which everyone seems to be thoroughly congenial, the affair was pronounced a decided success. The main object was to increase our membership, and in this several applications have been reported. The arrangements were perfect and were in charge of a committee composed of the wives of our members, namely, Mrs. L. Morse, Mrs. Benj. Alperin and Mrs. Chas. Schimmelman. A similar affair is being arranged for Hanuka, next month.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ORGANIZATION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT OTTUMWA, IA.

Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, of Des Moines, Ia., paid a two days' visit to Ottumwa, Ia., during which he procured 24 candidates, who are to join in a petition for a charter for a lodge, which number, it is hoped, will be increased by at least 15 more before the petition is forwarded to the Grand Lodge.

Rabbi Mannheimer reached Ottumwa on Monday, Nov. 13, and on that evening addressed a group of young men at a dinner arranged in his honor, and for that purpose, by Mr. Clinton Adler, to whom a major part of the success of his visit is surely due. All present at the dinner signed applications for membership. The next evening Rabbi Mannheimer addressed a gathering at the synagogue which resulted in the securing of an additional list of applicants. Mr. Chas. Redman was chosen chairman of the committee to take charge of the work, and a great deal of credit is due to him also for the success of Rabbi Mannheimer's visit. It has been suggested that after the Lodge is instituted, besides the 40 members it is expected to secure in Ottumwa, that quite a number will be obtained in the neighboring small towns, which will strengthen the Lodge considerably.

SASKATOON LODGE, SASKATOON, CANADA.

As a result of the efforts of the Vaudeville Vigilance Committee recently appointed by Saskatoon Lodge, No. 739, of Saskatoon, Canada, an objectionable scene from the play "Every Woman," which was recently played in that city, was eliminated, the character representing a Jewish peddler appearing on Broadway at midnight on New Year's Ave. While the characterization could not be classified as defamatory, nevertheless it was objectionable from many standpoints. The committee is deserving of much appreciation for its good work.

There is a spirit of confidence and optimism prevailing among the members of the Lodge, evidenced by the fact that at its last meeting held on Nov. 7 ten applications for membership were presented. Three candidates were initiated and seven additional candidates were elected. This certainly speaks well for a small community.

RIMMON LODGE, RICHMOND, VA.

At the November meeting of Rimmon Lodge, No. 68, held at the Temple, a large number of members present were both entertained and instructed by the Reverend Yasgou, who spoke on the "Moral Effect of the War on the Jews." The speaker called attention to a saying in the Talmud that whatever happens is for the best. He then launched into the subject with the optomistic statement that blessings will come. and that every war has brought more or less an amelioration of conditions.

Brother Raymond Denser, a member of the Order from New York, who was a guest of the Lodge, was then called upon for a talk. He reviewed conditions that existed in Germany as late as 1861, and of the many restrictions the Jews had to suffer on account of their religious belief. Touching upon the work of the Order, the speaker told how the Order was impelled to co-operate for the benefit of the Jewish people. He closed his remarks by saying, "We Jews must not lose sight of old traditions. We must study the past to create ideals for future guidance."

Brother Jos. L. Levi, now of Baltimore, who visited the Lodge, was privileged to hear his many years of service to the Lodge and his District reviewed in an eulogistic manner

JACOB H. SCHIFF LODGE, LANSING, MICH.

"The Talmud and Its Relation to the Modern World" was the main topic of discussion at a recent meeting of the Jacob H. Schiff Lodge, No. 694. Brother Barney Smith was the lecturer of the evening. His lecture was thoroughly enjoyed by all those present, and the general discussion which followed was invigorating. The desire to know more about Judaism and its traditions was [illegible] evident and it was decided to continue these discussions at subsequent meetings. The Talmud, to be sure, offers many opportunities for study and discussion. Brother Barney Smith is well versed in Talmudic teachings and his [illegible] (stories) were a treat to the members of the Lodge

OMAHA, NERASKA.

An official visit was paid to the B'nai B'rith lodges of Omaha by Brothers H. D. Frankel and Gustavus Loevinger, of St. Paul, second vice-president and chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, respectively. The officers reached Omaha on the morning of Dec. 2, 1916. The lodges arranged a banquet for the next day, Sunday, and a lodge meeting with initiation of a class of candidates on Sunday afternoon, and also an affair at Council Bluffs on Sunday evening.

On Saturday noon an informal luncheon was tendered to the visiting Grand Lodge officers, and in response to their urging to secure new members a number of members agreed to form teams and to proceed to secure new members for the Omaha lodges. As a result of their efforts a class of 25 applications were secured, which encouraged the workers so much that Brothers Frankel and Loevinger extended their stay in Omaha over all day Monday and decided upon a systematic plan to properly canvass the city. During Monday 70 more applications were secured, making a total of 95 new members for the two lodges, with five more prospectives and a large number of good material ready to affiliate within a short time.

At the luncheon on Sunday the visitors made a talk on social service. In the afternoon at the meeting of the two lodges, which was attended by more than 100 members, they also delivered talks on the works of the Order, Brother Loevinger using for his theme the extensive relief work the Order is doing, the institutions it maintains, the social service departments it established and finally the harmony and unity it seeks to preserve.

B'NAI B'RITH OF JOPLIN CELEBRATE B'NAI B'RITH DAY.

United Cities Lodge No. 533, I. O. B. B., celebrated its annual B'nai B'rith Day, Dec. 10, in an auspicious manner. An entire afternoon and evening were given up to the event. Regular lodge meeting was signalized by the initiation of a class of 14 and the session was followed by a banquet and entertainment.

Brother Harry Hurwitz, acting as toastmaster, called upon Brother Rabbi Joseph Leiser and Brother G. F. Neuberger for addresses and both gentlement responded eloquently. Brief addresses were made by Will Fleischaker, president of the lodge; Morris Scherl, past president; David Weil, a charter member, and Mose Weiler.

United Cities Lodge is prospering. Within 14 years the membership has increased from 24 to 114 with several candidates awaiting initiation. The development within the past four years has been especially marked. An entertainment committee has assumed the burden of arranging monthly programs which are presented to audiences of young and old of the Joplin district, often numbering over 250 persons.

BELLINGHAM, WASHINGTON.

The entertainment and open meeting of Bellingham Lodge No. 756, of Bellingham, Wash., on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 26, proved a successful and enjoyable affair. An important feature of the evening was the presentation of the charter to the auxiliary by the president of the lodge, Mr. M. J. Schwartz. The speaker of the evening, Mr. H. Kessler, of Seattle, Wash., first president of the B'nai B'rith in Seattle, Wash., delivered a splendid address which was enthusiastically received, and which had its immediate effect by the application for membership of several men in the audience. Another speaker was Brother B. Levine, president of Hildesheimer Lodge, of Seattle, who spoke with telling effect of the work of the Order.

Various musical numbers were rendered and refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

Samuel Auxiliary gave a social on Dec. 10, 1916, in place of the literary meeting originally intended.

The auxiliary held an intellectual evening at the home of Mrs. Herman on Tuesday, Nov. 28, 1916. A paper was read by Miss Rosengard on "Disraeli, the Jew," which was well received. These literary meetings of the auxiliary are both instructive and congenial.

Samuel Lodge and its ladies' auxiliary held a joint meeting on Nov. 8. Miss A. P. Letvinoff read an interesting paper on "B'nai B'rith." The musical program was also enjoyed.

MINNESOTA LODGE, ST. PAUL.

Minnesota Lodge No. 157 of St. Paul held a well attended meeting on Nov. 19, on which occasion a class of 13 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge. A pleasing feature of the meeting was the presence of Brother Michael Frankel, one of the oldest members of the lodge and the father of Brother H. D. Frankel, second vice-president of the District Grand Lodge. Brother Frankel delivered a talk to the members depicting some of the hardships that the pioneers of the B'nai B'rith went through in order to maintain the existence of the lodge.

The lodge celebrated B'nai B'rith Day with a banquet on Nov. 20, 1916. Brother Milton Firestone, president of the lodge, acted as toastmaster. Among the speakers were Brother Maurice Stoffer, who welcomed the guests on behalf of the lodge and spoke to some extent upon the objects and purposes of the Order; Brother Lewis Hart, past president of John Hay Lodge of Fargo, and J. A. Blum, past president of Des Moines Lodge responded briefly. Toasts were responded to also by Brothers Gustavus Loevinger, B. Wilencheck, H. D. Frankel, Dr. M. Sherper and Rabbi I. L. Rypins. The closing speech was made by Rabbi Rypins, in which he made an earnest plea for action on the part of the lodge to oppose any movement for the introducing of Bible reading in the public schools There were several vocal solos and other musical numbers. The banquet was well attended and was undoubtedly a success from every standpoint.

INSTITUTION OF PHOENIX LODGE NO. 799 OF PHOENIX, ARIZ.

With the largest gathering of Jewish men ever brought together in Phoenix present on the evening of December 4, 1916, in the Moose Hall, Phoenix Lodge No. 799 was instituted with thirty charter members.

That the young organization is going to be husky, and an addition of a decided beneficial nature to the other fraternal organizations of the city, was evident from the very start. The men who make up the lodge are among the foremost business and professional men of the city, and their activities will not be localized within the lodge room.

Mr. Lucius L. Solomons of San Francisco, First Vice-President of the Order, acted on behalf of District Grand Lodge No. 4 as the installing officer. He delivered a very able address outlining the work of the Order and its accomplishments and its hopes and aims for the future.

Brother B. P. Goldman of Tucson, President of the B'nai B'rith lodge of that city, was also present, adding to the pleasures of the evening with a short talk.

After the election of officers and close of the meeting, a banquet was held at which short talks were indulged in by many of the members present.

The following officers were elected: B. E. Marks, president; Herman Lewkowitz, vice-president; Walter Morris, secretary; Sylvan Ganz, treasurer; Harry Friedman, monitor; Edward Rothman, vice monitor; A. L. Veranz, warden; M. Arons, guardian; Simon Oberfelder, Isaac Rosenzweig and Joseph Melczer, trustees.

The first president of the lodge is a former resident of Chicago, being the son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Marks of 4935 Forrestville Avenue. He is one of the leading attorneys of Phoenix.

HOPE LODGE, STOCKTON, CAL.

On Nov. 22, 1916, an official visit was paid to Hope Lodge, No. 126, of Stockton, Cal., by the President of the District Grand Lodge, Mr. Henry Newburgh, of San Francisco, Cal, accompanied by the Grand Orator, Dr. Martin A. Meyer, and the Secretary of the Grand Lodge, I. J. Ashheim, all of San Francisco. A class of candidates was initiated in honor of the visiting Grand Lodge officers. Among the candidates was the new Rabbi of the congregation, Rabbi Harvey B. Franklin. During the course of the meeting, the Grand Lodge officers addressed the members. Dr. Meyer delivered an especially interesting talk based upon the freedom and peace granted to people of the Jewish faith in America and their corresponding duty to the country.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served.

MAGIC CITY LODGE, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

The regular monthly meeting for December of Magic City Lodge No. 725 was held at the Fraternal Hall on Sunday, Dec. 3, 1916. Every seat of the spacious lodge room was occupied. The existing atmosphere was truly fraternal and a wave of spiritual unity and friendliness was reigning in every nook and corner of the big hall.

A number of candidates were initiated and new officers elected, but the real enthusiasm was caused by a splendid address by Samuel Ulman, a member of the Order for 55 years, and one of the most beloved, respected and admired citizens in the state.

Mr. Ulman emphasized the noble principle of B'nai B'rithism, which are "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony". He dwelt a great deal on the true mission of the Jew, which is and has ever been "justice, righteousness and peace". Mr. Ulman also touched lightly the widely-spread movement of Zionism. He acknowledged that Zionism has become a great factor in cementing the cause of unity and Judaism and to bring back into the Jewish fold an element, rather very intelligent element, which had been really away from the common interest of the Jewish people. Mr. Ulman also expressed himself greatly in favor of inspiring Jewish colonization and promoting the development and centralizing Jewish history, Jewish art, Jewish literature and Jewish culture in general in Palestine, but did not believe the time ripe, nor the place settled enough for Jewish autonomy. The speaker urged the necessity of proper Jewish training for Jewish children, when in due course of time will fully understand their function in the community of Jews—bearers of the banner of "Light, Justice, Truth and Peace".

The newly-elected officers are as follows: President, D. T. Feidelson; vice-president, I. Abelson; secretary, Chas. A. Lass; treasurer, Isidore Shapiro; monitor, Louis Silberman; assistant monitor, M. Wolowitz; warden, Perry Senelowitz.

Magic City Lodge is one of life, energy and fraternal enthusiasm.

C. L. LASS.

FORTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 5, I. O. B. B.

The forty-third annual meeting of District Grand Lodge No. 5 will be held in Richmond, Va., beginning Sunday, January 21st, 1917, with the usual literary exercises at Temple Beth Ahabah on that evening.

The Convention will be preceded by the annual meeting of the Directors of the Hebrew Orphans' Home of Atlanta.

The sessions promise to be of interest and of great importance to the district, as the by-laws will be revised in accordance with previous resolution to that effect. The meetings are expected to continue through Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Committee of Arrangements, of whom H. S. Bloomberg, a Past-President of the District, is Chairman, and who with Edwin L. Levy, First Vice-President of the Grand Lodge, are an Executive Committee, have arranged for suitable meeting places and accommodations, and suitable entertainment for the attendants.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE.

The annual ball given on Thanksgiving Eve by the Emma Lazarus Auxiliary proved a delightful success, socially as well as financially. More than 250 couples enjoyed the affair.

Emma Lazarus Auxiliary held an interesting meeting on Nov. 22, on which occasion the charter of the lodge was formally presented by District Deputy A. Hurwitz. Several interesting talks were given by the Grand Lodge officers and the members of the auxiliary.

Hildesheimer Lodge met on the same evening and nominated its officers for the ensuing year.

A prize of $25.00 for the best essay on some phase of Judaism is offered by Rainier Lodge No. 627. The contest is open to Menorah members only.

Ranier Lodge No. 627 is arranging for a class initiation to be held on Dec. 28, 1916. The official degree team of Theo. Herzl Lodge of Portland has been invited to do the work. Invitations have also been extended to the lodges of the Pacific Northwest to send delegations to attend the meeting, which is expected to be a gala occasion.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

NEW YORK LODGES ORGANIZE SOCIAL WELFARE COMMITTEE.

A committee to be known as the Social Welfare Committee was organized at the headquarters Monday evening, Dec. 4, with Bro. Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein as chairman; Bro. Dr. M. M. Stark as vice-chairman, and Bro. Ely Rosenberg as secretary. These meetings will be held regularly at the headquarters the third Tuesday of each month. Bro. Ely Rosenberg of 346 Broadway, telephone 2674-5 Franklin, will receive applications for social service work. Bro. Rosenberg requests the kind co-operation and assistance of every member in the Metropolitan district. He would like to hear from every benevolently inclined member who would like to be a big brother to some unfortunate Jewish boy, a visitor to some friendless sick or a club leader to direct boys in the path of virtue and civic and religious duty. The committee is in communication with hospitals and other eleemosynary institutions in order to be kept informed that friendless sick are in need of the committee's attention. Those lodges that have not yet appointed committees to co-operate with the Social Welfare Committee are particularly requested to send either to the District Secretary, Bro. Bernard M. Kaplan, 2307 Broadway, or to Bro. Ely Rosenberg, the names of three members as a committee to co-operate with the Social Welfare Committee.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Jehuda Halevi Lodge No. 710 of New Britain. Conn., initiated a class of thirty at its last meeting. The ritual was exemplified by the excellent Springfield Degree Team. At the close of the initiation work, a social hour was spent at which refreshments were served. Bro. Dr. B. L. Protass acted as chairman. The following brothers addressed the meeting: Henry Lasker, Phinney L. Davison, president of Springfield Lodge; Rabbi Samuel Price of Springfield, Deputy Bro. Morris D. Saxe and Bro. N. M. Miller, president of Jehuda Halevi Lodge. Bro. Joseph H. Ullman of New Haven was one of the distinguished guests present. Jehuda Halevi Lodge contemplates holding its annual ball on Jan. 7, 1917.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

A well attended meeting of the B'nai B'rith Joint Committee representing the New Orleans lodges was held in the meeting rooms of the Y. M. H. A. on Saturday evening, Nov. 11, 1916, with Mr. Sam Blum in the chair. A number of important questions were discussed, among them being an inauguration of a membership campaign to be followed by a class initiation, at which the presence of the president of the district, Ernest R. Bernstein of Shreveport, La., is expected.

Owing to many and arduous duties which make a great demand upon his time, Mr. Sam Blum resigned the chairmanship of the joint committee and Rabbi E. W. Leipziger was appointed to fill the vacancy.

A well attended and highly enjoyable joint meeting of the six lodges of New Orleans was held on Monday evening, Nov. 27, 1916, at the Y. M. H. A. under the auspices of Home and Gutheim lodges.

An address by Dr. Mendel Silber on "The Racial and Religious Elements of B'nai B'rith" was followed by a general discussion participated in by Rabbi Max Heller, Bros. Archibald A. Marx, Jos. S. Loeb, Elkin Moses, Erhard Mayer, and other members present. Mr. Harry L. Glucksman presided at the meeting and, as a result of the discussion, it was decided to make the future work of the B'nai B'rith in this city such as to intensify the racial consciousness and religious interests and activities among its members.

B'NAI B'RITH OF BALTIMORE ACQUIRE HOME

Menorah Lodge No. 771, of Baltimore. Md., has acquired the building located at 2106 Eutaw Place, which it will occupy in the near future.

The building will be used for purposes of social service in its various forms. There will be maintained a library, reading room, social hall, and such other activities as are usual in a well regulated club house. From time to time instructive and interesting lectures will be given by prominent men and the use of the building will be tendered to various societies as a meeting place.

VICKSBURG, MASS.

A splendid meeting of Mississippi Lodge No. 98 was held on Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, to hear Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Social Service Director, who was in Vicksburg that day. A large gathering was in attendance at the Temple Ansche Chesed, when Rabbi Sol Kory, as chairman, called the meeting to order. He explained the new department and pleaded for increased interest in Jewish affairs. Dr. Coffee spoke on "Judaism and Charity." He very forcibly laid down the thesis that the Social Service Department would not touch the problem of charity as alms-giving. Judaism ever emphasized justice and righteousness, urging that a man be given a chance and open opportunity, not some money as a donation. A man wishes work, not charity. This latter is a Christian ideal, against which we must stand firm. The world will grow better as the need for charity decreases, and with the increase of the spirit of justice, correspondingly will poverty and pauperism decrease on earth. Judaism must labor for the spread of the ideals of justice, and thereby bless our beloved land.

An interesting and profitable meeting was held with the Social Service Director. Over twenty active members attended a call to talk over local and general problems. The discussion showed many ways in which a Social Service Committee could render valuable aid. Much splendid land can now be purchased at ridiculously low prices and additions to the Jewish community will be welcomed by the members. New families will add strength. There are several avenues of industry which may be entered with profit. A committee will be appointed at once to take a survey of local conditions, look after Jewish delinquency, keep in close touch with Jewish institutions in the western section of the state, and help arriving Jews to settle in the city.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATION BY EL PASO LODGE, EL PASO, TEXAS.

On Dec. 11, 1916, El Paso Lodge No. 509 observed B'nai B'rith Day at Temple Mt. Sinai. After the rendition of an elaborate program of addresses and music, a social hour and dance was held in the community hall of the Temple. The following was the program of exercises:

Remarks	Chairman Committee
Opening Prayer	Rabbi Moise Bergman, Albuquerque. N. M.
Piano Solo	Florence Klein
Address	Rabbi George Fox, Ft. Worth, Texas
Piano Solo	Elsie Goodman
Violin Solo—"Beautiful Thoughts of Love," "Hatikvah"	Marcus Simon
Address	Rabbi Max Heller, New Orleans, La.
Song	Mr. Chas. J. Andrews
Closing Prayer	Rabbi M. Faber, Tyler, Texas

BRISTOL, TENN.

Nat Strauss Lodge No. 779 of Bristol. Tenn., gave an entertainment on Sunday, Nov. 19, 1916, as a countesy to the members of the lodge residing in Johnson City, Tenn. A most enjoyable afternoon was spent, nearly the entire Jewish population of the city attending, being the first social affair ever given by a Jewish organization. This community only numbers about 150 co-religionists, and having no other Jewish organization in its midst, the affair had been looked forward to with more or less joyful anticipation as a means of bringing the Jewish community together, and from that standpoint it was a complete success. Besides it proved an effective propaganda means as several members were secured during the afternoon.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

Under the auspices of Lasker Lodge No. 370, San Diego, Cal., an interesting meeting was held on Nov. 13, at which a class of four candidates was initiated. After the initiation some instructive talks were made by the newly-initiated members, as well as some of the older members.

On Monday evening, Nov. 27, after the close of the regular meeting of the lodge, a dance was given at the Masonic Temple. One of the largest crowds that ever attended any of the affairs of the season was present.

The lodge is planning as its next public affair to have a dramatic entertainment.

TACOMA LODGE, TACOMA, WASH.

One of the most enjoyable social events of the season was the dance and entertainment given by Tacoma Lodge No. 741, of Tacoma, Wash., on the evening of Nov. 15, 1916. Besides a large gathering of local people, many out-of-town guests participated and enjoyed the affair. The Intellectual Committee prepared a most interesting program which was successfully carried out. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Bro. Prof. Eugene H. Lehman delivered a very interesting talk at the meeting of Jordan Lodge on Dec. 7 on the "Scientific Study of the Old Testament."

Bro. Archibald M. Hillman, the new member of the General Committee, together with other active brothers, is making arrangements for the organization of a new lodge in New Bedford, Mass. Brother Hillman is an indefatigable B. B. worker.

Jacob Lodge No. 91 of Syracuse, N. Y., held on Nov. 23 an interesting meeting at which ten candidates were initiated. Bro. Charles M. Stern of Albany, member of the General Committee, and District Deputy, addressed the meeting. The meeting was arranged chiefly through the efforts of Deputy Ben. Stolz. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, secretary of the District, was announced to address the meeting, but owing to the lamentable death of his wife he was unable to be present.

Abraham Lodge No. 89 of Bridgeport, Conn., will celebrate its golden anniversary in the early part of February. Elaborate preparations are being made for the event under the direction of Past-President of the District, Jacob B. Klein, who is assisted by a very capable commitee.

Israel Lodge No. 796 of Portland, Maine, entertained at a banquet the celebrated violinist. Mischa Elman, who played at a concert in Portland, Maine, before an audience of three thousand people. A commitee of Israel Lodge met the artist on his arrival. Prominent public officials were present at the banquet, which was presided over by the president of the lodge, Bro. Dr. Elias Caplan. Bro. M. Kaslin was chairman of the committee of arrangements. Mischa Elman responded very appreciatively and said that as a member of the Order he appreciated very much the honor.

The banquet tendered to Bro. Simon Wolf in New York was an unqualified success, and though the banquet was a national affair, it looked very much, as described by one of our distinguished brothers, like a B'nai B'rith affair, not only because of so many prominent members of the Order being present, but also because of the references made to B'nai B'rith activities. Among the well-known members of District No. 1 present were Bros. Judge A. K. Cohen, president of the District; Jacob H. Schiff, Hon. Henry M. Goldfogle, Isaac N. Seligman, Edward Lauterbach, Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, Charles Hartman, Harry Fischel, Charles M. Stern of Albany, Dr. Rudolph Grossman, Dr. Ephriam Frisch, Dr. Joseph Silverman, Bro. Samuel Heischman, Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, Congressman Isaac Siegel, Solomon Sulzberger, Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein and Isidor Hirshfield. Brother Hirshfield stated that in his travels in Europe in the interest of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society he was greatly helped by the B'nai B'rith lodges.

District No. 1 has taken up very seriously social work, under the leadership of Bro. Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein. The following lodges are greatly encouraging Bro. Rabbi Goldstein in his good work: Jordan, Washington, Maccabee, Flatbush, Henry Jones, Horeb, Israel and Harmony. Brother Goldstein expects to extend his work all through the District.

Bro. Isaac Moss of Bridgeport is taking great interest in the work of the Anti-Defamation League, of which Brother District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan is the Eastern representative.

Flatbush Lodge No. 753 held a theatre party at the Orpheum Theatre, Brooklyn, Tuesday evening, Nov. 28. The affair was a great social success.

Monday evening, Dec. 4, Henry Jones Lodge and Lebanon Lodge amalgamated under the name of Henry Jones Lebanon Lodge No. 79. Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, First Vice-President of the District, conducted the ceremonies. The meeting was well attended. Among those who addressed the meeting were Bros. Joseph Rosenzweig, Charles Hartman, Adolph Hirsch, Joshua Kantrowitz, Joseph Levenson and Moses Minzesheimer. Bro. I. B. Scheiber was nominated as President for the ensuing term. Assistant District Attorney Louis Fabricant was nomined for the office of Vice-President. Dr. George Sternberg declined the nomination of Secretary on account of his educational work which requires all his time. Bro. Maurice Cohen was then nominated for the office. Bro. Abraham Anhalt, the outgoing President, served the lodge as its President for eighteen years.

Tuesday evening, Dec. 5, the Hon. Raymond B. Fosdick delivered an address before Maccabee Lodge on the subject "Policing a Big City". The speaker was Commissioner of Accounts of the City of New York under Mayor Gaynor, and was sent abroad to study police conditions in Europe. He is a noted authority on the subject and his address was very interesting and instructive. A special invitation was extended to the brothers in the Metropolitan district.

Wednesday evening. Dec. 6, Flatbush Lodge held a Big Brother meeting at its lodge rooms, Savoy Hall, 854 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn. The Hon. Robert J. Wilkins, Justice of the Children's Court, delivered an address on the Big Brother movement. Second Vice-President of the District, Bro. Maurice P. Davidson, spoke on B'nai B'rithism. The meeting was well attended and was very enthusiastic. A number of lodges sent representatives to the meeting. Flatbush Lodge, though one of the youngest lodges in the District, is very active in Social Service Work.

Akiba, Manhattan and Washington lodges have arranged for a series of joint dances to be held at the headquarters, the first of which took place Saturday evening, Dec. 9, and proved to be a very enjoyable affair.

Washington Lodge No. 19, through its Intellectual Advancement Committee, will devote the second meeting of each month to purely educational matters. Prominent speakers will address these meetings.

Zion and Mount Sinai lodges, two of the prominent lodges in the Metropolitan district, contemplate amalgamating. So do Kishon and Maccabee.

Bro. Isaac Roth of Samuel Lodge No. 63, who has been a member of Samuel Lodge for fifty years, celebrated its golden wedding Dec. 10. Brother Roth has eight children and ten grandchildren.

Bro. Samuel Fleischman, Counsel to the District, and Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, First Vice-President of the District, have prepared an amendment to the laws of the District, which will be submitted to the next convention, making Social Service a regular department of the work of the District.

A number of lodges are making preparations to celebrate the Chanukah festival in the true Maccabean spirit.

Bro. Meyer L. Victorius presented to the lodge room a beautiful Menorah in honor of his late father, M. Victorius, who was very active in B. B. matters.

Israel Lodge No. 976 of Portland. Maine, is doing excellent work in the Jewish community of Portland. A Social Service Committee, consisting of Bros. David Shwartz, Samuel Rosenberg and Dr. Goldberg, is doing some very fine research work in the direction of Social Service.

Bro. Archibald M. Hillman of Worcester Lodge No. 600 has been appointed by the General Committee a member on the committee in place of Bro. I. Irving Lipsitch, who has taken up his residence in San Francisco.

The members of Flatbush Lodge No. 753 of Flatbush, N. Y., are entering upon a campaign of Big Brother work in co-operation with other societies of that borough. Besides this new activity, the lodge has created a charitable fund of its own for work that the committee will undertake.

Bro. Charles Hartman of New York, a member of the Executive Committee of the Order for District No. 1, has, on behalf of the Executive Committee, concluded arrangements for a reception and banquet at the Hotel Taft, New Haven, Conn., on Monday evening, Dec. 18, 1916. at which time and place the B'nai B'rith gold medal voted to Bro. Henry Morganthau will be presented. It is expected that delegations will be present from all over the District and that at least five hundred will attend the banquet.

The degree team of Toledo Lodge No. 183, of Toledo, Ohio, consisting of Rabbi David Alexander, Harry Levinson, Sam Messing, and Max Simon, accompanied by President L. M. Frank of the lodge and Mr. Sol Calisch, Past President, journeyed to Mansfield, Ohio, on Sunday, Dec. 3, and assisted in the institution of Mansfield Lodge No. 797.

Cincinnati Lodge No. 4, of Cincinnati, Ohio, entertained its members and friends at the Wise Center on Monday evening, Nov. 27, 1916, with illustrations of the work of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum, with a view of indicating the necessity for the new buildings proposed and for which provision has been made through action of the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Home. There were several excellent musical numbers.

Cincinnati Lodge is arranging for a class initiation to be held in the near future at which more than 100 members will be initiated by the degree team of the Lodge.

Rabbi Louis Bernstein of St. Joseph, Mo., was elected president of the Conference of the State Charities of Missouri.

The B'nai B'rith Martin A. Marx Memorial Library Fund, created by Cleveland Lodge No. 16, of Cleveland, Ohio, is still growing. Up to date over $400.00 has been secured.

A. L. Levy of St. Louis, will be the principal speaker at the B'nai B'rith Day celebration to be held soon by the lodges of Denver, Pueblo, Albuquerque and Las Vegas.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Huntington Lodge No. 795, of Huntington, W. Va.. the youngest Lodge of the District, held a most entertaining meeting on Sunday, Nov. 12, when thirty-one members out of a total membership of thirty-three attended. A considerable sum of money was raised at the meeting as a nucleus for a B'nai B'rith Club and Community Center. The Lodge initiated a class of five members and anticipates doubling its membership as soon as the new home will be ready for occupancy.

Beaver Valley Lodge No. 777, of Beaver Falls, Pa., held a benefit ball on Thursday, Nov. 16, 1916, at the Junction Pavilion, New Brighton, Pa.

J. Solis-Cohen, Jr., has been unanimously elected president of Joshua Lodge No. 23, of Philadelphia, Pa.

New Castle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle, Pa, held an open meeting on Sunday evening, Nov. 26, 1196, in celebration of B'nai B'rith Day. An interesting program was carried out and the principal address of the evening was delivered by Rabbi I. E. Philo, of Youngstown, Ohio.

Dan Lodge No. 593, of Charleston, S. C. gave its first annual ball on November 21, 1916.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

District Grand Lodge No. 4 will assemble in forty-fourth annual session on Sunday, Feb. 18, 1917, at the Covenant Hall, B'nai B'rith Building, San Francisco, Cal.

A B'nai B'rith Lodge has been instituted at Phoenix, Ariz., by Bro Lucius L. Solomons, of San Francisco, Vice-President of the Executive Committee of the Order, on Dec. 4, 1916.

An interesting meeting of Victoria Lodge No. 758, of Victoria, B. C., was held on November 21, and officers for the ensuing year were nominated. The enthusiasm manifested was so keen that of the entire membership of the lodge but three were absent.

At a meeting of Victoria Lodge No. 758, of Victoria, B. C., three members were initiated. After the meeting a social was held and members of the lodge and Regina Philo Auxiliary and their friends enjoyed a pleasant evening.

DISTRICT No. 5.

Rimmon Lodge, No. 68, of Richmond, Va., held a meeting on Sunday, Nov. 12, 1916, at Petersburg, Va., for the benefit of such members who reside there but who find it inconvenient to attend the meetings of the Lodge on account of the distance and consequent time involved.

At Baltimore, Md., the B'nai B'rith Lodge, the Federated Jewish Charities and B'rith Shalom have joined in establishing a Court of Arbitration for the settlement of disputes and controversies of every character, especially matters involving religious questions, without going into court.

District Grand Lodge No. 5 will meet in annual convention in the City of Richmond, Va., on Jan. 21, 1917.

Rimmon Lodge No. 68, of Richmond, Va., at a well attended meeting held on Dec. 10, 1916, elected its officers for the ensuing year and representatives to the District Grand Lodge Convention to be held in that city in the month of January. In the re-election of Bro. Edwin L. Levy as Secretary of the Lodge for another term, a very efficient officer was chosen. Members took advantage of the occasion to express their appreciation of the work done. The Lodge made various appropriations for benevolent and charitable purposes.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Mesaba Lodge No. 673, of Virginia, Minn., is arranging for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 21, 1917. The Membership Committee has secured a class of ten candidates to be initiated at the time the celebration is held.

An invitation has been extended to Rabbi Dr. I. L. Rypins, of St. Paul, to visit the Lodge on that occasion and deliver an address.

Brother Julien J. Gusfield, of Chicago, member of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, visited Grand Prairie Lodge No. 281, of Champaign, Ill., on Sunday, Dec. 3, where he assisted in the initiation of candidates. Brother Gusfield reports a very enthusiastic meeting of the Lodge. In the evening he addressed the Menorah Soriety of the University of Illinois on the "Aims, Activities and Purposes of the B'nai B'rith."

Following the regular business meeting of Minneapolis Lodge No. 271 of Minneapolis, Minn., held on Monday evening, November 13. 1916. a discussion of the recent publication, entitled "The Conquering Jew," was engaged in by members of the lodge and a number of visiting members. The discussion was led by Brother Dr. Myron Sherper, who delivered a prepared criticism on the book.

As a result of the efforts of Brother Edward Lichtig of Bay City, Mich., who was delegated by the Grand Lodge to inaugurate and conduct a membership campaign in Flint, Mich., the lodge secured a class of over 30 candidates, the initiation of which is to take place on the evening of December 31, 1916. Several Grand Lodge Officers have been invited to attend the festivities and to address the members of the lodge.

At a well attended meeting of Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, held on Nov. 6, 1916. a class of six candidates were initiated.

Saskatoon Lodge No. 739, of Saskatoon, Canada, has been successful in securing a prominent speaker for its meeting in January, and the entertainment committee of the lodge is making efforts to secure speakers for most of the meetings, and is endeavoring to interest the professors of the university in the intellectual advancement work of the lodge.

At a meeting of Iron Range Lodge No. 793, of Chisholm, Minn., held on Oct. 22, a class of 16 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 3, 1916, Brothers H. D. Frankel and Gustavus Loevinger, of St. Paul, while paying an official visit to B'nai B'rith lodges in Omaha, paid also a visit to Council Bluffs Lodge No. 688, of Council Bluffs, Ia. They addressed a public meeting. Brother Frankel speaking on the subject, "The Simplest Faith," and Brother Loevinger on "The Home Coming of the Jew." The visiting Grand Lodge officers did not indulge in any propaganda work in Council Bluffs, as they were informed that every available co-religionist of that city is a member of the lodge, and that from 60 to 90 per cent of the members attend the meetings of the lodge regularly.

As a result of the propaganda campaign held under the auspices of Pisgah Lodge No. 34 of Detroit, Mich., a class of 100 candidates has been secured. The initiation will be held on Thursday evening, Dec. 14, 1916, and will be attended by the president of the district, Brother Dr. H. I. Davis of Chicago; first vice-president of the district, Brother Edward Sonnenschein; the chairman of the Social Service Committee of the district, Brother William J. Mack, and the secretary of the Order, Brother A. B. Seelenfreund.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Memphis Lodge No. 35 of Memphis. Tenn., is organizing a membership campaign and hopes to add many members to its roster. The lodge also organized recently a committee to take charge of the Big Brother movement, and while this is under the auspices of the lodge they have enlisted in this work the members of the Temple and others, as well as their own members; 45 members have already been enrolled on the committee and good results are expected.

Dallas Lodge No. 197, of Dallas, Tex., held an open meeting on Wednesday evening, Nov. 22. The principal address was delivered by Rabbi J. Bosniak, who has recently taken charge of the congregation of that city. His subject was "Jewish People in Texas."

The address was followed by a musical program and dancing concluded the evening's festivities. Refreshments were served by the ladies of the lodge. The lodge is considering the advisability of securing more adequate quarters, including lodge rooms.

Through the efforts of Mr. H. S. Scheline, of Dallas, Tex.. member of the General Committee of District No. 7, and Rabbi George Fox, of Fort Worth, Tex., Amarillo Lodge was instituted at Amarillo, Tex., on Sunday, Nov. 26, 1916, with 24 charter members. The meeting was enthusiastic and the prospects of the lodge are bright. Out of the 30 odd Jews in the city all but two have pledged themselves to affiliate with the lodge.

At a regular meeting of Isador Straus Lodge No. 519 of Fort Worth, Tex., held at the Hebrew Institute on Nov. 5, 1916, the officers for the ensuing year were elected. The lodge decided to hold an open meeting on Tuesday Dec. 19.

Brothers Dr. Faber and B. Wadel, of Tyler, Tex., have paid an official visit to the Jewish community of Sherman, Tex., with a view of organizing a B'nai B'rith lodge in that city.

In connection with the dedication of the new Temple Mt. Sinai, of El Paso, held on Dec. 8, 9 and 10, El Paso Lodge No. 509 of that city held a B'nai B'rith Day on Dec. 10, 1916.

Gulf Lodge No. 221 of New Orleans, La., held a successful meeting on Nov. 3, 1916, in their new lodge rooms. Committees were appointed to have charge of the social and intellectual features, also to support the work of the Anti-Defamation League.

Asaph Lodge No. 286 of Meridian, Miss., has increased its membership to 80 during the past two years, a gain of nearly 50 per cent. This result was mainly due to the efforts of Rabbi Abram Brill The lodge has organized a literary society that has created much interest and enthusiasm among the members.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on Thursday evening, Nov. 30, 1916, at Temple Shaarai Shomayim.

A JEWISH COMMUNITY EXONERATED BY COURT-MARTIAL.

In accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court-Martial, M. Gershanoitz, the ex-Mayor of Mariampol, has been re-tried by a court-martial of the superior officers. The famous advocate, M. Grusenberg, defended the accused, and the Court had to decide not only whether M. Gershanovitz, who had been installed by the Germans as Mayor during the first invasion of the townlet, acted loyally to the Russian flag, but also whether the entire community of Mariampol remained true to Russia. The court found that the Jews had acted loyally, and had refused to assist the invaders. M. Gershanovitz was acquitted. Thus ended one of the greatest libels invented against a whole community in general and against a respected individual in particular.

RUSSIAN JEWS IN EGYPT CONSCRIPTED.

The Russian Minister in Egypt has given an order setting forth that all Russians of military age in Egypt must present themselves for service in the British army. The chief Rabbi of Egypt telegraphed to Chief Rabbi Hertz, inquiring whether refugee Yeshibah students are included in this order. Dr. Hertz was able to give a reassuring answer to the chaeif rabbi's question.

AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Twenty-fifth Annual Meeting and Historical Exhibition.

The approaching meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society will mark the completion of its first quarter of a century, and the Executive Council has decided to signalize this occasion by holding an American Jewish Historical Exhibition, further details concerning which will be announced shortly.

This exhibition is to embrace portraits and engravings, manuscripts, books and other matters of interest for the history of the Jews in America. Members who have objects which they would be willing to lend to the society for this purpose are respectfully solicited to communicate with Mr. Leon Huhner, Curator of the Society, 52 Williams Street, New York, who has been named as Chairman of the Special Committee on the Exhibition.

The 25th annual meeting will be held in the City of New York, Sunday, April 22, and Monday, April 23, 1917. All persons intending to submit papers at this meeting are requested to send the titles thereof to the Corresponding Secretary not later than March 1, 1917. Special attention is directed to the fact that the objects of the society are not confined to American Jewish history, but that they include subjects of general Jewish historical interest as well.

The participation of Jewish institutions, of learning, and other Jewish organizations, and of all sister historical societies and organizations, both at home and abroad, is especially desired at this important meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society.

TWO JEWISH GOVERNORS.

(Editorial in the Dayton (O.) News.)

Two Jewish governors were elected last Tuesday. One of them will preside over Utah, dominated by the Mormons up to the present time, and the other over Idaho, having also a large Mormon population. In each instance the Mormons made a fight against them, and the "Gentiles," as the Mormons class everybody outside of their church, were arrayed against the church of Brigham Young.

There have been other Jewish governors of American states, however, so the election Tuesday did not break a precedent so far as that was concerned. But it broke a precedent in Utah, where no man has ever been elected governor who was opposed by the Mormons.

There is not a large Jewish population in either of the states where the Jewish governors were elected and that is the main point. It shows as nothing else could the freedom from race or religious prejudice that exists in this country. For had there been prejudice neither of the Jews would have been elected, since their people are in a small minority in both Idaho and Utah.

With a justice upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, with two Jews serving as governors of states, with a Jew representing this nation in an old-world court, there isn't any prejudice against the Jew manifested in American politics. Which is as it should be; which is as it must always be. If there is to be religious prejudice in the world, let it exist in the old-world, not in this world where people have established their homes and their institutions upon broader lines than religious prejudice.

AMBULANT KOSHER KITCHENS IN AUSTRIA.

On account of the high prices of food articles the Austrian government organized popular kitchens for the poor and middle classes, where one can get a meal for 60 heller (about 12 cents) without meat. A dinner with meat costs 70 heller (14 cents). These kitchens are ambulant, and passing from place to place, accommodate many people. Part of those kitchens are kosher, especially for the sake of the Jewish population.

SIMON WOLF'S SERVICE.

At the national banquet to Simon Wolf in the Hotel Savoy prominent men, representing every section of the country paid glowing tributes to the remarkable achievements of the guest of honor—a man who has rendered, and is rendering, distinguished service in the cause of American Israel. For more than fifty years this earnest champion of justice has stood guard at the nation's capital as a faithful Jew and loyal American patriot. The honored octogenarian has set the Jewish youth a noble example of unselfish devotion, not only to the best interests of our people, but to the highest ideals of the republic.—American Hebrew.

Meeting of the Executive Committee of American Jewish Congress

(By Our Special Correspondent)

December 25, 1916, was a historic day in American Jewry. On that day the first meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress was held at the Hotel Savoy, New York.

The opening session was presided over by Col. Harry Cutler of Providence, Chairman of the Arrangement Committee. After prayer by Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, roll call was held, which showed the presence of 101 delegates. This was followed by the reading of the formal call for the meeting.

The election of temporary chairman was declared the next order of business. Judge Julian W. Mack, in a short address pointing out the distinguished services rendered to American Jewry by Mr. Louis Marshall, presented his name for the important post. The nomination was seconded by Mr. Jacob Pankin. Prof. Horace M. Kallen presented in nomination Mr. Adolf Kraus, declaring that he and the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, which he represents had been neutral in the entire Congress controversy, and was instrumental, to a large degree in bringing about the present unity in American Jewry. Mr. Kraus' nomination was seconded by Judge Hugo Pam and Mr. Jacob Furth.

It was then moved by Mr. Louis Lipsky that the election of temporary chairman be by roll call. The motion was amended by Mr. Rosenblatt that the election be held by secret ballot. After remarks by Mr. Simon Wolf, calling attention to the fact that the public wants publicity in all matters affecting the general welfare, a vote was taken on the amendment which was defeated, and the original motion to hold the election of temporary chairman by roll call, was adopted. The delegates then proceeded to answer the roll call for the election of temporary chairman. Mr. Kraus was elected by a vote of 49 to 45 for Mr. Marshall. Thereupon Mr. Marshall moved that the election of Mr. Kraus be made unanimous, and this was done.

Mr. Bernard G. Rickards was chosen as temporary secretary. Mr. Kraus was escorted to the chair by Judge Mack and Prof. Kallen. In a few well chosen words he expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him.

Various motions were thereupon presented, one to the effect that the meeting be conducted in accordance with the accepted rules of parliamentary procedure, and one to the effect that no resolutions be entertained which deal with subjects properly within the province of the Congress when organized.

Upon motion of Mr. Louis Lipsky, which prevailed, reading of communications was declared the next order of business. Greetings from various organizations and letters of excuse from absent delegates were presented. This was followed by a long debate on parliamentary procedure, and various motions with reference to the method of the creation of the nominating committee. Finally a motion was adopted that the temporary chairman appoint all committees of the Conference.

Judge Mack suggested that the nominating committee be instructed as to the number of officers to be elected as well as the duties of the administrative committee. Upon motion, which prevailed, it was resolved that the nominating committee make recommendations for the following offices: President, three vice-presidents, treasurer, secretary, corresponding secretary and an administrative committee of 15.

Upon motion of Mr. Cutler it was resolved that a committee of 7 be appointed to recommend the time and place of holding the Congress. It was further resolved that a committee of 7 be appointed to consider whether the question of constructive relief shall be put on the agenda of the Congress.

It was further resolved upon motion of Judge Pam that a committee of 11 be appointed to consider the number of delegates to constitute the Congress and the method of election; also to consider the matter of representation in the Congress by national organizations.

The following committees were thereupon appointed by the chairman:

Nomination Committee of fifteen for the election of permanent officers and an administrative committee—Samuel Altschuler, chairman; Max Silverstein, Cyrus L. Sulzberger, M. L. Avner, Charles A. Cowen, B. Zuckerman, J. L. Lorie, Edwin Romberg, Solomon Sufrin, Henry Levenson, Dr. J. I. Bluestone, B. Semel, J. Massel, Max Goldfarb and I. M. Ullman.

Committee of seven on time and place of Congress—Morris Hillquit, chairman; Dr. Samuel Schulman, Simon Wolf, Max Stern, Louis E. Levy, Leo H. Hoffman and S. Abel.

Committee of eleven on Number of Delegates and Methods of Election—Louis E. Kerstein, chairman; Joseph Schoenberg, J. G. Grossberg, Jacob Furth, Max Eckman, F. Rosenblatt, Prof. I. A. Hourwich, Samuel Dorf, Bernard A. Rosenblatt, J. B. Salutsky and Ben Schlesinger.

Committee of seven on Constructive Relief—Louis Marshall, chairman; Chas. Hartman, Max Mitchell, Dr. J. L. Magnes, Max Shulman, M. Olgin and Dr. Samuel Ellsberg.

The morning session was then adjourned to give the committees an opportunity to meet and prepare their reports.

Recess for Lunch.

During recess while at lunch with Mr. Kraus, Mr. Meyer Sulzberger, formerly judge in Philadelphia, who became a member of the Order December 16, 1877, and was suspended May 17, 1891, for failure to pay his indebtedness to the lodge, as the record shows, came to our table and said to Mr. Kraus:

"You ought not to accept the position of permanent chairman."

Mr. Kraus: "Why?"

Mr. Sulzberger: "Because you are president of the B'nai B'rith, a secret society."

Mr. Kraus: "You ought to know better. Ours is not a secret society in any objectionable sense. Everything we do can be published. We are a law-abiding organization."

Mr. Sulzberger: "You have signs and a pass-word. If you accept the permanent chairmanship we will have to repudiate the whole thing and withdraw from the Congress movement."

Mr. Kraus: "I was willing to listen patiently and consider carefully anything you may say as to my disqualification for the office, for with me the cause comes first, but I will not consider threats. They have no effect upon me. If you and your associates desire to bolt, go ahead. We do not invite you to do so, nor do we want you to go. If you do go, it will be because you wish to do so and are seeking an excuse for it."

Mr. Sulzberger: "I was not speaking for others, I was only speaking for myself."

Mr. Kraus: "Very well, have it that way. I have nothing more to say."

That ended the interview.

I then said to Mr. Kraus: "Well, what do you say to that?"

Mr. Kraus replied: "I feel highly complimented that they can present no other issue against me for the position of permanent chairman. No doubt while we are eating, the word will be passed that my selection as permanent chairman will be looked upon with suspicion by Russia, that that government will consider the B'nai B'rith as a dangerous, nihilistic organization and that therefore, should I be chosen chairman, the Russian government will be deaf to all our appeals. On that issue they will make no converts. All those who voted for me for temporary chairman will vote the same way for permanent chairman. Six men who voted against me for temporary chairman volunteered the statement they will now vote for me. How many more will do so, I do not know. There is a ridiculous side to this matter. Of all the men present, why should Judge Meyer Sulzberger appear in the role of my advisor. Since he ceased to be a member of the Order and especially since he became a leader in another organization he has not had a good word to say for the Order. 'Fear the Greeks even when they bring gifts.' The Judge ought to know that every one on becoming a member of our Order is informed of the purposes for which we are organized, in the following words:

"'Ours is an army organized to war upon sorrow, ignorance and immorality. The recruits are offered no glittering rewards. It is a service of love, duty and sacrifice. The offer we extend is not so much of privilege as responsibility; not so much reward as burden. Whe feels the blood of his ancestors beat in harmony with Jewish traditions, who hears the cry of sorrow, the call to sacrifice, who feels the thrill of duty and can find exultation in the humanity of self-effacement; who has within him the Jewish spirit which has tried Time and Torture, let him enlist.

"'And as our heroes of old were true unto their standard, so should we continue loyal, not only unto our faith, but also to the flag of our land and to the Government under whose protection we live.'

"Russia will not consider men organized for such purposes as nihilists. The objection which may be urged against me by that government is the same that can be brought against all of us, we are Jews. That is enough."

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was called to order at two o'clock and the first order of business was the report of the committee on time and place of the proposed Jewish Congress. The report was taken up seriatim. Paragraph 1, which recommended Washington, D. C., as the place of holding the Congress was unanimously adopted.

Paragraph 2, recommending that the election of delegates to the Congress be held at the earliest possible time, was adopted.

Paragraph 3, that the Congress be held after the first of May, 1917, occasioned much debate. Mr. Oscar Straus moved to amend by inserting after the words "First of May," the following: "unless the Administrative Committee should find that date not wise and opportune, then the Congress should be held as soon after that date as the Committee will find practical."

The motion was amended by Judge Mack that if, in the affirmative judgment of two-thirds of the members of the Administrative Committee, it should be deemed unwise to hold such Congress on May 1st, and such conclusion be reached by the Administrative Committee on or before March 15th, then the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress be reconvened in special session on the first Sunday in April, 1917, to determine the date for the Congress. Amendment of Judge Mack was adopted.

Paragraph 3 of the Committee as amended was then unanimously adopted.

It was then moved by Judge Mack that in case the Executive Committe is again called together for a special meeting, that voting by proxy be allowed. Motion was defeated.

The report of the Committee on time and place as finally adopted was as follows:

"1st.—That the Congress be held in the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

"2nd.—That the election of delegates to the Congress take place immediately, so that the delegates so elected may hold themselves in readiness to assemble in Congress on short notice. The names and addresses of the delegates chosen shall be communicated to the Administrative Committee immediately upon their election.

"3rd.—That the exact date of the holding of the Congress be left to the discretion of the Administrative Committee, but that such date shall not be later than the first day of May, 1917, unless on or before the 15th day of March, 1917, the Administrative Committee by a two-thirds vote shall deem it unwise to hold the Congress before said date, then this Executive Committee shall reconvene on the first Sunday of April, 1917, and shall then determine the date of the Congress".

The next order of business was the presentation of the report of the Committee on Reconstructive Relief. The Committee recommended that the question of reconstructive relief be put to the agenda of the Congress. In discussing the report of the committee, Mr. Louis Marshall as chairman of the Committee stated that while on the main question there was unanimity in the committee, there was, however, division as to whether the Congress shall work "in conjunction with" or "through" existing agencies for the raising and distribution of relief funds. He called attention to the fact that if the conference should adopt the view of a certain number of the committee, that the Congress act "in conjunction with" existing relief committees, it would mean the creation of a new relief body and that in this manner the work, done now by the existing agencies, might be impaired. Dr. Harry Friedenwald moved that the clauses "through" and "in conjunction with" be omitted from the report and that it be left to the Congress to decide as to the mode and manner in which the constructive relief should be carried out. Mr. Morris Hillquit suggested that the entire matter of constructive relief be dropped from the program of the Congress, claiming that the Congress, having for its main purpose the securing of equal rights for Jews, should not turn from its purposes to objects purely philanthropic.

Dr. Samuel Shulman, in addressing the Conference, emphasized the fact that the question of economic reconstruction would necessarily bring about the permanency of the Congress and that such would be not in accordance with the agreement entered into heretofore regarding the duration of the life of the Congress.

Dr. Stephen Wise emphasized that the Congress should retain for itself all means and power for economic dehabilitation. After a lengthy debate on the various propositions submitted, a vote was taken and the amendment of Dr. Friedenwald, eliminating the qualifications as to the method and manner in which the rehabilitation work should be carried on by the Congress was adopted by a vote of 60 to 29.

The amended report as finally adopted reads as follows:

"That it is deemed advisable to place on the agenda of the Congress the subject of economic reconstruction of the Jewish communities in the war zone".

Election of Permanent Chairman.

Judge Samuel Alschuler, as Chairman of the Nominating Committee, presented report, naming as the choice of the majority of the committee, Adolf Kraus for permanent chairman. Mr. Cyrus L. Sulzberger on behalf of the minority of the committee, presented a report recommending Louis Marshall for the office of permanent chairman.

Mr. Sulzberger was a member of the Order in New York and ceased his membership when his lodge was suspended for failure to comply with the rules of the Order. In presenting his minority report he stated that the minority objects to the selection of Mr.

Kraus as permanent chairman, because he is the head of a secret organization, and that it would be unwise and detrimental to the cause of the Congress, and for the objects it seeks to obtain, to have it appear before the public and the governments abroad that the American Jewish Congress is headed by a man representing a secret international organization.

Thereupon Mr. Kraus called Hon. Henry Morgenthau to the chair. Mr. Morgenthau addressed the following words of caution:

"I regret exceedingly the cause of my presiding here today. If you knew how important it is to present a solid front, I think you would forget any differences. Otherwise the Congress will be ineffectual. I hope you will enter upon a pledge to make it unanimous whoever wins".

Mr. Kraus was then recognized and he addressed the meeting as follows:

"Whatever I will say now should not be misunderstood. I am not seeking an office. The office I hold in the Order is enough to satisfy the ambition of any man. I have asked no one directly or indirectly to vote for me for the position of Chairman of this organization, but when the position was tendered me, I felt it was my duty to serve. Regrets have been expressed on this floor by the spokesman of the minority because the majority of the committee saw fit to nominate as presiding officer a man who is the head of an international secret organization. It must be plain to every one present what was intended thereby to be instilled in the minds of all. It is well known that the Order of B'nai B'rith is not a secret organization in the sense sought to be given it here by the minority spokesman. The Order has no secrets objectionable to any government on earth. The governments in Europe in which our lodges exist, even those which prohibit secret societies, are familiar with the aims and objects of our organization and approve of them. Even Russia understands why we are organized. I have furnished that Government our Ritual and advised it fully concerning our aims, for I intended to apply to that government for permission to start lodges in its land. Our organization is not among the secret organizations which come within the spirit of their prohibitory laws. When the war will be over, my efforts for recognition in Russia will be renewed.

"Our Order is not here on trial, it needs no defense. The only question for us to now consider is, who is to be elected permanent chairman? The objection to me, you have heard. The objections to Mr. Marshall seem to be on some other grounds. It is clear to me that whichever one of us should be elected, wounds will have to be healed. We must not forget that we have met in an effort to help millions of our suffering co-religionists, and not for the purpose of satisfying the ambition of any man or organization. The task before us is not an easy one. Even if all are enthusiastically united, how much harder will it be to accomplish, if we should have dissension among us. No man should stand in the way of success. Whoever will be elected chairman will have much to do and should have the support of every Jew in the land. As it appears that neither Mr. Marshall nor I, either owing to the contest for temporary chairmanship or for some other reason, will have the unanimous support of all, I believe it best that both of us should withdraw in order that some one may be elected who will have the support of all the organizations. I offer hereby to withdraw from the contest if Mr. Marshall will do likewise".

Mr. Kraus was followed by Mr. Louis Marshall who, in part, said:

"I have only thought to serve. Perhaps my methods of service have been distasteful to some of those here. I do not take upon myself credit for anything, except that, but for my efforts, this meeting today could not have been possible. I do not believe that the man lives who can force me to sever my interest in the Jewish people. I accept the suggestion of Mr. Kraus that we both eliminate ourselves from this controversy, and let the work proceed"

Dr. Stephen Wise then addressed the gathering, paying a tribute to the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith for its accomplishments during almost seventy-five years of its existence, and the many sacrifices it had brought of its service to Judaism and humanity at large, and, in concluding his remarks, nominated Mr. Nathan Straus as permanent chairman. The nomination was seconded by Prof. Horace M. Kallen and Simon Wolf. Dr. J. L. Magnes suggested Judge Julian W. Mack as chairman, whereupon Judge Mack arose and moved that the nomination of Mr. Straus be made unanimous.

Amid great applause Mr. Straus was unanimously elected chairman and was escorted to the chair amid the loud cheering of the entire body. In accepting the office Mr. Straus said:

"My friends, if I am three-score and ten and duty calls I will be young. We want harmony. I promise you I will do all I am capable of doing, and if I sink by the wayside I am ready to do so".

The conference then took a recess until nine in the evening.

Evening Session.

At the appointed hour the Conference reconvened. This session was devoted largely to a harmonious adjustment of the representation of the labor element on the Administrative Committee. They asked for adequate and proportionate representation, claiming that four representatives on the Administrative Committee is not a fair apportionment. Mr. Marshall suggested that the names of London, Panken, Asch, Salutzky and Dr. Rosenblatt be added to the list already recommended by the Committee on nominations. A heated debate then arose, especially with reference to the election of Mr. London to the Administrative Committee. In this debate a number of members took part. The final result was that Dr. Wise moved the election of Congressman London, and this was seconded by Judge Leon Sanders. Mr. London was unanimously elected. The labor group thereupon withdrew their individual resignations and peace and harmony was restored.

During an interim in the very earnest debate, Adolph Lewisohn was elected treasurer and Bernard G. Richards was elected executive secretary of the Administrative Committee.

The Committee on the method of election of delegates and their number, presented its report which, however, on motion was referred to the Administrative Committee for action.

It was nearly midnight when the session was brought to a close. Before adjourning, it was resolved that the Administrative Committee hold its first meeting on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 26, 1916, at the office of Mr. Nathan Straus. The following is the personnel of the Administrative Committee of the American Congress Executive Committee:

General Officers.

Chairman: Nathan Straus. Vice-Chairmen: Harry Cutler, Isaac A. Hourwich, Harry Friedenwald, Morris Hillquit, Leon Sanders. Treasurer: Adolph Lewisohn. Secretary: Bernard G. Richards.

Administrative Committee.

Rosenblatt, Victor Rosewater, J. B. Salutsky, Jacob H. Schiff, Benjamin Schlesinger, Joseph Shlossberg, Bernard Semel, Max Silverstein, C. D. Spivak, Joshua Sprayregen, Samuel Schulman, Oscar S. Straus, Soloman Sufrin, Cyrus L. Sulzberger, Mayer Sulzberger, Isaac M. Ullman, Stephen S. Wise, Simon Wolf, Leo Wolfson, B. Zuckerman.

We publish herewith a few communications out of many received by Mr. Kraus, since the adjournment of the Executive Committee meeting:

"New York, Dec. 31. 1916.

Adolf Kraus,
4518 Drexel Blvd.,
Chicago, Ill.

May the New Year be full of happiness for you and rich in personal blessings. My wife and I will always remember the lofty stand you took at the meeting and the unselfishness which prompted you to let the cause come before your personal wishes.

NATHAN STRAUSS."

To which Mr. Kraus replied as follows:

"Chicago, Ill., January 1st, 1917.

Mr. Nathan Straus,
New York, N. Y.

Thanks for your kind New Year's greetings. May you and your good wife enjoy good health and remain for many years what you now are and have been—a blessing to others.

ADOLF KRAUS."

"Mr. Adolf Kraus,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Kraus:

I expect to reach Chicago Friday morning, and I shall be there until Monday at least. I hope we may have an opportunity to talk together.

I want to repeat again my profound appreciation of the dignity and nobility of your stand at the Congress Conference in New York, Dec. 25th. I have not in recent years seen anything finer in Jewish affairs. It seemed to me to have raised the proceedings to a level of distinction which they ought to have had from the start. The B'nai B'rith is fortunate to have a man of such fine character and delicate perception at its head.

I hope that our organizations will come closer and closer together in co-operation in the common cause of the redemption of our people, and their establishment in personal and National freedom.

Believe me, with highest regards,

Cordially yours,
H. M. KALLEN."

"New York, Dec. 27, 1916.

Hon. A. Kraus,
Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Judge Kraus:

I write these lines in order that you may know how deeply I honor you for the part taken by you at the preliminary meeting of the American Jewish Congress of Monday, Dec. 25th. For one thing, it is superfluous to point out that you conducted the proceedings during the whole of the day and up to the moment of your retirement with skill, with dignity and with dispatch. No one could have taken exception to the spirit in which you handled the business of the meeting.

But I wish to write of something more significant, namely, the admirable and really statesmanlike way in which you rose to a very difficult and trying situation. You and I know it was a situation that arose through the determination of some of our friends to prevent your becoming the head of the Administrative Committee of the Congress. Best of all, however, was the magnanimity of your own attitude with regard to the nomination. Had you stood as you had a right to stand, I am almost confident you would have been elected, and I have little doubt that long before the moment of election the opposition would have been compelled to capitulate. But you did the bigger thing, withdrawing your name in the interest of harmony. Your withdrawal was accomplished with fine tact and grace.

Let me offer you the heartfelt thanks of those who, like you, have the Jewish Congress movement at heart. Let me say to you, my dear Mr. Kraus, that your conduct throughout the day under the most trying and embarrassing circumstances has added to the distinction of your organization and the office which you personally hold.

With heartfelt appreciation, believe me.

Faithfully your friend,
STEPHEN S. WISE."

"New York, Jan. 5, 1917.

Mr. Adolf Kraus, Pres.
Ind. Order B'nai B'rith,
1228 Tribune Bldg.,
Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Mr. Kraus:

I want to extend to you in the name of the Zionist group our heartfelt thanks for your generous and public-spirited action in the Congress meeting at the Hotel Savoy.

We feel that you could not have served the Jewish cause more nobly and disinterestedly than you did at the Hotel Savoy meeting as temporary chairman, and when you met the situation as it arose on the question of the election of a permanent chairman.

You and your Order have established a league of peace and harmony with the Zionist Organization which I trust will be mutually beneficial. I feel it is necessary to say this to you in order to make you feel confident in the friendship and goodwill of every Zionist in our Organization.

With Zion's greetings,

Very cordially yours,
(Signed) LOUIS LIPSKY,
Chairman."

The following is an extract from a letter received from Dr. E. N. Calisch:

"I have read the accounts of the meeting at the Savoy Hotel in New York and it strikes me that you were the hero of the occasion. At any rate, without your self-sacrificing suggestion that both you and Mr. Marshall retire, it appears that the meeting would have been deadlocked, or if victory were had for either side, it would have been of so narrow margin that resentment and possibly rancor would have remained. If ever the Jewish Congress amounts to anything, if ever it gets together in unity and accomplishes anything at all of its avowed objects, I believe that it will be due ultimately to your wise action from the very beginning, and to that alone."

We publish herewith also a few excerpts from editorials of the Jewish Press:

The Hebrew Standard, New York:

"We heartily and unreservedly rejoice at the election of Nathan Straus as permanent chairman of the Committee on Arrangements for the Congress. No better selection from any point of view could have possibly been made. The two nominees who finally withdrew in Mr. Straus' favor are both men of light and learning, and would, other things having been equal, equally successfully have ruled the great conference once it convenes. But Louis Marshall has been identified with the reactionary and undemocratic elements in this agitation so completely as to rob his personality of that confidence which his ability and certain qualities command. Adolf Kraus of Chicago was well advised to withdraw his own name from consideration after an unjustifiable and quite dishonorable attempt had been made by an undemocratic "bosslet" to cast discredit upon the great order which he so capably leads with statesmanlike efficiency."

The Jewish Tribune, Portland:

"The objection of the narrow representative of the still narrower group of New York Jewish aristocrats to the selection of Adolf Kraus, the grand old man of the B'nai B'rith, on the ground that he is the head of an international secret order, was far from polite, logical or fair.

"If the B'nai B'rith was an institution that was essentially a benefit paying secret society perhaps the objection would be worthy of consideration, although why the peculiar office one may hold in any organization should give him favorable or unfavorable standing is not clear to us. In our humble judgment it is the man and his own personality, standing and character that should be considered—and not so much his position in fraternal or civic life.

"The work of the institution of which Mr. Kraus is the honored head in the many years of its existence and more especially in the past few years—in behalf of suffering Israel—speaks for itself more eloquently than any human tongue could describe. The unselfishness of the leaders of the order could be well emulated by many of the self appointed wealthy Jewish leaders of New York, whose hearts may be alright, but whose judgment and actions show unmistakable signs of an exaggerated ego."

The Jewish Monitor, Ft Worth:

"Nathan Straus, the New York philanthropist and humanitarian, is to be the president of the American Jewish Congress. No one will rue this choice. There is no Jew in this country who has done more for the Jews than has this Prince in Israel. Yet many in the South and West would have liked to have seen the honor bestowed upon the president of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith. For tact, for fine sense of justice, for a thorough knowledge of Jewish affairs all over the world, he has no superior.

"The proponents of Louis Marshall and the New York coterie could not permit this. It was the old fight between the B'nai B'rith and the American Jewish Committee. The men of the American Jewish Committee could not bring themselves to have full faith in the leader of the great organization that has done more to make Jew and Judaism respected here than any other association of Jewish men."

Dr. E. G. Hirsch, in The Reform Advocate, Chicago:

"If the reports of the doings at the meeting called to arrange for the preparing of the Jewish Congress, held in New York on December 25th, be at all credible, I for one have my doubts as to the good sailing in store for the new movement. Objection was successfully and perhaps maliciously raised against electing to the permanent Chairmanship a gentleman of high standing and signal ability on the sole ground that, as he was at the head of a secret international body of Jews, his selection would jeopardise the good fame of the new Congress organization. In the first place, the objectors forgot that the Order of which there was talk is by no means a secret fraternity. In the second place will the Congress itself not of necessity reach out into international matters and relations? I suspect the objectors struck the saddle and meant the ass. Mr. Kraus may be the guiding spirit of an international Jewry. But then he is not nationalist in the sense of our Zionists. Hinc illae lacrymae. Mr. Nathan Straus, who was named Permanent Chairman is a very estimable gentleman, an enthusiast, but, and that counted most, also identified with militant Zionism. It would be deplorable if the bickerings and the dissensions which marked the agitation finally culminating in the agreement to forget differences and to work together in the Congress were to be continued

B'NAI B'RITH OF GERMANY

The Executive Committee of District No. 8 held a meeting at the residence of Brother Grand President Timendorfer October 31. 1916. Brother Timendorfer occupied the chair.

The Brother Grand President reported about his visit to Solomon Munk Lodge in Glogan. He stated that he learned with pleasure from the reports about the activities of the Lodge that all the brethren who are at the front have regularly paid their annual dues to the Lodge. The Brother Grand President is interested in finding out how the other lodges are faring in regard to the payments of the annual dues by the members who have been called out.

In his further reports the Brother Grand President emphasized the following:

Lessing Lodge in Breslau has initiated five candidates. Its last meetings in which the suggestions of Brother Maretzki were discussed, have been well attended and many brethren participated in the lively discussions.

Brother Dr. Emil Hirsch of Halberstadt sent a donation of 1,000 marks to the Hospital Train, on the occasion of the religious new year.

Brother Ex-President Ferdinand Liebhold of Heidelberg turned over to the Grand Lodge 400 marks for the benefit of the suffering Jews in Germany and abroad. Two hundred marks of this sum were donated by his son-in-law, staff physician Dr. Otto Goldschmidt of Coeln.

Brother Commercial Counsellor Norbert Levy of Berthold Auerbach Lodge in Berlin, transmitted to the Grand Lodge 10,000 mark in 5 per cent war loan certificates for the purpose of establishing a foundation. The foundation bears the name of "Foundation of Grand Lodge No. 8, I. O. B. B., established by Brother Norbert Levy". Its seat is to be in Berlin and its aim is to furnish relief to those who were injured in the war, or to their relatives. First in line are those injured in the war, or their relatives, who are members of one of the B'nai B'rith lodges of Berlin in the German district, and lastly come others who were injured in the war, or their relatives, who belong to the Jewish confession. The statutes of the foundation shall be submitted to Bro. Alexander Katz for his approval.

According to a resolution passed at a previous meeting of the executive committee a further payment of 1,000 mark was made to the children's polyclinic of Dr. Schabad in Wilna. This amount was not taken from the money reserved for the children's polyclinic planned by Dr. Hamburger, but temporarily from other funds placed at the disposal of the Grand Lodge for Russian Poland. The executive committee had previously inquired of Bro. Field Chaplain Dr. Sali Levi whether there was any prospect for the plan of Dr. Hamburger to be realized in the near future. Bro. Levi answered that since the departure of Dr. Hamburger from Wilna all prospects for the realization of this project have vanished, but the clinic of Dr. Schabad is a worthy substitute.

As the children's polyclinic of Dr. Schabad is very warmly recommended by Field Chaplain Dr. Sali Levi, as well as by Dr. Hamburger himself, it was resolved to use the rest of the reserve 1,700 mark for the children's polyclinic of Dr. Schabad.

It was resolved that the arrears of 150 mark annual dues for the last five years shall be paid to the Society for Jewish Folklore. At the same time it is to be brought to the attention of the society that the laws of the Grand Lodge do not permit the continuous payment of membership dues, and that the society must apply each year for a contribution, and this application must be accompanied by its annual report.

The brethren, Dr. Hirsch and Dr. Alexander Katz, reported on a proposition made by the sub-committee on work appointed by the Committee on Jewish Nurses, that the Grand Lodge shall pay the cost of supporting the B'nai B'rith nurses who are active in the field, as in the course of the war the expense of maintaining them is becoming too heavy for the individual stations. The referees suggested that the Grand Lodge place a credit of 20,000 mark from the war welfare fund in favor of the Committee on Jewish Nurses to defray the cost of supporting the nurses who are at the front. The executive committee resolved to recommend the appeal of the sub-committee, together with the suggestion of referees, to the general committee.

A suggestion of the high school instructor, Dr. Julius Hirsch of Cologne, to create chances for work for Jewish workingmen took up a great part of the deliberations of the executive committee. The propounder of the suggestion, Dr. Hirsch, was present as a guest and supported his suggestion.

Before everything, he remarked, it is now the question to create an organization in Germany which will take orders in Germany and give out the work there in Russian Poland. It is self-understood that this organization must be a social creation and not an industrial undertaking. It would need a capital of 20,000 mark. So far the Agudas Israel, the Hilfsverein der deutschen Juden and the Committee for the East held out the prospect of their participation. The speaker now requested that the Grand Lodge shall take part as the fourth founding organization. According to his opinion 25 per cent only will have to be paid in. To be sure, each single organization of the starters must give up the 5,000 mark as fonds perdu (lost capital).

The interesting explanations called forth a lively debate.

Bro. Stein wished to have a positive assurance that fit persons are provided who possess commercial and technical experience and skill to manage the organization in Poland and in Germany. The money will be raised, he said; everything must be done to give the Jews of Poland the possibility to work and to earn a living. However, it would perhaps be more careful to found the organization in Poland, where the accountants should also also be placed, who shall examine and substantiate at what prices the mentioned wooden wares can be manufactured and brought from there into commerce.

In his answer, Dr. Hirsch remarked that in Poland Dr. Haas, the Parliament deputy, is specially interested in this matter and that he already has at hand the necessary persons who are willing to help him. And in Germany, too, certain persons have already been named.

Dr. Hirsch is of the opinion that the organization must be founded in Germany, because here are the necessary Jewish organizations which enjoy a reputation in the Jewish world. The prices, too, must be settled in Germany by those who order the goods at which they wish to have the kinds of wooden wares delivered to them, for in Russian Poland, where the people with their modest demands, work at very low wages, it may happen that the prices will be figured much too cheaply.

Bro. Stein believes that it, nevertheless, would be better to organize the mentioned industrial corporation in Poland, as it is an outgrowth of the requirements of the conditions prevailing there. It is also possible, he said, that anti-Semitism could make capital of it when a corporation is established in Germany that creates in Poland competition for the native workingmen here, and say that the Jews called an organization into life which injures the German workingman.

Dr. Hirsch replied that as far as the anti-Semitic practices is concerned, it remains the same whether the organization is established here or in Poland.

Bro. Ginsberg supports Dr. Hirsch and emphasizes the fact that in this respect there is nothing to be feared from anti-Semitism, as there really exists a want of the mentioned wooden wares and by establishing such an organization the Jews also render a service to the German fatherland. The main point here is to help the Jews not with alms, but with opportunity for work, an aim which our lodges, as well as the employment bureaus, are pursuing.

It was resolved to agree in principle with the suggestion and to refer it to the General Committee with recommendation.

The Committee for the East shall be informed that after the address of Dr. Hirsch the executive committee has decided to participate in the formation of the planned organization in the same manner as the Hilfsverein, the Agudas Israel and the Committee for the East. But the executive committee lays the main stress upon the fact that the planned organization shall find the qualified persons here, as well as in Russian Poland. It therefore considers it necessary that a conference shall take place of the mentioned corporate bodies, with the addition of Dr. Hirsch and the Parliament Deputy, Dr. Ludwig Haas, who is at present in Berlin, in which all other questions shall also be discussed and sifted. The brethren, Ginsberg and Stein, will be delegated to this conference by the Grand Lodge.

RELIGIOUS VANDALISM

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

By vandalism is denoted willful or ignorant destruction of artistic or literary treasures, and in the second place hostility to or irreverence or contempt for what is beautiful or venerable. Of the nature of religious vandalism appear to me the onslaughts by Christian theologians upon the Hebrew Scriptures or, as they call them, the Old Testament. When the church was constituted, it possessed the Old Testament alone as writings of Scriptural rank, and two centuries at least elapsed before the New Testament writings were accorded equal rank. The fiction which enabled the church to retain the Jewish Scriptures was that the Christian community believed itself the true Israel and the Jews the discarded and rejected Israel. The Irish Protestant Church considers itself as the rightful successor to the Church out of which it grew and regards the Catholic Church in Ireland as a new creation. This will serve to elucidate the Christian point of view. The Christians believed that in their founder all the promises in the Old Testament were fulfilled; they were, therefore, the true heirs of the blessings bestowed on Abraham, while the physical descendants of the patriarch forfeited their heritage by rejecting him to whom all of their religious history in the estimtaion of the Church pointed. Of course, prophecy is but one part of the Jewish Bible. There was the Law, the five books of Moses, of which the largest part is devoted to ceremonials connected with the temple and the sacrificial worship there. Now the Early Church was divided on the question of the obligatory character of the ceremonial law. Some adhered strictly to the Jewish life. They differed from other Jews simply in accepting Jesus as the Messiah. Again there were radicals who thought that the time was ripe for discarding all in the life of the Jew that divided him from the world; that if Judaism were to be accepted by mankind, the ceremonies like the Abrahamitic rite were a hindrance; that since the Messianic era had come, all ceremonial laws automatically fell into disuse. In the latter point they coincided with the rabbis who said that "the commandments would be void in the future, that is the Messianic, order of things." Contradictory statements on the subject of the obligatoriness of the law are credited to the founder in the Gospels. Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, went farthest in declaiming against the law. His view prevailed, yet not wholly. The theology of the Church remained hostile to the law. But as the Church was organized, it could not dispense with many provisions of the Jewish law which served as a model for its own constitution. From time to time there arose men who reverted to the Pauline point of view and aimed at cutting Christianity loose from the writings of the Old Testament. Such was Marcion, who denied that the God of the Old Testament was the God of the new dispensation. He pointed out that in the Hebrew Scriptures God was described as impassioned, revengeful; that if the law was no longer obligatory on Christians, it could not have been God-given; that the rewards for good conduct in the Old Testament partook of the nature of terrestrial goods, like the possession of the land of Canaan, and were different from the other-worldly bliss held out as a promise to the believing Christian. Marcion and his followers found fault with the moral conduct of the heroes of our Scriptures; moreover, they found contradictions between the Old Testament and the Gospel doctrine in such points as these: Genesis 2: 18 ordains that man shall cleave unto his wife, while in Matthew 19: 29 we read that every one that hath forsaken a wife for the sake of Jesus shall inherit everlasting life; the Psalmist paints the domestic blessings of a fruitful wife bearing many children, while the Gospel lauds as an ideal the suspension of procreation ("eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake"); in the Old Testament we are bidden to honor father and mother, while Jesus orders a disciple who would first bury his father to follow him and let the dead bury their dead. Since the times of Marcion others have tried their hands at vilifying the Old Testament. The deist Thomas Morgan gathered together all the animadversions upon the Hebrew Scriptures and sought to divest the history of Israel of all religious value. Be it said, however, to the credit of the Church that in ancient as well as in modern times she brushed aside all such vagaries and clung tenaciously to the inspired character of the older dispensation without which indeed the new would be hanging in the air.

Yet in our own day the atacks against the Old Testament have been resumed with new vigor. Goldwin Smith declared the Hebrew Scriptures to be the millstone around Christianity's neck. The higher critics have addressed themselves to the task of reconstructing the religious history of Israel on the basis of a newer study of the older in which the sacred writings were composed. So far so good. The masters of biblical science have kept whatever animus they might have against Judaism well in the background. Not so the disciples. Think of one of them calling Isaiah, because he chides his people's shortcomings, "an enemy of his people". As well we may say that the President of Princeton University who but recently took his compatriots to task for their many failings is "an enemy of his people". If individual Christians have lost faith in the miraculous and supernatural and have ranged themselves on the side of evolutionary theories which have not yet stood the test of time, we have no quarrel with them. But if they tell us that the Old Testament is under sentence of life and that the Hebrew Scriptures "viewed in the light of today" fall short of twentieth century Christian morality, we cannot say that we are shocked, because for the most part the tenor of their argumentation is altogether too stupid to deserve even a refutation, but we are certainly irritated. The light of today! Far be it from us to belittle our modern advances in learning. But as to progress in morality or religion, we shall have to question the merits of the newer gospels. Be it as it may, the unbiased student will insist that there is to the Hebrew Scriptures an abiding worth, that indeed they cannot be viewed in the light of yesterday or today, but in the light of eternity. Individual Christians may discard the Old Testament, the Christian Church will discard and disavow those who in their zeal to aggrandize the New Testament believe that they have rendered a service to Christianity by whittling away at the Old Testament and in a spirit of sheer vandalism destroy the reverence in which the Hebrew Scriptures are held by humanity. We Jews do not deny progress in religion; we know that the Synagog long outgrew the simpler and cruder notions about the Deity which were entertained aforetimes; yet withal it is not this or that isolated detail that counts, it is the total aspect, and the total aspect of of our Scriptures is such that no calumny can rob them of their grandeur, of their grim earnestness of their uncompromising attitude to all species of idolatry. Of course, if Christian teachers forget that between the Old Testament and the New there lies a long development of religious ideas of which the post-biblical Jewish literature, the ancient midrashic commentaries, are the repository, it is simply a case of ignorance or of willful forgetfulness. To the Jew the Scriptures were given; but the same holy spirit which indicted them continued in the nation determining what in the Scriptures was intended for educational purposes and what was meant to abide forever. In other words, we Jews use our Scriptures with discrimination: part of us, they are with us and we are with them, and we have the right of the owner to dispose of them in accordance with the progress of ideas which is just as God-given. We know of no Old Testament, because we do not recognize the New. God has not abdicated. God does not change, it is we who change. Our Scriptures are the record of thousands of years. Naturally we shall find in them matter coming from hoary antiquity. More than that, the Scriptures are a living witness to many conflicting points of view which obtained in the past but which were harmonized in due sequel. What is most important is this idea that cannot be emphasized too much. There are religious moments of importance attaching to the oldest and lowest form of religion. But the higher in placing itself in the stead of the lower need not cast away the imperishable elements in the older piety. The Hebrew Scriptures constitute a link between the oldest form of religion and the latest and testify to the presence of progress indeed, but also to the fact that in all the same spirit breathes, the spirit of God's greatness overshadowing the greatest of mortals. No vandalism, however impertinent, can shake this everlasting foundation. "The Word of God abideth forever".

THE DUMA AND THE JEWS.

The Duma Committee has rejected the Liberal amendment providing for the abolition of all restrictions against the admission of non-Orthodox citizens to teachers' training colleges. The committee only agreed to permit them to enter the colleges in districts where they form the majority of the population. It, however, adopted a resolution favoring the opening of special training colleges for non-Orthodox teachers.

JEWISH LEADERS A Series of Historical Portraits

By RABBI SAMUEL S. COHON, Chicago

Copyrighted, January, 1917, by Samuel S. Cohon

5 Jeremiah, the Leader, as Lyric Prophet.

The prophets were more than the tribunes of the people, and the inspired preachers of morality, in the modern sense of these words. "They were rather poets," writes Prof. M. Buttenweiser, "creative artists in the sphere of religion." Pathfinders in the realms of the spirit, they were ever in the vanguard of Israel, in search after righteousness, ever the first to behold and to eloquently express the beauty of holiness.

They all have, in common, deep moral earnestness, courage of determination, and clear vision of the ideal; but in the form of expression, they—like the rest of the singer-tribe—differ widely. "No two prophets prophecy in the same style," says the Talmudic proverb. The voice of Isaiah resounds like the roar of mighty torrents, or, musically speaking, like the full tones of a grand pipe organ. When he discourses of the majesty of God and of the destinies of Israel, his style reaches the sublime. In contrast to the grandeur of Isaiah's flowing periods, stand out Jeremiah's tender pleadings. "The thought constructs the tune." Jeremiah's pure soul, which Graetz compares to "a clear mirror or a deep well-spring," reflects in painful light, the struggle of pure spirit with hard and defiled matter. His heart, like a resonant violin, sobs forth plaintive melodies that pierce the soul with their sadness, and heal it with their lyric sweetness.

Tradition has named him "the weeping prophet." But this epithet fails to do him justice. At best, it but half describes him. In his rhapsodies, he weeps and prays, curses and entreats, denounces and sings, in turn. He knew the sadness of life as few men have known it; but, with the eye of a true poet, he also saw the joy of living, the flower of virtue, the strength of faith. His wide sympathies made him the man of greatest sorrows. His deep conviction of God's nearness made him the man of strongest hope, in the darkest hours of his nation's life. Like the constellation of great men that appeared on Israel's horizon before him, he too felt that the world was out of joint, and, like them, found himself too impotent to set it right. Thus, ceaselessly wrestling with his own soul, he developed into the most spiritual personality in the religious history of Israel. "Other prophets," says Professor Buttenweiser, "showed equal fervor and singleness of purpose; some even, as the Isaiahs, excelled Jeremiah in the loftiness of their conception of God and of the universe, as in logical precision and clearness of thought, and in poetic beauty and aptitude of language—in fact, in all those qualities which pertain distinctly to the intellectual side of the prophetic movement; but as an exponent of the purely spiritual side of this movement, Jeremiah stands without a peer." (Professor Kent, too, holds that "in him, Hebrew prophecy reached its greatest spiritual height".)

In an even greater degree than Isaiah, Jeremiah is his own biographer. His book, though replete with "cumbersome repetitions," which often baffles the student, is fuller in personal detail than the books of all the other prophets. By the side of the finely wrought lyrical passages, full of poetic figures, which show Jeremiah's exquisite literary style (Chap. I-VI), stands the Temple sermon which illustrates his command of simple, forceful prose (Chap. VII). Then follow sermons, parables, fervent prayers, confessions, dirges and songs—some of which appear in fragmentary form—(Chap. VIII-XXV), revealing his spiritual struggles. After an interruption of four chapters, recording his conflict with the false prophets (Chap. XXVI-XXIX), we have a group of prophecies in which Jeremiah paints the brighter future of Israel (Chap. XXX-XXXV). These compositions are supplemented by memoirs of the prophet's experiences and of his part in the tragedy that overtook the kingdom of Judah (Chap. XXXVI-XLV; LII). The group of oracles to the nations (Chap. XLVI-LI) appear to be expansions of chapter twenty-five, radically different in spirit and style from the rest of Jeremiah's work and, though embodied in his book, probably originated with other prophets. "His book", writes C. G. Montefiore, "because of its very popularity, has been undoubtedly subjected to accretions and revisions, the exact number and extent of which it would be hard to estimate with certainty". (Hibbert Lectures, page 213.) Tradition ascribed to him the authorship of the book of Lamentations, but on wholly inadequate grounds. The bulk of the prophecies—the authenticity of which cannot reasonably be doubted—admit us into the innermost being of Jeremiah. His sermons, dirges and songs—experienced before they were uttered—are at bottom, bits of his life history. With the aid of the historical narratives of his book, they shed radiant light upon his life and personality.

He was born more than a half century after the death of Isaiah, in the small priestly village of Anathoth, some three miles north of Jerusalem. As the descendent of priests, Jeremiah had the rare opportunity of saturating himself with the traditions of his people, and with the words of the great prophets, on the Divine guidance of the affairs of men and of nations and on Israel's place in the world of mankind. So profoundly impressed was he with their teachings that his prophecies now re-echo the message of one prophet and now of another. The voice of Hosea is particularly felt in all of Jeremiah's utterances—the same gentleness, the same love for his people, the same denunciation of idolatry. and the same emphasis on the mystic side of religion. Jeremiah was educated in the priestly ritual, the inherited ideals and standards of his people; and, in the light of prophecy, he "bettered the instruction". The more he pondered over the burning truths of Amos, Hosea, Isaiah and Micah, the more he felt himself out of tune with the superficial religion of his people, which was centered in the sacrificial cult. Religion, he felt, was something more than the burning of bullocks on the altar. God, who tests the heart and probes the soul of man, demands a clear conscience and pure moral actions.

Some scholars hold that the threatening scourge of the Scythian invasion impelled Jeremiah to take up the prophetic burden, as Isaiah had been roused by the Assyrian campaigns and the other political upheavals of his day. The vast hordes of horsemen from the regions over the Caucasus swept over Western Asia and reached the borders of Egypt, where their retreat was purchased by the Pharaoh Psamptik I. They then "swept back again as swiftly as they came". It is but natural that "they shook the whole of Palestine into consternation. Though Judah among her hills escaped them, as she escaped the earlier campaigns of Assyria, they showed her the penal resources of her offended God. Once again, the dark sacred North was seen to be full of the possibilities of doom". (G. A. Smith, the Book of Twelve Prophets II, p. 16.) While this hypothesis is subject to debate, we are satisfied with less mechanical and more traditional conditions for the awakening of Jeremiah's genius. The genius springs to life whenever God kisses a human soul and whispers to it His great purposes of truth and love. Then his words become like flaming fire, and like a hammer that shatters the rock. (Jer., Chap. XXIII:18, 22, 29.)

In the year 626, when Jeremiah was still a youth, an obligation as of "piled mountains" fell upon his shoulders; the burden of preaching the religion of the heart was laid on him, and his life became one long round of duty for him and a prophecy to his fellow men. In an experience which reminds us of Isaiah's consecration vision—though inferior to imaginative power—Jeremiah heard the voice of God whispering in his heart: "Before I formed thee in thy mother's body I singled thee out; and before thou camest forth out of the womb, I sanctified thee; I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations". Knowing well the martyrdom which the life of a prophet entails, Jeremiah quailed before his task. "Ah, Lord God!" he cried, "I cannot speak, for I am but a lad."

"Say not 'I am a lad,'" urged the stern voice, "for thou shalt go to all to whom I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of them, for I am with thee to deliver thee". He felt the gentle touch of God's hand placing the divine word into his mouth, saying: "I have set thee this day over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, to pull down, and to destroy, and to overthrow, also to build and to plant". (Jer. 1:4-10.) This was his great mission! If the process of tearing down the errors of his people made him "the man of strife and of struggle to all the land", his efforts to establish the spiritual life made him one of the master builders of the religion of Israel.

For about half a century this man fought the priests, princess, and kings of Judah, setting himself as a brazen wall against the whole country, defying torture and persecution in his martyrdom for truth. It took great courage to speak one's mind in those days. In the seventy-five years which followed Sennacherib's retreat from Jerusalem, Judah was troubled but little by the Assyrian power. During this breathing spell, the country prospered materially but deteriorated spiritually. King Manasseh devoted himself most zealously to the worship of Moloch, to whom he sacrificed his own son. He set up an altar for "all the host of heaven" in the very court of the Temple, and put to death all those who opposed his heathen policy. "He shed much innocent blood", writes the old historian, "till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to the other" (II Kings, XXI:16). The blood of the prophets and the true worshippers of God flowed in streams. However, while persecution may break the spirit of the weak, it only strengthens the men of courage. The faithful worshippers of God labored quietly but steadfastly in the hope of bringing about the triumph of the true religion. And the fruit of their labors appeared in the fifth year of Jeremiah's prophetic activity, while the young King Josiah, the grandson of Manasseh, administered the affairs of the state.

One day Josiah sent his secretary, Shaphan, to the high priest, Hilkiah with orders to renovate the Temple. In the course of the renovation Hilkiah announced that he had discovered a "book of the law," and sent it to the King, through Shaphan. The book was, in all likelihood, no other than Deuteronomy, in which the old laws going back to Moses were brought up to date by the prophetic party, during the period of reaction under Manasseh. (Some scholars connect the names of Zephaniah and Jeremiah with the authorship of Deuteronomy, but without sufficient proof.) This code of law, in its historical introduction and epilogue, is represented as the work of the founder of Israel's religion, Moses, delivered before his death. "Laws", writes Professor Graetz, "are usually cold, stern and hard, and with threatening gesture they say, 'Thou shalt or shalt not, or heavy punishment will overtake thee". The law book found in the time of Josiah is not couched in such terms. It exhorts, warns, and actually entreats that this or that may be done or left undone. It uses the language of a loving father, whose son, standing before a great goal, is warned not to lose the bright future before him through his own fault and thus become an object of scorn and a disgrace. A pleasant breeze is wafted from this book of Deuteronomy. As though with a garland of flowers, the laws (Mitzvoth), statutes (Chukkim), and ordinances (Mishpatim) are surrounded with historical reminiscences and heartfelt admonitions, couched in sublime and poetic language" (Graetz, History of the Jews, Vol. I, pages 292-3).

The words of this book made a tremendous impression upon the young monarch. They showed him how far behind the true worship his people were. The book thundered against the high places with their abominable idols, and insisted on the centralization of worship in one city, in Jerusalem. In the light of this law book, Josiah undertook the religious reformation of Judah. He cleared the land of idolatry, burned the vessels that had been used at the Temple itself for the worship of Baal, Ashtarte, and the Host of Heaven, and destroyed the Bamoth (high-places) in the cities of Judah and the outskirts of Jerusalem. Henceforth, there was to be but one place where the one God should be worshipped by the whole nation. (II Kings, XXII-XXIII.)

The change in religious life must have aroused much opposition. The priests of the rural sanctuaries were hard hit by the royal order. While forced to close the high-places, they probably hoped for a day in the near future, when they could again ply their old trade. The big masses of the people, too, while conforming outwardly to the new law, clung in their hearts to the old superstitions. Men's habits and views of life cannot be suddenly uprooted by law. Thus the friends of the reformation must have had cause to be somewhat disappointed with the results. Among them was Jeremiah. "Judah", he said, "has not turned to God whole-heartedly, but hypocritically". (Jer. III:10.) A more far-reaching reform than that accomplished by the publication of the Deuteronomic law was necessary for the people. They needed a moral regeneration. Though ruthless in his denunciation of the existing religious conditions, Jeremiah exercised full liberty of speech all through the reign of the God-fearing King Josiah. But those days of freedom did not last long.

Conditions in the political world took a serious turn. In the seething caldron of the North trouble was brewing, ready to deluge also the Judean kingdom. Assyria, once the mistress of the world, was now tottering to its fall, under the rising power of the Medes and Chaldeans. (See the book of the prophet Nahum.) The Egyptian Pharaoh, Necho, rushed to get his share of the spoil of Ninevah, and perhaps to establish his power in Palestine. Josiah, whose "dream was probably to bring back the scattered remains of the northern kingdom to a pure worship, and to unite the whole people of Israel under the sceptre of the House of David, . . . was not inclined to allow Egypt to cross his aspirations and rob him of the inheritance which was falling to him from the dead hand of Assyria". (A. B. Davidson, cited by G. A. Smith, The Book of the Twelve Prophets, II, page 27.) He therefore rushed to the narrow pass of Megiddo, which was the key of the land-road from Egypt to the Euphrates, and took the battlefield against the Egyptian invader. (G. A. Smith, Ibid, Note 1.) His attempt was ill-fated. In this battle of Megiddo, in 608 B. C. E., the worthy scion of David fell, and with him sank the hope of the country. The people immediately elected Josiah's second son, Jehoahaz, to the throne. After a short reign of three months he was deposed by Pharaoh Necho, and replaced by his older brother, Jehoiakim.

With the new king new evils came upon the Kingdom of Judah. He was the exact contrast of his father; unscrupulous in his dealings with his subjects, caring more for his private gain than for the people's welfare. (Jer. XXII:13-17.) He came to the throne because of his sympathies with Egypt; and for this privilege of kingship he was obliged to pay heavy tribute to Pharaoh Necho. The burden naturally fell upon the people. Upon them also fell the burden of his extravagant buildings. In one respect he pleased many people; he removed the restraint imposed by his father Josiah upon the superstitious worship. "A conspiracy", cried Jeremiah, "is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem. They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words. . . . According to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, altars to burn incense unto Baal". (Jer. XI:9-13.) "The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women kneed the dough to make cakes for the Queen of Heaven (Ishtar), and pour out drink offerings unto other gods". (Jer. VII:18.) The whole work of the religious reformation was undone. "In vain was the pen used", lamented the prophet, "in vain the labor of the scribes". (Jer. VIII:8b.)

One day the prophet posted himself in the gate of the Temple and called unto the people in the name of God: "Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place". Trust not in the lying words that, because of the holy Temple, the city will forever be protected by God against the attack of enemies. Not the Temple, but your actions will save you. Shiloh once had a sanctuary of God. Nevertheless, because of its wickedness, the city was destroyed. So will it be with Jerusalem. This Temple, which was dedicated to God, has become a den of robbers. You steal, murder and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and worship idols, and then come to this Temple and say 'we are saved'. Your sacrifices of animals are of no value to God. Eat the flesh of your burnt offerings; God does not desire them, for thus saith the Lord: "I spoke not unto your fathers nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of Egypt concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices. But this thing commanded I them, saying, 'Obey my voice and I will be your God and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all my ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well with you". The children of Judah have done evil; they have placed their abominable idols in the very Temple, and have built the high-places for the burning of their children to Moloch. "True religion has perished and is cut off from their mouth". Therefore shall God also forsake this generation of His wrath, and there shall cease from the cities of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem the voice of mirth and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, for the land shall be desolate. . . . And death shall then be preferred to life by the remnant that shall be left of this evil family". (Jer. VII-VIII:3.)

This sermon drew the anger of the self-confident priests and the time-serving prophets, who dragged Jeremiah before the princes and the people, demanding that he be put to death on account of his blasphemous and unpatriotic words. Jeremiah calmly defended himself at this heresy trial, on the ground that he spoke in the name of God, in order that the people might amend their actions and thus avert the evil consequences; but, as for his own life, the people could do with it as it pleased them; only, should they kill him, they would but add to their own guilt and to the guilt of the city. A number of the princes were moved by his plea. They found a precedent in the case of prophet Micah, who prophecied in the days of Hezekiah against the city of Jerusalem, but was not punished. It would therefore, they argued, be a great evil to kill Jeremiah. At the same time another prophet by the name of Uriah ben Shenaiah, who preached in the same tone as did Jeremiah, and who did not have the backing of influential men, was put to death. (Jer. XXVI.) Jeremiah's freedom of speech was curtailed. It seems that he was forbidden to enter the court of the Temple. (Jer. XXXVI:5.) His days now became one continuous burden. (For a detailed discussion of these events in Jeremiah's life see M. Buttenwieser, Prophets of Israel, Chapters II-III.) His kinsmen and friends turned against him, and even conspired to take his life. (Jer. XI:21-23.) He often broke out in bitter complaint against his fortune. "Woe is me, my mother", he lamented in his grief, "that thou hast borne me—a man of strife and contention to the whole earth. . . . Every one curses me". (Jer. XV:10.) "Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labor and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame". (Jer. XX:14-18.) Nevertheless, the prophet did not succumb to his grief. Though enduring misery because of the word of God, he fairly devoured the divine message: "Thy word has been a joy unto me and the rejoicing of my heart". (Jer. XV:15-16.) Great, indeed, is the danger threatening him who exposes the degeneracy of social customs, political institutions, and religious opinions. The dungeon, the gallows, the stake await him. But this fear cannot deter him from speaking the God-given truth. "It is as little possible to do this", says Nordau, "as for a woman voluntarily to prevent the birth of the mature fruit of her womb". The divine message overpowers the messengers; it is like a raging fire shut up in his bosom. (Jer. XX:7-11.)

By his suffering, Jeremiah grew in prophetic ardor. With a grim determination, he now devoted himself to preach the message of repentance to the obdurate people. He denied himself the pleasure of home life; he refused to offer consolation to mourners, or to rejoice at happy occasions in order to indicate, by these actions, that days of evil were coming upon the land. (Jer. XVI.) The temper of these forecasts of doom is best indicated in Jeremiah's remarkably beautiful sermon that was inspired by his visit to the potter's house. At the wheel sat the potter, shaping the clay into forms. As the clay was marred in his hands he kneeded it again and remoulded it into the desired shape. Watching this process, Jeremiah exclaimed to the people: Are you not in the hands of God as the clay is in the hands of the potter? Unless you repent, He will destroy you and create a new Israel that shall be in accord with His divine purpose. (Jer. XVIII:1-12.) In this spirit, Jeremiah announced these great words of God: "If with all your hearts ye truly seek me, ye shall surely find me". (Jer. XXIX:13.)

Early in Jehoiakim's reign the storms began to gather over Judah. Assyria fell, but the more exacting mistress, Babylonia, raised her head. In the year 605, Nebuchadnezzar broke the power of Egypt, in the battle of Carkemish, and became master of Palestine. Jehoiakim at first transferred his allegiance to Babylon; but, after three years, he rebelled. Thereupon Nebuchadnezzar incited bands of foreign troops against Jerusalem. In these events Jeremiah saw the fated doom of his country. Finding it increasingly more difficult to preach to the people, and sound the alarm at their actions, he asked his disciple and devoted friend, Baruch ben Nerish, to write down, from dictation, the prophecies which he had delivered since his consecration and to read them in public. At a public fast, Baruch read Jeremiah's addresses to the assembled people and princes. The terrified princes took the scroll from Baruch and read it before the king. But he was not moved by its words. As the reader got through with its leaves, the king slashed them with his knife and threw them into the fire of the hearth. When Jeremiah was informed that the scroll of his sermons was destroyed, he ordered Baruch to prepare another copy, dictating additional prophecies, predicting that the body of the king would be thrown into the streets by the invading Babylonians. (Jer., Chap. XXXVI.)

This prediction was not fulfilled. King Jehoiakim died a natural death, in time to escape the vengeance of Nebuchadnezzar, and was succeeded by his 18-year-old son, Chonjan (or Jeroiachin). A Babylonian army appeared in front of Jerusalem. In the hope of saving the country, the young king surrendered and with the queen-mother went out to the Babylonians. Together with the best elements of the country—among whom was the priest-prophet Ezekiel—he was taken captive and deported to Babylonia. (598 or 597 B. C. E.) Over the enfeebled country Zedekiah, the third son of Josiah, was made king. The professional optimists—the false prophets—assured the people that the captives would soon come back and prosperity would return with the speedy downfall of Babylon. Jeremiah saw more keenly the impending doom that threatened the rebellious people. To the exiles he sent word to settle down into the life of Babylon: "Build ye houses and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them; take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there and not diminished. And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it, for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace". (Jer. XXIX:5-7.) The same policy of peace he advocated for the people of Judah. His repeated urging that the country desist from further rebellion which could only lead it to destruction (Jer. XXI, XXVII) fell on deaf ears. Enticed by the siren-song of Egypt, Judah again rose against Babylon.

In the siege of Jerusalem that followed, the city held out against the Babylonian army for over a year. In their stress the people tried to regain God's favor by setting free the Hebrew slaves, in compliance with the Deuteronomic law, after they had served six years; but no sooner had the Babylonian army withdrawn temporarily from Jerusalem in order to check the advance of Egyptian troops than the people again impressed their freed men into bondage. This only showed to Jeremiah the baseness of the people and their ripeness for destruction. (Jer. XXXIV.) As he had predicted, the Babylonians returned to Jerusalem, to continue their work of destruction. Jeremiah who, on account of his prophecies that Jerusalem would be captured and the king led as a prisoner of war, had been imprisoned in the beginning of the siege, was now permitted to move around freely. One day, when leaving Jerusalem for his home village, Anathoth, he was arrested on the charge that he had intended to flee to the Babylonians, was flogged. and again thrown into a dungeon. There he was secretly consulted by the king about the will of God. Jeremiah had but one word: Save what is still left of the country through surrender! When his counsel became known to the princes, they threw him into a miry pit, where he would have perished had it not been for a negro eunuch in the king's service, who obtained the king's permission to deliver the aged prophet out of the pit and place him in the stocks. (Jer. XXXVII-XXXVIII.)

After a heroic resistance of a year and a half, Jerusalem was captured by the Babylonians. The king and army endeavored to save themselves through flight, but they were captured and taken before Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah. There the king's sons were killed before his eyes, and then he himself was blinded and sent in fetters to Babylon. Jerusalem was razed to the ground, the Temple burned, and the bulk of the city carried off to Babylonia. Only the poorest elements were permitted to remain in Judah, under the care of Gedalia, whom Nebuchadnezzar left as governor of the ruined country. Jeremiah, whose views became known to the Babylonian general, was given the choice of going to Babylonia as an honored prisoner or of staying in Palestine. He preferred to remain amid the ruins of his city and Temple. There this tragic figure moved until the governor of Judea was treacherously murdered, and the survivors, fleeing to Egypt, dragged him and his scribe, Baruch, along with them. In the hateful land of Egypt, which he regarded as Judea's evil spirit, he found his brethren in a demoralized state of unblushing apostacy from their faith. The people openly claimed that it was because of the religious reforms that the country suffered, for as long as the idols were duly worshipped, everything went well. (Jer. XXXIX-XLIV.) In Egypt this man of God breathed his last, dying firm in his faith that God would deliver his poor and ignorant brethren.

This "commanding figure of the tragic period of Judah's decline" saw, from the very beginning of his career, with the clear insight that characterized the true prophets, that the political life of Judah was doomed. But if he could not save his country from the foreign enemy, he was resolved to save it from inner corruption—to deliver the people from themselves. He pointed out to the people that their entire past was stained with ingratitude to God. (Jer. II-VI.) As no other prophet, he inveighed against the people; and, as no other prophet, he held out to them the promise of God's love. During the siege of Jerusalem when Jeremiah was imprisoned on the charge of lack of patriotism, if not of treason, his cousin Chananel came to him and asked him to exercise his right, as nearest kinsman, to purchase his field in Anathoth. The irony of this event was that the enemy's forces must have been in possession of the land where that field lay. Nevertheless, in his unwavering belief in the indestructibility of Israel as a nation, he bought the field and arranged for the preservation of the deed of sale. (This event has its parallel in the action of the citizens of Rome who, "when Hannibal was at their gates, bought and sold the very land on which the Carthaginian had pitched his tent. Livy XXVI, Par. 11", Professor Max Kellner, in The Bible as Literature, page 176.) "Houses and lands and vineyards shall be possessed again in the land," declared Jeremiah. "Behold, saith the Lord, I will gather them out of all the countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger and in my fury and in my wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God. And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, from doing them good; but I will put the fear of me in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good; and I will plant them in this land in truth, with my whole heart and my whole soul". (Jer. XXXII.) In His mercy, God shall save Israel from destruction, to endure steadfast as the stars in heaven. (Jer. XXXI:34-36 and XXXIII:14-26.)

His hope of better days to come was grounded in his faith in the ultimate conversion of the people's hearts to the God of justice and of truth. One striking feature in his teachings (already embodied in the book of Deuteronomy XXIV:16, and later made the pivotal point of the prophet Ezekiel's teaching) is his clear enunciation of the doctrine of the moral responsibility of the individual, as distinguished from collective, social responsibility: "In those days", he says, "it shall no longer be said: 'The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the teeth of the children are set on edge'; but every one shall die for his own sin—he that eateth sour grapes, his teeth will be set on edge". This changed order of things will be marked by a greater inwardness of faith: "Behold, days are coming, saith the Lord, when I shall make a new covenant with the House of Israel, and with the House of Judah; not like the covenant which I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of Egypt, which covenant they broke, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord [according to the Septuagint and Peshita: "so that I cast them off"]. But this will be the covenant which I will make with the House of Israel, after those days, saith the Lord: I will put my law in their inward parts, and upon their hearts shall I inscribe it. Then will I be to them a God, and they will be to me a people. And they will no longer need to teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother 'Know God,' for they will all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord, for I shall forgive them their iniquity, and I shall remember their sin no more". (See M. Buttenwieser, Prophets of Israel, pages 318-323, and C. H. Cornill, Prophets of Israel, pages 91-107.)

Claude G. Montefiore calls attention to the fact that "the new covenant does not 'consciously exclude law from from the idea of the perfect religion' (Duhm). No attack upon law in the abstract or upon Deuteronomy in the concrete, entered here into the prophet's mind. All that it implies is that an external law would become unnecessary if its contents were written beforehand in the heart. For though the subject-matter of religion, under the new covenant as under the old, might be capable of expression in legal terms, the teaching of it would become needless, because it would be universally known". What this passage implies is that, in the ideal future, God will stand in direct relation "to every individual Israelite, 'from the greatest to the least of them'", and render permanent aid "by which each one might be spiritually reborn to a holy life in the knowledge of God". (Hibbert Lectures, p. 221.)

As no prophet before him, Jeremiah grasped the full meaning of God's spirituality. In the orderliness of nature, he—even more clearly than Hosea—read the message of God's mercy (Jer. V:22). In this power which sustains the starry heavens, the sole Ruler and Creator of nature, the Fountain of living waters, and the Hope of Israel, he found an unfailing source of comfort when his heart was torn with grief. "Heal me, O God", he prayed, "and I shall be healed; save me and I shall be saved, for Thou art my praise". (Jer. XVII:14.) And, in behalf of his people, he implores God: "Hast Thou utterly rejected Judah! Hast Thy soul loathed Zion? Why, then, hast Thou smitten us, so that there is no healing for us? We look for peace, but no good comes; and for a time of healing, but behold trouble! We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness and the iniquity of our fathers; for we have sinned against Thee! Do not abhor us, for Thy name's sake; do not disgrace the throne of Thy glory; remember; break not Thy covenant with us. Are there any among the vanities (the false gods) of the nations that can cause rain (a sign of sovereignty over nature)? Or can the heavens (on their own accord) give showers? Art Thou not He, O Lord our God? Therefore, we will wait for Thee; for Thou has made all these things". (Jer. XIV: 19-22.) The Lord searches the heart and tries the reins to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doing. (Jer. XXVII:10.) The wicked may prosper in a worldly sense. They may even be apparently happy. But, says Jeremiah, "Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their hearts". True happiness does not consist in possessing worldly things, but in enjoying a right spirit. (Jer. XII:1-2.) "Thus saith the Lord: let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, that I am the Lord who exerciseth loving kindness, judgment and righteousness, in the earth, that in these things I take delight". (Jer. IX:23-24.) These ideas find expression in the reflective song which bears strong resemblance to Psalm I:

Cursed is the man who trusteth in man
And maketh flesh his arm (his strength),
And whose heart departeth from the Lord.
He shall be like the heath in the desert,
And shall not see when good cometh;
But shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness—
A salt land and not inhabited.
Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord.
The Lord shall be his help.
He shall be as a tree planted by the waters,
That spreadeth out its roots by the river,
And doth not fear when heat cometh.
Its leaf is (ever)green.
In the year of drought, it shall not want,
Nor cease from yielding fruit". (Jer. XVII:5-8.)

This joy in God is the flower of Jeremiah's teaching of the religion of the heart. Its fragrance gives coherence to his singular life and personality. Of gentle nature, he was compelled to hurl harsh invectives against the people he so greatly loved. A patriot of deepest devotion, it fell to his lot to rend the veil of the sombre future, to predict his country's downfall, and to share in its misery. Before his naked eye was revealed the yawning abyss into which his nation was hurling itself; and he hoped against hope that his words might move the stony hearts of the people to repentence and to national salvation. As often as he shrank from his task, he felt God's hand upholding him and urging him to keep his post on Israel's watch-tower. His steadfastness throughout his long and troubled career, and his confidence in God and in the future of his people, made him one of the greatest heroes of faith, not alone of Israel but of all mankind. Like a tower of strength, he confronted the deadly forces that undermined the life of his people, or rather (as Professor Kent suggests) "like a lighthouse, shedding a clear divine light upon the seething waters". Though misunderstood and persecuted by his contemporaries, this lyric prophet appeared in his true worth to the minds of later generations of Israel. Chastened by bitter experience, they recognized that in Jeremiah they had a true man of God, a passionate lover of his people, who bore the burdens and sorrows of them all in his own big heart; and that through his heroic martyrdom sweet song and bright visions of spiritual regeneration, healing and moral strength came unto them.

A BULGAR-JEWISH MILITARY HOSPITAL.

THE ETHICS OF BUSINESS

By Harry S. Wallheim

Credit is the life-blood of business. This is a fact you will all admit. Yet credit is only side of a business transaction, the other constituent parts being buying, manufacturing and selling. Let us then examine a business transaction as an entity in relation to general commercial ethics, and let us then dwell for some time upon the most important constituent of business, namely, "Credit."

Every one of us, I believe, who is engaged in business has his own standard of business ethics, or the moral side of conducting his particular business. By that standard we conduct and operate it, and when that standard is in danger of violation, we stop and consider, and if we cannot reconcile the immediate requirements to our standard, we do one of two things; either we do not take the business, or we do take it, and thereby lower our standard of ethics to adjust it to the particular situation that is confronting us. Assuming that we take the latter course (and I firmly believe that the latter is taken more frequently than the former), do we not then lose something for which the small profit on the individual transaction be it purchase or sale, will never be able to compensate? Are we not making a sacrifice of a moral principle, a part of our moral standard, and in so doing, are we not lowering ourselves in our own self-esteem? Does this pay? I ask you: Does this pay? and if it does not pay, why do we do it?

"Honesty is the best policy" is a trite saying, but in no phase of our existence, political, economic, social or ethical, is this more true than in the economic or business side of our career. How frequently dishonesty is present in business transactions in all their phases is a fact so well known to all of you that it is needless for me to dwell upon it at this time. It is therefore that I desire to present to you for serious consideration these thoughts, and some possible remedies, in order that we may be stimulated to watch ourselves more closely, and whenever we deem it necessary that we may revise our standard of commercial ethics. I am not in any sense a reformer by nature. I don't believe that the time will ever come when all the ills that business is heir to will disappear, for that would be too Utopian to be practical. I don't even say that the things I expect to point out to you are new or unusual, nor have I a panacea to offer which will act in any sense as a cure-all, but I simply wish to bring home to you, individually and collectively, and to all business men wherever this message may carry, that it is time we took some definite, decisive action to at least revise and correct our standards of business ethics, and the history of every constructive movement that ever crystallized into definite accomplishment is that some one usually had to take the initiative, even at the expense of the disapproval and, frequently, the scorn of his fellow men. The reformer is never welcome; therefore I do not choose to be the reformer, but I do choose to take the opportunity to speak plainly and frankly and present to you a review of dishonest commercial practices, the elimination of which would tend to make us not only better men and women, but, I frankly believe, better business men and women.

The professions are far from being free from criticism on their standards of ethics, but at least they have gone one step further than has the business man, for the American Bar Association and the American Medical Association have each adopted canons of ethics for the government of the conduct of their members in relation to their dealings with their clients and their patients, and in their conduct toward each other as professional brethren. In many cases this is supplemented by additional canons of ethics, adopted by state and county associations within the parent body, and certainly we must all admit that this is a step forward toward the light. Even the so-called professionalized businesses, as engineering, advertising, banking, accounting, and the specialized field of the credit man and the efficiency expert, have all adopted certain canons or standards of moral conduct in their business relations with their fellow men, and in the interchange of business between themselves.

It is therefore now highly essential that the men engaged in business activities which cannot be included in any of the above classifications take hold and begin to clean up their standards of moral conduct in their relations with one another, so that they, too may in the near future adopt canons of ethics for their respective business.

The law has taken cognizance of business dishonesty because that most frequently committed of all commercial [illegible] fraud is made the basis of the well-accepted legal principle, "Fraud vitiates all contracts." Other specific commercial offenses have been made crimes, felonies or misdemeanors, such as using the mails to defraud, obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, and the conversion of property belonging to others.

Let us now revert to that constituent of a business transaction which is perhaps the most prolific in business dishonesty, namely, the credit side of a commercial transaction. This involves three considerations: First, the extension of the credit; second, the collection of the account at maturity, and, third, the remedies to be employed where the regular channels for making the collection fail.

First let us examine the extension or opening of the credit. The solicitation of the credit comes in one of two ways. Either the vendor goes to the vendee or the vendee comes to the vendor; the seller goes to the customer or the customer comes to the seller. If the order is solicited through a salesman and then sent into the house, the credit man must resort to his usual means of credit information; the agency report (Dun or Bradstreet), the experience of banks located in the city or town where the customer has his business, and with whom he may or may not do business, trade references, and wherever possible the customer's own signed statement given in response to the request of the credit men. Dishonest business practices frequently creep into every one of these sources of credit information and are very often, therefore, at the bottom of what later is known or termed as "a bad credit". Let us examine these for a moment. The prospective customer may make a false statement to the commercial agencies, or he may make it directly to the house from whom he is seeking the credit. The banker may, and sometimes does, give incomplete, incorrect or colored information to help the merchant establish a credit, so that he, as banker, may benefit thereby in the course of time in his dealings with the merchant, and the trade references, such as competing houses in the same line, or even houses in a different line of business, from whom credit or ledger information is sought, frequently (and you all know instances of this) give highly colored, dishonest, and sometimes deliberately false credit information, for the purpose, very often, of protection to themselves where they are already concerned about the credit they may have extended, and in the selfish hope that in this way the merchant may secure sufficient stock so as to enable them to at least protect themselves, even though they do so at the expense of another creditor. I do not say these practices are universal—they are the exception rather than the rule—but they exist nevertheless and more frequently than is pleasant to recognize.

Now, if the customer comes to the seller, what happens? The credit man interviews him as to his property possessions, real and personal, his outside interests, the condition of his business, the amount of profit he allows on his merchandise, the amount of insurance he carries, and wherever possible secures a signed statement of his assets and liabilities. What dishonest practices confront us here. The statements, oral and written, are often false, and frequently appearances are made deliberately deceiving, prosperous or otherwise, so as to gain credit upon such appearances. True, the credit man, through the opportunity of meeting and talking to the prospect, has a better opportunity to judge the moral risk, but what chance is there for the forming of fair, intelligent, unbiased judgment in the face of such deception?

Assuming now that the credit has been extended, and the account is due, and the creditor is making efforts to realize in money the extent of the credit granted, what practices frequently confront us? False claims as to shortage and weight, also as to quality, fit or workmanship, often efforts to return the merchandise for credit, using as a medium one of the excuses above mentioned; promises by letter, telephone and telegraph to remit by a certain date with no intention to keep them; the giving of notes and postdated checks for the purposes of further delay with no intention to meet them, the writing of letters which read, "We enclose check," etc., purposely omitting the check to gain time between mails, the exchange of checks by enclosing the wrong checks to the right parties, also sending checks and purposely forgetting to sign them, done for the purpose of gaining time, and many other little similar abuses too numerous to mention.

The credit is extended; the account is due; the ordinary means of collection have failed, and resort is now had to a lawyer or a collection agency to save the almost lost account. What do we find? The same type of misrepresentations are attempted upon the lawyer or collecting agent, and unless such a lawyer or collecting agency knows his business very thoroughly he is frequently taken in as quickly as the credit man was in the first instance. Even when suit has been commenced, and the witness is under oath, he frequenlty continues his misrepresentations, his lying and his fraud.

If we now assume that the account is lost, and that the merchant voluntarily goes, or is forced, into bankruptcy, what do we find? Attempts to prefer certain creditors over others for friendly reasons, because of blood relationship or for favors to be extended in future by way of reciprocity; quick transfers of real and personal property in fraud of creditors generally, the giving of fake notes to relatives and friends to create false claims, increase the liabilities, and often to save something for the bankrupt, the fraudulent removal or concealment of part of the assets, usually stock, and sometimes accomplished by a ring organized for this very purpose and operating through a fence, whereby, and thru whom the goods are disposed of and shipped to other stores all over the country. These, and many, many more are some of the cold stubborn facts that we, as business men, have to face.

Add to the above all the additional frauds committeed in the names of corporations and of partnerships in the credit field alone and you will get some conception of the tremendous field before us.

There is pending in one of the United States District Courts of this state at the present time a proceeding in bankruptcy against a certain retail merchant. An audit was made and large discrepancies were discovered by the auditor, for which discrepancies the bankrupt is apparently unable to account to the satisfaction of the court and the trustees. The trustee, through his attorney, has filed a petition asking for an order requiring the bankrupt to turn over certain property, or to account for same, and in support of his petition has filed a very interesting brief. I will ask you to pause with me for a moment while I read to you the opening paragraph of this brief:

"The bankrupt in this proceeding is of a type altogether too familiar in courts of bankruptcy. He neither merits nor should receive the delicacy of treatment usually given to litigants in ordinary court proceedings. We may generalize the type as that of a merchant accustomed to low standards of living, who, by all available means, including the making of false credit statements, accumulates a stock of merchandise, incurs an indebtedness largely in excess of his visible assets, and, when forced into bankruptcy, is able to produce no books of account, smilingly assures his creditors that he has spent their money in reckless and extravagant living, and in gifts to impecunious relatives of which no record has been made, and blandly suggests that they may scrutinize to their heart's content, but that he has nothing further to explain."

And every lawyer who ever had occasion to practice in the bankruptcy court knows that this is a common thing in bankruptcy and a growing evil, and that it has led to an organized sentiment which has the support of a large number of credit men for the repeal of the Bankrutcy Act. This, I fear, if carried out, would open the door for a return to the abuses which existed prior to the enactment of the National Bankruptcy Law, and which in many cases were more flagrant than the pernicious practices that have grown up since its enactment. This situation can best be met by judicious and proper amendments to the Bankruptcy Act, the necessity for which has been demonstrated by the abuses in its application and practice.

And even in the professions, the canons of ethics are often violated sometimes intentionally and with a full knowledge of the violation and the possible consequence. Doctors have been found guilty of malpractices, lawyers of unethical and unprofessional conduct, bankers of perpetrating commercial frauds, accountants have been known to falsify, merchandise, drugs and foodstuffs have been advertised and sold upon certain representations, the gullible public has purchased, and then later learned to its regret of how it has been imposed upon; engineers have been known to cheat on specifications and material which have sometimes cost human life. To me, however, probably due to the fact of my almost constant contact with the legal profession, there is no sadder spectacle than the lawyer who goes astray, who so far forgets his duty to the community, his oath of office, his sworn allegiance as an officer of the court and his own conscience that he deliberately uses the knowledge he has acquired and by virtue of which he possesses information not known to the layman for the purpose of aiding his lay client in commiting the frauds and dishonest practices (possibly within the law), the full extent of which is often not known to the client. It has been said, however, that "It takes a crooked client to make a crooked lawyer." This truism offers some consolation when one is confronted with a situation like the above.

And now that I have brought to your attention some of the most flagrant violations of commercial honesty and business ethics, what of the remedies, and what are they?

Unfortunately for society at large, and business in general, the fraud of which the law takes cognizance and for which it metes out punishment must be almost conclusively established by a preponderance of evidence or beyond a reasonable doubt dependent on whether the proceeding is civil or criminal the burden of which rests upon the person or persons alleging the fraud. Here again the cause of business honesty is blocked and hampered by legal technicalities, which many times open the door for easy escape on the part of the offender, yes, and often encourages him to attempt something more daring next time, and then to enjoy tremendously his own cleverness and the self-evident impotence of his accusers.

What, then, shall be the remedies? Permit me to suggest the following:

First.—More individual honesty on the part of each and every business man, and the squaring of his acts with a conscience which would control his sense of right and wrong in his other activities.

Second.—Education: The dissemination of knowledge by those who have a proper sense of business ethics to those who have not, and who are, therefore, the unfortunate.

Third.—The adoption of canons of ethics for the transaction of business, according to the particular needs of each kind of industry.

Fourth.—Organization and co-operation. Organization whereby each kind of industry will be properly and thoroughly organized, adopt its own canons of ethics, and through proper co-operation see to the enforcement thereof.

Fifth.—The elimination of the fraud. As a natural consequence of organization and co-operation, in the course of practices, and if he fails to heed the warning, he must be ostracized commercially, as he would be socially, as soon as his fraudulent practices are brought to light.

And now you ask: "All very true, but how does this apply to or affect us." I'll tell you. Unfortunately I have had neither the time nor the opportunity to look for and assemble statistics, and I doubt if they are really available, but this I do know, that we Jews have our part to play in the commissions of these frauds, and it is partly up to us to see that some of the remedies are speedily adopted, and at least save the fair name of Judaism from further calumny in this regard. I do not say that in proportion to our total number, we are any more guilty than any other race, but I do say that we have just as many guilty ones in our own ranks, in proportion to our total number, as any other race. I think this is due largely to the fact that there are more of our people engaged in the professions and in commerce, than in other lines of industry, and that we are more inclined than any other peoples to take greater commercial risks on small capital, relying on our inherent racial shrewdness. I do not believe that any man is inherently dishonest; I do believe it is a state of mind, the physchology of which is difficult to understand and explain, and which grows, once it has been allowed to germinate into active expression, and through its growth gradually shrinks all the better, honest instincts that the individual possesses, leaving him at least with a distorted moral sense, whereby he is unable to recognize right from wrong.

We have enough prejudices to quell, on all sides and the history of our race proves that we have always been able to withstand them, so let us not help the increase of the many prejudices that exist at present by unethical commercial practices, but let us each do our little part in the campaign against race prejudice, and one of the best means lies within the reach of all of us, namely better business ethics.

We have all known of dishonest commercial practices committed by members of our race, which have directly inspired severe criticism and led to the increase of prejudice.

RUSSIAN MINISTERIAL COMMITTEES ON JEWISH AFFAIRS.

The Jews have so far derived no benefit from the Ministerial Commissions which were expected to introduce reforms into the legislation for Jews, especially in respect to obsolete laws that were long ago recognized to be harmful not only to our coreligionists, but also to the interests of Russia itself The Committee of the Ministry of the Interior has decided that Jewish chemists are not allowed to reside at Petrograd and Moscow except during the period of their examinations. The Committee on Ministry of Commerce finds that it cannot abolish any of the restrictions against Jews in respect to joint stock companies until the general revision of the problem.

ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU

OUR BEST CHRISTIAN FRIEND

By Herman Eliassof

Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu, the famous French historian, political economist and great friend of the Jews, is no more. He died in Paris in the beginning of last month, 74 years old. Leroy-Beaulieu was a gallant soldier, a bold, courageous fighting man, but not of the kind that fights with sword and saber, rapier and rifle. He did not gain his fame on any of the bloody battlefields of former great military wars, or in the present titanic martial struggle of the nations and was not decorated and distinguished with questionable honors, guerdons of irrational glory and flimsy crests and cockades for killing many of his fellowmen. He was a daring knight of the pen, who had joined the select legion loyal to humanity, that fearless phalanx of valiant champions of light and love, who have consecrated all their natural endowments, their intellects and geniuses, their hearts and their souls, aye, their very lives to the eternal fight for the rights of man, for truth and for justice, who attack superstition, envy and hate with all the weapons of wisdom and wit at their command and strive with all the might of their master minds to save the world from the devastation of despotism, the tortures of tyranny, the onslaughts of oppression and the ruin of political persecution; who inscribe upon their unfurled banner in letters of light the glorious device of "Tolerance, Liberty and Humanity" and assail the most invincible strongholds of superstition and prejudice with intrepid, daring and undaunted valor.

Leroy-Beaulieu always stood in the front rank, in the first firing line of this brave band and the fame he gained in many desperate battles is the highest and the most glorious within the gift of God and man.

It is the fame of a kind heart and a just soul, of a great sympathy for the down-trodden and unjustly discriminated against, for the innocent victims of pernicious systems of government, who are wantonly deprived of their inalienable rights and are forced to lead a degraded life, to groan under the crushing weight of the chains of poverty and the fetters of fear. Such a fame is, indeed, worth striving for! France honored her illustrious son by making him a chevalier of the Legion of Honor and now deeply mourns his lamentable loss.

The Jews of the world join the bereaved nation in its great grief and they unite with the world in pronouncing eulogies upon the distinguished departed humanist, scholar and thinker. They add a wreath of appreciation to the many which were laid on his last resting place. For he was to them in the nineteenth century what Johann Reuchlin, the German humanist, was to the Jews in the beginning of the sixteenth. Leroy-Beaulieu was the best friend we Jews had in our days in the entire Christian world. Nay, he was more than a friend. He was the ardent defender of our rights, always eager and alert to impress the world with our best traits and proclivities. He swept the history of the world to gather the strongest evidence for the refutation of the bitter charges which in our times, in emulation of the dark ages, are heaped upon our heads by unscrupulous anti-Semites, plotting political intrigants and dastardly demagogues.

Leroy-Beaulieu has written many valuable works on the Russian Empire, the Czars and the Russian people, on anti-Semitism and on political topics.

His work that is of the most absorbing interest to the Jews is "Israel chez les Nations," which he published in 1893. An English translation of this work was prepared by Frances Hellman, which was published in New York by G. Putnam Sons and in London by William Heinemann, in 1896, under the title of "Israel Among the Nations." This work is a rich treasure-house of brilliant thoughts and incontrovertible facts proving the right of the Jews to demand and the duty of the nations to grant them full citizenship wherever they dwell. The author never hesitates or fears to tell the truth. He boldly and courageously states: "All the virtues that the Jews possess are their own, while their vices are largely due to persecutions by Christian nations." In this work he displays a vast erudition, a wonderful historical acumen, a deep penetration into the inner recesses of the Jewish character and a sound discernment of the forces which impell the ambition of the Jew and nurture his hopes and aspirations. He shows a clear perception of all the phases of the so-called Jewish question and a comprehensive familiaryity with Jewish life and literature. He deals with the Talmud Mishnah and Gemara, Halakah and Haggadah and comments on Jewish tradition and ritualism. He points out the share the Jews have in the evolution of modern society and how the Jew is being dejudaised just as the Christian is dechristianising himself by the modern spirit and the influence from the outside, and questions the right of the Aryan Christian to look upon the Semite as an inferior race. He touches upon the Jewish blood admixture, the converts, the Khazars, the Karaites and the Samaritans. He mentions Sephardim, Ashkenazim, reform and orthodoxy. He refers to the demography of the Jews, their ceremonial rules, their shekhita and their diatery laws, etc.

In the work "Israel Among the Nations," Leroy-Beaulieu often rises to the plane of a monitory prophet. His rebukes of and warnings to the nations burst forth like thunderstorms and like volcanic eruptions they emit fire and flame. They often remind the reader of the angry Isaiah, Israel's most eloquent seer, uttering his burning denunciations against some wicked king of Judah, or hurling his scorching scorn and terrifying predictions of disaster and doom against Egypt, Babylon or Tyre. In his preface to the English version, which he had written in 1893, Leroy-Beaulieu makes a confession and expresses a conviction in the following words: "The author of this book is a Christian and a Frenchman. As a Christian he is one of those who believe that a spirit of intolerance is repugnant to Christianity, and nothing appears to him less consistent with the Gospel than race-hatred. Be it a war of races or war of classes, popular jealousy can never screen itself behind the robe of Christ. Be it Aryan or Semitic, a nation should never purchase its salvation at the cost of another's rights." And then he reflects, analyzes and draws the following inference:

"Even if the Jews had all the vices and all the power which the hatred of their enemies sees fit to ascribe to them, it were none the less childish to discover in a handful of Semitics the source of evils that afflict modern society."

In his introduction to the English version, which he wrote in 1895, he makes the following remarks, which cannot fail to elicit the warmest commendation of the American Jews: "What will be the verdict of history as to the effect upon Judaism of the harsh policy of Alexander III? Possibly in years to come, when the tears of her exiles and their present sufferings shall be forgotten, the historians of Israel may affirm that the Russian autocrat contributed, more than any other man, to the expansion and renovation of Judaism.

"The Jews who are driven from the Slavic soil by the law or by their own poverty are forced to begin a new life under kindlier skies and in freer lands. They are torn from the old Jewries where, closely herded together, they had barely air enough to breathe; and this painful expatriation may well prove of equal benefit to their souls and their bodies.

"The majority of these exiles have gone to America, and especially to the United States. To their brethren already established between the Atlantic and the Pacific this sudden influx of a whole people, in the main poor and ignorant, who demand from them shelter and support, must indeed prove a very heavy burden. The Jews of the United States have been confronted here with an enormous task, to which, however, they have shown themselves equal. Fortunately, the most trying years seem to be over. The accession of the young emperor, Nicholas II, to the throne of Russia gives rise to the hope of some mitigation of those antiquated laws which under Alexander III had furnished official intolerance with the means of hypocritical persecution. The stream of immigration, whose volume is already lessening, will probably slacken. It will not wholly cease, for free America will long continue to attract the victims of persecution."

Alas! His expectations of and our hopes for a better treatment of the Jews in Russia under Nicholas II were not realized. Of course, Leroy Beaulieu could not foresee the future. He therefore did not reckon with the reactionary forces of Russia. He could not divine the inexpressible horrors and the dire consequences of the atrocities of the pogroms at Kishinef, Gomel and at many other places, which took place under the reign of this malevolent monarch.

The author continues: "I for one do not believe that the United States ought to view this Jewish immigration with any disquietude. I cannot see what there is to fear from it. Among all the races and nations that have furnished the United States with colonists and have thus helped to advance its marvelous growth, I can find none more intelligent or more industrious; nor can I find any that is more capable of assimilating American civilization and of introducing into it a useful competition."

The author says a good many more interesting things in his introduction about Jewish immigration, and makes many more pleasant remarks about the American Jews. But as my limited space will not permit me to quote them all, the above will suffice to give an idea of the tenor and tendency of this excellent work. When I read it I fervently wished that our rabid immigration restrictionists, too, would read it. It would, indeed, teach them a wholesome lesson, a lesson which they are greatly in need of.

In the beginning of 1904 Leroy Beaulieu came to the United States to deliver a series of lectures at some of the American universities. The Jews of New York tendered him a testimonial of appreciation of his vigorous war against anti-Semitism and of his forceful and scholarly defense of Jewish character and traditions. He certainly deserved it.

Our ancient teachers, of blessed memory, instruct us that the pious, the good and the kind of the nations of the world have a portion in the world to come. Leroy Beaulieu certainly was a pious, good, kind and noble man in the highest sense of the word. Leroy Beaulieu has now gone to his reward. By laboring incessantly to abate and mitigate the inhumanity of man to man, by striving indefatigably to bring succor and salvation to the sorrow-laden, the woeful and the weary, he built for himself a mansion in the heart of man and there he now finds an everlasting resting place..

In the stillness of the night the shining stars of heaven keep vigil over the grave of Leroy Beaulieu. On the night of his burial they shone upon the figure of a stately woman who was standing with bowed head and tear-filled eyes at the fresh grave in the once gay but now war-shaken and almost deserted city of Paris. Inexpressible sorrow has furrowed her thin but still very beautiful face, the deepest despair is written upon her noble brow, and her voice filled with the profoundest emotion rises in prayer in accents of almost hopeless despondency. It is Humanity, the messenger of mercy, the benefactor of man and the teacher of Leroy Beaulieu, who came to pray for the repose of the soul of her beloved pupil, the pride and the joy of her life. For nearly three long years she has seen so many battlefields which were flooded with streams of human blood, so many flashes of crackling gun-fire, so many sheets of flame from roaring cannons scorching and consuming the lives of millions of young and strong men, the flowers of the human race and the hopes of countless hearts. She witnessed with breaking heart how these weapons of death mowed down human bodies swifter than the knives of the mowing machines cut down the grain in the harvest fields. Through all these woe-pregnant years she was forced to view an endless number of ruined cities, which were once teeming with life and flourishing with the prosperity of commerce and industry, to gaze upon an interminable number of destroyed, desolated and deserted homes which were once overflowing with light and laughter, with hope and happiness. Through all these forlorn years her ears were deafened by the anguished groans of the wounded and maimed men and the dolorous plaints of widowed wives and orphaned children. The sights and sounds of this cruel world-war made her feel the loss of her beloved pupil, Leroy Beaulieu, the man of mercy and peace, good will and humanity, with greater grief. All the woes of the hapless victims of the war flowed in a united stream into her breast and gripped her soul with a tormenting hold. Sinking down upon the mound holding the earthly remains of her sterling pupil, Humanity folds her shaking hands and her trembling lips utter the following fervent and touching prayer: "Oh, merciful God! The world has turned away from me, Thy beloved Humanity. Man, to whom thou hast sent me in Thine infinite mercy as a gift from heaven, has denied, neglected and deserted me, and in the midst of my gnawing pain, while I am desolate and mortified with shame and degradation I am bereaved of my dearly beloved pupil, who was always devoted to me, always true and faithful to my teachings, and always ready to spread my tenets among man. Oh, merciful Father, let his sympathetic soul be embraced in Thy grace for evermore. May it rest in the peace of Thy benign love. May man follow in the footprints which he left behind him in the world, and may the day of lasting universal peace soon dawn upon the horizon of the world for all the big and little nations of the entire globe. Do it, oh, God, for the sake of Thy beloved Humanity and for the sake of all those who still love Thee, Thy light and Thy truth. Amen."

As she was slowly rising from her kneeling position the heavens were illumined by myriads of radiant stars and the earth was enwrapped in golden heavenly light. Sweet, enrapturing music filled the vast space of the globe and the air reverberated the echoes of many voices singing in swelling chorus the mighty words of the prophet Isaiah: "Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord."

RUMANIAN JEWS FORM NATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

The Roumanian Jews of this country held their first national convention on December 31, 1916, at the Parkway Building, Philadelphia, Pa. About 300 delegates were present from all parts of the United States, from Canada and from Cuba.

The first session was opened by Mark Kupperman, who made a brief address and introduced Dr. M. Y. Belber as chairman. Dr. Belber is the president of the Federation of Roumanian Jews of Philadelphia.

Louis Edward Levy, president of the Jewish Community of Philadelphia, delivered a brief address, in which he welcomed the delegates in the name of the organized Jews of that city.

City Statistician Dr. Edward J. Cattell, spoke on behalf of Mayor Smith. He was very warmly received and delivered an inspiring address.

The entire afternoon was given over to a discuission of the resolutions presented by the Resolutions' committee. The resolutions, which set forth the main purposes of the organization, were as follows:

"For centuries the Jews of Roumania have been part and parcel of her population, giving of their brain and their brawn towards the development and progress of the country, bearing the burdens of the citizen equally with the rest of her people and giving of their blood in her defense.

"Today the Jew in Roumania is bravely and loyally fighting shoulder to shoulder with his Christian brother in defense of her flag.

"Yet through all these years the Jew in Roumania, though a native of the country through many generations, knowing no other soil except the one he was born and lives on, having no other allegiance except to a place among men in these blessed United States, will not, in our prosperity, forget the plight of our brethren in the old country. We weep over her shortsightedness, yet we bear her no ill-will.

"Therefore, Resolved, that we, Jews of Roumanian birth, citizens of the United States, in conference assembled this thirtieth day of December, 1916, at Philadelphia, do hereby express the fervent hope that Roumania may in the near future have her eyes opened to the error of her policy and the injustice perpetrated on a quarter million souls for no other reason except that they confess the religion of Moses.

"Resolved, That we hereby consecrate ourselves to the mission of arousing the conscience of the American people and of all other civilized peoples to the deplorable condition of the Jews in Roumania, and that we devote all our energies and use all legitimate means for obtaining for them equal rights and their emancipation from thralldom.

The convention adopted resolutions making it the aim and object of the new organization to further defend, aid and protect the interests of the Jews in Roumania, to work for their political and civic emancipation and for their economic re-construction and rehabilitation.

It was further resolved that the Execuative Committee take proper steps for the incorporation of the new organization under the laws of the State of New York.

Referring to the proposed American Jewish Congress, the convention went on record endorsing the same and pledging to it the support and co-operation of the organization.

The convention further resolved that the Executive Committee, in conjunction with other Jewish organizations of this country and Europe, use all the influence at its command to bring the Roumanian Jewish question before the Peace Congress or Conference that will be called after the cessation of hostilities for due consideration and favorable action.

The conference further went on record protesting against the enactment by Congress of the literacy test in the immigration bill.

In the evening, election of officers took place, with the following results:

President, Dr. P. A. Siegelstein, New York; first vice-president, Sol. Suffrin, New York: second vice president, Zallel Petrianu, New York; chairman of Executive, Dr. M. Y. Belber; secretary, Edward Herbert, New York.

JEWISH PREPAREDNESS.

Preparedness is the war's call to the nations of the world. To be ready to ward off aggression is to safeguard a nation's future. The war overtook many a great power in a condition of inadequate preparation. Still they had their latent resources. We have seen armies arise where there had been an impotent militia. Where there was lack of munitions, gigantic plants were built up. Nevertheless it is agreed that many lives would have been spared had there been a far-sighted readiness in advance. And the powers that were ready will certainly receive a stimulus to more thorough readiness in future days. There is one thing that the nations have learned. The talking machines known as parliaments are useless in times of stress. "You cannot run a war with a sanhedrim," said England's new prime minister. Everywhere the management of the war has been confined to a small body, virtually to a dictator. The judicial minds that can see two sides to a question and weigh the pros and cons are unfitted for a business which requires quick decision. To do things and do them quickly is the slogan of the hour. And it is better that the one err on the side of promptness than that the many waste precious time in dilatory argumentation.

The Jewish people is not a nation among nations. We have our places as individuals within the nations of which we are a part. We have done our duty nobly, as behooves patriotic citizens, and we deserve no special thanks. But because of our anomalous condition in certain lands, a condition, be it said, not of our own making, we have problems which concern us as an aggregate. And in this sense only we have problems which partake of the nature of group aspirations. We would live in peace with the world, but somehow the world does not permit us to rest at peace. Inalienable rights are still denied us in well-known quarters. American Jews have no political problems of their own. But so long as Russia for instance treats her Jews as stepsons, we Jews in America have a natural interest to see to it that their cause is vindicated. The war has hit the Jew hardest. Relief measures looking to immediate amelioration are necessary, and they are fully organized. But we all feel that more radical measures are requisite to effect a permanent cure. The time has come when we must take cognizance of the wants and aspirations of the whole of Jewry. It is clear that nothing will fall into our lap if we [illegible]. The voice of the Jew ought to be heard at a congress of nations. And for that voice to be heard it must become articulate.

We do not mean here to enter upon the dissension which created a rift in our camp some time ago. The wiser and less stubborn among us have yielded, and they yielded not because they were converted to the views of their opponents, but because the higher patriotism or loyalty to the Jewish cause was in the ascendant. The Jew must be prepared to make certain demands. We cannot prepare as the nations do, backed as they are by their fighting machines. Yet there is one thing we ought to learn from them. Just as mere talking will not lead to victory on the battlefield, so mere talking will not advance the Jewish cause a single iota. What we need is a Jewish dictator, or a Jewish dictatorial body, that shall do things. We trust that the business of defending Jewish rights will be given over to a small body of men, men who by experience are best fitted to address themselves to a task at once delicate and difficult. We of the Order have from the beginning announced that we would co-operate with any body which like our own is competent by virtue of international connections and actual knowledge of affairs to take up the cause of the Jew. And we have not gone back upon our word. We are co-operating to the best that is in us. We believe in democracy. But above all we believe in efficiency. And efficiency is not a matter for the mob, but for the chosen few. Let us then formulate our aims without delay. For while the prepartions are going on, the need for action may become imperative. Let the action be timely, no matter who is to act. We have many counselors, but the fewest who can do things. The methods may be many, and they are unimportant. What is of supreme moment is that when the time comes the Jew's plea shall find receptive minds. Let us have the true gold of silent action. Therein lies the Jewish preparedness in an emergency which is truly historical, aye, Providential.

AFTER THE FLOOD.

As these lines are penned, there is an exchange of notes between Washington and certain European chanceries having for their aim the cessation of the war which has raged for the last two years and a half. Whether by the time we go to press we may jubilantly announce that the waters of the disastrous flood are commencing to abate and that the dove of peace is hovering where the owl of strife has been perched, is altogether unlikely. Peace parleys are not consummated in a day. A natural shyness, and what is more a natural sense of honor, will make the negotiations of protracted duration. We fall apart in haste, but we compose our differences slowly. The two sides to the controversy know full well that if at all there is to be peace, neither can hope to have things entirely their own way. Each side will endeavor to obtain the maximum of concessions from the other. The immediate cessation of hostilities is for the belligerents themselves; but before long the neutrals, among them the United States, may insist on being called in. For the issues of the present conflagration concern the whole world. A short cut for terminating the war might be concerted action by all the neutrals. They could say to the belligerents that there has been enough of carnage. They also possess the power of coercion. In the interest of humanity they might be induced to use it. It certainly constitutes a last resort and the fighting nations are quite aware of it. Still prudence will dictate a waiting policy to the intent that the end may be brought about without outside pressure. We on the outside are full weary of a conflict the consequences of which, try as we may, we cannot wholly escape. We have profited by the war because the war was on, but we desire not war for the sake of our own profit. But the strain of being just to both sides is telling on those in responsible position who aver that we have been on the verge of war ourselves and that any untoward event may precipitate us into the melee.

Still peace there must come. It is difficult for us to appraise the relative strength of the two camps. But those who know say that exhaustion, be it of man material or of equipment, is beginning to manifest itself and that a financial breakdown is imminent. Each side claims victory and each points to the unattained objects for which the other apparently strove when the conflict started. Perhaps both will have to rest their arms and case on the merits of the present situation. But the flood of blood will be stayed sooner or later. And then comes the aftermath. Then there must come a struggle as bitter as was the war itself, the struggle for rehabilitation. An army of crippled and maimed will return home to find many difficult problems of adjustment. There is a pretty large bill the generation that is growing up will be called upon to pay. Whether indemnities will have to be paid or not, the mere repair of the havoc that has been wrought will require stupendous effort. An impoverished Europe will prove no ready buyer at our markets. Fortunes made will dwindle away. Labor will once more be cheap with us. The price of commodities, however, will hardly go down. Hard times are ahead for everybody.

But the darkest aspect for us lies in struggles that will be forced upon us as a sequel to the great war. The thoughtful among us know that the mastery of the Pacific may bring us to the verge of war indeed. We know not what the alignments of the European powers will be after the peace treaty has been signed. We know not whether disarmament will follow upon the truce patched up. The task will be to restore international law, which both sides have violated. But we should not be deluded into a make-believe security. We have learned a lesson that safety resides in preparedness. We shall need a larger navy and a larger standing army. Our citizenry will have to undergo military training. We are fast learning the lesson that the isolation which the fathers of the republic cherished is a thing of the past. No nation, great or small, can stand aloof. And no nation again will court our favor or heed our disfavor unless we can back up words by deeds. We shall take the world as it is, not as it should be. The ideal of amity among the nations lies far ahead. Nearer us is the reality of national instinct pushing ahead towards a goal of its own choosing. If amity there cannot be, perhaps there shall obtain comity. Just as aggressiveness is disliked in the individual, so it ought to be discountenanced in a nation. No nation can have all that is coming to it, if another nation is to cede something of its own. Fair dealing among nations would be a step toward peace. We Americans have always stood for fair play. We shall deal fairly and squarely with others, as we expect so to be dealt with by them.

Serious days are coming on. Still we shall lose no heart. Whatever the sequel to the flood, we shall know no fear. We shall be sustained by the courage born of the loftiest patriotism, to stand sentinel over democracy and free government on this western hemisphere.
